TO THE RIGHT REVEREND FATHER IN GOD GEORGE,

LORD BISHOP OF DERIE, in the Realme of IRELAND, I.D. his only and most louing Brother wisheth all present happinesse and future blessednesse.

The life of a true Christian (Right Reuerend) is full of labour and trouble, and this accompanied with daily dangers. And as it is truly said of all the sonnes of Adam, that man is borne to labour and trouble, as the sparkes flie vpward, Iob 5.7. hauing (as it were) by inheritance from their great Grand-father his toilsome sweat, as well as his sinfull corruption; so is it in more speciall manner the lot and portion of the second Adam, and of all the children which God hath giuen him, according to the new Birth by spirituall Regeneration. For as himselfe was worne out with labours, loaded with afflictions, tried and almost tired with tentations and troubles; and pursued, euerie day, and in euery place, with bitter persecutions, euen to the Heb. 2.13.

taking away of his precious life, and so by his Crosse passed to his Crowne: so he hath appointed that all his redeemed should tract him in the same afflicted way, and pledge him in the same bitter Cup; only with this difference, that he drunke of it a deepe draught, euen to the very dregs, and hath left vnto vs a lesse quantity and better relished. For his was so imbittered with his Fathers wrath due to our sins, that he may truly put to vs that question (as of a thing impossible) which hee once asked of his

Howbeit some remain-*

Acts 14.22. suffer persecution; and wee must by much tribulation enter into the Kingdome of God. Of all which labours, and troubles, afflictions and persecutions incident (as it were) in a speciall manner to the faithfull, as wee haue had the experience of all former ages; so haue we not only predictions of the like for future times to the very end of the World in the holy Scriptures, shewing that they shall be, but also diuers comparisons illustrating their nature, and qualities, and the state and condition of those that beare them. For our liues are compared to the dayes of an hireling, or mercenary labourer, who

taketh

taketh great paines, and toileth from morning to night, not like a Free-holder, who suiteth his worke according to his owne will, but like a seruant who denying himselfe is in all things to submit to his Masters pleasure. Neither are their labours like those of some Artificers, who though they take but slight paines and by fits, are able to subsist and to maintaine their charge liberally with their easie gettings: But like the Husbandmans, which as it is toilesome and troublesome, so tedious and neuer at an end. Neither doth the Christian take this paines amongst his Domestiques and familiar Friends, whose sweet societie might lighten his labours, but farre absent from home among strangers. In regard whereof the Christian in the Scriptures is compared to a Pilgrime or Trauailer, and his life to a tedious and painfull pilgrimage; in which he meeteth with few friends and many dangers, finding in all places harsh vsage and hard entertainment, and running many hazards by reason of Theeues and Robbers that lie in his way. Yea, hee trauaileth not only like a Pilgrime amongst strangers; but also like a Souldier through the thickest of his mortall enemies, who daily encounter him, and with their continuall assaults on all sides labour to hinder him in his Christian march, all which he must conquer before he can obtaine the Crowne of victorie. And in this respect the Christians life is compared to a Warfare, in which he acteth the part both of a painfull pioner in toilesome labour, and of the valiant Souldier in a dangerous fight, herein like vnto Nehemiah's Builders, who were equally prepared to doe the Lords worke and to fight his battailes. For hee is assaulted on all sides, with many and mighty enemies, who with might and mayne indeuour his destruction. The Deuill (with whole Legions of infernall spirits) goeth about like a roaring Lion seeking to deuoure him, and casts continually against him his fiery darts of tentations which would mortally pierce and wound him, if they were not quenched and beaten backe with the shield of faith. The World joyneth with him in this fight, and ministreth vnto him his most preuayling weapons: yea, it selfe furiously assaulteth euery true Christian both both on the right hand with tentations of prosperity, and on the left with afflictions and persecutions. The Flesh like a secret Traytour is ready to betray him, and to set open the gates of his soule to let in those professed Enemies, when as they come against him and giue the assault. The which as it should moue euery Christian to shake off security, and standing vpon his continuall watch to be prepared for the fight, seeing there is no time for ease and retchlesnesse, where there is no place free from danger; so should it stirre vp Gods faithfull Ministers who are appointed Captaines ouer the Lords Armies, to traine vp all those committed to their charge in this Military Discipline, whereby they may be fitted for this Christian Warfare; and to teach them the nature of their spirituall Enemies, their power and policies, and how they may so put on their Armour and vse their Weapons, that they may stand with courage and comfort in the day of battaile, in hope and assurance of obtaining victorie. This I haue indeauoured in this Worke, to traine vp others that are vnskilfull in this Militarie Discipline, and to arme the weake Christian against the assaults of these pernicious Enemies, strengthening the weake hands and feeble knees, and vpholding him who is ready to fall; and that I may by this essay (not vndertaken heretofore by any that I know of) stirre vp some other of the Lords greatest Worthies who are of farre better abilities, to vndertake this profitable, yet difficult taske, and to bring what I haue begun to greater perfection. The which my Labours in their seuerall Parts, I haue in their first publishing, dedicated to seuerall Patrones, as their worth deserued, and my particular obligations bound me; and now comming againe to the Presse to bee published ioyntly in one Volume, I haue made choice of your Lordship my only and most deare Brother, to bee the Patrone of the whole Worke, and those new Additions annexed vnto it. For to whom is it better due than vnto your selfe, by whom as Gods chiefest meanes and instrument I haue obtained all my poore abilities of effecting this or any other worke of my Ministerie. For when God inclined my heart to follow my studies, who was destinated by my Friends to another calling, you chiefly encouraged and enabled me in this course of comming to the Vniuersitie, where you became my louing, carefull and painfull Tutour (as you were to many others;) and shining vnto vs not only in the light of Learning, but also of a Religious life and Christian conuersation, you did not only inlighten our vnderstandings with humane knowledge, but also were a notable instrument, through Gods blessing, to worke our hearts to a loue of all goodnesse by Your instructions, gouernment, and exemplary vertues. Yea, after I came to more maturitie, You were my chiefest helpe to direct me in my studies of Diuinitie, and afterwards my principall, if not only, pattern and precedent in the exercise of my Ministerie, whom I propounded for imitation, though in a great distance, being neuer able with my best endeuours to attaine vnto the least part of Your perfections. All which I ingenuously, and with a single and simple heart, without the least desire of insinuation or affectation of Flatterie (as God knoweth) publish vnto the World, that being otherwise vnable to pay the least part of my debts, I may leaue them vpon this my accompt by an humble and thankefull acknowledgement, vntill the reckoning of that last and great Audit, when as our Supreame Soueraigne shall giue you a full recompence of reward for all the good, which he by your meanes hath communicated to my selfe and many others. In the meane time I hauing by your helpe and assistance (next vnder God) beene enabled to worke, doe gratefully dedicate vnto you these fruits of my Labours, as being not only most worthie of this respect, but also best able to defend that which is true and right, and to amend whatsoeuer is amisse; earnestlie desiring of our gracious and good God the long continuance of your happie daies, that you may still remaine a notable Instrument of his Glorie, and the Churches good in this World, that so after this life ended you may bee crowned with glorie and immortalitie in the life to come, when as wee shall be no more separated by Land and Water, but shall for euer and euer enjoy one anothers societie withall other the blessed Saints and Angels, and be eternally happie in the Vision and Fruition of the blessed Trinitie; To whom I giue all glorie and praise for making Mee a poore Instrument of his Glorie in this and other my Labours, and vouchsafing mee the honour of being,

Your Lordships louing and most respectiue Brother,

TO THE ZEALOVS, AND SINCERE PROFESSORS OF GODS TRVE RELIGION, Sr. THOMAS SMITH, Knight, Gouernour of the Muscouie and East Indie Companies, and Treasurer of the new Plantation in Virginea; Sir IOHN SCOT, Knight, and their Ladies; ROBERT CHAMBERLAINE Esquire, and ANNE his Wife, his welbeloued and most respected friends: I. D. wisheth the fruition of all true comforts of this life, and eternall happines in the life to come.

MAnifold (Right Worshipfull) and most dangerous are the tentations and assaults of our spirituall enemies, whereby they labour to hinder the saluation of Gods Elect, and to increase the greatnes of their hellish Dominions, by withdrawing (if it were possible) Gods seruants from their Subiection and Allegeance, and making them their slaues and perpetuall Vassals. To this end they take indefatigable paines, going continually about seeking whom they may deuoure; sometime like roaring Lions, compelling by violent force, and sometimes like old Serpents, alluring and deceiuing with treacherous policies. Neither doe they rest in the time of our rest, but waking and sleeping they set vpon vs, one while inticing vs to swallow the poyson of sinne, with the sugred baits of worldly vanities; and another while driuing vs into their snares of perdition, with the sharpe pricking goads of misery and affliction. Before vs they set carnall pleasures, deceiuing riches, and vaine Honours, to allure vs to come into the broad way that leadeth to destruction: and behind vs they hold the three-stringed Whip of Losse, Shame, and Punishment, to keepe vs from going backe, and to hasten vs with winged speed to run forward in this hellish iournie. Neither doe they greatly care what path we chuse in this common way of perdition; whether the spacious way of security and presumption, or the strait path of horrour and desperation; whether the toyling way of insatiable couetousnesse; or the soft faire way of bewitching pleasures; whether the open way of Worldlinesse and Atheisme, or through the hidden thickets of Hypocrisie and dissimulation: in a word, they regard not in what way we walke, so we goe forward in the wayes of sinne; for though they seeme diuers and contrarie one to another, yet they haue all the same end, meeting together in Hell and Destruction. And howsoeuer they cannot with all their malice, power, and policies, attaine vnto their desires by bringing Gods Elect and faithfull ones to perdition and endlesse misery, because God their heauenly Father who hath taken vpon him their protection frustrateth all their subtill policies with his All-seeing Wisdome, and withstandeth all their might with his Almightie power; yet doe they exceedingly with their assaults and tentations, foile, vexe and trouble them; by working in some, forgetfulnesse of God and of themselues, security, and carelesse retchlesnesse; and turmoyling others with horrible feares, desperate doubtings, and bitter agonies. Whereby it commeth to passe, that the one sort securely go on in sin, forgetting the end of their Creation, Redemption, and holy Vocation, vnto which God hath called them, vntill with Salomon they haue found in the end of their Worldly delights, nothing but vanitie and vexation of spirit: and the other are so affrighted, astonished, and continually tormented with doubtings, feares, and the continuall assaults of their spirituall Enemies, that they goe mourning all the day long, pining away in griefe and anguish of minde, till at last they grow weary of their liues, thinking their soules an intolerable burthen to their bodies, and their bodies to the earth. The consideration of which lamentable and too too miserable effects, as it should moue all Christians to stand vpon their guard, and to arme themselues with the spirituall Armour, that they may not be ouercome of their tentations, and fall into these great mischiefes: so should it moue Gods faithfull Ministers (whose dutie it is, not only themselues to walke in the wayes of righteousnesse, but also as spirituall guides to lead others with them) in discharge of their conscience before God, and in Christian commiseration and compassion towards their Brethren, to vse all good meanes both by speaking and writing, whereby they may be preserued and freed from these snares which their spirituall enemies doe lay to intrap them; by beating downe with the Cannon-shot of Gods threatnings, the high forts of their proud presumption, and rousing them out of the deepe slumber of retchlesse securitie; as also by raising vp and comforting those that mourne in Sion, stooping, yea, lying groueling vnder the heauy burthen of their sinnes. The which howsoeuer it is performed by many in respect of their seuerall charges committed to them; and some also haue briefly touched some points in writing, which concerned the comforting and raising vp of their priuate friends; yet not any (that I know of) haue in our language largely and generally handled these Controuersies, and spirituall Conflicts betweene the Chri-

Christian and the enemies of his saluation, for the common good of the whole Church. And therefore hauing with Elihu long waited to see if those who were more ancient, better experienced, and more richly furnished with Gods Gifts and Graces than my selfe, would vndertake this Worke, which is to God most acceptable, and to his Saints and Children so profitable and necessarie: at length after others long silence, I resolued to speake, and no longer to conceale such true comforts, as God hath reuealed vnto mee; to the end that hereby I might releeue and comfort those who are poore in spirit, and humbled in the sight of sinne; or at least by offering willingly to this vse my small Mite, I might giue an occasion vnto others better able, to vnlocke and open their rich treasuries, that they may bestow vpon their poore Brethren their great Talents and Gifts of better value. The which my Labours as I did not rashly vndertake, so I haue not suddenly finished them; for almost three yeeres sinte, I purposed to take this Worke in hand, which I haue now, by Gods assistance, finished; but at first (I confesse) I intended not that it should come into publike view; but onely (as others before mee) propounded as the end of my Labours, the comforting and raising vp of a most faithfull Seruant of God, and my most deare Friend, who hath bound mee with many benefits to the performance of all Christian duties. But afterwards finding it to grow to such a Volume, that it was too great to passe in a written Copie; and hoping that that which was profitable for one might be beneficiall vnto many, at length I resolued to make my Labours publike by committing them to the Presse. The principall things that I propounded to my selfe in this Treatise are these; first and specially I endeauour to comfort those who are afflicted in conscience, in the sight and sense of their sinnes by offering vnto them certaine assurance, that their sinnes are remitted, and that themselues are elected to eternall life, in the state of Grace, reconciled vnto God in Christ, and receiued into his loue and fauour. Secondly, I labour to lead the Christian in an euen course, vnto the Hauen of eternall Happinesse; that he may not runne aside, neither on the right hand, and so falling vpon the rocks of presumption make shipwracke of his soule; nor yet on the left hand, and so plunge himselfe into the Gulfe of desperation. Wherein I haue purposely and aduisedly auoided their practice, who scatter their consolations they know not where, to be applied they care not by whom; whereof it commeth to passe that those that are most secure and presumptuous arrogate them, to whom they doe not appertaine; and those that are afflicted and humbled dare not appropriate them to themselues; because they are deliuered indefinitely to all, without all caution or any condition, whereby they might be restrained rather to them than any other in whom sinne yet liueth and raigneth. Wherein they resemble negligent Physicians, who hauing made a good medicine for a sicke man, doe not giue it vnto him, but cast it carelesly into some corner, whither the sicke patient in respect of his faintnesse and weaknesse is likely neuer to come: which being found and greedily drunken vp by those who haue no need of it, in steed of doing them good doth turne to their bane and vtter destruction. Lastly, I haue desired to giue solid and substantiall Consolations, which are firmely grounded vpon Gods vndoubted Truth, and such infallible reasons as cannot be gain-said; and haue withall deliuered the conditions, vpon which they are to be receiued, and the vndoubted signes and markes of those, to whom of right they appertaine; to the end that those who find these things in themselues, may not doubt to apply them to their wounded Consciences, whereby they may bee soundly cured and throughly comforted; and that those who find no such condition obserued by them, nor any such signe or marke in them, may be debarred from participating of these Consolations, which would nourish in them Security and Presumption; and contrariwise examining themselues according to these Rules, and finding no correspondencie between themselues and them, may hereby be awakened out of their Lethargie of Securitie, and attaining vnto a sight and sense of their miserable estate may neuer be at rest, till by vsing all good meanes for this purpose, they may find these markes and signes of their Election, Vocation, Iustification, and Sanctification in them, that so they may boldly and fitly apply vnto themselues these comforts and consolations as rightly and truly appertaining vnto them. All which my Labours I thought good to dedicate vnto your Worships, partly, because I desired to giue this testimony of my true thankfulnesse, for those manifold benefits which from some of you I haue receiued, and of mine vnfained loue which I beare to you all, for your Vertues and approued Godlinesse; and partly because I thought none fitter to whom I might commend this Discourse of the Christian Warfare, than your Selues who are old experienced Souldiers in fighting these Spirituall battailes, and therefore haue judiciall feeling and sensible apprehension of those things which I haue written and commended to your Patronage. Now the Lord our God, who is the Fountaine of all goodnesse, and the Sole Giuer of all true Consolation, increase in you more and more the Gifts and Graces of his Sanctifying Spirit, and so fill your hearts with all sound Spirituall Comfort, and the Ioy in the Holy Ghost, that you may through the course of your whole liues, cheerefully goe forward in the profession and sincere practice of his Religion and true Godlinesse, and after this life may receiue that Crowne of Righteousnesse, which is prepared and laid vp for you in his Kingdome of eternall Glorie. AMEN.

Your Worships in the Lord

most assured,

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

CHriſtian Reader, hauing beene incouraged by diuers, no leſſe godly than iudicious, who haue peruſed theſe my poore labours, and giuen them their approbation; and not a little comforted in my ſelfe, in that, through Gods bleſſing, I haue beene a meanes of comforting others, for the refreſhing of whoſe fainting ſoules I chiefly intended all my paines; I was made the more willing this fourth time to reuiew them, for thy further benefit, and not onely to purge them from many faults which eſcaped in the three former impreſſions, but alſo to adde ſome things which ſeemed wanting in the former Editions, as diuers other ſtrategems of Sathan vſed in his aſſaulting weake Chriſtians. As alſo certaine generall meanes whereby the weake Chriſtian may bee enabled to withſtand our ſpirituall enemies, added to the two & twenſieth Chapter of the firſt Booke; & ſome comfortable preſeruatiues againſt deſperation, added to the thirtie ſixt Chapter of the ſecond Booke, beſides many other enlargements of particular points not before ſo fully handled; which in the table of the Contents are thus marked, * Now if any ſhall complaine, that theſe many editions and additions, doe make the Booke too chargeable to ſuch buyers as deſire to haue the beſt; to ſuch I anſwere that in this reſpect I were worthy blame, if by my greateſt labour and ſtudy I could haue perfected this worke at the firſt: but ſeeing this practicall and experimentall diuinitie needeth not ſo much reading and ſtudying, (eſpecially there being ſo little written of this argument) as conference, obſeruation and experience; I hope I ſhall not deſerue to be cenſured, if vſing theſe helpes, I haue laboured to bring this worke to more perfection, which without them were altogether impoſſible. Eſpecially conſidering that though this be better, yet the former editions are not in themſelues, or for their vſe that haue them, worſe than they were before. Neither did I thinke it fit to deferre the ſetting forth of this treatiſe, till by putting my laſt hand vnto it, I ſhould haue brought it to the greateſt perfection I was able, ſeeing I did write as well for the comfort of thoſe then liuing (many of which might dye before the worke could be perfected) as of thoſe who are yet vnborne; vnto whom if I might by my labours deriue any ſpirituall good, and ſo further the ſaluation of any one ſoule; I ſhould thinke it a matter of much more worth and importance, than the ſparing of a little corruptible coyne: eſpecially ſeeing there are few ſo poore that haue bought the former editions, who haue not ſome poorer friend vpon whom they may beſtow them. But now Chriſtian Reader know, that I haue put to this worke my laſt hand; hauing no purpoſe (in reſpect of my age, weakeneſſe and many imployments) any more to inlarge or alter it, and the rather becauſe I haue taken great paines both in adding many things which by experience I found neceſſarie, for the comforting of afflicted conſciences, and ſtrengthning them againſt Sathans tentations, and in correcting the whole worke and purging it from many faults which were crept into the former editions. All which my labours I commend to the good bleſſing of our gracious God, and both thee and my ſelfe to his mercifull and al-ſufficient protection.

Thine in the Lord,

§ 3. That the measure of our afflictions exceedeth not necessity, ibid.

§ 4.5. That wee may by the greatnesse of Gods corrections ghesse at the grieuousnesse of our faults, p.880.881

Chap.

CHAP. XIII.

That Gods loue appeareth in the ends of our afflictions. First, as he vseth vs as instruments in them to set forth his glory.

§ 1. That God is glorified in the fight of his souldiers, and in the corrections of his children, p.882

§ 2. That he is glorified in the manifestation of his power and goodnes assisting vs in our afflictions, p.883

§ 3. That he is glorified in our afflictions, as they are trials of his spirituall graces, p.884

§ 4. That it is a great comfort in afflictions to consider that God is glorified by them, ibid.

CHAP. XIV.

That God by our afflictions doth much aduance the good of our Neighbours.

§ 1. That our Neighbours receiue good by our afflictions: First, as by them they learne to feare God in his iudgements, p.885

§. 2. Secondly, as they restraine them from committing the same sinnes which they see punished in vs, p.886

§ 3. Thirdly, as they serue to manifest Gods graces in vs for their good example, p.887

§ 4. Fourthly, as we are examples of humane frailty, p.888

§. 5. Fifthly, as by them they are brought to see Gods perfections in our imperfections, that they may glorifie him in them, ibid.

§ 6. Sixthly, as by our afflictions we are made more compassionate, ready and able to comfort others, p.889

§ 7. That the good of our brethren should much comfort vs in affliction, p.890

CHAP. XV.

That afflictions doe not hurt the faithfull, nor bring vnto them any graet euill.

§ 1. That though afflictions be euill in their owne nature, yet their nature is changed to the faithfull, p.891

§ 2. 3. Reasons why worldly afflictions cannot hurt the faithfull. First, because they doe not depriue vs of blessings which are of greatest worth, but rather increase them, p.891

§. 4. That afflictions bring not vpon vs the chiefest euils, but rather the contrary good, p.892

§ 5. That it is a great euill to be exempted wholy from afflictions, p.893

CHAP. XVI.

That God aduanceth the good of the faithfull by their afflictions, and first as they are trials of their spirituall graces.

§ 1. That God in afflicting vs aymeth at our good, p.893

§ 2. That our afflictions are sometime tryals of Gods graces, and not chastizements for our sins, in respect of their mayne and chiefe end, p.894

§ 3. 4. That God trieth vs, not to better his owne knowledge, but to make vs knowne both to our selues and others, p.894 895

§ 5. That God tryeth vs by afflictions, first, whether we are true Christians indued with sauing grace or no, p.896

§ 6. 7. Secondly, vnto what measure of grace we haue attained, p.897

§ 8. That God tryeth vs principally for his owne glory, and then for the aduancing of our good Name through the manifestation of his graces in vs, p.898. 899

§. 9. That God also by affliction discouereth our infirmities and corruptions for our humiliation, ibid.

CHAP. XVII.

CHAP. III.

What wee are to vnderstand by the spirit in this Discourse.

§ 1. THat the word Spirit is diuersly taken in the Scriptures, p.1019

§ 2. That the Spirit in this discourse signifieth the part regenerate, ibid.

§ 3. That this combate is not maintained by bare qualities alone, but as they are backed by the holy spirit, and Sathan the wicked spirit, p.1020

§ 4. The former point proued by diuers reasons, p.1021

§ 5. That the spirit doth not dwell in vs essentially, more than in other creatures, ibid.

§ 6. That the faithfull haue speciall right euen vnto the very essence of the Spirit, and that hee dwelleth in them in respect of efficacie, p.1022

CHAP. III.

Of the erroneous conceit of the Papists, who by the flesh vnderstand the body and the sensuall faculties onely.

§ 1. THat the Papists propound vnto vs a friend to fight against in steed of our enemy, p.1023

§ 2. That the chiefe doctors of the Papists by flesh vnderstand the body, ibid.

§ 3. That the Papists in their purest doctrine vnderstand by the flesh our bodies, and the in- inferiour and sensitiue faculties onely, p.1024

§ 4. That the practice of Popish mortification plainely sheweth, that by the flesh they vnderstand the body only, p.1025
§ 5. That the Popish Doctors are to be justly taxed for teaching this doctrine, and the people for putting it in practice, p.1026
§ 6. That our opposition against the Papists in this doctrine is very necessary, p.1027

Chap. V.

That the body and sensitiue faculties only are not the flesh, proued by testimonies and reasons,

§ 1.2. The point proued by testimonies of Scriptures, p.1027
§ 3. Reasons prouing that the body onely is not the flesh. The first taken from the names, and the second from the actions, and the third from the sinnes which are attributed vnto it, p.1029
§ 4. The fourth reason, because original sinne hath ouer-spread the whole man ibid.
§ 5. The fifth reason, because the body and soule are friends and not enemies, p.1030
§ 6. The sixth reason, taken from the words of the Apostle, Rom.7.18. ibid.
§ 7. The seauenth reason, because the body is not absolutely euill as the flesh is, ibid.
§ 8. The eight reason, because the faithfull are tempted to such sinnes, as properly belong to the vnderstanding and will, p.1031

Chap. VI.

Testimonies of fathers prouing that the body alone is not our enemy the flesh.

§ 1. The point proued by testimonies of Augustine, Chrysostome, Gregory, Hierome, Basill, and Theodoret, p.1031
§ 2. That Sathan hath assaulted not onely the body and affections, but also the mind and vnderstanding, p.1032

CHAP. I.

That all the godly are assaulted with the spirituall enemies of their Saluation.

THE Apostle hauing shewed the mysterie of our saluation and the causes thereof for the confirmation of our faith, in the three first Chapters of his Epistle to the Ephesians, and afterwards in the other Chapters hauing set downe diuers duties both generally belonging to all Christians, and also particularly appertaining to men of sundry conditions, that he might moue them to repentance and amendment of life; in the next place, like the Lords Centinell, doth discouer and giue vs warning of the approach of mightie enemies, willing vs to arme our selues at all points in our owne defence, and couragiously to stand vnder the standard of Christ Iesus, that wee may be continually in readinesse to endure the encounter, Chap. 6. 10, 11, &c. Whereby hee giueth vs to vnderstand, that as soone as we seeke for assurance of saluation in Christ, and endeauour to serue the Lord in a holy and Christian life, wee are to prepare our selues for a combat, vnlesse we would suddenly be surprised. For the spirituall enemies of our saluation bandie themselues against vs as soone as we haue giuen our names vnto God, and taken vpon vs the profession and practice of Christianitie, which are the liuerie and cognisance of our heauenly Lord and Master. And this is manifest by the example of Gods children from time to time, who although they liued in peace and securitie before they were intertained into Gods family, yet no sooner were they admitted to be of Gods houshold seruants but Satan and the World haue raged against them, labouring both by inward temptations and outward furie, either to withdraw them from Gods seruice by flattering inticements, or vtterly to destroy and ouerthrow them by open violence. No sooner ner had Abel offered a sacrifice of sweete smelling sauour vnto God, but Satan stirreth vp Cain to become his Butcher. Whilest Moses was contented to be reputed the sonne of Pharaohs daughter he enioyed all prosperitie, but as soone as he ioyned himselfe to Gods people and Church, Pharaoh seeketh his life. As long as the Israelites worshipped the Egyptian Idols, they sate by their fleshpots in peace & quietly enioyed the fruits of the Land; but as soon as they made but a motion of seruing the Lord, the King stirred vp by the Deuill, doth rage against them with more then barbarous crueltie. Whilest Paul persecuted the Church of God, Satan did not so much trouble him either outwardly in bodie or inwardly in mind; but no sooner was he truly conuerted to the faith and preached the Gospell, but presently he setteth his wicked Impes on worke to take away his life; which the Lord not permitting, hee moueth them to persecute him by imprisoning, whipping, and stoning him; and not content with these outward afflictions, hee sendeth his messenger to buffet him, that hee might bee no lesse vexed inwardly in minde then outwardly in bodie. Yea he spared not our Sauiour Christ himselfe, but as soone as he began to shew himselfe to be the Sonne of God and Redeemer of Mankind, in performing the duties of his calling, then especially he bendeth all his force against him, hee tempteth and assaulteth him fortie dayes together, and taking the foyle himselfe, hee stirreth vp his wicked instruments to persecute him, and at length to take away his life.

2. Cor. 12.

Matth. 4.

Whosoeuer therefore resolue to be Gods seruants, must make account to be his Souldiers also; & whilst with Nehemiahs followers, with one hand they performe the works of their callings and Christianity, they must with the other hand hold their weapons to repel their spiritual enemies, who continually labour to hinder the Lords buildings. For no sooner do we become friends to God, but presently Satan assaulteth vs as his enemies. No sooner do we receiue the Lords presse-mony and set foot into his Campe, but Satan aduanceth against vs his flagges of defiance, labouring both by secret treacherie, and outward force, to supplant and ouercome vs.

Nehem. 4. 17.

Q. Sect. 2. The twofold vse of this doctrine.

Here therefore is instruction for secure Worldlings, and consolation and incouragement for Gods children. Worldly men in stead of fighting the Lords battailes, spend their time in chambering and wantonnesse, in lusts and vncleannesse, in Musicke and dalliance, in surfetting and all voluptuousnesse, in carelesnesse and idlenesse, as though there were no enemie to assault them, and as if Satan were some meeke Lambe and not a roring Lion readie to deuoure them. So that good Moses comming neere them cannot heare the noyse of them that haue the victory, nor the noyse of them that are ouercome, but the noyse of singing and merriment, for they are not fighting the battailes of the Lord of Hosts, but solemnizing a Sabbath to the golden Calfe, sitting downe to eat and drinke, and rising vp to play. The spirituall Cananites are quite forgotten, and they remember not the blessed Land of Promise, whereunto like Pilgrimes they should bee trauelling, but make this World, this Wildernesse of sinne, the place of their ioy and delight. In a word, they flourish in their outward states, and neuer in their mindes feele any vexation of Sathans temptations. And what is the cause of all this? If you aske them, they will say, that they haue such a strong faith and peace of conscience, that Sathans temptations haue no power ouer them; neither were they euer troubled with any of his encounters. And not content with these bragges of their owne happie estate, they censure and condemne Gods children, accounting their state most desperate who are molested with Satans temptations, and goe mourning vnder the burthen of sin all the day long; supposing either that they are in Sathans power, and haue more grieuously sinned then other men, or that they are mad and franticke so to vexe themselues with such needlesse sorrow. But let such men know, that of all others their state is most dangerous, for they are grieuously sicke, and haue no sense of their disease; their wounds are so mortall that they depriue them of all feeling; they are assaulted, yea taken prisoners whilest they sleepe soundly in securitie, and discerne not the approach of the enemie. They make therefore no resistance, because they are ignorant of the assault. And what can be more dangerous then to haue the enemie approach and lay hands on vs before we be aware? But this is the state of those men: for as one saith, They are most assaulted, when they feele no assault. Let them know, that they are not the Lords Souldiers but the Deuils Reuellers, and therefore hee fighteth not against them because they are his friends. For there was neuer any of Christs souldiers in the Militant Church which haue not been exercised in this warfare; there was neuer any so strong in faith but Satan durst encounter him, euen the Apostles, yea Adam in the state of innocency, yea our Sauiour Christ himselfe. There were neuer any so constant in the course of Christianitie, but the World hath sought to draw them out of the right way by her baits of prosperitie, or to force them to sin by threatning aduersitie. There were neuer any that haue had in them one sparke of Gods Spirit (Christ excepted) who haue not felt it assaulted and often foiled by the flesh. For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and they are contrarie the one to the other. Yea the Apostle

Exod. 32.

That the worldlings peace proceedeth not from strength of faith but carnall securitie.

Gal. 5. 17.

Apostle, Paul himselfe when hee was most sanctified, saw another law in his members warring against the law of his mind, and leading him captiue to the law of sinne, as appeareth, *Rom.*7.23.

It is not therefore their strength of faith, but their carnall securitie, which so lulleth them asleepe in the cradle of worldly vanities that they cannot discerne this fight; it is not their peace with God nor the peace of conscience which makes them thus quiet, for there is no (such) peace saith my God, to the wicked, but it is peace which they haue made with Satan, a couenant with death and an agreement with hell, as the Prophet speaketh: *Esa.*28.15. When the strong armed man Satan (quietly) keepes the house, the things that he possesseth are in peace; but when a stronger then hee commeth to dispossesse him, he will neuer lose his possession without a fight, and wee cannot chuse but feele the blowes in so sharp an encounter, * *Luk.*11.21 If a man neuer enter the field to fight against Satan, or if at the first encounter hee yeeld himselfe prisoner, and be content to be tied in the pleasing fetters of sinne, it is no maruaile that he doth not rage in his conscience, when as alreadie he is in his captiuitie readie to performe all those works of darknes wherein he imployeth him: but if when Christ the Redeemer is preached vnto him by his Ambassadours, hee would shew any desire of comming out of his thraldome, surely this spirituall Pharaoh would neuer lose his seruice but by force and compulsion, neither can so strong a man be forced but we must needs feele the conflict. While the prisoner lieth in the dungeon, loaded with bolts and tied in chaines, the keeper sleepeth securely, because he knoweth he is safe; but if his bolts being filed off and his chaines loosed, he haue escaped out of prison; then the Iaylor beginneth to bustle, and pursueth him speedily with Hue and Cry: so whilest Satan holdeth vs imprisoned in the darke dungeon of ignorance, loaded and tied with the heauie bolts and chaines of sinne, he is reckelesse and secure; but if our Sauiour by his Ambassadours in the preaching of the Word, loose and vnburthen vs of these chaines, and by the light of his Spirit so illuminate the eyes of our vnderstanding, that we see the way out of Satans dungeon of ignorance, and so escape out of his captiuitie, then he rageth against and pursueth vs, as Pharaoh did the Israelites, that either he may bring vs backe againe into his bondage, or else destroy vs, if wee make resistance. Lastly, they feele not any fight betweene the flesh and the Spirit, because the flesh wholly ruleth them, and like a floud with a cleere current carrieth them wholy into a sea of sinne without any stop or resistance, and therefore no maruaile they feele not this fight, when the spirit which is one of the Combatants hath no force nor residence in them.

Secondly, Gods children who continually feele the assaults of their spirituall enemies, and see the breaches which are made in their soules with the continuall batterie of their temptations, may receiue no small consolation hereby, when as they consider that all who professe themselues Gods seruants, and resolue to serue the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse, are thus tempted and tried. For the Dragon is wroth with the woman (that is, Gods Church) and her seed which keepe the Commandements of God, and haue the testimony of Iesus Christ; and like a roring Lion seeketh their destruction, because they haue renounced him, and fight vnder the Standard of the Lord of Hosts whom he maligneth. And hence it is that whilest we liue without sense of sinne, wee eate and drinke and take our ease without disturbance, but after wee make any conscience of our wayes, and endeuour to serue the Lord, then Satan casteth against vs the fierie darts of his temptations and wee feele many conflicts betweene the flesh and the spirit, with which the worldly man is neuer troubled. Whilest we are poore and beggerly in Gods graces, and be content to rest in the earth as vpon our owne natiue soyle, Satan letteth vs alone as hauing nothing to loose: but if once wee enrich our selues with the vnualuable treasures of Gods spirituall graces, and make the World a passage or place of pilgrimage, and desire to saile through this dangerous Sea into our owne heauenly Countrie; then this Arch-pyrate Satan will set vpon vs, and discharge against vs a whole volley of tentations, that so hee may spoile vs of this rich fraught, and sinke our soules in bottomlesse perdition. Neither will hee euer giue ouer this fight till wee safely arriue in the Hauen of rest, when as being out of his reach we shall be quite freed from the danger of his encounters. So that when we are thus tempted and assaulted by Sathan, the World, and our corrupt flesh, it is a strong argument to perswade vs that we are ascertained for Gods Souldiers, and haue receiued the presse money of his Spirit; for Satans Kingdome is not diuided, neither doth hee fight against those who are his friends and seruants, but them who wage warre against him, and fight vnder the Lords Standard. True it is that when his seruants haue committed such abominable and grieuous sinnes, as haue made deepe wounds in their seared consciences, whereby they are awakened out of their sleepie lethargie of securitie, then Satan filleth them with horrour and despaire, that hee may keepe them from true repentance, when he can hide from them their sinnes no longer; and the Lord in his iust iudgement and for the example of others, doth suffer Sathan to begin in them the torments of Hell in this life; but if hee can by any meanes hide their sinnes and keepe them quietly in his Kingdome, hee will neuer vexe them. And hence it is that whereas one perisheth through despaire, many thousands perish through presumption and securitie. Let all those therefore who feele the burthen of their sinnes, and are vexed with the continuall assaults of their spirituall enemies, comfort themselues; for hereby they haue assurance that they are members of the Church Militant, into which none but Souldiers are entertained, and that now they begin to be Gods friends and seruants, when as Satan oppoſeth himselfe against them.

CHAP. II.

Why God suffereth his seruants to bee exercised in the spirituall conflict of temptations.

Q. Sect. 1. God suffereth his seruants to be tempted & first for his owne glory.

BVt here it may be demanded, why the Lord will suffer his seruants to be thus tempted & assaulted, whereas the wicked are free from such conflicts. I answere, first for his owne glory, for whereas our enemies are strong and mightie, and we weake and feeble, hereby is the Lords Omnipotent power manifested to all the World, by whose assistance such impotent wretches conquer and subdue such furious and puissant enemies.

Q. Sect. 2. Secondly, for the manifesting of his spirituall graces in them.

Secondly, God suffereth his children to be tempted, that so those spirituall graces which he hath bestowed vpon them may the more cleerly shine to his glory. For who can know whether they be Gods golden vessels before they be brought to the touchstone of temptation? Who could know the faith, patience and valour of Gods Souldiers, if they alwayes lay quietly in Garrison and neuer came to the skirmish? Who could feele the odoriferous smell of these aromaticall spices, if they were not punned and bruised in the morter of afflictions? For example, who would haue discerned Abrahams faith, Dauids pietie, Iobs patience, Pauls courage and constancie, if they had beene neuer tempted, which now to the glorie of God shine to all the World?

Q. Sect. 3. God suffereth his seruants to be tempted for their spirituall good, and first to bring them to repentance Iob 13.26.

And as the Lord suffereth Satan & his Imps to trie his children for his owne glory, so also for their spirituall and euerlasting good: for first hereby hee chastiseth them for their sinnes past, and recalleth them to their remembrance, that so they may truely repent of them. And this cause Iob speaketh of: Iob 13.26. Thou writest (saith hee) bitter things against me, and makest me to possesse the iniquities of my youth.

Secondly, hereby he manifesteth vnto vs our secret and hidden sinnes, which the blind eyes of our iudgement would not discerne, if their sight were not quickned with this sharp water of temptation. For so long as we liue in peace, our secure consciences neuer summon vs to the barre of Gods iudgement; but when wee are rouſed vp by temptation, wee enter into a more strait examination of our selues, and search what secret sinnes lie lurking in the hidden corners of our hearts, that so we may repent of them and make our peace with God, without whose assistance wee can haue no hope to stand in any temptation.

Thirdly, the Lord hereby preuenteth our sinnes to come: for when wee haue experience, that the most sharpe weapons, which Satan vseth to inflict deepe wounds in our consciences, are our sinnes, this will make vs most carefull to abstaine from them, lest thereby we strengthen him for our owne ouerthrow. And as these temptations of Satan are in this regard so many bridles to restraine vs from sinne; so also they are so many prickes to let out the wind of vain-glory, wherewith like bladders we be puffed vp, as we may see in the example of Paul, who lest he should be exalted out of measure through the abundance of reuelations receiued a pricke in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet him: 2.Cor. 12.7.

2.Cor. 12.7.

Q. Sect. 4. By tentation God discouereth vnto vs our infirmities

Fourthly, the Lord suffereth Satan to assault vs, that wee may hereby come to the sight of our owne weaknesse and infirmities, when wee haue receiued many foiles; and learne to relie vpon his helpe and assistance in all our dangers; for so proud wee are by nature, that before we come to the fight wee thinke that wee can repell the strongest assaults, and ouercome all enemies which oppose themselues against vs by our owne power; but when wee see our selues vanquished and foiled with euery small temptation, wee learne to haue a more humble conceit of our owne abilitie, and to depend wholy vpon the Lord. And this end is set downe, Deut. 8.2. and 13.3.

Matth. 26.33.

Deut. 8.2. & 13.3.

Q. Sect. 5. That God suffereth Satan to assault vs, that wee may be moued to put on the spirituall armour.

Fifthly, the Lord permitteth Sathan continually to assaile vs with his temptations, to the end we may continually buckle vnto vs the whole armour of God, that wee may be readie for the battaile. For as those who haue no enemies to encounter them, cast their armour aside and let it rust, because they are secure from danger; but when the enemies are at hand and sound the alarme, they both wake and sleepe in their armour readie for the assault: so, if wee should not continually skirmish with our spirituall enemies, wee would lay aside the spirituall armour; but when we haue continuall vse of it, both day and night wee keepe it fast buckled vnto vs, that being armed at all points, wee may bee able to make re-resistance that wee be not surprised at vnawares.

¶. Sect. 6. God by tentations increaseth in vs his spirituall graces.

Lastly, by this conflict the Lord strengthneth and increaseth all his graces in vs: for as by exercise the strength of the bodie is preserued and augmented, and in short time decayeth through idlenesse and sloth; so the gifts of Gods Spirit, faith, affiance, hope, patience and the rest languish in vs, if they be not exercised with temptations. For tribulation bringeth forth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, as it is Rom. 5.3,4 5. For when once wee haue beene tempted and tried, and the Lord hath mercifully deliuered vs from the temptation, afterwards being so assaulted we patiently endure it, hoping for the Lords assistance, beleeuing and assuring our selues, that the Lord who hath deliuered vs, will againe deliuer vs, as it is Psal. 27.9. Moreouer, when wee see the great need of the graces of Gods Spirit this will as a strong motiue intice vs to a carefull vse of all good meanes whereby we may attaine vnto them, whereas if wee were free from this spirituall conflict; wee should not so cleerely see nor apprehend the vse and necessitie of them.

CHAP. III.

Arguments whereby wee may be encouraged to enter into this spirituall conflict.

¶. Sect. 1. That the cause of our warre is iust.

AND thus haue I shewed that all that will be Gods seruants must fight his battailes against his and our spirituall enemies, and the causes why the Lord presseth vs to this seruice. Now that wee may goe couragiously into the field, let vs consider of some reasons and motiues which may make vs resolute and valiant. The first is the iustnesse of our cause: For though souldiers be neuer so strong and well furnished, yet if their consciences tell them that they fight in a bad quarrell, it will much abate their courage, and make them cowardly and timerous. But our cause is most iust, and our warre most lawfull, for God who is iustice it selfe hath proclaimed it by his Heraulds the Apostles. So Eph. 6.10. Finally my brethren be strong in the Lord, & in the power of his might. 11. Put on the whole armour of God that yee may be able to stand against the assaults of the deuil, &c. And Iam. 4.7. Resist the deuil and he wil flie from you. And 1. Pet. 5.8. Be sober and watch, for your aduersary the Deuill as a roaring Lion walketh about seeking whom he may deuoure: 9. Whom resist stedfast in the faith.

Ephes. 6.10.

Iam 4.7. 1. Pet. 5.8.

The cause of our spirituall warre of great importance.

Secondly, the cause of our warre is of great weight, as namely for the glory of God and our owne saluation; for in all Satans skirmishes, he seeketh to impeach Gods glory with false imputations, and to bring vs to vtter destruction. And this may appeare by his first conflict with our mother Eue, Gen. 3.4,5. where hee accuseth God of a lie, who is truth it selfe; and of impotencie and enuious disdaine, saying, that the cause why he did forbid them to eate of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and euill, was not (as he had said) because they should die, but because hee knew that when they should eate thereof, their eyes should bee opened, and they should bee as Gods, knowing good and euill. Where first he seeketh to dimne the beames of Gods glory by accusing him of a lie, and to perswade them that he was not omnipotent, seeing that he was not able to hinder them from being Gods, if they tasted of this fruit: lastly, that he therefore forbad them to eate thereof, because hee enuied them so glorious an estate. And secondly hee laboureth to destroy our first Parents both bodie and soule, by tempting them to disobedience and the transgression of Gods Commandement: and therefore our Sauiour Christ, doth very fitly ioyne these two together, saying, that hee was a lier and a man-slayer from the beginning. A lier, in that he falsely accused God of lying; a man-slayer, because hee did it to this end, that he might murther our first parents and all their posteritie both bodie and soule. So that you see that the end of Satans fight is to dishonour God and destroy vs, and therefore if we haue any regard of Gods glory (which should bee more deere vnto vs then our owne soules) or any respect of our owne saluation, if wee would not treacherously betray them both by our slothfulnesse or cowardize into the hands of Gods and our enemie; let vs valiantly enter the field, and neuer cease our couragious fight till we haue obtained a full victorie.

Gen. 3.4,5.

Iohn 8.44.

¶. Sect. 2. The profit of this spirituall fight.

The second reason to moue vs to vndertake this fight, is the profit which wil accrew vnto vs thereby: for if the getting of some bootie and prize, or the receiuing of some trifling pay will moue the souldiers of earthly Princes to vndergoe all dangers, and with wonderfull perill of life to fight euen at the Cannons mouth; how much more should the stipend of our heauenly King moue vs to fight this combat how terrible soeuer it seemeth to flesh and bloud? For first, that is truly here verified, Peace is the daughter of warre: neither can wee sooner enter the field to fight against these enemies, but presently we shall haue peace with God, and soone after the fruit thereof the peace of conscience. Whereas if we betray Gods cause to Satan, and our soules to sinne, well may we be lulled asleepe in carnall securitie, but wee shall neuer enioy this peace with God, and peace of conscience: for there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked, Esay 57. And whosoeuer haue taken this trecherous truce with Satan, shall find that hee will breake it for his best aduantage, if not in the whole course of their liues, yet at the houre of death when as they shall be able to make no resistance.

Promises made to those that fight. Apoc.2.& 3.

Secondly, if wee fight against these enemies and valiantly ouercome, the Lord hath promised to giue vs to eate of the tree of life which is in Paradise, and the Manna that is hid, and that he will write our names in the Booke of Life, that is, hee will in this life bestow on vs all his spirituall graces, and in the life to come repleniſh vs with such ioyes as neither eye hath seene, nor eare heard, nor heart of man conceiued. Let vs therefore striue that we may ouercome. For our labour is but short, but our reward shall be eternall. On the other side, if we consider Satans pay which he giueth vnto his souldiers, we shall find that it is nothing but the pleasures of sinne for a season, and in the end euerlasting death and destruction of bodie and soule: For the wages of sinne is death, as it is Rom. 6.23. Who therefore is so slothfull and cowardly that would not be encouraged, to fight the Lords battailes against our spirituall enemies, with such promises made by him who is truth it selfe and cannot deceiue vs? Who is so desperate and foole-hardie as to fight vnder Satans banner, seeing the pay which hee giueth is euerlasting death, and vtter confusion?

1.Cor.2.9.

Breuis est labor, premium verò æternum.

Rom.6.23.

§. *Sect.*3. The honour that will accompany our victorie.

The third reason to moue vs to this fight, is the honour which will accompany this victory: for if earthly souldiers will purchase honour with the losse of life, which is nothing else but the commendation of the Prince, or applause of the vaine people; what hazard should wee not vndergoe in fighting the spirituall combat, seeing our grand Captaine the Lord of hosts, and infinite multitudes of blessed Angels looke vpon vs & behold our combat, whose prayse and approbation is our chiefe felicitie? What perill should wee feare, to obtaine a crowne of glory which is promised to all that ouercome, and to become heires apparent of Gods Kingdome? On the other side, the shame and confusion of face which shall ouertake them who cowardly forsake the Lords standard and yeeld vnto Satan, when as they shall not dare to looke the Lord in the face whose cause they haue betrayed, should serue as a strong motiue to encourage vs to the fight.

§. *Sect.*4. The necessitie of vndertaking this warfare.

The fourth reason to perswade vs, is the necessitie of vndertaking this combat. There is no man so cowardly that will not fight when there is no hope in flight, no mercie to be expected in the enemie, no outrage and cruelty which will not be committed. But such is our enemie that wee cannot possibly flee from him, his malice is vnreconcileable, his crueltie outragious; for hee fighteth not against vs, to the end that hee may obtaine soueraigntie alone, abridge vs of our liberty, spoile vs of our goods; but hee aimeth at our death and destruction of bodie and soule. If therefore we so carefully arme our selues against earthly enemies, who when they haue done their vttermost rage can but shorten a miserable life, how much more carefully should we resist this enemy, who seeketh to depriue vs of euerlasting life, and to plunge vs into an euer dying death?

Secondly, this fight is necessary because in our Baptisme wee haue taken a military Sacrament, and promised faithfully vnto the Lord, that wee will continue his faithfull souldiers vnto the end fighting his battailes against the flesh, the World, and the Deuill. There we haue giuen our names vnto Christ, to whom wee owe our selues and liues by a double right, both because hee hath giuen them vnto vs, and also restored them the second time when we had lost them. There we are put in mind of his bloudshed for our redemption, which should encourage vs to fight couragiously, that wee may be preserued from falling againe into the cruell slauery of sinne and Satan.

Thirdly, vnlesse wee fight this spirituall combat, and in fighting ouercome, we shall neuer be crowned with the crowne of glory: for it is not giuen vnto any to triumph, who haue not fought valiantly and subdued their enemies. The euerlasting peace of Gods Kingdome is not promised to such cowards as neuer entred the field, or being entred haue presently yeelded themselues to be the captiues of Satan: but vnto those that fight couragiously and gloriously ouercome. If any man (saith the Apostle) striue for a masterie, hee is not crowned except he striue as he ought to doe: So the Apostle Iames pronounceth the man blessed that endureth tentation; for when he is tried (or rather as the words are, when by triall he shall be approued) he shall receiue a crowne of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that loue him. Whereby it appeareth, that none are crowned vnlesse they striue as they ought, and therefore much lesse they which striue not at all; that none are blessed but those who are tempted, and being tempted endure the tentation; that first wee must be tried, and by triall approued, before we can receiue the crowne of life.

§. *Sect.*5. Those that will fight against our spirituall enemies, are sure of victory.

Lastly, wee may be encouraged to this fight by certaine hope of victorie, for wee fight vnder the Standard of Christ Iesus, who alone is mightier then all our enemies that assault vs. If we did indeed regard our enemies strength and our owne weakenesse onely, we might well be discouraged from vndertaking this combat; but if wee looke vpon our grand Captaine Christ, whose loue towards vs is no lesse then his power, and both both infinite, there is no cauſe of doubting, for he that exhorteth vs to the fight, will ſo helpe vs that we ſhall obtaine victory. When we faint he ſuſtaineth vs, and crowneth vs when we ouercome. He hath alreadie vanquiſhed our enemies to our hand, and hath cooled their courage and abated their force. He hath bruiſed the Serpents head, ſo that he ſhall not be able to ouercome the leaſt of his followers, well may hee hiſſe againſt them, but he cannot hurt them, for his ſting is taken away. Sathan was the ſtrong man who poſſeſſed all in peace, but our Sauiour Chriſt who was ſtronger then hee, comming vpon him hath ouercome him, and taken from him all his armour wherein he truſted, and diuided his ſpoyles, Luke 11.21,22. We fought againſt mightie enemies and great Potentates, but our Sauiour hath ſpoyled principalities and powers, and hath made a ſhew of them openly, and hath triumphed ouer them vpon the Croſſe, and ſo through death hath deſtroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the Deuill, that hee might deliuer all them which for feare of death were all their life ſubiect to bondage, as it is, Heb. 2. 14,15. Hee was indeed a mightie Prince of this wordly Canaan, but our good Ioſhua hath ſubdued him, and hath left nothing for vs to doe who are his ſouldiers & followers, but to tread in his necke in token of victory. But we alaſſe are faint hearted, like vnto Iether the firſt borne of Gedeon, for though our Sauiour Chriſt hath conquered theſe our ſpirituall enemies, and hath put the Sword of his Spirit into our hands, wherewith wee might alſo vanquiſh them: yet we are afraid to draw the ſword, becauſe we are but freſh water ſouldiers and white-liuered; and therefore wee had need to encourage our ſelues, not onely by looking on the victory of our chiefe Captaine, but alſo on the conqueſt of our fellow ſouldiers, who were weake and fraile like our ſelues. So likewiſe Chriſt hath ouercome the World, and willeth vs to be of good comfort, ſeeing wee ſhall be partakers with him in his triumph, if we will ioyne with him in his fight. And though our fleſh be a treacherous enemie and ſtronger to vs then the ſpirit, yet ſo wee will fight againſt the luſts thereof wee ſhall be ſure of victory, for he will aſſiſt vs with his holy Spirit, and therewith enable vs more and more to mortifie this old man and body of ſinne. Well may wee take a foyle in this ſpirituall combat, but the Lord will raiſe vs vp againe; For though wee fall, yet ſhall wee not be caſt off, becauſe the Lord putteth vnder his hand, as it is Pſal. 37.24. And the Lord hath promiſed, that he will not ſuffer vs to be tempted aboue our power, but will giue the iſſue with the temptation, that we may be able to beare it, as it is 1. Cor. 10.13. and hee that hath promiſed is faithfull and true, yea truth it ſelfe, and therefore hee will be as good as his word. Though therefore Satan encounter vs with all furie, let vs not be faint-hearted, but couragiouſly endure his aſſaults, and ſo in the end the victorie will be ours: for if we reſiſt the Deuill, he will flie from vs, if we fight the Lords battels valiantly, the God of peace ſhall tread Satan vnder our feet ſhortly. For the promiſe of bruiſing the Serpents head doth belong not onely to Ieſus Chriſt our head, but alſo to all thoſe who are members of his bodie.

Iames 4.7.

Rom. 16.20. Gen. 3.15.

Let vs not therefore feare to fight againſt beaten and conquered enemies, ſlothfully pretending our weakneſſe to withſtand theſe ſonnes of Anakim: for as one ſaith; Euery one ſhall be a conquerour who deſireth the conqueſt. For if we will be the Lords ſouldiers, hee will not ſuffer himſelfe to bee ſo much diſgraced, as to let vs be ouercome by his mortall enemies. He hath armed vs himſelfe with his owne armour, and ſent vs out to fight his battailes, and therefore hee will not haue vs vanquiſhed, being fortified with his ſtrength, for ſo ſhould himſelfe be ouercome in vs, and his weapons would be eſteemed weake and inſufficient. Yea hee hath ingrafted vs into his owne bodie, and we are liuely members thereof, and therefore let vs neuer thinke that all the power of Hell ſhall be able to ouer-come vs: for what head can with patience ſuffer his ſound members to be pulled from his bodie, if he be able to defend them?

CHAP. IV.

Of the malice of our ſpirituall enemy Satan.

§. Sect. 1. The generall parts of the booke.

AND ſo much concerning the reaſons which may incourage vs to vndertake this combat. Now wee are to ſpeake of the ſpirituall warfare it ſelfe, wherein (as in all other wars) we are to conſider of our preparation to the conflict, & the conflict it ſelfe. In our preparation: we are firſt to conſider of the ſtate, qualitie, and condition of our enemies, and of the meanes whereby wee may withſtand and ouercome them. Concerning the firſt, in an enemie who proclaimeth warre againſt vs, wee are to conſider two things: firſt, of his will, and ſecondly, of his power. For if he haue will to hurt vs and no power, he is not to bee greatly regarded; if power and no malicious and vnreconcileable will, he is not ſo much to bee feared; but if his power bee great and puiſſant, and his will malicious, then is it time to looke about vs, and to muſter all our forces, that we may be readie to endure the encounter. Firſt, therefore concerning the will of our grand and arch-enemie Satan, if we conſider thereof aright, we ſhall find that it is moſt maliciouſly bent againſt vs, ſo that there

uer haue taken this trecherous truce with Satan, shall find that hee will breake it for his best aduantage, if not in the whole course of their liues, yet at the houre of death when as they shall be able to make no resistance.

Promises made to those that fight. Apoc.2.& 3.

Secondly, if wee fight against these enemies and valiantly ouercome, the Lord hath promised to giue vs to eate of the tree of life which is in Paradise, and the Manna that is hid, and that he will write our names in the Booke of Life, that is, hee will in this life bestow on vs all his spirituall graces, and in the life to come repleniſh vs with such ioyes as neither eye hath seene, nor eare heard, nor heart of man conceiued. Let vs therefore striue that we may ouercome. For our labour is but short, but our reward shall be eternall. On the other side, if we consider Satans pay which he giueth vnto his souldiers, we shall find that it is nothing but the pleasures of sinne for a season, and in the end euerlasting death and destruction of bodie and soule: For the wages of sinne is death, as it is Rom. 6.23. Who therefore is so slothfull and cowardly that would not be encouraged, to fight the Lords battailes against our spirituall enemies, with such promises made by him who is truth it selfe and cannot deceiue vs? Who is so desperate and foole-hardie as to fight vnder Satans banner, seeing the pay which hee giueth is euerlasting death, and vtter confusion?

§. Sect. 1. The generall parts of the booke.

AND ſo much concerning the reaſons which may incourage vs to vndertake this combat. Now wee are to ſpeake of the ſpirituall warfare it ſelfe, wherein (as in all other wars) we are to conſider of our preparation to the conflict, & the conflict it ſelfe. In our preparation: we are firſt to conſider of the ſtate, qualitie, and condition of our enemies, and of the meanes whereby wee may withſtand and ouercome them. Firſt, therefore concerning the will of our grand and arch-enemie Satan, if we conſider thereof aright, we ſhall find that it is moſt maliciouſly bent againſt vs, ſo that there

there is no hope of truce or reconciliation with him, though wee could finde in our cowardly hearts to labour and ſue for a diſhonorable peace with Gods and our enemy. For his malice is not newly conceiued but inueterate, euen as ancient, within a few dayes as the World it ſelfe, and much more durable; for the World ſhall haue an end, but Satans malice to mankind is endleſſe, becauſe the cauſe thereof, namely, the loue and fauour of God toward the faithfull (whoſe eſtate hee doth enuy and maligne, himſelfe being eternally reprobated) ſhall be endleſſe and eternall. And this appeareth in the example of our firſt parents, who were no ſooner placed in the garden of pleaſure, and poſſeſſed of Paradiſe, but Satan being almoſt burſt with enuie to ſee their happy eſtate, neuer reſted till hee had diſgorged his malice, and diſpoſſeſſed them of that happineſſe which they enioyed. Neither doth hee leſſe maligne and hate thoſe who being falne in Adam are raiſed vp in Chriſt, and haue the fee ſimple of euerlaſting glory, purchaſed by Chriſts merit, ſealed and aſſured vnto them by the Spirit of God and a liuely faith. And hence it is that the Lord (knowing Satans malice towards his children, and that whether hee fawneth or frowneth, hee alwayes ſeeketh their deſtruction) hath proclaimed open warres betweene vs, that wee may alwayes ſtand vpon our guard, and not be ſurpriſed at vnawares; that alſo we may not entertaine a thought of peace, though Satan offer it on whatſoeuer conditions: for what peace can there be betweene the children of God and the children of Belial, betweene the ſeed of the Woman and the ſeed of the Serpent, ſeeing God himſelfe from the beginning hath put enmitie betweene them?

Gen.3.15.

2. Sect.2. Satans malice ioyned with violence.

But as the malice of Satan is inueterate, ſo alſo it is mortall and deadly, not to be ſatiſfied by offering a ſmall iniurie, by taking away our goods and good name, or afflicting vs with ſickneſſe, no not by taking away our liues; for nothing will ſatisfie him but our finall deſtruction of bodie and ſoule. And this his malice is liuely deciphered vnto vs by diuers names which are giuen him in the Scriptures. For he is called Satan, that is, an aduerſarie, ſtill readie to croſſe vs in all our ſuits which wee make vnto God, as hee did Iehoſhua the high Prieſt, *Zach.*3.1. Hee is called an enemie, and that a malicious one; for where Chriſt the good husbandman ſoweth wheate, there he ſoweth tares, that is, Hypocrites amongſt true profeſſors, to the diſhonour of God, the diſcredit of the Goſpell, and the reproch of the true profeſſours thereof. And leſt we ſhould thinke that hee is ſome milde natured enemie who will bee ſatisfied with ſome ſmall reuenge, he is called a murtherer and a man-ſlayer, as though this were his profeſſion and occupation. And leſt we ſhould imagine him to be one lately falne to this trade, our Sauiour telleth vs that he hath beene ſo from the beginning, ſo that like an olde hangman hee is fleſht in bloud and crueltie; and therefore ſeeing wee can hope for no mercy at his hands, let vs ſo much the more couragiouſly oppoſe our ſelues againſt him. But for as much as the moſt ſauage man hath ſome reliques of humanitie left in him, therefore the holy Ghoſt compareth him to beaſts, that wee may expect nothing from him but brutiſh cruelty; as firſt to a Lion, yea a Lion roring after his prey, who is ſo hungry and rauenous, that he deſireth nothing more then to ſeaze vpon that which hee purſueth, 1. *Pet.*5.8. Now who would not be moſt carefull to keepe himſelfe out of the pawes of ſuch a rauenous beaſt? or if hee were encountred by him, who would not reſiſt him if hee had any hope of victorie? But in truth Satan is farre more cruell then the roaring Lion, who (if wee may giue credit to Hiſtories) ſpareth thoſe that fall down flat before him; whereas if he ſhould get vs at ſuch aduantage, hee would proudly trample vs vnder foot, and make vs ſure for euer riſing. And therefore leſt wee ſhould looke for any mercie at his hands by ſubmiſſion, the Holy Ghoſt calleth him the great red Dragon, *Apoc.*12.3. which beaſt beareth ſuch naturall malice to mankinde, that he deuoureth them not onely for hunger, but alſo for ſport or hatred, in ſatisfying whereof he taketh great delight; ſuch a beaſt is our enemie, who is ſo fleſht in bloud and crueltie, and ſo ouer-carried with malice and hatred, that hee eſteemeth it his chiefe ſport and paſtime to deſtroy vs. Yea hee is farre more dangerous, for the other rageth but againſt the bodie, this againſt both body and ſoule; that beaſt wee may eaſily auoide, but it is impoſſible to flie from this winged Dragon, and therefore there is no other meanes to eſcape his furie, but by arming our ſelues ſtrongly, and fighting valiantly till we haue put him to flight.

*1. Pet.*5.8.

*Apoc.*12.3.

2. Sect.3. Satans malice ioyned with treacherous falſehood.

And thus you ſee Satans malice ioyned with crueltie and raging violence, which he vſeth when hee hath any hope of ſurpriſing vs by aſſault; but if he find vs ſtrongly fortified with Gods graces, and at all points armed with the compleat armour of a Chriſtian; if hee perceiue that wee are hedged in and fenced on all ſides (as hee ſpeaketh of Iob) that is, guarded and protected by Gods almightie and all-ruling prouidence, ſo that hee hath no hope of ouercomming vs by aſſault and force; then he ſheweth no leſſe malice and more ſubtiltie in ſeeking our deſtruction, by fauning vpon vs, and alluring vs to ſinne, by offering the baites of honour, pleaſure and commoditie, that ſo hee may make entrance (as it were by a poſterne gate) and ſubdue vs while wee are abandoned of the Lords assistance, and disarmed of our spirituall weapons, whereby we should make resistance. And thus he dealt with our first Parents, who being inticed to sinne, and also yeelding to the intic ement, and so being depriued of Gods protection, and the breastplate of righteousnesse, were laid open to those deadly wounds which hee inflicted on them. For assoone as they had tasted of the forbidden fruit, they perceiued their nakednesse, and therefore couered themselues with figge leaues; too weake an armour to repell the fierie darts of Satan. Thus he disarmed the Israelites, by tempting them to worship the golden Calfe, so that Moses saw that they were naked, that is, disarmed of Gods fauour and protection, *Exod.*32.25. And this his policy he taught his seruant Balaam, who when hee could not curse them whom God had blessed, gaue this cursed counsaile to Balaak, that the Moabitish women should intice the Israelites to commit with them first carnall, and then spirituall whoredome, knowing that to be the onely meanes to bring Gods curse vpon them. As we may see if wee compare *Numb.*25.1,2. with the 31. Chapter and 16. Verse, and *Apoc.*2.14. So also this wilde Boare would haue broken downe the hedge which defended Iob by tempting him to blaspheme God. And thus our subtill enemie Sinon-like inticeth vs with deceiuing allurements, euen with our owne hands to breake downe the wall of our defence, and to make an open passage for whole troupes of sinnes to enter and surprize vs, whilest wee (ouercome with a false ioy) glut and make our selues drunke with the cup of voluptuous pleasures, and lie snorting in the dead sleepe of carnall securitie, not so much as once dreaming of our approching ruine and destruction.

*Exod.*32.25.

*Num.*24.14. & 25. 1,2. & 31. 16.

*Apoc.*2.14.

And hereof he hath the name of tempter giuen him, yea, hee is not onely called a tempter, but, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, ὁ πειράζων, the tempter, because he is a tempter of tempters, & as it were a tempter by profession, *Mat.*4. 2. 1.*Thes.*3.5. The consideration whereof should make vs most carefull to withstand all his temptations, whereby hee allureth vs vnto sinne. For if we yeeld unto them, hee will surely disarme vs of Gods fauour and protection, and so deadly wound our soules when hee hath made them naked. There is no wise man will put off his armour and cast away his weapons in the presence of his cruell enemie, though hee perswade him thereto with many flattering speeches and faire promises; and shall wee let Satan disarme vs, because he allureth vs thereto, by promising some vnlawfull profit or vaine pleasure, especially seeing we know him to be an enemie no lesse treacherous then malicious? But as hee is a tempter to intice vnto sinne, so also he is our accuser after that wee haue sinned, requiring of God that hee will execute his iustice vpon the offenders who haue deserued punishment. Of this there needs no further proofe then his owne testimonie, Iob 1.7. where he professeth that he had beene compassing the earth about, like a Promoter to spie out faults, that hee might informe against the offenders. But because wee will not rest in his testimonie, who is the father of lies, wee will adde thereunto another of vndoubted authoritie: for *Apoc.*12.10. it is said, that the Saints reioyce because Satan, who was the accuser of their brethren, was cast downe, which accused them before God day and night. So that Satan can spare no time, from accusing vs for sinne, but that which he imployeth in tempting vs thereunto, or in inflicting those punishments which God permitteth him to lay vpon vs. Whereby we may perceiue the malice & treachery of our enemy, who though hee be the chiefe cause which moueth vs to sinne, yet himselfe is the first that accuseth vs for it, and that vncessantly. Which may serue as a strong argument to make vs warie of our wayes, lest falling into sinne, we giue Satan occasion to insult ouer vs, and to preferre bils of inditement before our heauenly Iudge, whose exact iustice will not let sinne goe vnpunished. If there were a Promoter continually prying into all our actions who were most maliciously disposed against vs, and readie to informe of all our misdemeanours vnto the Magistrate, how fearefull would we be to doe any thing which would bring vs within the compasse of the Law? But such an Informer continually obserueth all our behauiour, euen in our secret chambers; who will not faile to accuse vs euen of those sinnes which he himselfe hath tempted vs vnto: and therefore seeing this malicious blab still prieth into our actions, this should be of more force to with-hold vs from all sinne, then if all the World did looke vpon vs.

Iob 1.7.

*Apoc.*12.10.

But he is not only an accuser, but a slanderer also, and thereof hee hath his name διάβολος. If therefore hee can spie but an apparance of euill in vs, he will not sticke to say, that wee haue or will commit that euill which he suspecteth vs of: for he will wrest and misconstrue all we do to the worst sense, and make of euery mole-hill an huge mountaine. Thus wrongfully did hee slander Iob, that hee serued God for that end for which Demetrius serued his Goddesse, namely for aduantage, because hee preserued him and blessed all he had; affirming that if he would take away his goods, and a little afflict his bodie, hee would blaspheme him to his face, Iob 1.10. And this also teacheth vs to looke warily to our actions, abstaining not onely from euill, but also from all appearance thereof, as the Apostle exhorteth, that so we giue not to our malicious enemie the least aduantage. Neither is Satan only an accuser and slanderer, but also an executioner or hangman, readie, with all alacritie and sauage crueltie to inflict that punishment the which the Lord adiudgeth vs vnto, as wee may see in the historie of Iob. And this also sheweth vnto vs the extreame malice of our enemie, which maketh him to forget that glorious state wherein he was created, and with all willingnesse to execute so base an office.

1. Thes. 5. 21.

Q. Sect. 3. That Satans malice should increase our resolution to withstand him. Ephes. 6. 12.

By all which it appeareth that our enemie Satan is most malicious, yea maliciousnesse it selfe, as he is called Ephes. 6. 12. that is, the father and author of all malice and enuie, who laboureth might and maine to dishonor God and worke our destruction. The consideration whereof should rouze vs out of our carnall security (whereby men behaue themselues, as though either they had no enemie at all, or else such a gentle natured one, that they may haue peace with him at their owne pleasure) seeing there is no hope of peace and truce, vnlesse we can be content to liue in his thraldome to our vtter destruction: for whomsoeuer hee keepeth as his prisoners in this life, hee will at the houre of death and iudgement bring out to execution. Let vs therefore oppose against Sathans malice, Christian resolution; stedfastly purposing and endeuouring to continue our fight in resisting Sathan to our liues end, how troublesome soeuer it seemeth to flesh and bloud. For seeing there is no truce to be hoped for, nor to be desired if it were offered, by reason of the enmitie which is betweene vs and our enemie; seeing his malice is so inueterate and mortall, that there is no mercie to be expected, but all barbarous and raging cruelty; seeing also we fight the Lords battailes, who hath assured vs of victorie in the end: This should make vs so resolute, that though wee be foiled, wounded, and as it were beaten downe on our knees, yet wee should neuer yeeld, but make resistance euen to the last gaspe. For what more honourable death then to die in fighting the Lords battailes? What death more profitable, seeing by dying we shall ouercome, and obtaine a finall victorie ouer all our enemies, and receiue the crowne of glorie, euerlasting happinesse, promised to all those who fight valiantly in this combat vnto the end?

CHAP. V.

Of the strength of our spirituall enemie Satan.

Q. Sect. 1. Of Satans strength considered in himselfe.

ANd thus haue I shewed the malicious wil of our enemie. Let vs now consider of his power. For though he be most malicious, yet if hee wanted power to execute his malice, wee might well contemne him, and rest secure, making no great preparation to resist his weake assault. But with our enemie it is far otherwise: for as his will is most maliciously bent to hurt, so is he strong and mightie to effect his will. And this his power and abilitie, consisteth partly in his strength, and partly in his skill and warlike policie, whereby hee imployeth all his strength to his best aduantage. His strength may be considered both in himselfe and in his aides. In respect of his owne strength he is very mightie, so that if the Lord permitteth him, hee is able to raise the winds, stirre vp tempests, bring downe fire from Heauen, and vtterly destroy vs in a moment. And this his strength the holy Ghost expresseth, by comparing him to things most strong, either in the Sea or on the Land, that so wee may be more carefull to arme our selues against him. He is compared to the great Leuiathan or Whale, whose inuincible force is described by the Lord himselfe, Iob. 41. He is compared to a Lion, yea to a roaring lion, which rauenously hunting after his prey hath his force redoubled with his hunger. And also to a great red Dragon, hauing seuen heads and tenne hornes, whose strength is so great, that with his very taile hee drew the third part of the stars of Heauen, and cast them to the earth, that is, hee vanquisheth and subdueth many in the visible Church, which make some profession of Religion, but in their liues denie the power thereof. And this his strength is so much the more dangerous, by reason of his mortall malice and deadly poyson which he casteth out of his mouth in great abundance.

Q. Sect. 2. Other names whereby Satans power is shewed. Luke 11. 21.

And lest we should contemne this brutish might, which a weake man may with policie defeate, therefore hee is compared to a strong armed man, who keepeth in peace all that he possesseth. And lest wee should despise him because hee is but one, the holy Ghost telleth vs that he is a mightie Prince, not of one Land or Countrie but of the whole World, who therefore hath infinite multitudes at his commandement: neither is there one of these Princes alone, but huge multitudes; and therefore the holy Ghost speaking of them, vseth the plurall number, saying, that wee fight against principalities, against powers, and against the worldly gouernors, &c. Whereas therefore the holy Ghost doth call him the strong man, Satan, and the Deuill in the singular number; hee would not haue vs to conceiue that there is onely one, but it is partly to note the chiefe of the kingdome of darkenesse, according to that, Matth. 25. 41. Depart from me yee accursed into euerlasting fire, which is prepared for the Deuill and his Angels. And in this sense he is called Beelzebub the Prince of Deuils, Otherwiſe the Scriptures euidently ſhew vs, that there is not one alone, but many to aſſault vs. Our Sauiour telleth vs, that one Spirit taketh vnto him ſeuen more, and they all enter into one man. It is ſaid alſo that Chriſt had caſt out of Mary Magdalen ſeuen, that is, many Deuils. And Luke 8. 30. there is mention made of a man poſſeſſed with an whole legion, that is with an huge multitude. So that as our enemies are powerfull in ſtrength, they are alſo in numbers numberleſſe, enow to beſet vs all on all ſides, and in all places, and therefore our fight muſt needs be dangerous; which danger the Apoſtle aggrauateth, by telling vs that they are the Princes of darkneſſe, and therefore as well able to aſſault vs in the night as in the day; which fight of all other is moſt terrible, when we cannot ſee our enemies, and therefore can not tell on which ſide to defend our ſelues. Secondly, he telleth vs that wee wraſtle not with enemies of fleſh and bloud like vnto our ſelues, but with ſpirituall wickedneſſe, which are moſt dangerous; becauſe being ſpirits they can with incredible ſwiftneſſe paſſe from place to place which are farre diſtant, and therefore the more fitly take all aduantages, either in aſſaulting vs at their pleaſure, or withdrawing themſelues when they find reſiſtance. Being ſpirits they can lie ſecretly in ambuſhment, euen in our bedchambers, and ſo ſurprize vs when they find vs moſt wretchleſſe and ſecure; for wee can not diſcouer them before we feele their aſſaults. Thirdly, hee ſaith that they are in high places, to note vnto vs that they haue gotten the aduantage of the vpper ground; and therefore the fight muſt needs be dangerous, when our enemie fighteth againſt vs from an high place or fort, we ſtanding ſo low that wee are ſcarce able to reach him. But becauſe earthly things cannot ſufficiently ſhew the power of our enemie Satan, therefore he is called the God of this world; to note vnto vs, that in reſpect of worldly ſtrength and humane reſiſtance, hee is after a ſort omnipotent, that is, able to doe what he liſt, if hee were not reſtrained by Gods diuine power, who alone is truely omnipotent, and ouer-ruled by no ſuperiour.

§. Sect. 3. Of the courage and audacioufneſſe of Satan.

And thus you ſee the puiſſant power of this our ſpirituall enemie. But though hee were ſtrong, yet if withall hee were a daſtard and void of courage, he were the leſſe to be feared; but as he is very ſtrong, ſo alſo he is exceeding deſperate and audacious, for there was neuer man that liued, whom he durſt not encounter, yea and that after (by Gods aſſiſtance) he had taken many ouerthrowes. Though Dauid were a moſt holy man and according to Gods owne heart, yet hee aſſaulted him, and gaue him diuers foiles, by tempting him to adulterie, murther, and in pride of heart to number the people. Though Iob was by Gods owne teſtimonie the iuſteſt man on earth, and therefore the beſt armed with the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſſe: yet Satan durſt encounter him as long as God would ſuffer him. Hee reſiſted Iehoſhua the good high Prieſt, Zach. 3. 2. He buffetted Paul the choſen veſſell of the Lord, 2. Cor. 12. 7. Yea ſo ventrous he is, that he aſſaulted our firſt Parents in the ſtate of innocencie, when they were armed with free will, and might if they would haue reſiſted his temptations. Nay, ſo deſperately audacious is this our enemie that hee durſt encounter our grand Captaine Chriſt Ieſus, who was God and man, able to deſtroy him with a word of his mouth; and that not once but many times, after hee was ſhamefully foiled and ouerthrowne. Yea ſo inſolent and foole-hardie hee is, that hee did not onely aſſault him here on earth when hee was in the ſhape of a ſeruant, and whereas in reſpect of his outward ſtate hee might haue ſome hope of preuailing; but alſo hee wageth warre againſt him in Heauen, ſitting at the right hand of his Father in all glorie, power and maieſtie, when as he hath no appearance of hope to preuaile, but is moſt ſure that hee ſhall haue the ouerthrow. And this appeareth, Apoc. 12. 7. And there was a battaile in Heauen: Michael and his Angels fought againſt the Dragon; and the Dragon fought and his angels, but they preuailed not, &c. Where by Michael wee are to vnderſtand Chriſt himſelfe, for he onely is the Prince of Angels; and this name ſignifying ſuch an one as is equall with God Almightie, can agree to no other but vnto Chriſt alone. And by the Dragon we are to vnderſtand Satan, as appeareth Verſe 9. who fought againſt our Sauiour, though he preuailed not. If then he durſt encounter the moſt valiant Souldiers that euer fought the Lords battailes, yea if he durſt ſet vpon our Sauiour Chriſt himſelf; then ſurely there is no doubt but that he hath courage enough to ſet vpon vs who are weake and feeble, altogether vnable in our ſelues to make reſiſtance.

§. Sect. 4. Satans power ſhould make vs arme our ſelues againſt his encounters.

Seeing therefore our enemies are ſo puiſſant in ſtrength, ſo innumerable in multitude, ſo dangerous and ſo audacious, let vs ſhake off all ſecuritie, and continually ſtand in readineſſe to endure the encounter: for what folly is it for vs with ſecure Worldlings to contemne and make no reckoning of ſuch enemies? Seeing euery one of vs muſt reſiſt a huge multitude; ſeeing we which are weak and and feeble are to withstand those which are strong and mightie; seeing wee which are flesh & bloud must enter combat with those which are spirituall wickednesses, principalities, powers, and Princes of darknesse; seeing wee who are cowardly and fearefull must sustaine the encounter of those who are desperate and audacious; lastly, seeing wee haue in our selues no aduantages against them, & they want no aduantages against vs, let vs not therefore foolishly contemne such puissant enemies; but with all care and diligence let vs arme our selues against them, and worke out our saluation with feare and trembling, as the Apostle exhor-

Q. Sect.5. Consolations against the feare of Satans power.

But as wee are not securely to contemne these enemies: so wee are not faintly to yeeld vnto them, nor cowardly to despaire of victory. For as all those who securely contemning them neuer stand vpon their guard, are most sure to be surprised & ouerthrowne; so whosoeuer arme themselues against them, and enter into the spirituall combat with a desire to ouercome, shall most certainly obtaine victorie. For though their power be great, yet it is not infinite, and that which they haue, it is not from themselues, but from the Lord, who so curbeth them with his all-ruling prouidence, that they are not able to goe one iot further then hee looseth out the raines; as it plainly appeareth both by examples and testimonies of Scripture. Though Satan were most maliciously disposed against Iob, so that hee did with all extremitie execute that which God suffered him to doe, yet he could not goe one iot further then his commission. Hee could not touch his substance till the Lord had said,

Iob 1.12.

Iob 1.12. All that he hath is in thy hand. And then not preuailing against him by depriuing him of his goods, hee commeth againe to the Lord to haue his commission inlarged, and when he had got authoritie to afflict his bodie, he could not touch his life, because the Lord had not giuen him so much libertie. Though Saul were a wicked man, yet Satan could not hurt or vexe him, till the Lord sent him. And hence it is that hee is called the spirit of God, because hee is Gods slaue and wholly at his appointment. So he could not deceiue the false prophets of Ahab, till hee had gotten licence of the Lord, 1. King. 22. 22. Nay, so farre is Satan from hauing absolute authoritie and power ouer the faithfull, that it is limited and restrained in respect of the meanest creatures; for a whole legion of Deuils could not so much as enter into one herd of swine, till by earnest intreatie they had obtained leaue of our Sauiour Christ. And therefore much lesse can they preuaile against any of Gods children, seeing the very haires of their head are numbred. Well may Sathan maligne vs and earnestly desire our ruine and destruction, well may hee seeke to sift vs like wheate, as hee did Peter; but our Sauiour Christ maketh intercession for vs, so that our faith shall neuer faile, Luke 22.31. This also is manifest by plaine testimonies, Iude 6. it is said, that the Lord hath reserued the wicked angels in euerlasting chaines vnder darknesse, vnto the iudgement of the great day, 2.Pet.2.4. God spared not, the Angels that had sinned, but cast them downe into Hell, and deliuered them into the chaines of darknesse to be kept vnto damnation. And Apoc. 20.2. Satan is said to haue beene bound by the Angel of the Lord for a thousand yeeres, so that he could not stirre till the Lord suffered him to be loosed. By all which the holy Ghost noteth vnto vs, that Satan is no more able to doe vs hurt, then a malefactour who being bound hand and foot is fast tied vp in strong chaines, till the Lord looseth him and giueth him leaue.

Q. Sect.6. How Satan is said to resist God.

But here some man may obiect, that Satan is said in the Scriptures, to resist God and to oppose himselfe against him, and euen to fight a battaile against our Sauiour Christ himselfe and his blessed Angels, *Apoc.*12.7. I answere, that this resistance and fight dependeth on Gods permissiue prouidence, neither could he so much as stirre against God, if he did not suffer him. Hee is indeed most maliciously disposed against the Lord, and by this his malice is stirred vp to doe those things which hee thinketh most displeasant in Gods eyes: but because the Lord chaineth and curbeth him in with his omnipotent power, hee is onely able to doe those things that God permitteth him, and, will he nill he, he is constrained to obey his Creator, and to be at his commandement.

Q. Sect.7. That the Lords ouer-ruling power giueth vs assurance of victorie.

Seeing therefore Satans power is restrained by the omnipotent power of God, this may serue as a strong reason to strengthen our faith in the assurance of victorie; especially considering that the Lord is not only omnipotent in power, but also in respect of his will most readie to aide and support vs in all our conflicts. For hee hath promised vs, that we shal not be tempted aboue our power, and that hee will giue a good issue to the temptation, though the beginning and middle are dangerous and troublesome, 1. *Cor.*10 13. And that if we will but resist the Deuill, we shall put him to flight, *Iam.*4.7. Though therefore in our selues wee are very weake, yet God will assist vs in this combat, which as well concerneth his owne glorie as our good, and being armed with his power, the gates of Hell cannot preuaile against vs. Well may the Lord suffer vs to take a foile, that thereby learning to know our owne weakenesse, wee may the more carefully rest on his power, and more earnestly craue his assistance, but then hee will raise vs vp

though wee be neuer ſo feeble, for the more apparent our infirmities are, the more cleerly will the omnipotent power of the Lord ſhine vnto all the World, when by his helpe we haue obtained victorie.

Q. Sect. 8. If we will ouercome we muſt wholly relie on the Lord.

Would wee therefore reſiſt Satans force and ſtrength? then let vs not goe armed in our owne power, for wee are ſo weakened with ſinne and corruption, that wee are not able to withſtand his leaſt aſſault; but deſpairing in our owne abilitie, let vs relie our ſelues wholly on the Lord: for we are ſtrengthened with all might through his glorious power, as it is Col. 1. 11. and though in our ſelues we are able to doe nothing, yet we are able to doe all things through the helpe of Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth vs, as it is Phil. 4. 13. Of our ſelues we are not able to endure the leaſt encounter of our ſpirituall enemies, but yet if we truſt in the Lord, hee will giue vs victorie through Ieſus Chriſt, 1. Cor. 15. 57. And hence it is that the Apoſtle preparing vs for this ſpirituall combat, doth exhort vs to be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; and to put on the whole armour of God, that we may be able to ſtand againſt the aſſaults of the Deuill, Epheſ. 6. 10, 11. If then wee would be ſafely protected from the furie of Satans power, let vs not oppoſe againſt it our owne ſtrength, for then ſurely wee ſhall be ouercome, but let vs relie our ſelues on the almightie power of God, profeſſing with the Prophet Dauid, Pſal. 18. 2. that the Lord is our rocke and fortreſſe, and hee that deliuereth vs; our God and our ſtrength, in him will wee truſt; our ſhield, the horne of our ſaluation and our refuge. Let vs with him call vpon God which is worthy to be praiſed, and ſo ſhall wee bee ſafe from all our enemies, Verſe 3.

Q. Sect. 9. Conſolations againſt the feare of the multitude of our enemies.

In like manner when wee conſider of the infinite number of our enemies, which daily aſſault euery one of vs, let vs thereby be awakened out of the ſlumber of careleſſe wretchleſneſſe, and beeſtirred vp to ſtand vpon our guard more carefully: but yet let not this diſcourage vs from the fight, becauſe there are many to one, for the Lord is with vs whileſt we fight his battailes, and therefore what mattereth it who oppoſe themſelues againſt vs? Rom. 8. 31. The Lord will fight for vs, therefore let vs hold our peace, Exod. 14. 14. The battell is not ours but Gods, and therefore let vs not be afraid of this great multitude, as it is 2. Chron. 20. 15. for the greater the number is which fighteth againſt vs, the more will the Lord glorifie himſelfe in our victorie, the greatneſſe of his power ſhining ſo much the more cleerely in the weakneſſe of the meanes, and our infirmities ſeruing as a foile, to make the riches of his omnipotencie and glory appeare more glorious. So that the Lord ſtanding on our ſide, it is not materiall how many wicked ſpirits aſſaults vs, if hee take vpon him our preſeruation, wee need not care though the whole power of Hell ſeeke our deſtruction. But if ſuch be the frailtie of our faith, that wee would oppoſe number againſt number, let vs conſider that if we will fight the Lords battailes, hee will ſend as many bleſſed Angels to our aide and reſcue, as there are wicked ſpirits which aſſault vs; for the Angels of the Lord pitch their tents round about them that feare him, and deliuer them, as it is Pſal. 34. 7. So that if the Lord open our eyes, as he did the eyes of Eliſhaes ſeruant, wee ſhall plainly perceiue that there are more with vs then againſt vs, 2. King. 6. 16.

Pſal. 34. 7.

Q. Sect. 10. Conſolations againſt the feare of our enemies, becauſe they are ſpirituall.

So when we conſider that wee wreſtle not againſt fleſh and bloud, but againſt ſpirituall wickednesſes, this ſhould make vs labour that our care and diligence may counteruaile the diſaduantage which we haue in the fight. But wee are not to be diſcouraged hereby from entring the combat: for though we be but fleſh and bloud, yet the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, can eaſily diſcerne and defeate all Satans ambuſhments; for light and darkeneſſe are to him alike. And whereas Satan can with great agilitie giue the aſſault and retire backe for his beſt aduantage, Gods Spirit farre excelleth him, for hee is preſent in all places at all times; ſo that Satan can no ſooner offer to ſtrike, but Gods Spirit is readie to defend; no ſooner can the Deuill tempt, then the Lord enableth vs to endure the temptation. And though Satan fighteth from high places, and ſo taketh the aduantage of the vpper ground, yet let not this diſmay vs in our fight, for there is one higher then he who laugheth him to ſcorne, and maketh fruſtrate all his enterpriſes.

Q. Sect. 11. Satans audacioufneſſe ſhould make vs more valiant.

Laſtly, when we conſider that our enemy is deſperate and audacious, wee are not to caſt away our ſpirituall weapons and forſake the field, but let it rather ſerue as a ſtrong motiue to make vs arme our ſelues with Chriſtian reſolution: for ſeeing Satan is ſo audacious and venturous in the aſſault, ſurely wee ſhould be as valiant and bold in giuing him the repulſe; if hee be deſperate in ſeeking our deſtruction, it behoueth vs to be reſolute in ſeeking our preſeruation, ſeeing this much more concerneth vs then the other him; eſpecially conſidering that though wee take many foiles, and be often beaten downe with the violent blowes of his tentations, yet in the end we ſhall haue aſſured victory. And why therefore ſhould Sathan ſhew more reſolution when hee is ſure to bee vanquiſhed, then wee who are ſure of conqueſt, if wee doe not cowardly yeeld?

CHAP. VI.

Of Satans aides: and first of the World.

Q. Sect. 1. Of the world the second enemy of our saluation, and how it tempteth vs by prosperitie.

AND so much concerning Sathans strength, being considered in himselfe. But besides himselfe hee hath the aide of other enemies to supplant vs, who though they doe not make so terrible a shew, yet they are no lesse dangerous; and all these are led vnder the conduct of two Captaine Generals, the World and the Flesh.

By the World I vnderstand impious, carnall and vnbeleeuing men, with all their baites and inticements vnto vanitie, and all their discouragements, afflictions and miseries, wherewith they hinder Gods children in trauelling the path of righteousnesse which leadeth to Gods Kingdome. This wicked World, the Deuils Darling and chiefe Champion, doth assault vs on both sides. On the right hand it encountreth vs with prosperitie, offering vs the bait of pleasure, that thereby it may allure vs to swallow the hooke of sinne; it casteth before vs the golden apples of riches, that by stooping downe to gather them, wee may be hindred in running the Christian race, and so lose the goale and garland of euerlasting glorie; it tempteth vs with the honours and glory thereof to dishonour God, and to fall before Satan, worshipping him by our sinnes; in a word, it promiseth whatsoeuer our corrupt minds desire, if wee will liue in sinne, and turne aside out of the narrow path into the broad way, which leadeth to destruction. And how prone wee are to listen to these Syrens songs, it is but too manifest by lamentable experience. For doth not our first loue waxe cold, and our former zeale of Gods glorie freeze, as soone as the World fauneth vpon vs, and quencheth in vs the heate of Gods Spirit, by casting on vs the watrish vanities of pleasures, honours and riches? Doe not hereby religious seruants become irreligious masters? and young Saints in shew, olde Deuils in truth? Doe wee not see that as soone as Demas hath imbraced the World, he forsaketh Christ? yea that Peter himselfe denieth his Master, when hee hath basted himselfe by the fire of this wicked Caiphas? Are there not many who haue beene forward Professors in the time of their aduersitie and want, which cast off the cloake of their profession as soone as the warme sunne of prosperitie hath shined vpon them? Are there not many amongst vs who in the time of affliction could not be inforced with tormens to prophane Gods Name by swearing an idle oath; or his Sabbaths by following their pleasures, or by doing the workes of their callings; and yet the same men after they haue fallen into wicked company, who haue inticed them by their words and euill examples to taste of the World and the vanities thereof, will not sticke to sweare with the swearer, and follow their pleasures on the Lords Day with the most prophane? so hard a thing it is to resist the World when it fauneth on vs.

Q. Sect. 2. How wee must resist the temptations of prosperitie.

But how hard soeuer it seemeth to flesh and bloud, yet must wee oppose our selues against this enemie also: for without a fight we can neuer obtaine victorie, and without victorie we shall neuer receiue the crowne of glory. And to the end that wee may be prouoked to fight against the World and the vanities thereof, wee are to know, that though it faune vpon vs, yet it is our mortall enemie; though it flatteringly professe it selfe our friend, yet in truth it fighteth against our soules vnder Satans Banner, for hee is the Prince thereof; though it haue honie in the mouth, yet there is deadly poyson in the taile, for the end thereof bringeth destruction; though it offer vs many pleasing things to allure vs, yet they are but baites which intice vs to come within the compasse of Satans nets of perdition. Let vs consider, that though it make a shew, and seemeth a pleasant place like the Paradise of God, yet it is a Sodome of sinne which one day the Lord will destroy, with fire and brimstone: and therefore let vs with righteous Lot haste out of it, neuer turning back with a desire to enioy the vanities thereof, for the World wholly lieth in wickednesse, as it is 1. Iohn 5.19. Let vs remember that it is impossible to serue God and this Mammon, Mat. 6.24. to loue the World and God also: For if any man loue the World, the loue of the Father is not in him, 1. Iohn 2.15. and as the Apostle Iames telleth vs, The amitie of the World is enmitie with God: and whosoeuer will be a friend of the World, maketh himselfe the enemy of God, Iam. 4.4. Neither let vs desire the loue of the World, for it loueth those onely which are her owne, as for those whom Christ hath chosen out of it, those she World hateth: nay, therefore hateth them because Christ hath chosen them, as it is, Iohn 15.19.

Iohn 3.2.31.

Iam. 4.4.

Iohn 15.19.

Let vs remember that it wil be to smal purpose to enioy these wordly pleasures of sinne for a season, and in the end plunge our selues into euerlasting death; that the Worlds Musicke is but the Syrens song, which allureth vs to make shipwracke of our soules on the rockes of sinne, and while it tickleth the eare it woundeth vs to the very heart; that though the cup which it offereth be of gold, and the drinke sweet in taste, yet it is deadly poyson in operation; for they that drinke thereof are so lulled asleepe in pleasures and securitie, that they neuer awake out of their spirituall lethargie; or if they doe, yet like Sampson, without strength to resist the spirituall tuall Philistines, after the world (like Dalila) hath lulled them a while in her lap of carnall pleasures. Let vs remember, that they who drinke of this cup of voluptuous vanities, must afterwards drinke of that cup spoken of Psal. 75. 8. that is, the cup of Gods wrath; and shall be tormented in fire and brimstone for euermore, as it is expounded, Apoc. 14. 10. Let vs remember that the Worlds chiefe good is vncertaine in getting, & momentanie & mutable in the possession, it being euery day ready to leaue vs, or wee to leaue it. Lastly, let vs call to minde, that for this short, inconstant, and vaine ioy, we lose an eternall waight of vnspeakeable glorie, and plunge our selues into grieuous and endlesse miserie. What therefore will it profit vs to gaine the whole World, and lose our owne soules? as our Sauiour speaketh, Marke 8. 36.

Psal. 75. 8.

Apoc. 14. 10.

Marke 8. 36.

And if wee haue these meditations continually running in our minds, then shall wee easily stop our eares at the hearing of this Syrens song; then shall wee constantly goe forward in our pilgrimage towards our heauenly home: and though Honours stand before vs, riches on the one hand, and pleasures on the other, alluring vs to enter into the broad way which leadeth to destruction; yet shall wee not forsake the strait path which leadeth vnto life euerlasting, how vnpleasant soeuer it seemeth to flesh and bloud.

Q. Sect. 3. How the world tempteth by aduersitie.

But if the World cannot thus preuaile, then doth she turne her smiles into frownes, her allurements into threats, her beds of pleasures, into miseries and afflictions, her glorious offers of Honours and Riches, to proud menacings of pouertie and ignominy; all which being terrible in the eyes of flesh and bloud so farre preuaile with some, that they mouethem to make shipwracke of faith and a good conscience; and being wearie in trauailing thorow this desert and vnpleasant Wildernesse vnto the Land of Promise, they desire to returne backe into the bondage of the spirituall Pharaoh, that they may quietly sit by the flesh-pots of Egypt, and glut themselues with the Cucumbers and Pepons of carnall pleasures: that is, they chuse rather to walke in the broad way which leadeth to destruction, because it is delightfull, then in the narrow way, which leadeth to euerlasting life, because they must passe thorow the briars of affliction and thornes of tribulation, before they can receiue the Crowne of glory; they preferre the pleasures of sinne for a season, before the recompence of reward, which God hath promised, euen the eternall ioyes of the Kingdome of glorie. So vnpleasant a thing it is for flesh and bloud to denie it selfe, and to take vp the Crosse and follow Christ.

Q. Sect. 4.

Yet though the World be farre more terrible to looke vpon when it frowneth, then when it fawneth, yet is it farre lesse dangerous. For oftentimes this poyson of aduersitie is so tempered and corrected with those wholesome preseruatiues of Faith, Hope, Patience and Humilitie, that in stead of killing vs, it doth but purge away our corrupt humours of sinne; though the World whip vs, yet thereby God correcteth vs, and makes vs better; though it burne vs in the fire of afflictions, yet it doth not consume, but rather refine vs from our drosse; though like a stormie wind it shaketh vs, yet in stead of blowing vs downe, it causeth vs to take more deepe root in all vertue and goodnesse: in a word, as it playeth the schoolemaster in scourging vs, so also in instructing and teaching vs to know God and to know our selues; to know the vanitie of the World, and to labour after a more permanent felicitie.

That the world is lesse dangerous when it frowneth then when it frowneth.

Q. Sect. 5. How we are to arme our selues against aduersitie.

Notwithstanding, howsoeuer by the grace and blessing of God, aduersitie (the Worlds churlish sonne) oftentimes worketh these good effects; yet in it selfe it is a temptation, and that a strong one, to draw vs from God, by causing vs to murmure and repine; yea (as Satan said of Iob) to curse God to his face, to enuie all who seeme vnto vs more happy then our selues, to despaire of Gods mercie, and to vse vnlawfull meanes, that thereby wee may better our estate. And therefore it behoueth vs to arme our selues against the violence of this enemie also, least building our houses vpon the sands of securitie they be ouer-turned, when the winds of afflictions and flouds of aduersitie and persecution blow and beate against vs. And to this end wee are to remember, first, that these fatherly corrections are euident testimonies to assure vs that wee are not bastards, but Gods deare children, whom hee gently chastiseth, that wee may not be destroyed with the World; that now Christ hath chosen vs out of the World, Heb. 12. 6, 7, 8. seeing the World hateth vs; that now we are the friends of God, when the World (Satans eldest sonne) becommeth our enemie: for so long as wee are of the World the World loueth vs, for it loueth her owne. Secondly, let vs continually remember the recompence of reward, and then shall wee with Moses Iohn. 15. 19. voluntarily chuse rather to suffer aduersitie with the people of God, then to enioy the pleasures of sinne for a season; esteeming the reproofe of Christ greater riches, then the treasures of Egypt, as it is Heb. 11. 25, 26. Then shall wee endure to be tried and purified in the furnace of afflictions, if wee know that after we are found to be pure gold, the Lord will lay vs vp in his treasury of euerlasting happinesse. Lastly, let vs remember, that eternall blessednesse is promised to those that mourne with a godly sorrow, and eternall Heb 11. 25, 26.

Mat. 5.4, 10. woe denounced against those who pamper themselues with worldly delights, Mat. 5.4. Blessed are they that mourne, for they shall be comforted. So Verse 10. Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, for theirs is the Kingdome of Heauen, Luke 6.21, 25. Luke 6.21. Blessed are ye which hunger now, for ye shall be satisfied: blessed are yee that weepe now, for ye shall laugh. And Verse 25. Woe be vnto you that are full, for ye shall hunger: woe vnto you that now laugh, for ye shall waile and weepe. And lest the tediousnesse of our troubles should discourage vs, or the waight of them presse vs downe, the Apostle telleth vs, that they are but light and momentany, causing notwithstanding vnto vs a farre most excellent and eternall waight of glory, 2. Cor. 4.17. Why therefore should this little spot of foule way cause vs to stand still, or goe out of our course, which leadeth to euerlasting happinesse? And thus much shall suffice to haue spoken here of this enemie for our present purpose, referring the Reader for a more ful discourse to the second and third Parts of this Christian Warfare.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Flesh, and the strength thereof.

§. Sect. 1. Of the flesh the third enemie of our saluation, and what it is,

THE second enemy which assisteth Satan against vs, is the flesh, that inborne traitour which we nourish in our selues, doth open a gate in our soules, into which Satan and the World may easily send whole troupes of temptations to enter and surprize vs. By the flesh wee are not to vnderstand the bodie alone and the flesh thereof, but that corruption of nature which hath defiled both body and soule, being spread and mixed with euery part of both, euen as the light is mingled with darknesse in the twilight or dawning of the day: whereby we are made prone to all sinne, and readie to entertaine all temptations, which promise the satisfying of any of the lusts thereof. This secret traitour conspiring with Satan and the World to worke our destruction, doth entertaine & further all their temptations; it fighteth and lusteth against the spirit, it rebelleth against the law of our minds, and leadeth vs captiue to the law of sinne; it hindreth vs from doing the good wee would, and maketh vs commit the euill which we hate, as it is notably set downe, Rom. 7. So Gal. 5.17. The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other, so that yee cannot do the same things that yee would.

Rom. 7. Gal. 5.17.

§. Sect. 2. The diuers names which in the Scriptures are giuen to the flesh,

This enemie the holy Ghost in the Scriptures deciphereth by diuers names; for it is called the olde man, the old Adam, the earthly, carnall, and naturall man, the sinne which is inherent and dwelleth in vs, the adioyning euill, the law of the members, the lusts of the flesh which fight against the soule: by all which is signified our corruption of nature, which is deriued from our first parents, whereby wee are made backward vnto all good, and prone vnto all euill, vnapt to entertaine any good motions of Gods Spirit, but most readie to receiue and imbrace all the suggestions and temptations of the World and the Deuill, as the wax the print of the seale, or the tindar fire. And this the Apostle Iames sheweth Chap. 1.14. Euery man is tempted when he is drawne away by his owne concupiscence and is enticed: vers. 15. Then when lust hath conceiued, it bringeth forth sinne, and sinne when it is finished bringeth forth death. So that as Satan is the father, so the flesh is the mother of sinne, which receiuing Satans temptations, as it were, into a fruitfull wombe, doth conceiue, nourish, and bring forth sinne, which no sooner is borne, but like a deadly stinging Serpent, it bringeth death to bodie and soule, vnlesse the poyson thereof be ouercome and taken away by the precious bloud of Christ.

Iames 1.14, 15.

And thus you see what the flesh is, and how it conspireth with Satan in seeking our destruction; whereby appeareth the treacherie and dangerousnesse of this our enemy. The treacherie thereof is hereby manifest, in that being in outward shew a deare friend, and more neere then an alter idem, another selfe, it notwithstanding aideth Satan to our owne ouerthrow. So as we may complaine with Dauid, Psal. 41.9. My familiar friend whom I trusted, which did eat my bread, hath lift vp the heele against me. For this Iudas which daily followeth vs, and eateth, and drinketh and sleepeth with vs, doth betray vs into the hands of those enemies who seeke our life, and that, when it seemeth louingly and kindly to imbrace and kisse vs. And as it is most treacherous, so also most dangerous, and hard to be ouercome, for as much as it is in our selfe, and the greatest part of our selfe, and therefore we cannot forsake it, vnlesse wee forsake our selues; wee cannot fight against it, vnlesse we raise intestine and ciuill warres in our owne bowels; we cannot vanquish it, vnlesse wee subdue our selues; and if wee seeke to runne away from it, wee might as easily flee from our own shadowes, yea from our selues, for wee carrie it in our owne bosomes. How hard therefore is this enemie to be ouercome? how dangerous and irkesome must this fight needes be, wherein our selues must be enemie to our selues? So that we cannot obtaine the victory, vnlesse we be ouercome; wee cannot be sure of life, vnlesse wee mortifie and kill our greatest part; we cannot sustaine our selues, but wee nourish

Psal. 41.9.

Mark 8.34.

nouriſh our enemie; wee cannot famiſh our enemy, but wee our ſelues ſhall pine with hunger. Who would not thinke the eſtate of thoſe Citizens to be moſt dangerous, who being beſieged by forraigne forces, harbour amongſt them more Traitours which are hourely in readineſſe to open the gates and betray the Citie into their enemies hands, then true ſubiects and loyall Citizens to ſtand in their defence? But this is our caſe, wee are beſieged with forreigne forces, the World and the Deuill; and we nouriſh in vs ſecret Traitors, euen the fleſh, with whole legions of the luſts thereof, which are continually ready to open the gates of our ſoules, euen our ſenſes of Seeing, Hearing, Touching, Taſting, Smelling, whereby whole troupes of temptations enter and ſurprize vs.

Q. Sect. 4. How the fleſh is to be weakned.

The conſideration whereof ſhould make vs moſt watchfully to ſtand vpon our guard, and to vſe ſuch Chriſtian policie to withſtand our enemies, and preuent their treacherous attempts, as true-hearted Citizens would vſe in the like caſe; who if they were beſieged with forraigne forces, and knew that they harboured Traitors, who ſought all opportunities of betraying their Citie into their enemies hand, they would if they were ſtrong enough lay hand on them, draw them to the place of iudgement, condemne and put them to death; but if they found them too great and ſtrong a partie, then they would vſe all good policie to make them weaker, by depriuing them of their food and prouiſion, weapons, armour & munition, and all other means wherin conſiſted their chiefe ſtrength; and then they would ſet vpon them being thus diſabled, and proceed in the courſe of iuſtice before mentioned: ſo we being in continuall danger to haue the Citie of our ſoules ſacked through the treacherouſneſſe of our fleſh, muſt, if wee be ſtrong enough and powerfull through Gods Spirit, mortifie, kill, and aboliſh the fleſh, and the luſts thereof; but if we find the ſpirit weake and the fleſh ſtrong, we are to diſable it by faſting and watchfulneſſe in prayer, by withdrawing from it the food with which it is nouriſhed, that is, voluptuous pleaſures and worldly delights. But eſpecially being weake in our ſelues, weare to implore the aide and aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit, whereby wee may be ſtrengthened and enabled to ſubdue and mortifie the luſts of the fleſh, which rebell and fight againſt our ſoules, being aſſured by Gods mercifull promiſe, that if we aske and deſire his Spirit, he will giue it vs, and hauing the Spirit of God to aſſiſt vs, wee ſhall be ſure of victory. But if in ſtead of mortifying and taming the fleſh and the luſts thereof, wee pamper them like Epicures with all vaine delights, we ſhal but ſtrengthen our enemies to cut our owne throats: if we delicately bring vp this ſeruant, which wee ſhould vſe as a ſlaue, at length it will be not onely as our ſon, but a tyrannous Lord and Maſter, which will binde vs hand and foot in the fetters of ſinne, and caſt vs into the priſon of Hell. What folly therefore is it to nouriſh and arme our enemy to our own deſtruction? But of this enemy I haue written at large in the fourth part of my Chriſtian Warfare, vnto which I refer the Reader who deſireth to be better informed of this enemie, and to be inſtructed in the manner whereby he may reſiſt and ouercome him.

Chap. VIII.
Of Satans policie.

Q. Sect. 1. That Satan is a moſt ſubtill and politicke enemie.

AND thus much alſo concerning the firſt part of our enemies power, which conſiſteth in the ſtrength either of himſelfe or of his aides. Now wee are to conſider of the ſecond part, which conſiſteth in his warlike policie and skill in imploying this his ſtrength to his beſt aduantage. For if our enemie had great ſtrength, and yet wanted policie, hee might the more eaſily be reſiſted, and the ſooner vanquiſhed; for ſtrength without wit, is like a Giant without eyes. But as our enemie is exceeding ſtrong, ſo is he alſo no leſſe ſubtil & politike, in imploying all his ſtrength to his beſt aduantage, and therefore as in regard of his ſtrength he is called in the Scriptures a Lion, and a mightie Dragon; ſo in reſpect of his ſubtiltie and wilineſſe he is called a Serpent; yea an old Serpent, which being the ſubtileſt of beaſts, hath his craft redoubled by his age and experience, Apoc. 12. 9. and hereof hee is called in the Scriptures, Δράκων and Ὄφις ἀρχαῖος quaſi δράκων, to ſignifie vnto vs his great knowledge. No maruaile therefore though Satan be an expert ſouldier, ſeeing he is not only of wonderfull ſtrength, but alſo of great knowledge by creation; which though in reſpect of good things it was much decreaſed by his fall, yet in ſleights and ſtratagems it is much increaſed by his long experience from the beginning of the World, euen almoſt ſix thouſand yeeres; which is ſufficient to make one wiſe that is by nature fooliſh and ſimple, and therefore much more Satan, who is naturally very politicke; being alſo a ſpirit, and hereby fit to diue as it were into the ſecrets of nature, and with incredible ſwiftneſſe to paſſe from place to place, ready to intrude himſelfe into all companies ſecretly, and to learne the nature, qualities and diſpoſitions of all men, againſt whom he fighteth. And though he cannot know our thoughts directly and certainly (for this is proper to God alone to be the ſearcher of hearts) yet hee hath ſuch intelligence from our affections, luſts, inclinations and outward actions, that hee can ſhrewdly gheſſe at them, if hee doe but a while keepe vs

Apoc. 12. 9.

Ier. 17. 10.

company, and see our disposition and conuersation. So that we cannot giue Satan the least aduantage, but hee is readie to take it and make vse thereof to our ouerthrow; we can lay no plot against him but he discerneth it, and is readie to preuent it. And therefore in this respect our state is like the King of Arams, 2. King. 6. 12. for Satan our enemie knoweth all our counsailes and consultations which wee take and hold in our most secret chambers.

2. King. 6. 12.

Q. Sect. 2. How we may defeat Satans policie.

And thus you see what Sathans policie is: against which wee must oppose no lesse wisdome and skill, if we will haue the victorie. And because we are foolish by nature, or wily to beguile our selues (that wisdome which wee haue naturally being worldly and carnall, which is enmitie against God, and therefore more fit to betray vs into the hands of our enemie, then to defend vs from him) it behoueth vs to goe out of our selues into the Lords treasurie of wisdome, and there to furnish our minds with such spirituall sauing wisdome, as shall be fit to oppose against the subtill policie of our spirituall enemie. That is, wee must continually heare and meditate in Gods Word, which will make vs wise and skilfull in descrying all Satans stratagems and also in preuenting them being discouered. For howsoeuer in the darke night of ignorance and errour wee may easily fall into his ambushments, yet the light of Gods Word shining vnto vs, will plainly disclose them to the eyes of the most simple. But besides this theoreticall wisdome seated in the vnderstanding, there is also a practicall or operatiue wisdome required in Gods Word, which sheweth it selfe in our affections and actions. And this consisteth in the feare of the Lord, that is, true godlinesse and sinceritie of heart. Of which Iob speaketh, Chap. 28. Verse 28. The feare of the Lord is wisdome, and to depart from euill is vnderstanding. So Psal. 111. 10. The feare of the Lord is the head or beginning of wisdome. And Prou. 28. 7. hee is called a wise sonne which keepeth the Law. So that our chiefe wisdome consisteth in the feare of the Lord, and in a godly endeuour of performing obedience to his Commandements. If therefore wee would attaine vnto such spirituall wisedome that wee may resist our spirituall enemie, wee must be conuersant in hearing and reading the Word of God, meditating therein with the Prophet Dauid both day and night; and withall wee must by all meanes seeke the feare of the Lord, labouring to lead our liues in a constant course of true godlinesse. And though we are full of infirmities, yet at least let vs haue an holy endeuour to performe seruice vnto God, in truth, vprightnesse, and integritie of heart. And so wee may assure our selues, that though we be neuer so simple and foolish by nature, yet shall wee be wise enough to withstand and ouercome our spirituall enemies: for the Lord who is wisdome it selfe will direct vs in our wayes, and he also will so infatuate his cursed Achitophel, and turne his wisdome into foolishnesse, that wee shall neuer thereby be hurt or circumuented.

Rom. 8. 7.

Iob 28. 28.

Psal. 111. 10.

Prou. 28. 7.

Psal. 1. 2.

But on the other side, though we be neuer so wise in carnall wisdome, and though our heads be a store-house of politicke stratagems, if yet wee neglect Gods Word, and voluntarily giue our selues ouer vnto sinne and disobedience, wee shall be so besotted with folly, that Satan will easily deceiue and circumuent vs. An example whereof wee haue in our first parents, who though they were more wise by creation then euer were liuing (Christ excepted) yet when they cast the Word of God behinde their backe, giuing more credit to Satans suggestions, and withall transgressed Gods commandement; their wisdome was turned into ignorance and folly, and they became an easie prey to their malicious enemie. And whereas they thought by that meanes to haue gone beyond the Lord in policie, and to haue obtained a farre greater measure of knowledge and glory, they were in stead thereof besotted with folly, and ouer-whelmed with ignominie and shame, by being made the bondslaues of sinne and Satan. And thus also the Heathen neglecting the true worship of God, and giuing themselues to idolatrie, became fooles, whilest they professed themselues very wise, as the Apostle witnesseth. Rom. 1. 22. for the Lord destroyeth the wisdome of the wise, and casteth away the vnderstanding of the prudent, as it is, 1. Cor. 1. 19.

Q. Sect. 3. That worldly wisdome cannot free vs from the danger of Satans policies, but rather expose vs to them.

Rom. 1. 22.

1. Cor. 1. 19.

Seeing then our chiefe wisdome consisteth in the studie of Gods Word, and in vprightnesse of heart, integritie, Christian sinceritie and simplicitie, and in a holy care of performing obedience to Gods will, let vs therefore continually meditate in Gods Word, and with the Prophet Dauid make it our counsellor. And whensoeuer Sathan doth assault and tempt vs to sinne, let vs haue recourse to this our Counsellour the Word of God, there inquiring whether that whereunto we are tempted be lawfull or no; and if it tell vs that it is a sinne, let vs with all care and conscience auoide it: for though Sathan lay ouer it neuer so faire a glosse, and intice vs to the committing thereof, by offering vnto vs the greatest pleasures, riches and honours of the World, yet let vs assure our selues that he thereby seeketh to circumuent vs; and to purchase worldly vanities, he inticeth vs to sell our soules; and therefore in Christian wisdome let vs auoide his stratagems.

Q. Sect. 4. Wherein our chiefe wisdom consisteth.

Psal. 119. 24.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

Of the ſpirituall armour deſcribed, Epheſ. 6.

Q. Sect. 1. That the weapons of our Chriſtian warfare muſt be ſpirituall.

AND thus haue I ſhewed the nature and qualitie of our enemie againſt whom wee muſt fight; both in reſpect of his will, & alſo his power conſiſting in his ſtrength & policy, & alſo ſome means which in our preparation againſt him we muſt vſe carefully, that wee may withſtand him; namely, by oppoſing againſt his malicious will, Chriſtian reſolution; againſt his ſtrength, the omnipotent power of Gods might; againſt his ſubtill policie, Chriſtian wiſdome, conſiſting in the knowledge of Gods Word, and true integritie and ſimplicitie of heart. Now wee are to ſpeake of the laſt meanes which wee are to vſe in our preparation immediatly before our combat; that is, the Chriſtian armour wherewith we are to arme our ſelues againſt the encounter: and to this end (becauſe wee are but freſh-water-ſouldiers and of ſmall experience) let vs take the counſaile and aduice of the Apoſtle Paul, one of Gods chiefe Champions and expert Captaines, as he ſetteth it downe, Epheſ. 6. 11, 12, 13, 14. &c. Epheſ. 6. 11, &c where firſt he deſcribeth the qualitie, and as it were the metall of our armour in which reſpect he telleth vs, that we muſt put on the armour of God which is ſpirituall, and that our weapons and armour muſt not be carnall. For being of this nature though they were neuer ſo ſtrong, they were to no purpoſe, ſeeing our enemie is ſpirituall: neither doe we wreſtle againſt fleſh and bloud, but againſt principalities, powers and ſpirituall wickednesſes, as it is Epheſ. 6. 12. In vaine therefore it were with the Papiſts to ſeeke to defend our ſelues with holy Water, or Crucifixes, or ragges and reliques of Saints, from the violent aſſaults of this our enemie; or elſe with deſperate Hackſters to truſt in our Sword, Buckler and Speare: for well is that verified of this ſpirituall Leuiathan, which the Lord ſpeaketh of the earthly Leuiathan, Iob 41. 17, 26. When the ſword doth touch him, he will not riſe vp, and he laugheth at the ſhaking of the ſpeare. And therefore when we are to encounter this great Goliah, wee are to lay aſide the carnall weapons of Saul, which are altogether vnfit for a Chriſtian, ſeruing rather to burthen and hinder him, than to defend and further him in this ſpirituall combate; and wee are to goe againſt him in the Name of the Lord, ſtrengthened in the power of his might, putting on vs the armour of God, that is, ſuch diuine and ſpirituall armour as the Lord hath giuen and appointed vs to vſe. For it is not ſufficient that we prepare vs this armour, if wee let it lie by vs, or ſuffer it (as it were) to hang vpon the walls, there to ruſt without vſe; but we are to put it on, and keepe it faſt buckled vnto vs both night and day, that we may be alwayes in a readineſſe to endure the aſſault of our enemies.

Iob 41. 17, 26.

1. Sam. 17. 36, 44.

Q. Sect. 2. That wee muſt put on the whole armour of God.

Neither is it enough that wee put on one peece of the armour, and like young ſouldiers leaue off the reſt for lightneſſe ſake, or elſe through foole-hardineſſe to ſhew needleſſe valour; wee muſt not put on the helmet of ſaluation, and leaue off the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſſe, nor take vnto vs the girdle of veritie and the ſhield of faith, and caſt away from vs the ſword of the Spirit; but wee are to put on the whole armour of God, and like valiant ſouldiers, who meane indeed to ſtand to it, we are to arme our ſelues at all points in compleat armour of proofe, which will keepe vs from fleeing, and our enemie from ouercomming. For if we take none of the Chriſtian armour, or but ſome of the lighteſt parts, if we take the ſhield of faith, and leaue behind vs the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſſe, wee ſhall either deſperately fight and be ouerthrowne in the battaile, or elſe cowardly runne away and forſake the field. But on the other ſide, if wee buckle vnto vs the whole armour of God, wee ſhall not need to flee away for feare, being ſo well defended; nor to doubt of victory, for wee ſhall ſurely ouercome; the Lord hauing giuen, and wee hauing receiued this armour to this end, as the Apoſtle noteth vnto vs in theſe words; that you may be able to ſtand againſt the aſſaults of the Deuill, or his treacherous ambuſhments, as the word here vſed, ſignifieth. So that the Lord hath giuen vs this armour, and wee put it on, to the end that wee may be enabled to reſiſt Satan; and therefore ſeeing it is armour of Gods owne making and beſtowing, wee may aſſure our ſelues that hee will not ſuffer his workmanſhip and gift to be ſo much diſgraced, as that Satan ſhould pierce thorow it and wound vs. For the Lord knoweth the force of Satans darts, and bullets of temptation, and he hath made his armour high proofe, and therefore ſtrong enough to repell all the batterie of Satans ſuggeſtions.

Q. Sect. 3. The neceſſitie of the ſpirituall armour.

And that we may be the rather ſtirred vp with all care and diligence to prouide and buckle faſt to vs the armour which hee after deſcribeth, he ſheweth the neceſſitie thereof, by deſcribing the dangerouſneſſe of our enemies, who, being not fleſh and bloud, but principalities, powers, worldly gouernours, princes of the darkneſſe of this World, and ſpirituall wickednesſes, which are in high places, cannot poſſibly be reſiſted by our owne ſtrength and meanes. And therefore for this cauſe hee willeth vs to take vnto vs the whole armour of God, that wee may be able to reſiſt in the euill day, that is, the time of temptation; which is therefore called the euill day, partly becauſe therein Satan temp-

tempteth vs vnto euill, and partly becauſe it is a time of trouble, aduerſitie and affliction, when Satan ſifteth vs with his temptations. And thus the euill day is taken, Pſal. 41. 1. The Lord will deliuer him in the euill day, (that is, as our tranſlation alſo reades it) in the time of trouble. And thus alſo it is vſed, Epheſ. 5. 16. Redeeming the time, becauſe the dayes are euill, that is, full of troubles and afflictions. And therefore Beza doth tranſlate in this place ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ, tempore aduerſo, the time of aduerſitie. By which we learne not to eſteeme our ſpirituall fight as a May-game, but as a time of trouble and aduerſitie, wherein we are aſſaulted by mightie enemies, and oftentimes foiled and wounded; and therefore wee muſt not voluntarily runne into temptations, ſeeing the time of them is euill and full of trouble; but rather feruently pray vnto the Lord that he will not leade vs into temptation, conſidering our owne weakneſſe and our enemies power; or if it pleaſe him to make triall of vs, that hee will not ſuffer vs to fall therein, but that he will deliuer vs from euill, for as much as the kingdome and power and glory is his alone, and therefore hee is of power ſufficient to ſaue and deliuer vs.

That we muſt not cowardly flie in the ſpirituall conflict.

But as we are not ſecurely to ruſh into the field of temptation againſt our ſpirituall enemies, ſo wee are not when they ſound the alarum to battaile, and aſſault vs, cowardly to caſt downe our weapons and runne away: for the Apoſtle would not take away from vs true valour and Chriſtian fortitude, but carnall ſecuritie and wretchleſneſſe; and therefore though our enemies bee mightie, and the time of temptation full of trouble, yet he biddeth vs not to caſt off our armour and to runne away, wholly deſpairing of victorie, but hee exhorteth vs for this cauſe, to take vnto vs the whole armour of God, that we may be able to reſiſt in the euill day, and hauing finiſhed all things may ſtand faſt; that is, hauing put our enemies to flight and obtained the victory, we may like conquerours ſtand laſt in the field, as it were triumphantly inſulting ouer them: whereby hee intimateth thus much, that if wee will take vnto vs the whole armour of God, how weake ſoeuer wee be in our ſelues, yet ſhall wee bee enabled to reſiſt our ſpirituall enemies in the euill day; and not onely ſo, but alſo obtaine victorie and triumph ouer them.

9. Sect. 4. That euery one muſt abide in his vocation.

And therefore he willeth vs not to bee diſmayed, neither with our enemies power, nor our owne trouble, but to ſtand to it, ſaying, Verſ. 14. Stand therefore: by which word hee intimateth vnto vs diuers duties; firſt, as in the Campe euery man hath his place appointed him, and his proper colours vnder which he is to keepe him; ſo all Chriſtian ſouldiers haue their ſtations, that is, their vocations whereunto they are called of God, within the limits whereof they are to containe themſelues. And theſe are firſt their generall calling whereby they are entertained into the Church Militant, which is Gods Campe or Army, where they are to fight vnder the Standard of their Captaine Chriſt: and ſecondly their ſpeciall callings, whereby there is appointed to euery member of the Militant Church, a certaine ſtanding, and particular and proper duties and functions which hee is to execute, as it is in the Armies of earthly Princes. Firſt, therefore we muſt containe our ſelues within our generall vocation and ſtation, that is, we muſt keepe vs in Gods Army and Campe, the Church Militant: for as thoſe ſtragling ſouldiers who depart from the Armie, and range abroad to forrage, or get ſome bootie, are eaſily vanquiſhed by their enemies; ſo thoſe who depart and make an apoſtaſie from Gods Church, to gaine or retaine their pleaſures and worldly preferments, are eaſily ouerthrowne, falling into Satans ambuſhments. And ſecondly, euery one is to containe himſelfe within the limits of his ſpeciall vocation, and to keepe his peculiar ſtanding appointed him by God: for as there is nothing more pernicious to an Army then diſorder, when as ſome intrude themſelues into others place, as when the common Souldier will be an Officer, the Lieutenant, Captaine, and the Captaine, Generall of the Army; ſo nothing is more hurtfull to the Church Militant than when diſorderly one vſurpes anothers place and office, as when the Miniſters will be Magiſtrates, and the Magiſtrates Miniſters, and when the common people vſurpe the office of them both. Secondly, when as hee biddeth vs ſtand in our places, hee reſtraineth vs from two extreames: the one, that wee doe not wilfully thruſt our ſelues into the combat of temptations before we be aſſaulted, and ſo as it were runne out of our ſtanding to ſeeke an enemy; and ſecondly, that when weare aſſaulted we doe not flee away, but ſtand to it valiantly and endure the violence of the aſſailants. Laſtly, he exhorteth vs to watchfulneſſe and painfull diligence, for we muſt not drowſily and ſecurely lay vs downe and giue our ſelues to ſleepe, nor yet ſit idlely as though we had nothing to doe; but wee are to ſtand vpon our guard, and to watch continually, that wee may alwayes be in readineſſe to withſtand the aſſaults of our enemies; otherwiſe if wee ſleepe in ſecuritie, they will ſuddenly ſet vpon vs and ſurprize vs at vnawares.

Chap. X.

Of the particular parts of the Christian armour: and first of the girdle of veritie.

Q. Sect. 1. Of the girdle of veritie, and what we are to vnderstand thereby.

THe Apostle hauing taken away all wretchlesse securitie and foolehardinesse, and also strengthened vs with true valour and Christian fortitude, in the next place describeth the armour of God which we are to buckle vnto vs. Where first wee are generally to obserue, that wee are not curiously and scrupulously to search out the reason why such and such vertues are likened to these or those peeces of armour: as for example, why he calleth Truth a Girdle, Righteousnessea Brest-plate, Faith a Shield, &c. for it was not the Apostles purpose so exactly to fit the similitudes, as may appeare, 1. Thess. 5. 8. where he indifferently ascribeth the name of Brest-plate both to Faith and Charitie, by which here hee vnderstandeth righteousnesse; but onely briefly and generally to shew what vertues and graces of Gods Spirit are most necessary for a Christian, wherewith hee may be enabled to resist his spirituall enemies, continuing his former allegorie taken from warres. But let vs come to the armour it selfe, which is both defensiue and offensiue: the first part is the Girdle of Veritie. The word here vsed signifieth a broad studded Belt vsed in warres in ancient times, wherewith the ioynts of the Brest-plate and that Armour which defended the belly, loynes and thighes were couered. And by this, truth is resembled: whereby some vnderstand the truth of Religion and of the doctrine which wee professe; others vnderstand hereby truth and vprightnesse of heart, or the integrity of a good conscience, whereby wee performe all duties of Religion belonging to God and our Neighbour in simplicitie, without all hypocrisie and dissimulation. But because both are notable and necessary parts of our Christian armour, I see no reason why wee may not take it in both senses, seeing the Apostle doth of purpose set downe vnder these metaphoricall words, the chiefe vertues and graces wherewith wee are to arme our selues against our spirituall enemies. First, therefore here is required truth of our Religion which wee professe: and secondly that wee professe it truly, that is, with vpright and simple hearts.

1. Thes. 5. 8.

Q. Sect. 2. That our Religion must be grounded on Gods Truth.

For the first: it is the foundation vpon which all other duties to God or Man are to be builded: for if they be not grounded on Gods truth, but deuised by mans braine, they are but humane dotages, which the Lord will not accept; neither is it to any purpose that we shew our selues earnest and forward in Religion, vnlesse it be true and consonant to Gods Word. For as the faster that those trauaile which are out of the way, the further they are from their iournies end; so the more earnest and forward that wee are in trauelling the by-paths of errour, the further wee are from Gods Kingdome. And therefore Sathan careth not greatly whether we be of no Religion or of a false Religion; whether wee worship no God at all, or a false God, or at least the true God after a false manner; whether we performe no duties vnto God, or such as being not agreeable to his truth are abominable vnto him. First, then we must containe all our actions within the compasse of Gods Word, and whatsoeuer we professe and practise, it must haue its ground and warrant from his truth, if we will bee accounted true members of Gods Militant Church, which is therefore called the pillar of truth, because contemning all errours and doctrines of men, it faithfully keepeth the truth of Gods Word. And as souldiers were girt about with that strong and broad studded Belt, wherewith their loynes were strengthned, and so enabled to sustaine the fight without wearinesse; so wee are to compasse our selues about with truth, whereby wee may be strengthened, when as we know that we fight in a iust quarrell; neither shall wee easily be deceiued with Satans temptations and false suggestions, if wee be girt about with the Girdle of Veritie. And hereby appeareth the necessitie of this piece of armour: for seeing Sathan is a lier from the beginning, it behoueth vs to be compassed about with truth, that the bright beames thereof may discouer and disperse all the foggie mists of Satans errours and lies.

1. Tim. 3. 15.

Q. Sect. 3. That we must professe the truth, in truth and simplicitie of heart.

But it is not sufficient that we professe the truth, vnlesse it be in truth, that is, in integritie and simplicitie of heart, without all hypocrisie and dissimulation. For how glorious soeuer our profession euen of the true Religion be before men, yet it is abominable in the eyes of God, if it be not in truth and from an vpright heart, but counterfeit and hypocriticall. Whatsoeuer duties and good workes we performe, though neuer so excellent in their selues, yet are they not acceptable in Gods sight, if they bee not ioyned with integritie and simplicitie. For example, Prayer is a notable part of Gods worship; but if we doe not call vpon God in truth, but with fained and deceitfull lips, that we may haue the prayse of men, our Prayers are odious and Pharisaicall, (Matth. 6. Thanksgiuing is an excellent dutie, but if with the Pharisie wee giue thankes rather to boast of our gifts, then to shew true thankfulnesse to the giuer, we shall not be approued of God. Giuing of almes is a worke acceptable vnto God, for it is a sacrifice wherewith hee is well pleased, but if they be not giuen in simplicitie of heart, but in hypocrisie, that we may be seene of men, they shall haue the hypocrites reward, Matth.6. In a word, this truth and simplicitie of heart is so necessary, that without it, whatsoeuer we doe it is not regarded; for God is a spirit, and hee will be worshipped in spirit and in truth, Iohn 4.24. According to that, Iosh.24.14. Feare the Lord, and serue him in vprightnesse and in truth. Which if we performe, our seruice of God, will be acceptable in his sight, though performed in great weaknesse, and mingled with many imperfections: otherwise, though we offer thousands of Rams, and whole Riuers of oyle, that is, omit no outward cost and labour in Gods worship, yet will it be abominable in his eyes, Mich.6.7,8. Let vs therefore with our Sauiour pray vnto God, that wee may bee sanctified with his truth, that not onely whatsoeuer we do may be grounded on Gods truth, but that we may doe it in truth and vprightnesse of heart.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Breast-plate of Righteousnesse.

Q. Sect.1. Of the breast-plate of righteousnesse, and the excellency thereof.

THe second part of our armour is the Breast-plate of Righteousnesse; whereby wee are to vnderstand a good conscience, true sanctification and a godly life, which also we are to put on according to the example of our grand Captaine Christ, Esay 59.17. He put on righteousnesse as an Habergeon, and an Helmet of saluation vpon his head. And then shall not Sathans darts pierce vs, so long as we are armed with a good conscience, and a godly and innocent life. Yea as long as our breasts and hearts are armed with righteousnesse, though our other members fall into sinne, our wounds shall not be mortall: for as the breast-plate doth defend the breast and vitall parts of a souldier: so the studie and holy endeuour of a Christian to liue in righteousnesse and true sanctification, doth so arme his mind, that Satan cannot deadly wound the heart with any of his temptations. True it is that the Saints doe receiue wounds and foiles, when as Satan hath drawne them to commit sinne, but they are not wounded at the heart, because they doe not sinne with full consent of will; for they allow not that which they doe, neither doe they what they would, but what they hate, and they delight in the Law of God concerning the inner man, when the flesh leadeth them captiue to the law of sin. And hence it is that Paul saith hee did not transgresse Gods Law, but sinne that dwelled in him, Rom. 7.17. And the Apostle Iohn affirmeth, that they who are borne of God sinne not, 1. Iohn 3.9. and that they who are in Christ sinne not: and that whosoeuer sinneth is of the Deuill, Verse 6,8. Not that Gods children are exempted from all sinne, but because they sinne not with the full consent and swinge of their will; and when they doe fall, their hearts are defended with the breast-plate of righteousnesse, that is, with an holy endeuour and desire of seruing God. Dauid, a man according to Gods owne heart, may be a notable example hereof: for euen after he was indued with the knowledge of truth, and had this godly endeauour of seruing God, hee notwithstanding fell grieuously many times, and was wounded often with Satans darts; but his wounds were not mortal, neither did they pierce the heart, because he was armed with the brest-plate of righteousnesse, for he kept Gods law in his heart, and it was sweeter than hony vnto his mouth, he meditated therein, and sought after it continually, as appeareth Psal. 119. Would wee therefore be preserued from the deadly wounds of Satans darts of temptation? then let vs studie and labour after true holinesse, let vs keepe a good conscience; and howsoeuer we fall often through infirmitie, yet let the heart alwayes be armed with the breast-plate of righteousnesse, that is, with an earnest desire and holy indeauour of seruing God; and so shall Sathan neuer mortally wound vs.

Q. Sect.2. That the lack of this armor is most pernicious.

But on the other side, if we once lay aside the breast-plate of righteousnesse, not so much as endeuouring to serue the Lord in holinesse of life, but imbrace sinne with full consent of will, wee shall lay our breasts open and naked to all Satans thrusts, yea, and as it were put swords in his hands wherwith hee may wound and murther vs: for vntill we disarme our selues, and put weapons into the hands of Satan by our sinnes, he cannot hurt vs; as we may see in the example of our first Parents, who whilest they continued in their righteousnesse and integritie, Satan could not offer them any violence by assault and force, and therefore hee allured them to entertaine a treacherous parley, wherein hauing inticed them to disarme themselues of this breast-plate of righteousnesse, by wilfull transgressing Gods Commandement, he inflicted on them deadly wounds, piercing them thorow to the very heart; and so like Ioab whilest hee seemed louingly to imbrace them, hee did most treacherously stab them. The consideration whereof should make vs repell most carefully all Satans temptations, whereby he inticeth vs to sinne; but especially let vs neuer be allured to put off the brest-plate of righteousnesse, and then though Satan wound our soules with sinne, yet his wounds will not be mortall so long as we doe not fall into sinne with full consent of will, but through infirmitie; in the meane time loathing the sinne which wee commit, and delighting our selues in the Lavv of God, in re-respect of the inner man; for though we fall, yet the Lord will raise vs vp by vnfained repentance, and though sinne dwell in vs, yet shall it neuer raigne in our mortall bodies, that wee should obey it in the lusts thereof.

CHAP. XII.

Of the preparation of the Gospell of peace.

THe third part of our Christian armour is, that wee haue our feete shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace; where hee alludeth to the custome of souldiers in former times, who going into the field strongly armed their legges and feete with legge-harnesse, war-graues or buskins to preserue them from the iniurie of the weather, the piercing of briars, thornes, and such other things as might hurt them in their way as they marched, and from the violence also of their enemies blowes when they were encountred. For all which vses the Gospell serueth in our spirituall warfare; for they who are armed with the true knowledge thereof; and are assured of the mercifull promises therein contained, they will walke and march valiantly in the wayes of godlinesse and Christianitie, though they are full of the briars and thornes of afflictions and persecution; preferring the rebuke of Christ before the riches of Egypt, because they haue an eye to the recompence of reward, which they shall receiue at the end of their iournie. And this maketh them little to regard the foulenesse and vnpleasantnesse of the way, and though Sathan trouble them in their march, setting vpon and assaulting them, yet they easily resist the furie of his temptations, and goe on forward in the profession and practice of Christianitie, if they be armed with the knowledge of the Gospel of peace; for it is therefore called the Gospel of peace, because it bringeth peace to our soules, not onely as it is the ambassage of God, whereby we being reconciled vnto him, haue peace with him, from the assurance whereof wee haue the peace of conscience, but also because if we be armed therewith, we shall obtaine a finall victorie ouer our spirituall enemies, after which shall follow euerlasting peace, which shall not so much as be disturbed with the attempts of any enemies.

But it is not sufficient that wee know and beleeue this Gospel of peace, vnlesse wee be alwayes prepared to make confession and profession thereof, though thereby wee incurre worldly shame, losses, afflictions and persecution. And this the Apostle signifieth, by telling vs that our feet must be shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace; that is, as those who are well shod are in readinesse to goe thorow rough and vnpleasant wayes; so those that are indued with the knowledge of the Gospel, must alwayes be in readinesse to make profession thereof in the middest of affliction and persecution. For as with the heart man beleeueth vnto righteousnesse, so with the mouth hee must confesse vnto saluation, Rom. 10.10. And this the Apostle Peter requireth of vs; that wee doe not onely sanctifie the Lord in our hearts, but also that we be readie alwayes to giue an answere to euery man that asketh vs a reason of the hope that is in vs. But if wee lay aside this armour, wee shall be as vnfit to trauell in the afflicted way which leadeth to Gods Kingdome, as those souldiers who are barefoot be vnfit to march thorow wayes which are full of briars and thornes; neither shall wee be readie to make confession and profession of our faith in the time of persecution and trouble, but rather to slide backe into a generall apostasie from all Religion, vnlesse wee be confirmed and comforted with the sweet promises of the Gospel, made to those who suffer affliction for Christs sake, namely, that if wee confesse him before men, hee will confesse vs before his Father in heauen, Mat. 10.32. That whosoeuer shall lose his life for Christs sake and the Gospels, shall saue it. Marke 8.35. That whosoeuer shall forsake houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father or mother, or wife and children, or lands for his names sake shall receiue an hundredfold more, and shall inherit euerlasting life Matth. 19.29.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Shield of Faith.

THe fourth piece of the Christian armour which the Apostle exhorteth vs aboue all to put on, is the shield of faith, which of all other parts is most necessarie, because how weake soeuer it be in it selfe, yet it doth defend and protect vs against all the temptations of Satan; for hee that putteth on faith, doth put on Iesus Christ also, it being a propertie inseparable of faith, to apply vnto vs Christ Iesus and all his benefits, that is, his merits and righteousnesse, and euerlasting life it selfe. And this will be not onely a glorious garment to couer our deformitie out of Gods sight, to preserue vs from the heate of his wrath, and to obtaine the euerlasting blessing of our heauenly Father, but also it is armour of proofe to defend vs from the violent assaults of our spirituall enemies. Let vs therefore take vnto vs the shield of faith, that we may also put on the Lord Iesus Christ,

Rom. 13.14.

Christ, as the Apostle exhorteth vs, Rom. 13. 14. for hauing him we shall want nothing, which may either defend our selues or offend our enemies; the Lord himselfe will bee our shield and buckler, and therefore it will be impossible for our foes to preuaile against vs.

§. Sect. 2. What is meant by quenching Satans firie darts.

But let vs consider further of the excellency and necessity of this shield of faith, which appeareth by the vertue thereof in repelling all the fierie darts of Satan. The Apostle saith, that thereby wee may quench his fierie darts, alluding to the custome of souldiers in ancient time, who maliciously poysoned their darts, whereby the bodies of those who were wounded were so inflamed, that they could hardly be cured, or eased of their raging and burning paine. And such darts are all Satans temptations, whereby we are wounded with sinne; for if they be not expelled & quenched with the shield of faith, they will inflame our lusts to sinne, and one sinne will inflame our hearts to another, till there be kindled in vs a world of wickednesse. And this we may see in the example of Dauid, who after that hee gaue himselfe to idlenesse and sloth, and so was pierced with one of Satans firie darts, it presently inflamed his heart to commit adulterie, and hauing giuen place to that, he was prouoked to murther; so that if wee admit one of these fierie darts, it will inflame vs to receiue another, and so our burning wounds wil torment our consciences, and most hardly admit of any cure.

§. Sect. 3. Why the shield of faith is said rather to quench then to repell Satans darts.

And therefore it behoueth vs to take vnto vs the shield of faith, whereby wee may quench these fierie darts. But why doth the Apostle vse this * improper speech, seeing the shield doth not quench, but repell the darts that beat vpon it? I answere, partly to shew the nature of our enemies temptations, namely, that they are fierie, mortall, raging, and pernicious (as before I said) and partly to set forth a double vertue of faith: for first thereby we repell and beate backe his temptations, and so resist him stedfastly in the faith, as the Apostle speaketh, 1. Pet. 5. 9. And secondly, if Satans darts haue pierced and wounded vs, faith also doth coole the scorching heate of sinne, by applying vnto vs the precious balme of Christs bloud, so that our wounds are not mortall vnto vs, though mortall in themselues, if they were not cured by this soueraigne salue of sinne, which being applied by faith, doth ease the burning torments of our euill consciences; and preserueth vs from all danger of death. The first of these vertues is signified hereby, in that hee calleth faith a shield, which repelleth Satans temptations, as the shield doth the darts that are cast against it: the second by the word (quenching) namely, that as water quencheth the fire, so faith quencheth the fierydarts of Satans temptations, as is aforesaid.

Lastly, we are to note that he calleth Satan the wicked one, to shew vnto vs that he is the Father and authour of all wickednesse and sinne, both by sinning himselfe, and prouoking others to sinne by his temptations. And therefore he is called the wicked or euill one both here, and Matth. 6. 13. But deliuer vs from the euill one. So Matth. 13. 38. The tares are the children of the wicked one, as also Iohn 8. 44.

§. Sect. 4. Why Satan is called the wicked one.

Matth. 6. 13. and 13. 38. Iohn 8. 44.

* I call it an improper speech, not because it is vnfit to expresse the Apostles minde and meaning, The which it doth in most liuely manner but because it is metaphoricall or allegorical consisting of borrowed speeches and words drawne from their naturall signification. For faith in proprietie of speech, cannot be called a shield, nor Satans tentations fiery darts. Neither is it properly the nature of the shield to quench but to repell darts which light vpon it. Howsoeuer therefore it is a most elegant and significant speech: yet stil I affirme with Caluin, that it is tropicall and improper.

CHAP. XIIII.

Of the Helmet of Saluation.

THe fift piece of our Christian armour is the helmet of saluation, which is so called by a Metonymy of the effect, because it bringeth saluation to them that weare it, for we are saued by hope, as it is Rom. 8. 24. which wee are to vnderstand by the helmet of saluation, as appeareth 1. Thes. 5. 8. where hee exhorteth vs to put on the hope of saluation for an Helmet. As therefore souldiers when they goe into the field put on their helmet, that thereby they may defend their head, which is their chiefe part, from the cruell blowes of the enemie; so we being to fight the spirituall battell must put on hope both of victorie, and the glorious Crowne belonging thereunto, and so shall wee neuer turne our backes when we are assaulted, seeing by the Lords assistance wee doe assuredly hope for victory, and through his mercie and the merits of Christ doe expect after our combat is finished, the garland of euerlasting happinesse, promised to all that ouercome. For though Satan assault vs on the one side, by offering vnto vs the riches, honours and pleasures of the World, that thereby hee may intice to sinne, and so yeeld our selues his captiues, he shall not preuaile against vs, if we be armed with this helmet of saluation. For as no man in his right wits would sel his certaine interest vnto a goodly inheritance for a bright shining counter; so much lesse will any man, who is not starke mad, sell his assured hope of the eternall Kingdome of glorie, by yeelding himselfe the slaue of sinne and Sathan, to purchase for the present the Worlds counterfeit shining excellencies, which are in truth but mutable, or at least momentanie vanities. And though he assault vs on the other side with afflictions, crosses, and persecutions, as he did Paul, yet we will with him, for the hope of Israel, be content to be bound in the chaines of miserie and affliction. For the heauiest crosse will seeme tolerable, yea an easie yoke and a light burthen, then, to those who doe expect and hope for a farre most excellent and an eternall waight of glorie; neither can the strait way and the narrow gate discourage those, that in the end of their iournie assuredly expect a place of pleasure and neuer fading felicitie. But on the other side, if wee doe not put on this helmet, we shall not dare to lift vp our heads in the day of battell: for as those who are encouraged with hope of victorie and the spoyle ensuing, doe fight valiantly; so those who are quite forsaken of hope, doe forsake also the field, and casting downe their armour and weapons, doe either runne away, or cowardly yeeld vnto the enemie:

CHAP. XV
Of the Sword of the Spirit.

¶. Sect. 1. Of the sword of the spirit.

AND so much for the defensiue armour which wee must put on. That which followeth is both defensiue and offensiue, fit to defend our selues, and repell and foile the enemy. And this is the sword of the spirit, the Word of God. This the Apostle calleth the sword of the Spirit, because it is a spirituall, and not a carnall weapon, which the Spirit of God himselfe hath as it were tempered, made, sharpened, and put into our hands, to repell our spirituall enemies whensoeuer they assault vs. If therefore wee would defend our selues and driue backe Satan, wee must not onely buckle vnto vs the defensiue armour before spoken of (for hee that standeth altogether vpon defence, standeth vpon no defence) but we must take vnto vs the sword of the Spirit, wherewith we may repell and deadly wound our spirituall enemies. Wherein we are to imitate the example of our chiefe Captaine Iesus Christ, who though hee was able to haue confuted Satan by other arguments, or to haue confounded him by the omnipotent power of his Deitie, yet as hee suffered himselfe to be tempted in all things like vnto vs, so he vsed also the same weapons, which hee hath appointed vs to vse in this spirituall combate of temptations, to the end that wee might bee taught how to handle them, hauing his example for our imitation, and also may conceiue assured hope of victorie, considering that our Captaine subdued Satan with the selfe-same weapons.

¶. Sect. 2. That the sword of the spirit is a most fit weapon to repell Satans temptations.

Whensoeuer therefore we are assaulted by Satan, let vs draw out the sword of the Spirit, that we may defend our selues, and giue him the foile, as being the most fit weapon for this purpose: for if Satan seeke to blinde the eyes of our vnderstanding with ignorance, that thereby he may lead vs as it were hood-winkt into sinne, the Word of God is a lampe to our feet, and a light vnto our paths to discouer Satans darke illusions and secret ambushments, and to guide our feet in the way of peace. If he seeke to deceiue vs with his lies, and to seduce vs into errours; the Word of God is the Touch-stone of truth, by which we discerne the pure golden veritie from the drossie conceits of humane inuentions; and the subtill delusions of Satans probable falshoods, from the vndoubted certaintie of Gods infallible truth. If he transforme himselfe into an angell of light, Gods Word doth pull off his vizard, and maketh him appeare in his owne likenesse: if he come vpon vs like a roring Lion to deuoure vs, it protecteth vs from danger, and maketh vs strong enough to withstand his violence.

¶. Sect. 3. How we are to vse the sword of the spirit in the conflict of temptations.

Seeing therefore this weapon is so excellent, let vs most highly esteeme it, and manfully vse it whensoeuer Sathan doth assault and tempt vs vnto sinne. For example, when he inticing vs to commit sin, doth extenuate and mince it as though it were but a May-game, and a tricke of youth which God regardeth not; let vs draw out the sword of the Spirit, saying, it is written, that all they are accursed who continue not in all that is written in the booke of the law to doe it, Gal. 3.10. that they who liue according to the flesh, cannot please God, Rom. 8.8. that the burthen of sinne cannot be light, seeing it pressed out of Christ himselfe a bloudie sweate, &c.

Gal. 3.10.

Rom. 8.8.

On the other side, if he aggrauate the hainousnesse of our sinnes, to the end hee may draw vs into despaire of Gods mercie, let vs say, it is written, I will not the death of a sinner (saith the Lord) but that hee repent and liue, Ezec. 18.23,32. And, that Iesus Christ came into the World to saue sinners, 1. Tim. 1.15. And that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, Matth. 9.13. Iohn 3.16. If he tempt vs to the loue of the World, and to the seruice of this vnrighteous Mammon; let vs answere him, that it is impossible to serue two masters of such contrary disposition, as it is written, Mat. 6.24. That if wee loue the World, the loue of the Father abideth not in vs, 1. Iohn 2.15. That the amity of the World is enmity against God, Iam. 4.4. Contrariwise, if renouncing the World, and endeuouring to serue the Lord in vprightnesse and in truth, hee seeke to draw vs from our integrity, by threatning afflictions and persecution; we are to strengthen our selues and resist him with the sword of the Spirit, remembring that they are blessed which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, for theirs is the Kingdome of Heauen, Ma. 5.10. That al that will liue godly in Christ Iesus shal suffer persecution, 1. Ti. 3.12. That whosoeuer loseth any thing for Christs sake, shal receiue in recompence an hundreth fold more, and haue euer lasting life to boote, Ma. 19.29. If he tempt vs to the neglect of Gods Word, we are to tel him, that all Christs sheepe heare his voice & follow him, Ioh. 10.27. That whosoeuer is of God heareth Gods words, Ioh. 8.47

Q. Sect. 4. That it behoueth vs to bee skilful in handling the ſword of the ſpirit.

And thus may we repell the violence of all Satans temptations and giue him the foile, if we will take vnto vs the ſword of the Spirit, and skilfully vſe the ſame in the fight; for it is not ſufficient that we haue this ſword lying by vs, nor to be able to ſhew the goodneſſe thereof in diſcourſe, if in the meane time we neuer draw it out to fight the ſpirituall combat, but let it ruſt in the ſcabberd; but wee muſt alwayes haue it readie for the combat, and (as it were) naked in our hands, that we may ſtrike home, and cut off all the temptations of Sathan, and the luſts of our owne fleſh when they doe aſſault vs. And to this end we muſt be skilfull in the vſe thereof: for though a man haue an excellent weapon, yet if he know not how to vſe it, it will little helpe him either to defend himſelfe or offend his enemie; ſo if a man haue this two edged ſword of Gods Word, and haue no skill to rule it, hee will ſtrike flat-long and not cut, and ſome time wound himſelfe in ſtead of hurting his enemie: yea ſo politicke a Warriour is Satan againſt whom we fight, that if wee be not skilfull in the vſe of this ſword, he will turne the edge and point thereof againſt our ſelues, and ſo in ſtead of defending vs, it will, like the ſword of Goliah, be readie for the enemie to cut off our owne head. And therefore it behoueth vs to come into Gods ſchoole continually, that there wee may learne how to vſe and handle this ſword of Gods Word ſo cunningly, that we may reſiſt Satan in all his aſſaults, and giue him no aduantage in the fight. Otherwiſe he will vſe it to our owne ouerthrow; for if he durſt fight againſt our Sauiour Chriſt with his owne weapon the Word of God, whoſe knowledge was exquiſite and without meaſure, ſaying, It is written; how much more buſie will he be in vſing it againſt vs, who haue not attained vnto the leaſt part of his skill.

Whereby appeareth, firſt the carnall wretchleſneſſe of many men, who, as though there were no enemie to aſſault them, haue not this weapon in their houſes at all, or if they haue, yet they beſtow more time in prophane exerciſes, then in ſtudie how to vſe the ſword of the Spirit for their owne defence; or at leaſt truſting to their owne skill as ſufficient in it ſelfe, they ſeldome come to the Lords ſchoole, where they might learne to vſe the weapon of Gods Word for their beſt aduantage. Secondly, hereby appeareth the wicked practice of the enemies of Gods Truth, who take from his people this ſword of the Spirit, which the Lord hath giuen vnto all for their defence. Neither doth the Apoſtle in this place exhort onely the Clergie to take this weapon, but al Chriſtians whatſoeuer, who are aſſaulted with their ſpirituall enemies: but they notwithſtanding conſpiring with Satan to worke the ouerthrow of Gods Church, depriue them of the vſe of the ſword of the Spirit, the Word of God, and ſo betray them into the power of Sathan being able to make no reſiſtance, when their chiefe weapon is taken from them.

Q. Sect. 5. The folly of thoſe who neglect this ſpirituall weapon.

CHAP. XVI.

Of Prayer.

THe laſt and chiefe meanes whereby wee may both defend our ſelues, and offend our enemies, is feruent and effectuall Prayer, which the Apoſtle exhorteth vs to vſe, Ep. 6.18. And pray alwayes with &c. The neceſſitie and profit of which exerciſe is exceeding great in this ſpirituall combate, becauſe thereby we doe obtaine all our ſtrength to fight, and victorie alſo ouer our enemies. For firſt we cannot endure the leaſt aſſault of Satan by our owne ſtrength, vnleſſe we be armed with the power of Gods might, as before I haue ſhewed. And the Lords aſſiſtance, whereby only wee can ouercome, is obtained by earneſt and effectuall Prayer, according to that Pſal. 50.15. Call vpon me in the day of trouble; ſo will I de- deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. And our Sauiour prescribeth vs this meanes to free our selues from temptation, or at least from being ouercome by it, that wee craue the Lords assistance, saying, Leade vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from euill, *Matth.*6.13. So hee exhorteth his Disciples vnto prayer, lest they should enter into temptation, Luke 22.40,46. Secondly, we cannot obtaine the spirituall armour (before described) by any meanes of our owne, but those graces of Gods Spirit are his gifts, *from whom euery good and perfect gift descendeth, Iam.*1.17. and therefore are to be begged at his hands by earnest and effectuall Prayer, we hauing his gracious promise, that if *wee aske we shall receiue; Matth.*7.7. And our Sauiour hath assured vs, that whatsoeuer we aske the Father in his Name, hee will giue it vs, Iohn 16.23. And to this his promise he addeth his commandement in the Verse following, saying, Aske and you shall receiue. Yea, if wee doe but truely desire the Holy Ghost, the Father will giue him vnto vs, Luke 11.13. And he commeth not alone, but bringeth with him our spirituall armour, euen all his graces fit for to arme vs in the spirituall combat, against all the assaults of Satan and his assistants.

*Mat.*6.13. Luke 22.40. Iames 1.17. *Mat.*7.7. Iohn 16.23. Verse 24. Luke 11.13.

Q. Sect. 2. The rest of the spirituall armour is not sufficient without Prayer.

But whereas these graces are in this life but weake and imperfect in vs; our truth being mixt with wil-worship and hypocrisie; and the puritie of our conscience stained with our corruption; our knowledge of the Gospell but in part, and shadowed with the vaile of ignorance; our faith mixt with doubting, and weakened with incredulitie; our hope shaken from its anker-hold, when the promises of God are delayed; and whereas wee also are vnskilfull to vse this spirituall armour for our best aduantage; therefore it behoueth vs after wee haue armed our selues at all points, not to trust altogether in our armour, but to haue our recourse vnto our grand Captaine Christ Iesus, acknowledging our owne weakenesse, and desiring his aide and assistance, that being armed with his power, we may obtaine a glorious victorie ouer our spirituall enemies. And as Moses ioyned with Iosuahs sword his owne effectuall prayer, which was of farre greater efficacie; for when hee held vp his hands in prayer, Israel preuailed; but when hee fainted, Amaleck had the vpper hand: so wee being to fight against the spirituall Amalekites, are not wholly to trust in our spirituall weapons, but we are to implore continually the Lords assistance by heartie prayer, assuring our selues that if wee lift vp our hands and hearts vnto God, we shall in the end obtaine a full victorie; but if wee faint, the spirituall Amaleck will preuaile against vs. Whilst our minds lie groueling on the earth, it is an easie matter for these spirituall wickednesses to ouercome vs, seeing they fight against vs from high places; but if wee lift vp our hearts in prayer vnto God, our minds and soules shall be as it were transported into Heauen which is a tower of strength, into which our spirituall enemies cannot approach. Whensoeuer therefore we are assaulted by Satan, let vs lift vp our soules into Heauen by effectuall prayer, and so we shall be out of his reach.

*Exod.*17.11,12.

Q. Sect. 3. The properties required in Prayer.

Now that our prayers may be effectuall, there are diuers conditions and properties required in them by the Apostle in this place. First, that we pray continually, which also our Sauiour Christ enioyneth vs Luke 18.1. And Paul also, 1.*Thes.*5.17. Not that wee must neglect all other exercises and doe nothing but pray; for there is a time to heare the Word, to doe the workes of mercie and of our callings; but his meaning is that wee be alwayes readie to pray vpon all good occasions; especially in the time of temptation this dutie is required, according to that, *Psal.*50.15. And therefore the Apostle saith not, that we must pray ἐν παντὶ χρόνῳ, in euery particular time and season, but ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ, in euery fit time, when iust occasion and opportunitie is offered. Seeing then in the time of temptation wee doe especially need the Lords helpe; therefore, that aboue all other is the opportune and conuenient time wherein wee are to implore his gracious assistance. Where by the way, the stinted prayers of the Popish rabble, which they restraine to set houres is confuted, for the Apostle willeth vs alwaies to be in a readinesse when any fit occasion is offered.

Luke 18.1. 1.*Thes.*5.17. *Psal.*50.15.

Q. Sect. 4. Wee must pray with all maner of prayer and supplication.

The second thing required, is, that wee pray with all manner of prayer and supplication. The former word here vsed is προσευχὴ, which signifieth the earnest desiring of any good thing: the other is δέησις, which is the deprecation of any euill; so that whether wee want any thing that is good, or would be deliuered from any thing which is euill, wee must haue recourse vnto God by prayer, that we may obtaine the one and auoid the other; but more especially when we feele the want or weakenesse of any part of the spirituall armour, the graces of Gods Spirit, we are to begge them at Gods hand, that so we may be enabled to stand in the encounter; and when wee apprehend the extreame malice, ioyned with the great power and cunning policie of our spiritual enemies, we are earnestly to pray, that the Lord will not lead vs into temptations, or that he will not suffer vs to fall therein and to be ouerthrowne. And these our prayers must not onely be publike in the Church, but also priuate in our chambers; neither must wee be alwayes begging these benefits at Gods hand, but hauing obtained them, wee must be as readie to giue him thankes, and to ascribe the glorie of all vnto him, who is the author and bestower of all vertue and grace which is in vs; and so calling vpon God with all manner of prayer, hee will be continually readie to assist vs in our spirituall combate.

Q. Sect. 5. That wee must pray in or by the spirit.

The third thing required, is, that we pray in or by the Spirit, for the word here vsed may signifie both. First, therefore wee must pray in the spirit; to which is required, first, that wee pray with vnderstanding; in which respect the ignorant Papists offend, who pray in an vnknowne tongue; and the ignorant Protestants also, who though they pray in their owne language, yet know not the sense and meaning of that they speake. Secondly, that we pray with attentiue minds, joyning our hearts with our tongues, and thoughts with words; to which is opposed the prayer of the lips alone, when as wee draw neere vnto God with our mouthes, our hearts in the meane time being farre from him, as it is Esay 29.13. Which kind of prayer is odious and abominable vnto God, for what more grosse discord, then when the tongue and heart disagree from one another, which should bee tuned in vnisone? And as the carcasse being seuered from the soule is presently corrupt and stinketh; so the prayer of the lips being seuered from the prayer of the heart, which is the life and soule of it, is but a dead carcasse of prayer, and stinketh in Gods nostrils. Thirdly, that we pray with a pure conscience and faith vnfained, lifting vp pure hands to God, without wrath or doubting, as it is 1. Tim. 2.8. to which is opposed prayer proceeding from a polluted conscience, when as men liue in their sinnes without any true sorrow for those which are past, or any sincere purpose to forsake them in the time to come. Which prayers must needs proceed from an heart full of incredulitie, seeing they haue no promise in the word whereupon they may ground their faith: nay, contrariwise it is said, that God heareth not sinners, Iohn 9.31. that is, such as goe on in their sinnes without repentance, hauing no purpose of heart to leaue and forsake them. And thus you see what it is to pray in the spirit, which we cannot performe, vnlesse we pray through and by the Spirit of God, which helpeth our infirmities, and teacheth vs to pray as wee ought, yea it selfe maketh request for vs with sighes which cannot be expressed, as it is Rom. 8.26.

Esay 29.13.

Esay 1.15. Iohn 9.31.

Rom. 8.26.

Q. Sect. 6. Of watchfulnesse.

The fourth thing required is watchfulnes; which dutie is required joyntly with prayer in many places. Our Sauiour three times joyneth them together, saying, Watch and pray that yee enter not into temptation, Mat. 26. And the Apostle Peter, 1. Epist. 4.7. saith, Now the end of all things is at hand: Bee yee therefore sober and watching vnto prayer. As though he should say, Your enemie the Deuill as a roaring Lion walketh about, seeking whom hee may deuoure, and therefore it behoueth you at all times like valiant and carefull souldiers, who are still in danger to be assaulted by their enemies, to bee sober and watch, as it is 1. Pet. 5.8. but now more especially seeing the end of all things is at hand, for Satan knowing that his time is but short, will redouble all his forces to worke your destruction, euen as souldiers will most fiercely assault a towne, when as they cannot long lie at the siege, either by reason of Winter drawing on, or the approching of new forces to relieue the towne or raise the siege. Seeing therefore Sathan redoubleth his force and care in working our destruction, let vs redouble our care and watchfulnesse in seeking to preuent his force and malice. For if Sathan watch continually that hee may murther vs, shall not wee bee watchfull in withstanding his assaults? Hee is continually in armes to ouerthrow vs, and shall not wee watch night and day in our Christian armour, that wee may defeat his forces and obtaine victorie?

Matth. 26.

1. Pet. 4.7.

1. Pet. 5.8.

Now this our watchfulnesse is partly of the bodie, and partly of the soule. The bodily watching is the abstaining from naturall sleepe, to the end that wee may giue our selues vnto prayer; when as with Danid wee water our couch with teares, Psal. 6.6. and call vpon God not onely in the day, but in the night also, as it is Psal. 88.1. And when as euen at midnight wee rouse vp our selues to giue thankes vnto God for his mercie and benefits, as it is Psal. 119.62. The watchfulnesse of the soule is when as we doe not sleepe in our sinnes, being rocked in the cradle of carnall securitie, but shake off our drowsinesse by vnfained repentance, rising vp to newnesse of life. And to this watchfulnesse the Apostle exhorteth vs, Ephes. 5.14 Awake thou that sleepest, and stand vp from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light, &c. for we are dead in our sinnes, till Christ by his Spirit mortifie them and reuiue vs, raising vs vp to newnesse of life, as it is, Ephes. 2.1. Though therefore we take our rest and sleep in that measure which nature requireth, yet let vs not sleepe as doe other, (to wit, in carnall securitie) but let vs watch and bee sober, as it is 1. Thes. 5.6. because in this respect it is time that wee should arise from sleepe, for the darke night of ignorance is past; and the bright Sun-shine day of the Gospell is come, let vs therefore cast away the workes of darknesse and let vs put on the armour of light: So that we walke honestly as in the day: not in gluttony and drunkennesse, neither in chambering and wantonnesse, nor in strife and enuying: but putting on the Lord Iesus Christ, taking no thought for for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof, as it is Rom. 13. 12, 13, 14.

And this is the Christian watch which we are to joyne with prayer: but as I would not haue vs put our whole confidence in the spirituall armour, so much lesse in our owne care and watchfulnesse; for we must relie our selues vpon God only, desiring him to watch ouer vs while wee sleepe; but yet with the Lords assistance wee must joyne our endeuour, and not drowsily and sleepily receiue his aide. And as the godly Husbandman expecteth the fruites of the earth from the blessing of God, and yet notwithstanding vseth all paines, care and diligence in plowing, sowing, and harrowing his ground; so wee are to seeke deliuerance from the force and malice of our spirituall enemies of God alone, but yet we are to joyne our good endeuour carefully and diligently, vsing all the good meanes which are ordained of God for this purpose.

The fifth thing required is perseuerance in prayer; for it is not sufficient to pray earnestly and feruently, for a spurt, but wee must continue therein, expecting the Lords leisure. And vnto this we are exhorted, Rom. 12. 12. continuing in prayer. So the Prophet Danid perswadeth to expect and waite for the Lord, and to be strong in continuing constantly in our course, and then in the end God will comfort our hearts, Psal. 27. 14. And the Apostle Paul willeth vs to pray incessantly, like importunate suiters who will haue no nay, though they receiue many denials. To this dutie our Sauiour encourageth vs by the parable of the vnrighteous Iudge, who though hee neither cared for man nor feared God, yet was moued through importunitie to doe the poore Widdow justice; and therefore our heauenly Father will much more grant the importunate suites of his Elect, especially hauing bound himselfe thereunto by his most gracious promises. True it is that the Lord doth many times deferre to grant the prayers of his children, as though hee heard or regarded them not; when as in truth he neuer delayeth any of their lawfull suites, vnlesse it bee to this end that hee may thereby either conuay vnto them greater blessings then they desire, as when hee giueth spirituall graces in stead of earthly benefits; or else that thereby he may moue them to pray more feruently, and so exercise and increase their faith, hope and patience; or that hee may shew these his graces to the prayse of his glorie who hath bestowed them, both to others and the parties themselues; or that hee may mooue vs more thankfully to receiue and highly to esteeme his benefits, after by long suite wee haue obtained them, which wee would not so greatly regard if hee bestowed them at the first motion. A notable example hereof we haue in the Canaanitish woman, both for our comfort & imitation: to whose prayers our Sauiour Christ gaue (as it seemed) no eare; and when he did take notice of her suite, hee giueth her a double repulse, first by telling her that hee was sent onely to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel; and when this would not mooue her to surcease her suite, he vseth a more bitter deniall, telling her that it was not fit to take the childrens bread and to cast it to Whelpes: but when she was not hereby discouraged, nor her faith extinguished, but rather of a sparke increased to a great flame, at the last shee doth not onely receiue what shee desired, but also was sent away with great commendation. But wherefore did not our Sauiour grant her petition at the first hearing? Surely not that he grudged her her suite, or was loath to entertaine it, but to the end that hee might make her more earnestly implore his helpe, and manifest to all the World her singular faith; and lastly, that she might be an example to vs for our imitation, both to encourage vs in asking of God the supply of our wants, and also to perseuere in prayer, though at the first God seemeth not to regard vs, yea though wee receiue diuers repulses and many discouragements: which if we performe, we shall haue a notable testimonie of a true faith, when as wee can patiently abide the Lords leisure, though he doe deferre his helpe, for hee that beleeueth, will not make haste, as it is Esay 28. 16, and in the end we shall be sure to obtaine our godly and honest desires, if not as wee would, yet as it shall be most for our good; and withall eternall blessednesse. For the Lord is the God of iudgement; and blessed are all they that wait for him, as it is Esay 30. 18.

When therefore we are assaulted by our spirituall enemies, and readie to faint in the combat of temptations, let vs call vpon the Lord for his assistance, that we may be freed from dangers and deliuered from them; and if the Lord doe seeme to deferre his helpe, and suffer vs still to beare the brunt of the battaile, after we haue many times implored his assistance, yet let vs not be discouraged, but constantly perseuere in prayer, assuring our selues that the Lord will either free vs from the temptation, or else giue vs strength to endure and ouercome it: for he hath promised that he will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our power, but that hee will giue a good issue to the temptation that we may be able to beare it, and hee is faithfull and true of his word: as it is 1. Cor. 10. 13. It may bee that the Lord will not quite free vs from the skirmish of temptation, though we haue often desired it of him, either because he would further try our Christian valour, and exercise our faith, or restraine vs from sinne, especially spirituall pride, to which we are too too subject; as wee may see in the example of Paul, who being buffeted by the messenger of Satan, besought the Lord thrice that he might depart from him: but the Lord answered that his grace which he bestowed on him was sufficient, and that his power was made manifest in the Apostles weaknes, as appeareth 2. Cor. 12. 8, 9. Now the cause why the Lord would not altogether release him, was, that hee might be humbled hereby, the pricke of the flesh letting out the winde of vaine glorie, which would haue puffed him vp, by reason of the multitude of reuelations which hee had receiued. Let vs not therefore send for the Lords assistance (as it were) by poste; and prescribe the Lord a time with the Bethulians, wherein if wee be not relieued wee will faint and cowardly yeeld: for that which the Prophet speaketh from the Lord concerning the Vision, may fitly bee spoken of the Lords aide and helpe; Though it tarie, watch; for it shall surely come and not stay, Habac. 2. 3.

Q. Sect. 11. Prayer to bee made for all the Saints.

The last thing required in our prayers, is, that we doe not onely pray for our selues, but also for all the Saints. For wee are fellow members of the same bodie, wee are fellow souldiers which fight vnder the same Captaine Iesus Christ, and consequently their victorie is our victorie, and their foiles are our foiles. As therefore Souldiers doe not only stand vpon their seuerall guards, but joyne their forces together, whereby it commeth to passe, that they who being scattered might easily bee ouercome, hauing vnited their forces are vnresistable: so we are not only to stand vpō our own defence, but to joyne in prayer with the whole Church Militant, and then shal not our spirituall enemies stand against vs: for if the prayer of one righteous man auaileth much, being feruent and effectuall, of what efficacie and power are the Prayers of all the righteous joyned together?

Q. Sect. 12. No armour appointed for the backe.

And thus haue I described the Christian armour, which euery man is to put on before he enter into the combate with our spirituall enemies; amongst all which there is not any piece appointed for the back, to note vnto vs that wee must neuer retire, but manfully stand to it euen in the face of our enemie. For if we resist Satan, he will flee from vs, Iam. 4. 7. but if we giue ground and betake our selues to flight, hee will pursue vs swiftly and deadly wound vs; for wee haue no armour on the backe to defend vs from the violence of his blowes, neither will the Lord protect such faint-hearted cowards as runne away from his standard, not daring to trust and relie vpon his almightie power and neuer failing assistance, which he hath promised to all that fight his battels. Seeing therefore there is no safetie in flight, and assured victorie to those that faint not but endure the brunt of the skirmish vnto the end, let vs manfully stand vpon our guard, neither fleeing from nor yeelding to our spirituall enemies; for where can wee bee more safe then vnder the Lords standard? where can wee bee more honourably imployed, then in fighting his battels? how can our state bee more dangerous, then when wee flee and Satan pursueth vs? how can it bee more desperate, then when wee yeeld our selues captiue to Satan to be bound in the fetters of sinne, vntill the sentence of condemnation be pronounced on vs in the generall sessions at the day of Christs appearing.

CHAP. XVII.

Of Satans stratagems.

Q. Sect. 1. Satan works vpon our corrupt affections, and fitteth his tentations to euery ones disposition.

AND so much concerning our spirituall armour, as also our preparation to the spirituall warfare. Now we are to speake of the battell it selfe: where first we are to consider of Satans stratagems, and the manner of his fight; and secondly, of the speciall conflicts or temptations wherewith he assaileth vs. Concerning Satans stratagems, wee are to know that they are many and dangerous; with which he will easily circumuent and ouerthrow vs; if wee doe not carefully preuent, or cunningly auoid them. For first hee dealeth not with all alike, neither vseth the same weapons to foile euery one, but he obserueth the qualitie and disposition of his enemies, and accordingly he fitteth his temptations, so as they may be most forcible to preuaile against them. And to this end hee obserueth to what sinnes wee are most inclined, either by nature, or by present occasion, and to those hee inciteth vs, thrusting vs as it were downe the Hill, where wee are apt to runne head-long of our owne accord; and seconding his assault with the aide of our corrupt flesh, which entertaineth willingly his suggestions, and vrgeth vs violently to yeeld to his temptations. So that Satan neuer striueth against the streame, but vseth the tide of our affections to carrie vs swiftly into a Sea of sinne.

Q. Sect. 2. With what temptations Satan assaulteth the ambitious. Iudg. 9. 2 Sam. 3. & 20.

For example, if he find a man ambitiously affected, then hee coueteth his hooke with the baite of honours: and thus hee tempted Abimelech to murther all his worthy brethren, that he might obtaine the soueraignte: thus he tempted Ioab to stab traiterously Abner and Amasa, that he might still be Captaine Generall: thus he tempted Absolon to vsurpe the Kingdome, though it were by by the vtter deſtruction of his owne father. And thus hee tempted our Sauiour Chriſt to worſhip him, by offering him all the Kingdomes of the World; thinking belike that he was inclined to ambition, ſeeing hee profeſſed himſelfe a great King, and had no worldly Kingdome in his poſſeſſion. So in our dayes he tempteth the ambitious ſubject to aſpire, without juſt title, to the Crowne of their lawfull Princes; and thoſe who are Kings alreadie to affect a Monarchie, by vſurping wrongfully their Neighbour Kingdomes: So he tempteth the Spiritualtie to come by Church-preferments, rather commended by the gifts of the purſe then of the minde; and the Laietie to buy great Offices at ſo high a rate that they cannot liue of them, vnleſſe they ſell juſtice by taking bribes to betray the innocent; and their honeſtie alſo by vſing all extortion.

2. Sect. 3. How Satan tempteth the voluptuous.

If he find that men are addicted to voluptuouſneſſe, then he tempteth them to ſinne by offering carnall pleaſures; and thus he tempted Noah to drunkenneſſe, Dauid to adulterie, Salomon to idolatrie and all wickedneſſe. And thus now hee tempteth ſome to good fellowſhip, that is, to ſpend their whole time in drunkenneſſe, belly-cheare, and all riotous exceſſe and Epicuriſme; ſome to luſt, incontinencie, and all voluptuous pleaſures of the fleſh. Or if hee cannot bring them to ſuch carnall groſſeneſſe, hee will intice them to vſe lawfull recreations vnlawfully, immoderately ſpending all their time in pleaſure, which they ſhould beſtow in the ſeruice of God, by imploying themſelues in the generall duties of Chriſtianitie, and in the ſpeciall duties of their callings.

2. Sect. 4. How Satan worketh vpon mens couetouſneſſe. 1. Tim. 6. 9. 10.

But if hee find that men are giuen to couetouſneſſe, then hath hee matter enough to worke vpon: for as the Apoſtle ſaith, They that will be rich fall into temptations and ſnares, and into many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which drowne men in perdition and deſtruction: for the deſire of money is the root of all euill. With this baite he allured Laban to deale churliſhly and vnjuſtly with Iacob, and his owne children; and to inrich himſelfe by impoueriſhing them, for whoſe ſake he ſhould haue gathered his riches. He inticed Balaam to curſe the people whom God had bleſſed, by offering him monie, the wages of wickedneſſe. He tempted Gehazi to take the talent and change of raiment of Naaman, ſelling for this ſmall trifle Gods honour and his Maſters credit. Hee allured Achab to murther Naboth, that hee might purloine his Vineyard, and ſo purchaſe a place of pleaſure with the bloud of his faithfull ſubject. With this baite he inticed Iudas to betray his Maſter, ſelling him for thirtie pieces of ſiluer, whoſe worth could not be valued with many Worlds. And hereby alſo he prouoked Demetrius to oppoſe himſelfe to the preaching of the Goſpell, becauſe hee would not loſe his gaine in making ſiluer ſhrines to the Idoll, Acts 19. 25. Neither was this argument drawne from profit forcible onely in former times, but now alſo it doth no leſſe perſwade to ſinne. For whom almoſt doth not Satan catch, or at leaſt intangle in this golden net? Doth hee not inſnare as well Profeſſors of Religion, as profeſſed Worldlings, ſo that in greedie ſeeking of gaine it is not eaſie to diſcerne the one from the other? Doth hee not ouercome all ſorts and conditions of men, as well thoſe who abound in all things, as thoſe that enjoy little, by proportionating his offers of riches, according to their ſeuerall eſtates; much to theſe that haue much, and little to thoſe that poſſeſſe little? For he commeth to Princes, and promiſeth them huge ſummes of monie, if they will lay intolerable taxations on their ſubjects, or rob the Church of her liuings, that is, God himſelfe of his right. He commeth to Magiſtrates and Iudges, and offereth vnto them great bribes, if they will peruert Iuſtice, and ſo putteth out their eyes that they cannot ſee right from wrong: for, reward blindeth the eyes of the wiſe, and perverteth the words of the juſt, as it is Deut. 16. 19. If hee ſee one in office couetous, he promiſeth great reuenues and ſtately houſes, if hee will deceiue the Prince of his right, and oppreſſe the ſubiect with grieuous extortion: and the like offers he maketh to couetous Gentlemen, if they will build their houſes with the bloud of their tenants, and by grinding the faces of the poore, inhaunſing their rents, and increaſing their fines to ſuch vnreaſonable rates, that the poore tenant can ſcarſe with the ſweat of his face earne his bread. Neither doth hee angle with this baite in the Court and Countrie only, but hee thinketh it fit for the Citie alſo: for he commeth to the couetous Merchant, and promiſeth him that in ſuch a countrie he ſhall haue good traffick, if hee will diſſemble his Religion, that is, denie Chriſt before men. He offereth to the ſhop-keeper increaſe of wealth, if hee will vſe falſe waights and meaſures, and falſe lights, or elſe ſell ſuch wares as are neither profitable for the Church nor Common-wealth; or adulterate and falſifie his ſtuffe by mixing bad with good; or aske double the price, ſwearing that it coſt him more then afterwardes himſelfe is contented to take: in a word, if in buying and ſelling hee will vſe fraud, lying, ſwearing, and forſwearing, hee promiſeth to make him a rich man; though oftentimes he deceiueth him; for in ſtead of increaſing in wealth by theſe vngodly practiſes, he becomes a bankerupt, the Lord laying his curſe on thoſe wicked meanes, without whoſe bleſſing the builder buildeth, and the

Q. Sect. 11. Prayer to bee made for all the Saints.

The last thing required in our prayers, is, that we doe not onely pray for our selues, but also for all the Saints. For wee are fellow members of the same bodie, wee are fellow souldiers which fight vnder the same Captaine Iesus Christ, and consequently their victorie is our victorie, and their foiles are our foiles. As therefore Souldiers doe not only stand vpon their seuerall guards, but joyne their forces together, whereby it commeth to passe, that they who being scattered might easily bee ouercome, hauing vnited their forces are vnresistable: so we are not only to stand vpō our own defence, but to joyne in prayer with the whole Church Militant, and then shal not our spirituall enemies stand against vs: for if the prayer of one righteous man auaileth much, being feruent and effectuall, of what efficacie and power are the Prayers of all the righteous joyned together?

labourer laboureth but in vaine, as it is Psal. 127.1,2. So also hee commeth to the Artificer, and telleth him that if hee will be rich, hee must make sale ware: and what is that? such as is sleight and altogether vnfit for vse; as though that were most fit for sale which is sleight and altogether vnprofitable. And so common now adayes is this fault, that no greater dispraise can be giuen, then to say it is sale ware, as though now nothing which is good and substantiall were fit to be sold. And with these and such like snares doth Sathan intangle those that are couetous, and haue set their hearts vpon the earthly Mammon; which I haue the longer stood vpon, because it is a temptation most dangerous; neither doth Satan by any meanes more easily sacke our soules, and spoile vs of Gods graces; then when he ascendeth by these golden ladders, or maketh a breach in our hearts with these rich bullets.

Q. Sect. 5. How Satan tempteth the vaine-glorious to sinne.

If Satan see men proud and vain-glorious; then hee inticeth them to sinne, by offering them gorgeous attire far vnfitting their state and callings, and so causeth them to commit a great absurditie: for whereas our Sauiour Christ saith, that the bodie is of more worth then raiment, they make their rayment of more worth then their bodies, in other mens iudgement, & preferre gay apparel before the health of their soules, in their owne estimation. For that they may jet it out in rich attire, they vse vnlawful meanes, either by injuring and oppressing their inferiours, or at least by keeping the poore from their right: (for their superfluitie of wealth was not giuen them to spend in such excesse, but that they shold like the Lords Almners relieue the poore with their surplussage) and by both, they wound their soules with sinne, and without repentance plunge them into euerlasting death.

Q. Sect. 6. That Satan fitteth his tentations to mens diuers complexions.

So also Satan taketh aduantage of our complexion and temperature; by tempting the Sanguine to pleasure and lust; the Flegmaticke to idleneese and sloth; the Melancholicke to enuie and malice; the Cholerick man hee prouoketh to quarrels and braules, and inticeth him to take reuenge by aggrauating the iniurie, and suggesting that it will bee a great disparagement to put vp such a wrong. In a word, Satan carefully obserueth to what sinne wee are most prone by nature, custome or occasion; & to that he eggeth vs forward vnto which our owne lusts leade vs, changing his temptations as we change our affection. And therefore the Apostle Iames telleth vs, that whosoeuer is tempted, is drawn away by his owne concupiscence, because Satan neuer assaulteth vs, but hee is sure that the flesh will further him in his temptations.

Iames 1.14.

Q. Sect. 7. Of the meanes to defeate Satans former policies.

And thus haue I discouered Satans first stratagem, which he vseth in tempting vs to sinne; which if wee would withstand and defeate, wee are as carefully to obserue our owne nature and disposition, that wee may finde to what vices wee are most prone, and so with greater watchfulnesse may auoide them. For as when a citie is besieged, the inhabitants will most strongly man that place, which by nature is most weake and assaultable, because they know that the enemie will giue the onset there where he is like to finde the easiest entrance: so wee being besieged with our spirituall enemies, are most carefully to obserue where our soules are weakest to make resistance, and ouer that part wee are to watch with greatest diligence, assuring our selues that there Satan will plant all his engines of batterie, that hauing made a breach hee may enter and surprize vs. And because the heart of man is deceitfull aboue all things, and none but God doth know it, let vs summon it often before the throne of Gods iudgement, and examine it by his law, that thereby we may see our secret corruptions, and after labour to kill and mortifie them. If we finde that we bee ambitiously affected, we are to vse all good meanes that true humilitie may bee wrought in our hearts, and whensoeuer (honours being offered) wee are tickled with ambitious and aspiring thoughts, let vs suspect that vnder the baite of honour Satan hath hid a hooke to catch vs. And therefore before wee accept it, we are to examine our selues whether wee be fit for so high a place, whether wee can attaine thereto by honest and lawfull meanes, and whether the place it selfe bee such, that therein we may glorifie God, benefit his Church and keepe a good conscience. So if we find that we are addicted vnto pleasures, we are with all care to studie and practise true mortification; and when any pleasures are offered vs, we are to looke narrowly into them, that we may discerne if Satan hath not laid vnder them a snare to intrap vs, either by tempting vs to pleasures which are vnlawfull, or to the immoderate vse of those which bee lawfull; and as wee loue the saluation of our soules, let vs auoide the baite when wee see the snare.

Ieremi. 17.9.

In like manner if wee finde that we are prone to couetousnes, let vs carefully labour to weane our selues from this vice, by considering that it is idolatrie, and the roote of all euill; that the rich (that is, such as set their hearts vpon riches) shall as hardly enter into Gods kingdome, as a Camel thorow a needles eye; that riches are momentanie and mutable, and wee mortall, and therefore haue no assurance of them for the space of one day. And when any commodity is offered vs, we are to looke twice on it before we accept thereof, examining whether wee may compasse it by honest and good meanes, & without the hurt of our brethren; and then wee may take it as sent from God; otherwise we may assure our selues, that how plea-pleaſantly ſoeuer the baite looketh, yet Satan hath hid vnder it a deadly hooke, and therefore if we ſwallow the baite the hooke will choake vs. And thus alſo are we to behaue our ſelues in reſpect of all other ſinnes, to which wee finde after due examination wee are addicted, if we will be ſafe from the diuels malice and cunning furie, knowing that where we are moſt weake, there he will giue the moſt violent aſſaults.

CHAP. XVIII.

How Satan fitteth his temptations to our ſtate and conditions.

Q. Sect. 1. How Satan fitteth his temptations to our worldly eſtate.

BVt as Satan fitteth his temptations to our nature and diſpoſition, ſo alſo to our ſtate and condition: for this alſo he obſerueth, and according to the qualitie thereof he tempteth vs to ſuch ſins, vnto which by reaſon thereof wee are moſt inclinable: and this he doth both in reſpect of our worldly, and alſo our ſpirituall eſtate. In regard of our worldly eſtate, he obſerueth whether wee are in proſperitie or aduerſitie. If wee bee in proſperitie, then he tempteth vs to thoſe ſinnes whereunto that eſtate is moſt ſubiect, namely, to pride and forgetfulneſſe of God, to contempt of our poore brethren, to the loue of the world, to coldnes in religion, and carnall ſecuritie; for he will perſwade vs, how wickedly ſoeuer we liue, that wee are highly in Gods fauour, otherwiſe hee would not beſtow ſo great and manifold benefits vpon vs, as pledges of his loue. If wee bee in aduerſity, then he will labour to perſwade vs to vſe vnlawfull meanes for the repairing of our eſtates, diſtruſting in Gods al-ruling prouidence and neuer deceiuing promiſes. If wee bee poore, he inticeth vs to ſteale, defraud and oppreſſe our brethren, that ſo we may become rich by others ſpoiles. If wee haue loſt any thing by theeues or other caſualties, he tempteth vs to go to witches and wizards, that ſo wee may hazard our ſoules, which are of more value then the whole world, for the recouery of ſome earthly triſle. If we ſuffer any great croſſe or affliction, he will perſwade vs that God hath forſaken and hateth vs, or elſe he would not ſo grieuouſly afflict vs; and hereby he mooueth vs to deſpaire, murmure and repine againſt God. Which temptation hee findeth ſo forcible, that hee confidently preſumed hee could thereby haue cauſed Iob to haue blaſphemed God to his face. Yea hee thought it a fit weapon to vſe againſt our Sauiour Chriſt; for, wanting ordinary meanes to ſuſtaine his hunger, Satan tempteth him to diſtruſt Gods prouidence, and to ſhift for himſelfe, by turning ſtones into bread, Matth. 4.

Now if wee would withſtand Satan in this his cunning practiſe, wee alſo are carefully to obſerue our eſtates, and to arme our ſelues againſt thoſe temptations, to which that eſtate wherein wee liue is moſt ſubiect: In the time of proſperitie we are continually to meditate, that whatſoeuer we haue it is the gift of God, beſtowed on vs not for our deſerts, but of his free mercie and goodneſſe, that by the conſideration hereof we may be ſtirred vp to true thankfulneſſe, and as often as wee looke vpon the gifts may thinke vpon the giuer, and praiſe his name for his benefits, and imploy them to his glorie, and the good of our brethren the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt. Let vs remember that wee are but ſtewards of theſe earthly treaſures, and therefore muſt one day be called to an account, and conſequently the greater our receits bee, the greater will be our reckoning; that theſe earthly things are momentanie and mutable, and we alſo mortall, and therfore there is no reaſon that we ſhould bee proud of them, or contemne our brethren who want them, ſeeing in an inſtant they may abound, and we may be ſtripped of all we poſſeſſe. So if we be in aduerſitie, we are to relie our ſelues on the Lords prouidence, who hath promiſed to all that depend vpon him all things neceſſarie, ſo farre foorth as they tend to the ſaluation of our ſoules; neither are we to beleeue Satan when he telleth vs that afflictions are ſignes of Gods hatred, ſeeing there are innumerable examples of Gods deare children grieuouſly afflicted, and plaine teſtimonies of Scriptures which proue the contrarie, as ſhall appeare hereafter.

Q. Sect. 2. How we are to defeat Satans former policy.

In reſpect of our ſpirituall eſtate Satan obſerueth whether wee be meere worldlings or profeſſors. If worldlings, then whether we be notoriouſly wicked, or ciuill honeſt men; thoſe that bee notoriouſly wicked he plungeth headlong into a gulfe of all wickednes and outragious rebellion againſt God, hee tempteth them to Atheiſme, and to contempt of Gods worſhip and ſeruice, to ſwearing and blaſpheming, to the prophaning of the Sabbath, and ſcorning of all religion, to murthers, adulterie, drunkenneſſe, theft and all diuelliſh practiſes, becauſe they are his ſlaues readie at his appointment to execute all thoſe workes of darknes wherein he will imploy them. For ſuch men it is but loſt labour to ſhew them how they may reſiſt Satan, ſeeing they take their whole delight in ſeruing and obeing him; and therefore before they bee taught how to reſiſt him, they muſt bee perſwaded to a deſire of comming out of his thraldome, of whom they are taken priſoners to doe his will, as it is 2. Tim. 2. 26. If they be ciuill honeſt men, he perſwadeth them that it is ſufficient if they deale iuſtly and vprightly with their neighbours both in their words and actions; and for Gods seruice consisting in the duties of pietie, which is commanded in the first table, that it is enough if they haue a good meaning, though they be vtterly ignorant of the principles of religion, and that it is onely required of Preachers and those that bee booke-learned, to be able to an render account of their faith; as for them God will haue them excused, so they leade an honest life amongst their neighbours, and be not tainted with grosse and outragious sinnes.

Q. Sect. 4. How wee may resist the former temptations.

But beloued, if we would not be subdued by Satan, let vs bee most carefull in withstanding this dangerous assault: for there is not any one temptation wherewith Satan preuaileth more, then by perswading men to content themselues with a ciuill kind of honestie, which is destitute of religion and the true feare of God. And to this end let vs consider, that ciuill honesty seuered from true pietie is but glorious iniquitie: for when we haue attained to as great a measure thereof, as possibly we can in this state of corruption, we shall come short in diuers duties of many of the Heathens, who haue excelled in these morall & ciuill vertues: & consequently when wee are at the best wee shall be but honest Infidels & good natured worldlings, if wee doe not ioyne thereunto the duties of pietie. And how goodly a shew soeuer our workes make in the eyes of men, yet are they odious in Gods sight, if they bee not done in knowledge, and grounded on Gods word and commmandement, but in ignorance and according to our owne inuentions and the fond conceit of our blind vnderstanding; if they proceed not from the loue of God, which is the onely fountaine of all acceptable obedience, but from the loue of our selues and other carnall respects; if they bee not the fruits of a liuely faith, but done in ignorance and infidelitie; for, whatsoeuer is not done in faith, is sin, and therefore cannot please God. By which wee are not to vnderstand an historicall faith, whereby we know and are assured that those workes wee doe are commanded in Gods word; but a true iustifying faith which doth applie vnto vs Christ Iesus, and all Gods mercifull promises made in him. For, that our workes may bee acceptable before God, there is required first that our persons bee acceptable vnto him, neither can any thing we doe please him, so long as wee remaine his enemies, in which state we are by nature, till we are reconciled in Christ our Mediatour, as appeareth Rom. 5. 10. Now vnlesse wee haue faith, wee cannot applie vnto vs Christ nor his merits and righteousnesse, by whom only wee are reconciled vnto God, and consequently wee remaine Gods enemies, who can doe nothing pleasing in his sight. Secondly, the best of our workes are imperfect, and mingled with many corruptions, and therefore cannot abide the examination of Gods exact iustice, till their imperfections bee couered by Christs righteousnesse, and their corruption washed away with his most precious bloud; now Christ and his merits cannot by any other meanes be applied vnto vs, but by the hand of a liuely faith. Lastly, if all our works and honest dealing be not done in zeale of Gods glory, and referred to this end that Gods name may be magnified, they are not acceptable before God: for, the cause why he would haue our light shine before men, is, that hee our heauenly father may be glorified, as it is Matth. 5. 16. and the maine end wherefore we should haue our conuersation honest amongst the Gentiles and vnbeleeuers, is, that they which speake euill of vs, as of euill doers, may, by our good workes which they shall see, glorifie God in the day of their visitation, as it is. 1. Pet. 2. 12. And therefore let not Satan deceiue vs, in perswading vs to rest in ciuill honestie; for if it bee seuered from true pietie, from sauing knowledge, from sincere loue of God, iustifying faith, and a zeale of Gods glorie, it will not be acceptable in his sight; as proceeding from the loue of our selues, and other carnall respects as namelie to obtaine praise or profit thereby.

Q. Sect. 5. How Sathan dealeth with professors of Religion.

And thus Satan dealeth with ciuill worldlings. But if those whom he incountreth bee professours of religion, then hee seeketh to perswade them, that if they outwardly performe the duties of piety, as the hearing of Gods word, the publike and priuate calling vpon Gods name, the frequent receiuing of the Sacraments; if they attaine to the knowledge and professing of religion, and can tip their tongues with godlinesse: then they may liue how they list amongst their brethren, neglecting all the duties of the second table, so they outwardly obserue the first; for though they bee barren of good workes, destitute of charitie, filled with pride, addicted to couetousnesse, oppression, and all deceitfull dealing, yet they shall bee iustified by their faith, and approoued of God for their outward profession sake. But let such men know that this is a notable stratagem of Satan, to cause vs to fall into his secret ambushments to our destruction; which if they would preuent and auoid, let them consider that pietie and charitable honestie are two such twinnes as are borne, liue, and die both together; that they are the life and soule of a Christian which cannot possibly be seuered; that it is as possible for the good tree to bring foorth bad fruite, for the fire to bee without heate, and the Sunne without light, as it is for a liuely faith to be void of good workes, true profession to bee seuered from holy practise, and iustification before God from sanctification and holinesse neſſe of life before men; that whoſoeuer braggeth of his loue to God and loueth not his brethren is a liar, and there is no truth in him, 1. Iohn 4. 20. that though they profeſſe themſelues the children of God, yet if they doe not the workes of righteouſnes as well as the workes of pietie, and loue their brethren, they are in truth the children of the diuell, as appeareth 1. Iohn 3. 10. that not the hearers of the word, but the doers thereof are iuſtified, Rom. 2. 13. that not euery one who ſaith Lord, Lord, ſhal enter into the kingdome of heauen, but they who doe the will of the father which is in heauen, Matth. 7. 21. that they deceiue themſelues who looke to bee ſaued by hearing the word, if they practiſe not that which they heare, Iames 1. 22. for in ſtead thereof they ſhall plunge themſelues into deeper condemnation: For the ſeruant that knoweth his maſters will and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes, Luk. 12. 47. And it ſhall bee more eaſie for Tyre and Sidon, Sodome and Gomorrah, who had not the Goſpell preached amongſt them, nor ſaw Chriſts miracles, then for Corazin and Bethſaida which enioyed both. Matth. 11. 21. for there as the Lord ſoweth much, hee looketh to reape much, and there as hee giueth great meanes of knowledge, there hee expecteth great fruites in practiſe, and as hee will be honoured in all, ſo eſpecially in thoſe that come nigh vnto him; as it is Leuit. 10. 3. Laſtly, that the ſentence of ſaluation and damnation ſhal not be giuen according to our words & profeſſion, but according to our deedes and the holy practiſe of the workes of mercie and Chriſtianitie which are the inſeparable fruits and vndoubted ſignes of true faith. And therefore let not Satan delude vs, by perſwading vs that pietie without honeſtie, profeſſion without practiſe, faith without workes are ſufficient for our ſaluation.

Sect. 6. How Satan dealeth with ſincere profeſſors, and with the weake Chriſtian.

But if they be ſincere profeſſors, then hee obſerueth whether they bee babes or ſtrong men in Chriſt; if hee finde them babes, then he ſeeketh to abuſe their ſimplicitie, by drawing them either into errours and hereſies, or at leaſt into blinde zeale and ſuperſtition. If he cannot ſo preuaile, by reaſon that the bright beams the of Goſpell ſhining in the preaching of the word do diſcouer his errors and lies, giuing light to thoſe that ſit in the darknes of ignorance, and in the ſhadow of death, whereby their feete are guided into the way of peace, then he laboureth to ouerwhelme them with the burthen of their ſinnes, and to plunge them into the bottomleſſe gulfe of horror and deſpaire, by aggrauating the odiouſnes of their rebellion, and huge multitudes of their outragious trangreſſions, by ſetting before them, the curſe of the law, the vengeance of God due vnto them, his infinite and exact iuſtice which muſt bee ſatisfied, and vnſpeakable and endleſſe torments prepared for the damned. But if he cannot aggrauate their ſinnes, which in truth they haue committed, and make of them ſuch an huge mountaine as may ſerue to ouerwhelme them, he addeth vnto them his own ſins, by caſting into their minds outragious blaſphemies againſt God, and ſuch horrible ſuggeſtions of impietie, as will make their haires to ſtand on end when they do but thinke of them, perſwading them that they are their owne thoughts, and therefore horrible ſinnes, whereas in truth they are but his ſuggeſtions, and therfore if wee doe repell and reiect them, they are not our ſinnes but the ſinnes of the tempter: for as it is not our fault if a theefe intice vs to ſteale, ſo wee doe not intertaine his motion, but ſhew our deteſtation of his ſinne; ſo it is not a ſin to be tempted, if we preſently doe repell the ſuggeſtion, and doe not yeeld vnto the temptation. And this may appeare by our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe, who though hee were free from ſinne, yet hee was tempted in all things like vnto vs, and ſo not free from Satans ſuggeſtions, for he was tempted to diffidence, to tempting God, yea to the worſhipping of the diuell himſelfe; but reſiſting Satans ſuggeſtions, he was not guilty of ſin. Whoſe example if we imitate, Satans blaſphemous temptations ſhall neuer bee laid to our charge; neither is it poſſible to bee free from temptations, although it bee poſſible by Gods grace to reſiſt them. But more of this hereafter.

See lib. 3. cap. 12.

Q. Sect. 7. How Satan inticeth the weake Chriſtian to commit ſinnes of ignorance.

If by this meanes he cannot ouerthrow their faith and bring them to deſpaire, then he taketh aduantage of their ſimplicitie, by inticing them to commit ſins of ignorance. For example, hee will tell them that it is lawfull, nay expedient to vſe their Chriſtian libertie, when he tempteth them to licentiouſneſſe; and to the end he may more eaſily deceiue them, he will ſet a faire gloſſe vpon foule ſinnes, and ſeeke to iuſtifie them by Gods word, apparelling vices in the habite of thoſe vertues which moſt reſemble them. He will tempt to couetouſnes, vnder ſhew of frugalitie, telling them that they who prouide not for their familie are worſe then Infidels; and to prodigalitie, vnder the pretence of liberality, alleaging that they who ſow plentifully ſhall reape plentifully. Hee will allure them to tempt God, by neglecting thoſe meanes which hee hath granted them, vnder the colour of affiance in God; and to truſt in the meanes, vnder the vizard of carefull prouidence. He will tempt them to propound this end of their good workes, that they may bee ſaued by them, becauſe God hath promiſed to reward them; or to neglect good workes, as vnneceſſarie to ſaluation, becauſe faith alone iuſtifieth. Which temptations if we would withſtand, we muſt labour after true saving knowledge that we may discerne betweene vertue and vice, truth and error, that which God hath forbiden as vnlawfull from that which he hath commanded as lawfull, to this end vsing diligently all good means which tend to this purpose, as hearing, reading, meditating, and conferring of Gods word, that so the clouds of ignorance being dispelled with the light of knowledge, wee may discouer Satans delusions and deceits. Otherwise if he deprive vs of knowledge, which is the eye of the soule, he may easily seduce vs out of the right way into the gulfe of perdition.

9. Sect. 8. How Satan dealeth with the strong Christian.

And thus Satan dealeth with weake Christians: but if he find those whom he assaulteth strong men in Christ, so that he cannot take any aduantage of their ignorance, nor ouerthrow their faith, then he laboureth to make them wound their conscience, by committing sins of presumption against their knowledge, vsing the violence of their affections, to abuse their reason and misleade their iudgement; the danger of which temptation Dauid well discerning by his owne wofull experience, doth earnestly entreate the Lord to preserue him from presumptuous sins, Psal. 19. 13. And thus hath Satan preuailed with so many of Gods owne children, that he durst therewith assault our Sauiour Christ himselfe, by offering him the whole world and the glorie thereof, if hee would fall downe and worship him; that his affections tickled with ambition, might moue him to commit this sinne for the satisfying his desires. But if he cannot thus preuaile, hee will transforme himselfe into an angell of light, and tempt them to the doing of a lesse good, that they may neglect a greater; or that which is in it selfe lawfull and commanded in its due time and place, he will tempt them to performe it vnseasonablie, when as other duties in respect of present occasion are more necessarie; and so vseth one vertue or dutie to shoulder another, and thrust it disorderly out of it owne place and standing. For example, in the hearing of the word he wil cast into their minds meditations, in their owne nature good and acceptable to God in their due time and place, to the end hee may distract their minds and make them heare without profit. In the time of prayer he will not sticke to recall to their memories some profitable instructions which they haue heard at the Sermon; to the end hee may disturbe them in that holy exercise, and keepe them from lifting vp their hearts wholly vnto God. Moreouer, in all his temptations he will alleage Scripture; but then either hee depraueth the place by adding or detracting, as when hee alleageth Scripture to our Sauiour Christ, Matth. 4. 6. It is written, hee will giue his Angels charge ouer thee, &c. and and leaueth out to keepe thee in all thy wayes, which is expressed in the place he quoteth, because that made quite against him: or if he recite them right, he will wrest the words vnto another sense, then the holy Ghost hath written them, that so he may deceiue vs and lead vs into error.

CHAP. XIX.

How Satan allureth vs vnto sin by degrees, and draweth vs from one extreame to another.

9. Sect. Satan labo reth to dra vs into ou gious sin degrees.

AND thus haue I shewed at large Satans first politicke stratagem, which hee vseth to circumuent vs by fitting his temptations according to our nature & disposition, or our state and condition. A second policie which Satan vseth to circumuent vs, is this; if he cannot at the first intice vs to fall into outragious wickednes, hee will seeke to draw vs thereunto by degrees, beginning at the least, and so bringing vs from that to a greater, till at last wee come to the highest steppe of wickednesse, whereby it commeth to passe, that as those who walke to the top of an high hil, whose ascent ariseth by little and little, come to the top without wearines, before they wel perceiued that they did ascend: so they who go forward in the waies of wickednes by degrees, do without any controlment or check of conscience climbe vp to the highest top thereof, whence Satan casteth them downe headlong into the pit of destruction. For example, if hee see a professor of religion which maketh conscience of his waies, hee doth not vsually seeke at first to draw him into hainous sinnes, vnlesse the cords of his temptations bee exceeding strong; but first he allureth him to come into the company of wicked men, by offering some pleasure or profit, or by occasion of affinitie and mariage, ioyning him if hee can with such a yokefellow as will draw him faster backe, then hee can draw her forward in the course of godlines. If hee thus farre preuaile, then hee tempteth him to winke at their sinnes which in conscience he condemneth that he may still enioy his pleasure and profit, or continue in their loue and fauour. Then in the next place he moueth him to thinke them tolerable sinnes which they commit, and nothing so outragious as others fall into; and when he hath made this progresse, then hee enticeth him to taste of sinne, which hee so sweeteneth with the sugred delights of this vaine world that hee swalloweth it downe without all loathsomnesse, and neuer tasteth the bitternesse thereof, till the heate of Gods Spirit doe cause it to worke in his conscience, so as hee is neuer at rest till he haue cast

caſt it vp againe by vnfained repentance. Otherwiſe if hee be not prevented thus by Gods Spirit, Satan will by this meanes cauſe his conſcience to ſwallow and to digeſt ſuch loathſome ſinnes, as in former times hee abhorred to ſee others commit. And as thoſe who from their infancie are accuſtomed, to take poyſons in ſmall quantities, doe enable their ſtomackes to digeſt more, till by long cuſtome and encreaſing the quantitie by degrees, it becommeth ſo familiar to their ſtomackes, that in ſtead of poyſoning them they are nouriſhed thereby, as Hiſtories doe record of ſome Indian Kings: ſo Satan enticeth vs to ſwallow downe the poyſon of ſinne at the firſt in ſuch ſmall quantitie, that our conſciences may not be ſick thereof: but having well digeſted the leaſt, he encreaſeth the meaſure till by long cuſtome hee hath made it ſo familiar to our conſciences, that thoſe ſinnes are even meate and drinke vnto vs, which at the firſt wee loathed as deadly poyſons.

Sect.2. meanes trengthen ainſt the ert tenta-

Now if we would defeat this policie of Satan, wee muſt continually watch ouer our owne hearts, and pull them backe when we ſee that they but encline vnto any wickednesſe; wee muſt not lightly eſteeme of any ſinne, nor willingly give entertainment to the leaſt wicked thought: for though in it ſelfe it be not ſo hainous, yet it will enlarge our conſciences and make roome for a greater, till at laſt we keepe open houſe, readie to receiue all wickednes which offereth it ſelfe vnto vs. And as we are carefull to auoid the ſinnes themſelues, ſo with as much diligence wee are to ſhunne the occaſions and meanes by which wee might be drawne, or enticed thereunto. But of this point more hereafter.

Sect.3. ns third cie in wing out of extreme another.

A third policie which Sathan vſeth to circumuent vs, is to bring vs from one extreame to another. For example, when wee ſee the vileneſſe of prodigalitie, ſo as wee will no longer be poſſeſſed of that vice, then will Satan make it as odious as hee can, and endeuour to bring vs into extreame hatred thereof, that ſo hee may the more eaſily draw vs into the contrarie vice of couetouſneſſe. If he cannot any longer keepe vs aſleepe in ſin, by rocking vs in the cradle of carnall ſecuritie, and ſinging vnto vs the ſweete tunes of Gods mercie and Chriſts merits, then will he labour to plunge vs into deſpaire, by ſetting before our eyes the hainouſneſſe of our ſins, and ſounding in our eares the thundring threatnings of the Law. If hee cannot any longer nuzzle vs in ſuperſtition, and cauſe vs to place all our Religion in Ceremonies, and in reſtraining our ſelues of the vſe of things indifferent, hee will draw vs to the other extreame by mouing vs to thinke all ceremonies vnlawfull, and to practiſe all licentiouſneſſe vnder pretence of Chriſtian libertie. If he can no longer perſwade vs to ſeeke for juſtification by the workes of the Law to the end wee may not relie on Chriſts merits and righteouſneſſe, he will bring vs into vtter diſlike of this doctrine, by ſhewing vs the abſurdities thereof, that hee may draw vs to the other extreame, namely, to neglect good workes, as altogether vnneceſſary to ſalvation becauſe faith alone juſtifieth. If he cannot hide out of our ſight the ſhining graces of Gods Spirit, by caſting before our eyes the cloud of our ſinnes and corruptions, then he will cauſe vs to looke on them thorow the ſpectacles of ſelfe-loue and affection, to the end wee may imagine them much greater then in truth they are, and ſo be puffed vp in pride, and too ſecurely reſt in thoſe gifts we haue, not ſeeking for increaſe. If he cannot perſwade vs to diſſidence & diſtruſt, hee will moue vs to tempt God vpon no neceſſary occaſion: and thus he dealt with our Sauiour Chriſt, for firſt hee tempted him to diſtruſt Gods prouidence, and to prouide for himſelfe by turning ſtones into bread; but when he could not ſo preuaile, he moued him to make an vnneceſſary experiment of his prouidence and care, by caſting himſelfe downe head-long from the pinacle of the Temple, whereas there were ordinary meanes whereby hee might deſcend. Now the end why Satan vſeth this policie, is more violently to caſt vs into one extreame of ſinne, when with full ſwinge of will we doe auoid the other: as alſo to make vs beleeve that the latter temptation is the motion of Gods Spirit, ſeeing it is cleane contrary to the former ſuggeſtion of Satan, whereas in truth they are but vnlike children of the ſame father.

Q. Sect.4. That wee are to auoid the former temptation by keeping vs in the golden mean.

The danger of which temptations if wee would auoid, we muſt keepe vs in the golden meane, auoiding both extremes; and becauſe we are ignorant and vnskilfull in trauelling the ſtrait path which leadeth to Gods kingdome, and euery houre readie to take the bywayes of errour which leade to deſtruction, let vs vſe the Word of God for our guide: and as the Iſraelites trauelling towards the land of promiſe, were directed by the cloud and pillar of fire, going forward when that went before them, and pitching their tents where that ſtayed; ſo let vs conſtantly and boldly trauell in our Chriſtian pilgrimage ſo long as we have the Word of God for our direction, not ſtaying where it biddeth goe, nor going when it ſtayeth. Let this be the touchſtone to diſcerne the golden truth from the droſſie extreames on either ſide; let it be the line to leade vs out of this labyrinth of errours; let it be the ſtarre of Bethlehem to conduct vs in our tedious journey vnto the place where our Sauiour Chriſt is, not now lying in the armes of his mother, but ſitting at the right hand of his Father in all glorie, power and maieſtie. And becauſe we are vnskilfull Pilots in ſayling the dangerous Sea of this tempestuous World, readie to fall vpon the rockes while we auoid the sands; let Gods Word be our Card and Compasse, to direct vs to the holy Land: otherwise Satan will raise against vs such stormie tempests, and contrary blasts of temptations, that our soules will suffer shipwrack vpon the rockes of sinne, and bee drowned in a Sea of destruction.

CHAP. XX.

Of fiue other stratagems which Sathan vseth.

¶. Sect. 1. How Satan moueth the weake Christian to good duties out of ill causes and grounds, and first in respect of things indifferent.

THE fourth policie which Sathan vseth, is to ouerrule weake Christians in the grounds and causes of all their actions. And if hee cannot draw them by the strength of his tentations to doe those things which are simply euill, hee will indeuour in the next place to make them to do things indifferent and lawfull, yea, such things as are simply good, religious and honest, out of euill causes and wicked grounds, as because hee doth suggest them, and not because God requireth them, and by his causelesse terrors and superstitious feares presseth the doing of them, and not in obedience to God because he commandeth them in his Word, and stirreth them vp to the doing of them by the inward motions of his Spirit. And first in things indifferent, as eating, drinking, sleeping, walking, working and the like, he laboureth to take away their Christian liberty in the vse of them, by pressing the doing or not doing of them by his suggestions and peremptorie commands, which hee often backeth with superstitious feares of some euill that shall befall them, if they doe not obey him in doing or not doing that hee suggesteth, as namely, that they shall be suddenly ouertaken with such and such a iudgement, be strucken with madnesse or present death, or take away aliue, if they either will doe, or not doe such a thing in such a manner, or at such a time. Though Christ hauing purchased their libertie in all those things indifferent, hath left them free vnto euery Christian to doe or not to doe, to vse or not to vse them, as in their discretion they thinke fit, all circumstances of persons, time and place being duly considered. The which libertie if they betray through superstitious feares and want of faith, it is a wonder to see how Sathan tyrannizeth ouer them, for he will interpose in all their actions, and nothing can they doe, but hee will seeke to raigne ouer and rule them in it to their perdition. They must not goe out of doores to doe any businesse, or to visit a friend, but when he permitteth; and when hee moueth them to it, they must doe these things though there be no reason for it. They must not put on their clothes, nor dresse themselues but in that manner as hee suggesteth; they must speake when hee will, and in what manner, and at his pleasure they must be silent. They must not eate their meate but when hee permitteth, and then what hee will and not that which best pleaseth their owne appetite; yea, the tentation often commeth between the bit and the lip, and when they are readie to put the meate into their mouth, they must pull it backe, and lay it by, or if not, it will choke them or some other mischiefe shall befall them. With such tentations as these I haue knowne some so dyeted, or rather famished, that they haue languished in their health and strength, pined in their bodies, and neere vnto perishing. Yea when hee hath brought them throughly to beat his direction, he wil command and countermand, enjoyne the doing or not doing of an action, and presently after the cleane contrary, and both of them vnder some fearefull penaltie, that the poore Christian is almost distracted in his wits, not knowing what to doe, nor which way to turne him to find any peace and rest from these tentations. Now the best way to defeat this policie is not to hearken to Satans suggestions for our directions, but acquainting our selues with the Scriptures, to haue our warrant for all our actions out of the Word of God, and to doe them all in obedience to Gods commandement, not caring what Sathan suggesteth to the contrarie, so we haue Gods reuealed wil for our warrant. And so wee shall not need to feare any of those euils which Sathan threatneth, seeing as long as we walke in Gods wayes, wee are vnder his protection, so as Sathan and all the power of Hell shall not be able to doe vs any hurt; whereas contrariwise wee are in great danger of those euils we feare, if wee suffer our selues to be ruled by Satans suggestions, seeing if God justly giue vs ouer to the tempter, he will reward his seruants with no better wages then present misery and endlesse destruction. Secondly, wee must labour to informe our selues rightly in our Christian libertie, and when we know it, stand fast in it, as the Apostle exhorteth. And seeing all things indifferent are vnder our power, and all the creatures good vnto vs, as if they be sanctified by the Word and Prayer, let vs retaine our libertie in the vse of these things, doing or not doing what we thinke good, as in Christian prudence wee iudge fit, time, and place, and persons being duly considered, and not that which Satan suggesteth vpon no ground of reason or warrant of the Word. Lastly, wee must take speciall care that we neither doe nor omit any thing, the rather because Sathan suggesteth it, for so we shall be vnder his rule, and in our actions obey him and not God. Yea, if in Christian stian prudence wee see no inconuenience in it, we must to preserue our Christian liberty, doe the contrary. As when he suggesteth a necessity of doing this or that which in it self is free and indifferent, and that vnder the feare of such a penaltie; wee are the rather not to doe it, to shew that wee neglect his commands, and despise his threats.

Q. Sect. 2. How Sathan moueth the Christian to performe religious duties because hee suggesteth them.

And thus Sathan craftily circumuenteth the weake Christian in things indifferent; But yet like an old wily Serpent, hee much more secretly and subtilly glideth and insinuateth himselfe into their spirituall actions and religious duties. And when hee cannot like a Deuill indeed hinder and discourage them from doing them altogether, then hee will transforme himselfe into an Angell of Light, and seeme to spurre on their deuotion, that so they may doe them out of an ill ground, not because God commandeth them, but because he suggesteth them, backing his motions with seruile threats and superstitious feares. Thus when he seeth that they incline to Prayer, hee will binde them to it by seruile necessitie and superstitious feare, vrging them to pray as much and often as hee suggesteth, and in conclusion to neglect all duties of their generall & particular callings and doe nothing else but pray, because the Apostle requireth vs to pray continually; whereas the Christian is bound to performe all religious and ciuill duties in their season, not suffering one to thrust out another, and is enioyned by the Apostle to pray not at all times, but vpon euery fit occasion and good opportunitie. So if they be addicted to the hearing of the Word, then hee will moue them to goe as often as hee suggesteth, and as if they were all eare, to doe nothing but heare, omitting in the meane time all duties of their particular callings, and vtterly to neglect their charge and family. And this he doth that he may cloy and tire them with these duties, and causing them to surfet with too much fulnesse, may hereby bring them at last to an vtter loathing of them. Secondly, that hee may moue them to performe religious duties disorderly and vnseasonably, causing them so wholly to pitch vpon one, as that being taken vp with it, they may be drawne to neglect all others. Thirdly, hereby hee moueth them in the duties of Gods worship to doe himselfe seruice, when as they are done at his motion, and suggestion, and not because God hath commanded them. Lastly, hee hereby inureth & accustometh them to be at his command, by yeelding vnto, and obeying him in things lawfull, because vpon the same groūd he may moue them to desist from doing of them when he countermandeth, and to doe these things that are vnlawfull, and so draweth them on by these sweete meates to swallow poyson. But seeing wee are oftentimes and most commonly stirred vp and excited to those religious duties by the good motions of Gods Spirit, how may wee discerne these from the suggestions of Sathan? I answere that wee may doe it by these signes and differences. First, the suggestions of the Deuill doe presse vs to these duties by a certaine impetuous necessitie, when as there is no reason of them grounded vpon Gods Word, all circumstances being duly considered. Secondly, when as the performance of these duties is disordered and vnseasonable in respect of circumstances, and vsed to the shouldring and thrusting out of other duties, which in respect of present occasions are more seasonable and necessary, whereas when wee are moued vnto them by Gods Spirit, one dutie is a helpe and furtherance to another. Lastly, when as they presse vpon vs ceremoniall circumstances, as the time, place and bodily gestures, as necessarie and essentiall to the seruice in hand, which are in their owne nature indifferent; whereas the Spirit of God leaueth vs free to vse, or not vse them, as in Christian wisdome we find them more or lesse conuenient to fitvs the better for the religious duties which are to be performed. Now when as we haue thus discouered them, the best meanes to defeate these pollities of the deuill, are first not to yeeld to these suggestions, (though they moue vs to holy duties) vpon the suddaine before wee haue waighed and examined them by the word, and considered what ground and warrant they haue out of the Scripture, and not to yeeld obedience vnto them, because they are suggested into our minds, but because we find that God hath commanded them. Secondly, wee must consider not only whether they be in themselues good, but also whether they be now seasonable, and whether the performance of them will not disturbe our orderly proceeding in the wayes of godlinesse, and disable vs from performance of some other holy duties which in our Christiā prudence, (waighing all occasions and circumstances,) wee find for the present more necessarie and seasonable; and if wee doe, then not to giue place vnto them. The last is that we diligently study the holy Scriptures, which will teach vs, not only what God requireth as good, but also how and when it is to bee done, and in what order and manner vpon due consideration of all circumstances.

1 Thess. 5. 17.

Q. Sect. 3. How Satan moueth vs to propound bad ends to good actions.

A fifth policie which Satan vseth to entrap vs in his secret abushments, is this: When by the violence of his temptations hee cannot altogether restraine vs from doing that which is good: then he will tempt vs to doe good actions to bad ends. In giuing of almes, he will moue men to propound this end, that they may bee seene of men; in doing of good workes, hee will tempt them to forget Gods glorie, and to set before them as their maine end of all their good actions, the meriting of Heauen; and if men will needs appeare vertuous and religious, hee will entice them to vse outward vertues as a cloake to hide their inward vices, and Religion as a faire vizard to couer their foule impietie. And thus hée tempteth men to vse all outward shewes of humilitie, to the end they may the better disguise their hidden pride and ambition, as we may see in the example of Absolon; and all complements of courtesie and loue, as a maske to hide their enuie and malice. And thus hee allureth men to professe Religion, heare Sermons, and vse glorious speeches, that they may (seeming religious and men of good consciences) haue their shops the better accustomed, and their words credited, and so haue the fitter opportunitie of deceiuing them, who for their profession sake repose trust in them.

Q. Sect. 4. How Satan moueth vs to vse euil means for the effecting good ends.

A sixt policie whereby hee seeketh to surprise vs, is by tempting men to vse wicked meanes for the accomplishing of good ends, and to doe euil that good may come thereof; and thus hee tempted Saul to transgresse Gods commandement in reseruing the fat of the cattle, to the end he might sacrifice therewith vnto the Lord; and Isaac to say that Rebecca was his sister to saue his life: and Galath. 2. Peter to vse dissimulation that hee might not offend the Iewes. And thus he tempteth men to tell officious and profitable lies for the auoiding of greater euils; hee moueth seruants to giue their masters goods to the poore without their priuitie or liking, and so to commit theft that they may giue almes; hee tempteth Nonresidents to possesse many liuings that they may keepe good hospitalitie, and so starue the soule to feed the bodie; and Citizens to vse all fraud and deceit that they may prouide for their family. Which policies of Satan are exceeding dangerous; for hardly can wee escape them both, namely, doing good things to bad ends, or vsing of euill meanes for the atchieuing of good purposes. But the more difficult the thing is, the greater must be our care; the more secret and dangerous Satans ambushments are, the more diligence and watchfulnesse must wee vse in auoiding them. In all our actions therefore let vs be carefull to propound vnto our selues good ends, and vse good meanes for the accomplishing of our honest and godly purposes. For if wee neglect the first, wee shall bewray our hypocrisie and impietie, if the latter we shall pollute a faire work with filthy tooles, and shew our diffidence in God in not daring to vse those godly and honest meanes which hee hath commanded and commended vnto vs, vnlesse wee bolster and prop them vp by our own foolish inuentions, and wicked practices. And whensoeuer wee are moued to propound euill ends vnto our good actions, or to vse euill meanes for the accomplishing of good ends, let vs assure our selues that they are not the motions of Gods Spirit, but the suggestions of Sathan, at least so farre forth as we are tempted to the euill of the end or meanes; and therefore wee are to purge the wheate from the chaffe, the pure gold from the drosse, and to doe the workes of God for those ends, and by those meanes, which hee hath appointed.

Q. Sect. 5. How Satan tempteth vs to be proud of our vertues.

A seuenth policie which Satan vseth, is to take aduantage of our vertues to plunge vs head-long into vice; for example, when wee haue mortified our sinnes, and are plentifull in all good works, he taketh occasion thereby to puffe vs vp with pride, and a Pharisaicall conceit that we are not as other men are; yea if we be so humble that hee cannot make vs proud of any thing else, he will labour to make vs proud of our humilitie. Notable is the saying of * Augustine to this purpose, when (saith he) a man in the doing of some good worke shall rejoyce that hee hath also hercin subdued pride: If euen out of this rejoycing he lifteth vp the head & saith: Behold I liue, wherefore then doest thou triumph? Yea therefore I liue because thou triumphest perhaps because thou triumphest before the time, i. before being perfectly glorified, thou art freed from all corruption. Let vs not therefore be wretchlesse and secure, but haue an eye to our hearts, euen in our good actions: and when wee entertaine any excellent vertue, let vs take heed lest pride thrust in with it, seeing most commonly it attendeth vpon vertue, and taketh vp his standing where it lodgeth, for we are not quite at libertie, and out of the danger of Satans thraldome, so long as pride like a Iaylour attendeth on vs.

Aug. de nat. & gratia, cap. 31. T. 7. Col. 745. d.

Q. Sect. 6. How Satan moueth the Christian to iudge of the reallity of his spirituall estate by outward accidents.

The eighth policie which Sathan vseth to shake the faith of weake Christians, and to discourage them from proceeding in the wayes of Godlinesse, is to perswade them to iudge of their spirituall estate according to outward accidents, and not the reallitie and trnth of it; as it is hindred in its functions and operations, and not as it is in its faculties and habits. For when their spirituall graces are hindred by some outward or corporall cause from shewing themselues in their full strength by their actions and operations; from hence hee inferreth that they are decayed in them, and consequently that they were not true graces, which are like the shining light, that shineth more and more vnto the perfect day: or like the graine of Mustard seed which from a small seed groweth vnto a great tree; or else if they were true, yet they are likely to be quite lost; seeing that which is corruptible and subject to perishing and loosing in the parts, may be also in the whole. Thus hee moueth them to

judge of their graces and ſpirituall eſtate, in the time of tentation, when God ſuffereth Satan to ſift and winnow them as wheat, yea to buffet and beate them, euen blacke and blew, and in the time of ſpirituall diſcretions, when God either for the correcting of their ſinnes, or for the triall of their graces, bearing them to themſelues, and the malice of their ſpirituall enemies (in outward appearance) when they are aſſaulted by them. But with as great reaſon might wee be perſwaded to judge of the habituall ſtrength of our bodies, when their food being withheld from them, they are almoſt pined with hunger, or when they are wearied with toyleſome labour, or readie to faint after ſome long and ſharpe fight againſt a mightie enemie. For as the vigour of our bodily ſtrength is renewed by reſt and food, and ſo ſheweth that the habit was not loſt or decayed, but only the operation hindred; ſo will alſo the vertue of our ſpirituall graces againe appeare, when the conflict of tentations is ended, and the bright beames of Gods grace and fauour doe ſhine in our hearts in their wonted ſtrength. As we ſee in the example of Iob, Dauid, Ieremy, and Peter, whoſe graces made ſmall ſhew in their deſertions and tentations, but appeared in their wonted beautie and brightneſſe, when thoſe cloudes and ſtormes were ouer-blowne. Thus he moueth thoſe that are aged to judge of their ſpirituall ſtate, and the ſtrength of their ſauing graces, by their outward performances of religious duties: and becauſe they find that they are not able ſo well to remember what they haue heard as they were wont, nor ſo feruent in their prayers, nor ſo hote in their zeale and deuotion as in time paſt, therefore they are decayed in their ſpirituall graces, and growne remiſſe and lukewarme in all holy duties. Whereas their complaining of theſe defects and grieuing for them, doth plainly ſhew that there is no decay of their inward graces, but only of corporall and naturall abilities by which they are exerciſed. For the ſoule working by the body and ſpirits, as by its organs and inſtruments, when theſe are decayed by age or other externall accidents, it is not able to produce its effects by them in that excellencie and perfection, as when they were in their full vertue and vigour. Euen as the moſt skilfull workmen cannot make ſuch perfect worke when they haue bad tooles as when they haue good, although their art and skill may be greater then it was before. And hence it is that they cannot remember Sermons ſo well now as in the time of their youth, becauſe there is a decay in their naturall abilities, and their memory weakened by age and the drineſſe of their braines, though it may abound with vnnaturall humiditie. And hereof it is that the feruour of their zeale and deuotion ſeemeth abated, becauſe there is an abatement of naturall heate and a decay in the animall and vitall ſpirits, which are the inſtruments whereby it is exerciſed, whence neceſſarily proceedeth dulneſſe and lumpiſhneſſe in holy duties, though the iudgement more highly prizeth them, the will more ſtrongly imbraceth them, and the heart more intirely affecteth and loueth them then euer they did in the time of youth. Finally, he thus perſwadeth thoſe that are oppreſſed with melancholy, that they are ſuch in reſpect of their ſpirituall eſtate, as they find and feele themſelues being afflicted with that turbulent and pernitious humour. As namely that they are froward, full of feares, and diſcontents, fickle and vnconſtant, vnnaturall in their affections towards husband, wife, parents, children, ſlothfull and auerſe to all holy duties, vnſatisfied in their doubts, ſtubborne in their wils, and deſperate in all their reſolutions and concluſions, and conſequently that they are rather limbes of the Deuill whom they reſemble in their corruptions, then the children of God, and ſuch as are deſtitute of all vertue and goodneſſe, and out of the ſtate of grace and ſaluation. Whereas theſe corruptions (if their caſe be throughly vnderſtood and conſidered) are not to be imputed to their naturall diſpoſition, and much leſſe to their ſpirituall condition, (for euen thoſe of the beſt and moſt tender natures, and many of Gods children who are indued with a great meaſure of grace and ſanctification, are often thus affected and afflicted, when they are oppreſſed with melancholy) but rather to the exceſſe of a naturall or rather vnnaturall humour, vpon which the Deuill taketh occaſion to abuſe and delude them with his ſubtill and malitious tentations. The which may hereby manifeſtly appeare in that they neuer felt ſuch corruptions of nature, defects in grace, nor awkerneſſe and vntowardneſſe to all Chriſtian duties before they were oppreſſed with this humour, nor ſhall afterwards feele and be vexed with them, when as by profitable phyſicke, wholſome diet, ſweet aire, good company and lawfull recreations they are purged and vnburthened of it, as I my ſelfe haue found by manifold expeerience. So that they might by as good reaſon judge of their naturall complexion when they are deepe in the diſeaſe of the yellow, or black jaundize; hauing their body ouer-ſpread and their bloud infected and tainted with choler and melancholy; or of their naturall temperature or ſpirituall abilities to doe God ſeruice, when their braine is diſtempered, and their body weakned and inflamed with a raging fit of a burning feuer; as when they are diſtempered and almoſt diſtraughted with this helliſh humour of melancholy; seeing this is a disease which no lesse disturbeth and disableth both minde and bodie then the jaundize or feauer. And therefore as in these bodily sicknesses we are readie to excuse our selues and others, by imputing our weaknesses and distempers, not to our selues, but to the disease; so are wee to doe when we feele our selues oppressed with this humour, not ascribing our disabilities and corruptions to our selues in respect of our spirituall estates, but to the malignitie of our disease, and to say of this preualent and ouer-swaying melancholy, as the Apostle Paul did of his sinning sinne and inbred corruption; It is no more I that doe it, but this pernicious humour that dwelleth in me.

Rom.7.17.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the manner of Satans fight.

¶. Sect. 1. That Satan obserueth no complements of true valour.

AND so much concerning Sathans stratagems and warlike policies. Now let vs consider of the manner of his fight. In which we are first to obserue that it is most cruell and cowardly, for hee obserueth no complements of true valour, but then most violently assaulteth vs when wee are least prouided; if he cannot preuaile when we are waking, he will set vpon vs while we are sleeping; if hee cannot hurt vs when wee are readie in the field armed with the compleat armour of a Christian, the girdle of veritie, the breastplate of righteousnesse, the shield of faith, the sword of the spirit, &c. he will watch a time when he can spie vs vnarmed, and then he will assaile vs; if he cannot ouercome vs in the time of prosperitie, when God hath hedged vs in with his blessings; hee will watch till wee be cast downe with some aduersitie, and then hee will lay load on vs whilest we are vnder foot; and whereas all our hope of victory is in the Lords assistance, he will perswade vs to yeeld vnto him, for as much as the Lord is become our enemie. Now if we would resist Satan, wee must so prepare our selues that he doe not hurt vs by this his dastardly fight. Seeing therefore he vseth to set vpon vs on all aduantages, we are alwayes to be so prouided as that wee giue him no aduantage. Being awake, wee are alwayes to stand vpon our guard, readie armed with the graces of Gods Spirit; being to sleepe, we are to desire the Lord to watch ouer vs, and to command his Angels to pitch their tents about vs, that so wee may be defended from Satans fury. Seeing he is ready to assault vs when he seeth vs disarmed, wee are alwayes to keepe the coat-armour of a Christian buckled vnto vs. Lastly, seeing in the time of prosperitie he is readie to puffe vs vp with pride, and in the time of aduersitie to plunge vs into despaire, let vs humble our selues when God exalts vs, by thinking of our vnworthinesse to receiue the least of Gods mercies, and comfort our selues in the time of our affliction, by remembring that it is the portion of all that will liue godly in Christ Iesus, and that *whosoeuer suffer with Christ, shall also raigne with him, 2.Tim.*3.12. and 2.12.

Iob 1.10.

*2.Tim.*3.12. and 2.12.

¶. Sect.2. Satan assaulteth vs when we are most secure.

The second thing to bee obserued in his manner of fight, is, that hee setteth vpon vs when we are most secure, and then soundeth the alarum to battaile, when we most flatter our selues with hope of peace; and that not drowsily and faintly, but with all celeritie and speed, whereby hee ouercommeth oftentimes, or at least foileth vs, before wee can arme or prepare our selues to make any resistance. And thus hee assaulted our first parents in Paradise, when they securely promised vnto themselues the continuance and increase of their happinesse; and Dauid also after all his trouble when hee was wretchlesse and idle, sleeping in the day, and after walking on his house top, letting his eyes wander after pleasures. If therefore wee would withstand Satan, let vs shake off all drowsie and carnall securitie, and continually watch, standing on our guard to resist his encounters whensoeuer hee setteth vpon vs: and as in calme weather the carefull Mariner prouideth all things against a tempest, and the valiant souldier doth arme and furnish himselfe with all necessaries before the assault; so when Sathan seemeth to offer vs a time of truce, let vs therein prepare our selues more strongly against the day of battaile; for when this raging Lion seemeth to sleepe as though he did not regard vs, then if through wretchlesnesse wee giue him the least aduantage, he will suddenly runne vpon vs and deuoure vs, if hee get vs within his cruell pawes.

¶. Sect.3. Satan neuer weary in assaulting vs.

1.Pet.5.8. Iob 1.7.

The third thing to be obserued, is his indefatigable paines in tempting and assaulting vs, for hee neuer taketh rest, but still goeth about like a roring Lion seeking whom hee may deuoure; and this is euident by his owne confession, Iob 1.7. where he professeth that he had beene compassing the earth to and fro, and walked from place to place. So that hee omitteth no paine nor labour in seeking our destruction. And though hee ouercome vs not at the first, but retire foiled, yet hee will gather his forces againe and againe, and incessantly set vpon vs. And therefore if we would obtaine victory, wee must not thinke much of our labour, but vse all paines, diligence and watchfulnesse in repelling his assaults. And seeing Satan is so vigilant and painfull in seeking our destruction, let vs thinke no paines too great in seeking our preseruation; and considering that that Sathan after one, or two, or twentie foiles is as ready to set vpon vs again as at the first, let vs neuer faint, but like valiant souldiers alwayes stand readie in the field to endure his encounters. But alas, the practice of most men is farre otherwise, for they watch and drudge night and day to attaine vnto riches and preferments, and in the meane time little regard this dangerous foe, but to the end they may attaine vnto their worldly desires, they entangle themselues in the snares which hee hath laid to intrap them to their vtter destruction.

The fourth thing to be obserued in Satans fight, is his often changing of his temptations, and taking as it were into his hand another weapon, when hee perceiueth the first woundeth not. For example, he will tempt vs to the contempt of Gods Word, if hee cannot so preuaile, hee will entice vs at least to neglect it; and if thus hee cannot hurt vs, he will, if hee can, choake the seed of Gods Word with the thornie cares of the World, and so make it vnfruitfull. He will moue vs to thinke that Christ was no Sauiour; if he cannot perswade vs to this, then he will tell vs hee is not our Sauiour. Yea so shameleſse is this tempter, that he will now tempt vs to to beleeue one lie of his coyning; and presently after when he seeth wee giue no credit to that, hee will tell vs the cleane contrary. For example, hee will sometimes tell vs that we are such grieuous sinners that there is no way but damnation: and if we withstand this assault, hee will soone after perswade vs to an ouer-weening conceit of our owne excellencie, and to a Pharisaicall opinion that we are not as other men are. Sometimes he will moue vs to doubt of our election, and if hee cannot thus preuaile, hee will presently perswade vs to thinke our election so sure, that though we follow our owne lusts, and giue our selues ouer to all outragious wickednesse, yet in the end wee shall be saued. In a word, this wicked Protheus will transforme himself into a thousand diuers shapes, and in a short space will varie many wayes his temptations, that if hee cannot preuaile by one meanes, he may ouercome vs by another. And therefore it behoueth vs, if wee will withstand him, to arme our selues, not on one side alone, nor to be prepared against two or three assaults of our spirituall enemie, but we must be readie to answere all obiections, and not so wholly encline to one side and to the defending of one part, as that in the meane time wee leaue the other naked to be wounded with Satans blowes. And to the end wee may the rather bee encouraged to stand constantly in our defence, wee are to know, that when Satan doth so often shift his temptations, and in a short distance of time doth seeke to bring vs into quite contrary vices, it is a manifest signe that hee doth not yet preuaile. For as no enemie is so foolish as will after that hee hath made one sufficient breach for entry, or forced one gate of the Citie, goe from that to another, but rather enter where the way is made; so Satan laying siege to our soules, would not seeke to make a new battery with his temptations, if the former had made way for him to enter and surprize vs; he would not tempt vs to pride and presumption, if he had ouercome our faith and plunged vs into despaire; he would neuer transforme himself into an Angell of light, if hee could haue ouercome vs in his owne likenesse; hee would neuer tell vs of Gods mercie, if hee had alreadie ouerwhelmed vs with the sight of our sinnes, and consideration of his iustice; not yet of Gods iustice, if hee could keepe vs in carnall securitie, by setting before vs his mercie: but that way whereby he perceiues that he any whit preuailes, he will follow and continue earnest in the same pursuite, till he perceiue he cannot catch vs. As therefore when the fit of the Ague shifteth from time to time, it is a good signe that our nature waxing strong doth preuaile against the disease; so when Satans temptations in a short time often change, and that from one contrarie to another, it is a signe that Gods Spirit being strong in vs, doth resist Sathan and putteth him to these shifts, whereas he would hold on a constant course if hee preuailed against vs.

The oft changing of Satans temptations a probable signe that he doth not preuaile.

9. Sect. 4. That Satan changeth his temptations for his better aduantage.

The fift thing to be obserued in the manner of Sathans fight, is, that sometimes hee setteth vpon vs immediatly in his owne person, and sometimes mediately, vsing for his instruments the world and the flesh. Of the first wee haue an example, 1. Chron. 21. 1. where it is said that Satan prouoked Dauid to number Israel. So the Euangelist sheweth that the Deuill did put in the heart of Iudas Iscariot to betray Christ. And the Apostle Peter telleth Ananias that Satan had filled his heart with his suggestions that he should lie vnto the Holy Ghost. And thus also hee tempted our Sauiour Christ immediatly fortie dayes together in the Wilderneſse, Mat. 4. Now when hee thus fighteth against vs in his own person, he giueth the assault either in his owne likeneſse, or else transformeth himselfe into an Angell of light. When hee encountreth vs in his owne likeneſse, and like a Deuill indeed, then he doth as it were proclaime open warres, tempting vs not only to those sinnes, which hauing some appearance of good in them, our corrupt conscience doth approue of, or at least can without any great terror winke at, but also to all outragious wickednesse and hellish impietie, which euen a ciuill Worldling would abhorre to thinke of; namely, to Atheisme, Idolatry, contempt of all Religion, blasphemies against God, perjurie, sacriledge, persecuting 9. Sect. 5. That Satan assaulteth vs sometime himselfe, and sometime by his instruments. Iohn 13. 2.

Acts 5. 3.

perſecuting the knowne truth, hereſie, murther, adulterie, and ſuch like: all which at the firſt ſight may eaſily bee diſcerned to bee the ſuggeſtions of Satan, becauſe this helliſh brood doe reſemble their wicked father in their very countenance and outward appearance. And therefore Sathan who ſubdueth more with the Serpents wiles then with the Lions force, doth ſeldome vſe this fight againſt any which haue but the ciuill reſtraining grace of God, vnleſſe hee intice them thereunto by degrees (as before I haue ſhewed) or except hee finde them exceeding ignorant, to the end hee may make them beleeue that his ſuggeſtions are their owne thoughts; but hee practiſeth theſe temptations, for the moſt part, againſt thoſe who haue euen ſold themſelues to worke wickedneſſe, hauing their hearts hardned and conſciences ſeared with their cuſtomable ſinning.

9. Sect. 6. How Satan transformeth himſelfe into an angell of light.

And therefore moſt commonly hee transformeth himſelfe into an Angell of light, tempting vs to ſinne by vſing friendly perſwaſions, and making liberall offers of pleaſure, profit or preferment, or elſe miniſing thoſe ſins to which hee tempteth vs as though they were nothing, or masking them vnder the vizard of vertue. Neither doth he often moue vs to commit thoſe ſinnes which nature reſtrained by Gods common grace, or ſanctified by his Spirit) doth abhorre and tremble to think of; vnleſſe it be either to vex Gods children with ſuch ſuggeſtions, rather then for any hope of ouercomming them; or elſe that whileſt their minds are wholly intent in withſtanding his outward violence, he may more cunningly intrap them in his ſecret ambuſhments, which they regard not. But otherwiſe hee vſually tempts vs to commit ſuch ſinnes, as through our corruption we are prone vnto, as not thinking them to be ſinnes, or but ſmall, or rather neuer entring into any conſideration of them at all: as namely, carnall ſecuritie, hardneſſe of heart, infidelitie, impenitencie, neglect of Gods Word, prophaning of his Sabbaths, couetouſneſſe, ambition, pride, neglect of the generall duties of Chriſtianitie and ſpeciall duties of our callings. All which are not much leſſe hainous in the ſight of the Lord then the other groſſe outward ſinnes, and much more dangerous vnto vs, as being Satans ſecret ſnares which hee layeth to entrap vs at vnawares; in which when we are caught we are content to lie bound, becauſe they doe not ſo much pinch and torment the the conſcience as the other outward ſinnes, being not ſeene, or not regarded. As therefore thoſe diſeaſes which by diſturbing the braine doe take away all ſenſe of paine, are of all others moſt deſperate, namely, the dead palſie, the falling ſickneſſe, and ſleepie lethargie, and in other diſeaſes the patient is moſt dangerouſly ſick when he hath no feeling thereof; ſo there is no ſickneſſe of the ſoule ſo deſperate and dangerous, as thoſe that afflict not our conſciences with any ſenſe of paine; to wit, carnall ſecuritie, hardneſſe of heart, and the reſt aboue named.

9. Sect. 7. That Satan is moſt to be feared when hee moſt flattereth.

And thus haue I ſhewed Satans diſguiſed and ſubtill manner of fight, wherein like a Pirate he hangeth out flags of truce, to ſignifie peace and friendſhip, till hee haue gotten vs within his reach and command: and then he grapleth with vs, ranſacketh vs of all Gods graces, & caſteth vs ouer boord into the ſea of deſtructiõ. And therfore it behoueth vs with no leſſe care to withſtand Sathan when he fawneth, then when he frowneth; when he fighteth by ambuſhment, then when hee aſſaulteth vs by open violence; when he offereth to ſtab vs to the heart, then when hee doth but (as it were) prick a veine, letting vs bloud to death without ſenſe of paine; when hee tempteth vs to outragious crimes, then when he enticeth vs to ſecret and hidden ſinnes; when hee allureth vs like a friend to commit ſinne, by offering pleaſure, riches, or honours, then when like an enemie, a roring Lion, or cruell dragon he rangeth about and rageth againſt vs. For he propoundeth things delightfull to bring vs to griefe and miſerie, he fawneth on vs that he may bemire vs, and killeth while he embraceth vs. Neither doth man know his time, but as the fiſhes which are taken in an euill net, and as the birds which are caught in the ſnare, ſo are the children of men ſnared in the euill time, when it falleth vpon them ſuddenly, as it is Eccleſ. 9. 12. Yea, ſeeing this fight is farre more dangerous, becauſe he couereth his hooke with an alluring baite; and thoſe ſnares of ſinne more pernitious which lie hidden, then thoſe which lie in open view; ſeeing we are more eaſily tempted to thoſe ſinnes which are ſecret and diſguiſed in the habit of vertue, then vnto thoſe groſſe ſinnes which haue their names as it were branded in their foreheads; ſeeing alſo wee can more hardly repent of them, both becauſe they doe not appeare ſo horrible and grieuous vnto vs, as the other open and outward ſinnes, and alſo becauſe they worke in vs no ſhame after wee entertaine and liue in them, neither can any of our Chriſtian brethren admoniſh or rebuke vs for them, they being ſecret and vnknowne: therefore is Satan made more audacious to tempt vs, and wee more bold to admit of his temptation; and after we are fallen we lack meanes to raiſe vs vp againe by vnfained repentance, for our ſelues doe approue our ſins, and our brethren know them not: which Bernard well diſcerning, vttereth this ſpeech fit for this purpoſe: I am more afraid (ſaith he) of my ſecret, then of my open ſinnes; for if I ſinne ſecretly there is no man to reproue me; and where reprehenſion is not feared, there the tempter hath moſt free acceſſe and the ſin is is entertained with pleasing delight. In a word, seeing we are more easily drawne into these sinnes; and after wee are enthralled with them, make no haste to get out of our captiuitie; therefore let vs bee much more wary and heedfull in discouering and auoiding these hidden snares and secret sinnes, into which wee doe most commonly fall vnwittingly, and being fallen doe most willingly continue in them.

§. Sect. 8. How Satan assaulteth vs by his instruments and the world and the flesh.

Secondly, Sathan assaulteth vs sometime by his Deputies and instruments; especially he employeth in these seruices, the world and the flesh. In the world he doth not only make choice of our enemies and prophane irreligious men, which he stirreth vp to afflict and persecute vs, to the end wee may be discouraged from the profession and practice of true godlinesse; but also of our deare friends and acquaintance and our neere kindred: sometime our brother or sister, our parents and children, yea, sometimes a mans wife which lieth in his bosome, playeth the part of the tempter. As wee may see in the example of Iob, who was not so much vexed by all his outward afflictions, as by the temptation of his wife, and three friends. The same is euident in the example of Eue, whom Satan vsed as his instrument to intice Adam to the breach of Gods commandement: and Iesabel, who was the Deuils Deputie, in prouoking her husband to oppression and horrible murther. Neither doth hee only vse to these ends our carnall friends, but also our spirituall kindred in Christ, who are of the same Religion, and make the same profession with vs. And thus by the old Prophet, he enticed the yong Prophet to transgresse Gods commandement, 1. Kings 13. And thus he tempted our Sauiour Christ to neglect the worke of our redemption, vsing the Apostle Peter as his instrument; & therefore because he supplied the Deuils place, our Sauiour calleth him by his name, saying, Get thee behind me Satan, thou art an offence to me, Matth. 16. 23. And thus now adayes hee vseth professors, yea Preachers of the Gospell, as meanes to tempt men to sinne, both by their words and euill examples, which temptation is farre more dangerous and of greater force, then if all worldlings should combine themselues together, and labour both by perswasion and example to seduce them. For when they can say, I am a professor as well as thou, I am a seruant of God who make conscience of my wayes as well as thou, I am a Prophet as well as thou, and therefore thou needest not to make any doubt or scruple in following my counsell or example; it is a most strong temptation to intice vs to sinne: for like sheepe wee are most apt to follow after, when any of our owne company lead vs the way. And therefore if we would resist this temptation, we must labour after true knowledge, that we may not depend vpon others for our direction, but vpon the Word of God alone, and not liue by example, but by precept; for the straitest rule that euer was of the most holy mans life (our Sauiour Christ excepted) is often & in many places crooked (for who is it that hath not erred and gone astray?) and therefore if wee alwayes follow their example in all particulars, wee shall erre with them besides all our owne errours.

§. Sect. 9. That Satan vseth the helpe of our owne flesh in tempting vs to sin.

So also hee vseth the helpe of our owne flesh to betray the spirit, and leade vs captiue into sinne; and that so cunningly, that we can hardly discerne betweene Satans suggestions and our owne corrupt motions and desires. For being a spirit, he doth not appeare in a corporall shape and perswade vs to sinne with reall words, which are conuayed to the vnderstanding and heart by the eare, but hee commeth to vs after a spirituall manner, and suggesteth secretly his temptations into the heart and mind directly and immediatly, so as wee can seldome distinguish his motions from our owne thoughts. For as the Spirit of God doth so moue vs to all vertuous and holy actions, as that in the meane time wee would thinke his motions to bee our owne godly cogitations, but that we are sufficiently instructed out of Gods Word, that wee cannot of our selues so much as thinke a good thought, vnlesse it proceed from God; so much lesse can we discerne between the suggestions of Sathan and our owne fleshly thoughts, because they are both corrupt and alike wicked. By reason whereof it commeth to passe that Satan wanteth no opportunitie of circumuenting vs, because we can put no difference betweene his temptations and our owne carnall desires. And therefore hee hauing gotten (as it were) our owne watch-word, we are readie to open the gates of our soules when he offereth to enter, and to yeeld to his temptations as soone as he assaulteth vs, whereas no man almost is so outragiously desperate that would wittingly and willingly entertaine Satans suggestions, whom hee knoweth to bea common enemy to mankind, continually seeking their destruction, though he should intice him hereunto by offring much riches & great preferments. Yea, hence it is that after Satan hath many times deceiued and circumuented vs, yet cannot we beware of him, nor auoid his deceits. For whereas if a man doe giue vs euill counsell, or any way cosen vs, yet after he hath once or twice come vnto vs, wee can take heed of him, and though he make faire shewes of honesty and friendship, wee will notwithstanding be very iealous and suspitious lest againe he ouer-reach vs; when Satan commeth to vs this day and tempteth vs to such grosse wickednesse, that wee cannot chuse but discerne them to be his suggestions,

2. Cor. 3. 5.

yet this is no impediment to him but that he may come againe to morrow, and deceiue vs with some more subtill policy, because wee cannot discerne betweene his suggestions and our owne thoughts, and therefore doe acknowledge no other authour of his temptations but our selues.

Q. Sect. 10. That Satan hath great aduantage against vs because his temptations are like our owne carnall thoughes.

Hence also it is that hee will not sticke to tempt the most godly vnto the grossest impietie, and the most learned and sound in iudgement, to entertaine the absurdest heresie or errour. For if hee preuaile (which sometime hee doth, as wee may see in the example of Dauid, whom he tempted to adulterie and murther, though he were a man according to Gods owne heart; and of Peter whom hee tempted to denie and forsweare Christ, though he were a most worthy Apostle) then he getteth a great victorie, and giueth them a singular foile; but if he be repulsed, yet this is no hindrance vnto him, why he may not intrap them in some more secret ambushment. Hence it is that though he begin his fight with cunning policie, taking vpon him the person of a friend, and transforming himselfe into an Angell of light; yet this is no impediment but that he may afterwards again appeare and violently assault vs in his owne likenesse; as he assaulted our Sauiour, first with subtill and secret temptations, like a friend and wel-willer; and when he could not so preuaile, hee doth not sticke to appeare like himselfe, tempting him to outragious grosse idolatrie, saying, All this will I giue thee if thou wilt fall downe and worship me. And contrariwise though hee begin his assault like a Deuill and professed enemie, this is no hindrance but that he may end it like an Angell of light, and a flattering treacherous friend. So when hee hath inticed vs to one extreme and preuaileth not, this is no impediment but that soone after he may allure vs to the cleane contrary; because though wee thinke the first motion to be his suggestion, yet wee may imagine the other to be our owne thought, or (as I said) the motion of Gods Spirit, because it is quite contrary to the former.

Math. 4. 9.

Q. Sect. 11. How we may auoid danger, though wee cannot discern Satans temptations from our owne lusts.

Seeing therefore the matter standeth thus; how may wee resist Satan, considering that we cannot discerne his suggestions from our owne cogitations? I answere; wee must be skilfull in Gods Word, and thereby able to iudge what is good and what is euill, to discerne what is vertue and what is vice, what God hath commanded, and what hee hath forbidden, which be the motions of Gods Spirit, and which the suggestions of Satan, and the thoughts of our corrupt flesh; and then are we carefully to embrace that which our conscience approueth as good, being informed by Gods Word, and to auoide and reject those motions which wee know to be euill, whether they doe proceed from Satan, or from our selues. For it is not greatly materiall to know who is the authour of them, so wee are assured that they are euill and wicked; neither is it any dangerous errour to ascribe Satans suggestions to our corrupt flesh; or to attribute the wicked thoughts of our owne flesh vnto Satan: for though he be not the next and immediate cause, yet hee is the first and principall cause of all sinne and wickednesse. And hence it is that in the Scriptures the same wicked motion and action is sometimes ascribed to man, & sometimes to Sathan indifferently, as appeareth, Acts 5. 3, 5. where first Peter affirmeth Satan to be the author of Ananias sinne, by filling his heart with his suggestions, whereby hee was tempted to lie vnto the holy Ghost, and after he saith that Ananias had conceiued this lie in his owne heart.

Acts 5. 3, 5.

Q. Sect. 12. How Satans suggestions may be discerned from our owne fleshly lusts.

But though most commonly it be very hard to discerne betweene the suggestions of Sathan, and of our corrupt flesh; yet sometimes they may be distinguished by apparent differences. As first when the temptations are so cunning and exceeding subtill, that it is not possible they should be the thoughts of a silly ignorant man, but the apparant suggestions of the old wily Serpent. Secondly, when as the suggestion is vrged with great force and violence, and leaueth behind it a deepe impression, which seemeth to bring a necessitie of doing that which is euen contrary to naturall reason; whereas the suggestions of the flesh doe rather leade and intice vs then draw and inforce vs vnto sin. Thirdly, the temptations of Satan moue vs oftentimes to such outragious wickednesse, and hellish impietie, that euen nature corrupted doth condemne it as abominable and trembleth with feare and horrour, when they are first suggested. Fourthly, the flesh taketh occasion of things present and subiect to the senses to intice vs vnto sinne; but Satans suggestions sometimes are farre fetcht and so strange vnto vs, that before the instant they are suggested we neuer thought or so much as dreamed of them. Lastly, the things whereunto wee are tempted by the flesh, are alwayes delightfull and pleasing vnto vs; but Satan tempteth vs also to those things which are irkesome and grieuous: as namely to superstitious abstinence whereby the bodie is almost starued, to punishing of our owne bodies, as he tempted the Baalitish Priests, to cut & launce themselues before their Idol; and the superstitious Papists to whip themselues before their Images, and to take vpon them tedious and dangerous pilgrimages to Idols and reliques of Saints; and the idolatrous heathen to burne in sacrifice their deare children. So also hee tempteth some to despaire of Gods mercie, and so to torment their consciences with horrour and feare; yea, sometimes to lay violent hands vpon themthemselues, murthering and taking away their owne life, which by nature is so deare and precious vnto them. All which being contrary to our naturall inclinations and the desires of the flesh, manifestly appeare to be the suggestions of Satan.

And these are the chiefe differences betweene the temptations of Sathan and the flesh; otherwise they are commonly so like one to the other that they can hardly be discerned: and therefore let vs not be so carefull, curiously to distinguish them, as to auoide or resist them; knowing that Satan is the Captaine Generall, and the flesh and the lusts thereof his chiefe aides & assistants, which continually fight against the spirit, and labour to plunge both body and soule into euerlasting destruction. To this purpose one saith, It is not easie to be discerned when our owne heart speaketh, or when it heareth the flesh or the Deuill speake, But what mattereth it which of them is the speaker, when as that which is spoken is one and the same. What will it profit vs to know the person of the speaker, when as that which is spoken manifestly appeareth to be wicked and pernicious. And againe: It is not easie to discerne who speaketh, nor any danger not to discerne it.

CHAP. XXII.

Of the generall meanes whereby wee may bee enabled to withstand our spirituall enemies.

AND so much concerning the manner of Satans fight. Now we are to speake of the conflict it selfe; wherein (as I haue shewed) the parties assaulting and oppugning are the Deuill and his assistants, the world and the flesh; the party defending and resisting is the Christian souldier. The cause of the fight is not for Lands and Dominions, nor for riches and mines of gold; for these would Sathan bee content to giue if he had them in his possession, if wee would renounce Gods seruice, and fall downe and worship him; but for the euerlasting saluation of our soules, which Sathan laboureth by all meanes possible to hinder, and to plunge vs into endlesse destruction. The weapons which the assailants vse in this fight are not the sword and speare, or any other carnall furniture, but spirituall temptations, whereby they seeke to intice, draw, and prouoke man to sinne, that consequently hee may receiue the wages thereof euerlasting death. The weapons which the Christian souldier vseth to defend himselfe and repell his enemies, is the spirituall armour before spoken of, namely, the girdle of veritie, the breast-plate of righteousnesse, the knowledge and profession of the Gospell of peace, the shield of faith, the helmet of saluation, the sword of the Spirit, and feruent and effectuall Prayer.

Now in this conflict of temptations, there are first two common affections or generall properties to be considered of; the Christian souldiers manfull resistance, or else his fainting and receiuing the foile; for either hee couragiously standeth vpon his defence, armed with the graces of Gods spirit, and putteth Sathan to flight by withstanding his temptations; or else being surprised at vnawares, whilest hee is disarmed of these spirituall weapons and Christian armour, he is foiled by his spirituall enemies, yeelding vnto their temptations and falling into sin. That wee may withstand our spirituall enemie valiantly in all his temptations, and obtaine a finall victorie, there are certaine generall meanes to be vsed; which may serue as strong forts and bulwarks, vnto which we may retire our selues as often as we faint, and be readie to receiue any disaduantage in the fight. First, we are continually to haue in memorie the commandement of our chiefe captaine Christ Iesus, whereby hee inciteth vs to a continuall fight without fainting or yeelding. So *Ephes.*6.10.11. Bee strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against all the assaults of the diuell. And. 1. *Pet.*5.8. Your aduersary the diuell as a roaring Lyong walketh about seeking whom he may deuoure. Whom resist stedfast in the faith. Secondly, let vs be incouraged to withstand our spirituall enemies with assured hope of victory; for we fight the Lords battels vnder the standard of Iesus Christ, whose power is omnipotent, and therefore able to defend vs, and to ouerthrow our enemies with a word of his mouth; who also is our head and wee his members, and therefore wee may assure our selues that hee hath no lesse will then power to succour vs. As also let vs alwayes haue in minde the crowne of victorie promised to all that ouercome, euen a crowne of glory and euerlasting happinesse in Gods Kingdome, *Apoc.*2.7. and 3.5.12.21. And this will make vs resolue neuer to faint in the battle, nor cowardly yeeld vnto Satans temptations, though he should intice vs to sinne by offering vs the whole World, because we would not thereby hazard the losse of this eternall waight of glory. Thirdly, we are alwayes to stand in readinesse armed with the Christian armour, the graces of Gods Spirit, and to vse all good meanes that we may be more and more strengthened and confirmed in them. But yet when we are at the strongest, wee are not to presume vpon our owne strength, but to relie our selues wholly vpon the Lords assistance, and when we are tempted ted and assaulted, wee must continually implore his helpe, that being armed with the power of his might, wee may withstand the temptation and obtaine victorie.

Q. Sect. 3. The fourth means, to take occasion of Satans temptation vnto sinne of doing the contrarie vertue.

Fourthly, when wee are assaulted by our spirituall enemies and tempted vnto any sin, we must not only abstaine from committing thereof, but also take occasion thereby of doing the contrarie vertue. For example, when we are tempted to vnlawfull pleasures, we must not onely abstaine from them, but also wee are somewhat to abridge our selues of those that be lawfull, and the more seriously and painfully to follow the workes of our lawfull callings: when we are tempted to couetousnesse, wee must the more earnestly exercise the workes of mercie and Christian liberalitie. When wee are tempted to ambition, we must not onely refraine from vainglory, but we must labour after true humilitie and mortification, refusing not onely vnlawfull honours, but those also which are lawfull, so oft as we haue iust cause to feare that Satan will (taking occasion of our corruption) hereby cause vs to forget God. when wee are tempted to neglect the hearing of Gods Word on the Lords Sabbath, we are the more diligently to heare it, not onely then, being bound hereunto by Gods commandement, as being one of the chiefe meanes of sanctifying this day consecrated to Gods seruice; but also on the weeke dayes, if the Lord giue vs fit opportunitie, when as we might lawfully be exercised in the duties of our callings. In a word, when wee are tempted to any vice, we are to take occasion thereby of doing the contrary vertue; in the meane time carefully auoiding the policie of Satan, before spoken of, whereby he laboureth to draw vs from one vice to his contrary extreame. And so like valiant souldiers we shal not onely auoid the danger and violence of Satans strokes, but also wee shall giue Satan the foile with his owne weapon, yea and make him afraid to assault vs againe with his temptations, lest when hee prouoketh vs vnto sin, we take occasion thereby to serue God, and more constantly to embrace vertue.

Q. Sect. 4. The fift means to withstand temptations when they are first suggested.

Fiftly, we are most carefully to withstand Satans temptations when they are first suggested; and to giue him the repulse as soone as wee perceiue that hee is but beginning to make an entrance. For this gliding Serpent if hee can but thrust in his head, will easily make roome for his whole bodie: and therefore we must nip and bruse him in the head, and vse his temptations like the Serpents brood, which if men desire to kill, they doe not tread vpon their tailes, for so they would turne againe and sting them, but vpon their heads, and then they haue no power to hurt them: So wee are not fondly to thinke that we can without hurt vanquish Sathans temptations in the end when wee haue long entertained them: for vnlesse they be nipped in the head, and withstood in the beginning, they will mortally poyson vs with the sting of sinne. For as theeues comming to breake into a house, if they can but find roome for the point of their wrench to enter, will easily by turning and winding about the vice make the doores, though very strong, flie open and giue them entrance; so if this cunning thiefe Sathan can find any entrance for his first temptations, so as we can be content to thinke vpon them, and reuolue them in our mindes with any liking, hee will easily burst open the gates of our soules, and entring further will rob vs of all Gods graces. Let vs therefore if wee would resist Satan, follow the aduice of the Heathen Poet in a farre different matter:

Principijs obsta: sero medicina paratur,
Cum mala per longas conualuere moras.

Or rather the counsell of the Apostle giuen vs in this selfe-same respect, Ephes. 4. 27. Giue no place to the Deuill. And as wise Citizens being besieged, doe not let their enemies scale their walls and enter the Towne, with a purpose then to repell and beate them backe againe; but they withstand them as soone as they giue the first assault, and keepe them, if they can, from approching neere their wals with sconces and bulwarkes: so we are not to suffer Satan our enemy and the troupes of his temptations to enter into our hearts, but to giue them the repulse at their first approching, lest it be too late afterwards when they haue surprized and wounded vs with sin. Blessed are they therefore who take this Babyloniish brood of Satans temptations and dash them euen whilest they are young against the stones, lest waxing old & strong they furiously fight against vs, and leading vs captiue in the chaines of sin, grieuously afflict and vexe vs.

Ephes. 4. 27.

Psalm 137.

Q. Sect. 5. The fixt means is after one temptation past to prepare our selues for another.

Sixtly, if we would not be surprized and foiled by Satan, wee must after we haue resisted him in one temptation, be readie prepared to withstand another, and after wee haue once or twice giuen Satan the repulse, we are not securely to giue our selues to rest, as though the warre were at an end: but wee must continually expect his returne with fresh supplies, and prepare our selues for a new assault, vsing the time of Satans intermission, as a breathing time to recouer strength against the next encounter. And as souldiers besieged after they haue sustained one assault, and giuen their enemies the repulse, doe not securely giue themselues to idlenesse and sleepe, but prepare all things readie for the next conflict, mending the breaches, and repairing those places which in the time of fight they found to bee most weake; so when we haue withstood some of Sathans temptations, and giuen him the repulse, pulse, wee are not to giue our selues to rest, sleeping in wretchlesse securitie, as though our enemies were quite ouercome, but rather in the intermission of the spirituall combat, we are to prepare our selues for the next assault, vsing all meanes to confirme our strength, where we discerned in the time of fight that we were most weake, and more strongly to arme our selues with the shield of faith and the sword of the spirit; against those tentations which we found most forcible to preuaile against vs. For our enemie like a roring Lion continually rangeth about seeking whom he may deuoure, his malice will neuer let him rest, but euen then when he seemeth to entertaine a truce, hee is most busie in plotting meanes, whereby he may worke our finall destruction. And therefore, wee are neuer more carefully to stand vpon our guard, then when this enemy seemeth to proclaime a peace, or when hee fleeth away as though he were vanquished; for when hee talketh of peace, hee maketh himselfe ready for the battaile, and this wicked Parthian doth more hurt in flying than in fighting. Here therefore the Christian souldier must auoide two dangerous euils: the one, that hee doe not faint or yeeld in the time of the fight; the other, that hee doe not after one victory waxe insolent and secure: but when he hath once ouercome, he is so to behaue himselfe as though hee were presently againe to be assaulted. For Satans temptations like the waues of the Sea do follow one in the necke of the other, and when one is past, another is readie to ouerwhelme vs, if like skilfull Pilots wee be not readie as well to breake the violence of that which followeth, as of that which went before. Neither must wee looke for any sound truce or firme peace, till wee haue the euerlasting peace in Gods Kingdome; for as long as wee continue in this life, our spirituall enemies will continually assault vs: and therefore let vs neuer be secure, vntill by death we haue obtained a finall victory.

And to the end that we may the rather be perswaded to continuall care and Christian perseuerance in this spirituall fight vnto the end of our liues; let vs consider that Gods promises and the crowne of victory are not promised to those that enter into this spirituall fight, but vnto those that continue fighting, till they haue obtained a full victory ouer their enemies, To him that ouercommeth will I giue to eate of the tree of life, Reuel. 2. 7. Be thou faithfull vnto the death, and I will giue thee the crowne of life, Verse 10. Hee that ouercommeth shall not be hurt of the second death. Verse 11. To him that ouercommeth will I giue to eate of the Manna that is hid, &c. Verse 17. He that ouercommeth shall be clothed in white aray, and I will not put out his name out of the booke of life: Chap. 3. 5. To him that ouercommeth will I grant to sit with me in my throne, euen as I ouercame, and sit with my Father in his throne. As it is Verse 21. So that it is not sufficient that wee enter the lists and sustaine the first and second encounter, if afterwards we shamefully forsake the standard of Christ and cowardly run away, or else traiterously yeeld vnto sin and Satan: but if wee would be made partakers of Gods promises, wee must ouercome, that is, obtaine a full victorie ouer the flesh, the world, and the Deuill. There is none triumpheth for making his enemies once or twice to retire, or for getting the better in some skirmish; because they may gather their dispersed forces, and joyne with them new supplies, and so giuing a fresh assault, obtaine victorie: but those onely triumph who obtaine a full conquest, neither shall any triumph in the Kingdome of glory, who resist Satan in one tentation onely, or bridle one lust of the flesh, but they who subdue them finally and wholy, not once alone, but vnto the end of their liues. For as it falleth out in worldly warres, oftentimes the enemy doth retire backe, and counterfetteth a flight, to the end the other may pursue him securely and disorderly with full assurance of victory; and then hee makes a stand and reuniting all his forces doth ouercome his wretchlesse enemy: so oftentimes Satan faineth himselfe to be put to flight, to the end wee may conceiue an opinion of his great weaknesse, and our own inuincible strength, and so bee brought to negligence and securitie; and then he knits together all his force, and ouerthroweth vs when wee are wretchlesly secure fearing no danger. Yea, sometimes he is in truth foiled, but yet not so as that he will surcease his fight; for if he cannot preuaile one way, hee will trie another, so long as our continuance in this earthly weake tabernacle giueth him any hope of ouercomming or foiling vs. And therefore we are alwayes to stand vpon our guard, and to keepe our standing continually, watching and preparing our selues against the fresh assaults of our spirituall enemies. If Iob had beene secure after he had resisted Satans first temptation, in taking away his Oxen, Asses, and Sheepe, surely those which followed would haue made him blaspheme God as Satan imagined; but like a good souldier after that hee had receiued one blow, hee did not cast away his shield of faith and patience, as though he had no further need of it, but still held it vp expecting more, till the combate was ended; whose example we must imitate, if wee would obtaine victory, and enjoy the crowne of victory, euerlasting happinesse in Gods Kingdome. Otherwise if wee sleepe in securitie after wee haue giuen Sathan one ouerthrow, we shall be sure to be assaulted and surprised before we be aware; for as one faith, Whilest the Deuill is vanquished, hee obtaineth victorie; and therefore: He is no more to be feared when hee ouercommeth, then when he is ouercome; for oftentimes he faineth himselfe to be foiled that he may the more fiercely renue the assault, he flieth that he may draw vs into his ambushments, and assaile vs at vnawares; hee retireth openly that he may secretly ouercome.

¶. Sect. 7. The seuenth meanes not to beleeue Satans suggestions.

Seuenthly, if we would not be circumuented by Satan, wee must not giue any credit vnto him whether hee lieth or speaketh true, whether he accuseth or flattereth, whether hee indeauoureth to puffe vs vp with pride and selfe conceite, or whether hee laboreth by aggrauating our sinnes to plunge vs into the guilfe of hellish despaire; for he abode not in the truth because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his owne, for he is a lyer and the father thereof, as it is, Iob. 8.44. And if at any time he speake the truth, it is to the end hee may be the better credited when he lyeth. For he speaketh the truth that he may deceiue, he flattereth that he may hurt vs, hee promiseth good things that he may giue vs euill, hee promiseth life that hee may kill vs. And therefore we are not to beleeue the truth it selfe, because hee speakes it, but because it is grounded on Gods word; nor to receiue it from his mouth as his assertion, but from the mouth of God, and his holy Prophets and Apostles, guided and inspired with his Spirit: for either hee speaketh the truth to gaine credit vnto his lies, or propoundeth true premises that hee may sophistically gather out of them false conclusions. And hence it is that our Sauiour Christ did reiect his testimonie though true, and inioyned him silence when he confessed him to be the holy one of God, Mark. 1.24,25. And the Apostle Paul would not suffer the diuining maid to giue them her approbation though shee spake truth in confessing them the seruants of the most high God, which did shew vnto vs the way of saluation. because Sathan did it, either to this end, that by his testimonie and approbation hee might cause them the rather to be suspected and reputed impostors and deceiuers, who did their miracles by the helpe and assistance of some familiar spirit; or that hee might afterwards by telling this truth bee the rather credited when hee did bely and slander them.

Act. 16,17,18.

¶. Sect. 8. The eight meanes, neither to despise Satans tentations, nor too deeply to apprehend them

Eightly, if wee would withstand all Satans tentations, we must auoid two extremes, the one to despise them, the other too deeply to apprehend & too greatly to feare them. For if wee securely contemne Satans tentations, wee will neuer arme and prepare our selues to make resistance, and so hee will ouercome vs before wee be aware; if we take them too much to heart continually meditating vpon their strength and violence, and vpon our owne infirmitie and weakenesse, they will fill vs with feare, and plunge vs into despaire. If wee despise the tentation, Sathan will easily subdue vs: for there is no enemy so weake and feeble which will not preuaile against those who securely contemne them, though exceeding mightie; because they neglect all meanes of their preseruation, and neuer stand vpon their guard for their defence; and therefore much more will Satan preuaile against vs, if wee regard not his temptations, hee being strong and mightie, and we feeble and weake. On the other side, if we so feare his tentations as that we despaire of victorie, Satan shall not need to fight against vs, for we will ouercome our selues, fainting before the fight, and casting away our weapons as soone as Sathan doth but muster his forces and march against vs. And therefore let vs so much feare the tentations, as that wee doe not securely contemne them; and not so much feare them, as that wee should despaire of victory; let vs feare them so much as that thereby wee bee stirred vp with more care and diligence to resist and ouercome them; but not so much as that wee should cowardly faint, distrusting Gods helpe. Let vs feare them in respect of our weakenesse and their violence; but let vs boldly striue against them, trusting in Gods almightie power and mercifull promises of his aide and assistance, being hereby assured of certaine victory.

¶. Sect. The nineth meanes that we examine tentations before wee beleeue them.

Ninthly, wee must be most carefull that we doe not entertaine temptations, either into our iudgements to allow them, or into our hearts and affections to be vexed and turmoiled with them, vpon the bare testimonie of Satan or our owne flesh before wee haue throughly examined them by the touchstone of Gods Truth. For if we are enioyned not to receiue doctrines hand ouer-head from those that stand in the place of Gods Ministers, and professe their zeale in seeking our saluation; but first to trie the spirits whether they be of God or no; and if the Bereans are iustly commended because they did not instantly beleeue those things which they heard from the Apostles themselues, but first searched the Scriptures to see whether they were so or no: what folly and madnesse is it to beleeue the suggestions of the Deuill, and our own flesh without due examination, who are not only notorious liars, that seldome speake the truth, vnlesse it be with a purpose to deceiue, but also our professed enemies, who seeke by all meanes our ruine and destruction. And thus we are to examine all temptations, whether they be aspersions or perswasions, promises, or threatnings. For example, when Satan auoucheth that we are Hypocrites, we are not to beleeue it, because he saith it, and so to vex our selues with this this perswasion, as though it were an vndoubted truth; but first wee must examine our selues, by Gods Word whether we be so or no, and out of it obseruing the markes and signes both of hypocrisie and sincerity, we are to apply them vnto our selues, that so we may discerne which of both doe belong vnto vs. And if wee find in vs the notes of vprightnesse; as that wee desire to performe obedience to the whole Law, and not only some few commandements, and that not only outwardly to be seene of men, but also inwardly in our hearts, making conscience of secret sinnes aswell as of open; that wee doe yeeld this obedience out of our loue towards God, and not for worldly and by respects: that we hate sinne because God hateth it and loue righteousnesse, because he loueth it, and desire as well to be freed from sinne as from punishment, and to yeeld obedience, as to haue the reward of it, and such like, then may wee with ease and vpon a sure ground reject this temptation, as false and friuolous. So when he affirmeth that wee haue no faith and therefore are in the state of condemnation, let vs not rashly beleeue this suggestion and so be turmoiled and vexed with it, but let vs according to the counsell of the Apostle, trie our selues whether we be in the faith or no, obseruing out of Gods Word the markes and signes of it; as the purifying of our hearts from that loue and delight in sin which hath beene in them in former times; our loue to righteousnesse which wee haue formerly lothed; our care to please God, and to vse the meanes of grace and saluation; our good workes and fruits of new obedience, and such like; which signes if wee find in vs, we may easily get the victory in this temptation. Thus when hee telleth vs that we are not the children of God nor elected to saluation but the children of wrath and reprobation, ordained to destruction, if wee rashly giue any credit to this suggestion how will it torment and vexe vs? How will it discourage vs in all Christian duties when as wee thinke them bootlesse and vnprofitable: whereas if we examine the temptation by the Word of God, and trie our state by the markes and signes of our Election and Adoption therein contained, of which I shal speake afterwards, how easily may we foile Sathan, and with much peace and comfort proceed in the wayes of godlinesse? So when Satan perswadeth vs to neglect holy duties, as hearing the Word, Prayer, and such like, because we performe them imperfectly and corruptly, and so sinne against God and increase our condemnation; or deferre the doing them for time to come, when as we shall be more fit to doe them: if we giue credit to these temptations they will much turmoile vs, and more and more disable vs vnto this holy seruice, but if we cal them into question, and examine them by Gods Word, we shall find their falshood, and auoid their danger. Because that will teach vs, the more wee neglect the meanes of grace and saluation, the further we shall be from them, that God requireth of vs the obedience of sonnes, that is, that wee desire and indeuour to performe seruice vnto God in as much perfection as we are able; and that if wee so doe; hee will accept of our will for the deed, pardon our imperfections, and spare vs as a louing Father spareth his sonne that serueth him. Thus also when he perswadeth vs to sin; to despaire of Gods mercie, and seeing it is too late to repent, to goe on in our euill wayes, and to take as much pleasure as wee can in carnall delights; if wee would but examine this temptation wee should find it contrary to Gods Truth, which reuealeth vnto vs the infinitenesse of Gods mercie inuiting vs to repentance, because without all exception of person, sinne or time, it is extended vnto all that leaue their sinnes and turne vnto God by amendment of life. The same might be said (but that it were too long to insist vpon them) both of his false promises whereby he allureth the weake Christian vnto sinne, and also vngrounded threatnings, whereby hee frighteth him from holy duties; all which would be of no force to hurt vs, if we would bring them to the light of Gods Word, and examine them by this touchstone, whereas receiuing them at Satans hands (as it were) in the darke, they doe much affright vs with causelesse feares and vngrounded terrours, and for the time that they are intertained vtterly discourage and disable vs in vsing the meanes whereby wee might attaine to grace and saluation. And vpon this I haue the longer insisted because (vpon much experience) I dare boldly say, that there is not any one thing that giueth Sathan greater aduantage in the spirituall conflict, or more afflicteth and weakneth poore Christians vnto all good duties, then that they rashly giue credit to his temptations, and neuer examine them by the Word of God, either by reason of their ignorance whereby they cannot, or their negligence and sloth caused oftentimes through the aboundance of melancholy, whereby they list not to bring them to this triall.

1. Iohn 4.1. Act. 17.

1. Ioh. 3. 5.

The tenth generall meanes to confirme and strengthen vs in the spirituall conflict is to spend our whole forces against Sathans temptations, and not trouble our minds with causelesse feares and affrighting terrours by fore-casting what will be the issue of them. For things present doe belong vnto vs, but future euents are onely and alwayes at Gods disposing, and are therefore doubtfull vnto vs, whether they shall happen or no; or if they doe; when in or in what manner. In which respect many weake Christians doe often offend and much weaken themselues in being so much taken vp with that which doth not appertaine vnto them, namely future euents which God only knoweth and ordereth, that they quite neglect and forget present duties that belong vnto them. And thus some finding the violence of Sathans temptations, and their owne weaknesse to withstand them conclude a likelihood of their long continuance, and so an vnlikelihood of their withstanding them. For if they cannot in their fresh strength resist the Deuill, and stand in a present brunt of temptations, much lesse shall they (as they imagine) bee able to hold out when as being tired their strength decreaseth, and the malice and furie of their enemies is more enraged by their weake resistance. In the mean time not considering that the issue of their temptations is in Gods hand, and that he can easily pull backe the enemy, so as hee shall not assault them, or renew and increase their wearied forces, so as they shall bee able to indure his encounters; Others feare that their weake shield of faith shall be pulled out of their hands, and that they shall bee vtterly spoiled of all sauing grace, because they find them alreadie so weakned in them; not remembring that they stand in the power of Gods strength, which is able to finish the battaile, as to giue the first on-set, and that their faith and other graces stand not in their owne strength, but by vertue of Christs intercession who hath prayed that it may neuer faile; and vpon the immutabilitie and truth of God, whose gifts and graces are without repentance. Others feeling in their hearts and consciences affrighting terrours and the troubles and turmoiles of their afflicted minds, doe feare least they shall burst out into impatiencie, and so dishonour God, discredit their profession, and expose themselues vnto shame and disgrace, not well waying with themselues that they haue not all this while stood in their owne strength, but in the power of the Lord which being all sufficient is also without change, if by faith wee rest vpon it. Finally, others doe fearefully forecast that their troubles continuing and breaking them of their rest and sleepe, they shall bee distracted of their wits, and so end their dayes in rage and raging; not considering that the God of peace can when it seemeth good vnto him, put an end to their troubles, and make them quietly to take their rest, when as they are assured that being vnder his protection they are in safetie. All which and such like feares thorough fore-casting of future euils, are not only vnprofitable, as enabling vs only to foresee mischiefe, but not giuing vs any strength or wisdome, whereby wee may be able to preuent or escape them, but also exceeding hurtfull and pernitious, making vs much more apt to fall vnto the euils feared. As feare of being foiled and vanquished in time to come, doth for the present disarme vs of Christian courage and resolution, and to become so cowardly that we are readie to flee at the next encounter. Feare of loosing faith and other sauing graces, implyeth a likelihood that they may be lost, and so maketh way for diffidence and doubting; feare of bursting out into impatiencie in time to come, weakneth our patience in present troubles, and pulleth away from it a chiefe prop whereby it is supported, namely, hope of a good issue and desired victory, whereby the weake Christian is ready presently to dishonour God, discredit his profession, and disgrace himselfe by shewing his impatiencie; through feare of falling into it in time to come. And finally feare of future distraction indangereth him aboue all things to speedie madnesse, because it so filleth his heart with terrour and amazednesse; that it maketh his sleepe to goe from him, and his minde restlesse day and night. Into all which euils through the just judgement of God they plunge themselues in giuing way to these distrustfull feares, seeing hereby they do not only disarme themselues of Christian courage and resolution, and cast away the shield of faith which should defend them in the spirituall conflict, but also rob God of his glory, manifested in the wise and powerfull disposing of future euents, and distrust his gracious promise, whereby hee hath assured vs that he will not (if by a liuely faith we relie vpon him) suffer vs to be tempted aboue that we are able, but will giue a good issue to the tentation, that we may be able to beare it. 1. Cor. 10. 13. Yea, hereby they take vpon them the execution of Gods office of fore-seeing and disposing of that which is to come, which doth not at all belong vnto them, and so falling into a spirituall premunire, they are deseruedly cast out of Gods protection, and make a forfeiture of their libertie with all the riches of his sauing graces, whereby they become an easie prey to their spiritual enemies. All which mischifes if we would escape; our best course is to busie our selues in performing of our owne dutie, which is to resist the Deuill, and to withstand his temptations, when they are suggested, not intermedling with things to come, but only thus far forth that we may expect tẽptations before we are assaulted, and therefore prepare our selues by hauing continually all the spirituall armour fast buckled vnto vs. But let vs for the issue and euent securely cast our selues vpon Gods powerfull prouidence and gracious promises, and in all humilitie of spirit submit our selues to be wholly disposed of by him according to his good wil and pleasure, resting contented with whatsoeuer hee sendeth honour, or dishonour, strength or weaknesse, right right wits or madnesse, life or death, as knowing that is not only al-sufficient in respect of his wisdome and power to our eternall good, but is also most good and gracious vnto vs being our louing father in Iesus Christ, who hath promised that hee will cause all things to worke together for the best vnto them that loue him, and giue a good issue to all our trials.

9. Sect. 10. The tenth meanes is not to trouble our selues with the issue of our temptations.

Rom.8.28. 2.Cor.10.13.

§. Sect. 11. The eleuenth meanes is to labour after humilitie and mortifie pride.

The eleuenth meanes to withstand all temptations is to labour after humilitie, and vtterly to deny our selues and all that is in vs that God may be all in all, and haue the glory and praise of our saluation: vnto which till wee haue attained, wee shall neuer enjoy secure peace and sound comfort, but shall euer bee vexed and turmoiled with Sathans temptations. For so long as pride and an opinion of our owne worth, beareth any sway in vs, wee are readie to rob God in whole or in part of the glory and prayse of our saluation, whilest we desire to be some thing in our selues, and to offer him somewhat in liew of his mercie for which we looke to be accepted of him rather then others, whom we thinke in these respects inferiour vnto vs. And this maketh way for spirituall disertions, and moueth the Lord who is most zealous of his glory to leaue vs to our selues, to Satans temptations, and to the strength of our corruptions to be foiled and ouercome of them, that so by the sight of our weaknesse, and the lamentable experience of our shamefull falls we may be throughly humbled and becomming vile, yea nothing in our owne eyes be content to yeild vnto God, the whole and sole prayse of his owne worke. An example whereof wee haue in Iob, who was grieuously afflicted with torments of bodie and terrours of minde, not only for the exercise and manifestation of his patience that it might be a patterne to all posteritie, but also to humble him and to beate him off from that too great opinion which hee had of his owne righteousnesse. Neither did the Lord free him from these calamities till he laid his hand vpon his mouth, and had learned to abhorre himselfe, and to repent in dust and ashes. And Paul being too apt to be puffed vp with the multitude of reuelations was pricked with the thorne in his flesh, and buffeted with the messenger of Sathan, that hee might learne to glory in nothing but in his owne infirmities, and in the power of God manifested in his owne weaknesse. And as this pride doth much disaduantage vs, because it moueth the Lord to withdraw his assistance; so doth it chiefly aduantage Satan in this conflict, when as grounding our resolution, faith and hope vpon so weake a ground as our owne worth, hee can easily ouerturne all with the least blast and breath of his temptations by discouering the manifold corruptions, and manifest imperfections of the most excellent Graces in vs, and the best workes and actions done by vs.

Iob 42.6. 2.Cor.12.7.

§. Sect. 12. Pride the chief cause of terrours of conscience and troubles of minde.

In both which respects (vpon much experience and diligent obseruation) I dare boldly affirme, that pride is the prime and most common cause of the conflicts and troubles of minde, wherewith many are so long and grieuously vexed till they be almost swallowed in the gulph of desperation. The which wil seeme a strange paradox vnto many, because at the first view, none seeme more mortified to this vice, none more complaine of their sinfull vnworthinesse, or in the sight and sence of their wants and imperfections are more humbled and dejected. But if we looke to the ground of all, and can distinguish the effect from the cause, and Gods worke from our owne, we shall plainly perceiue that pride chiefly is the cause of all, that God casteth them downe, because they would be too much exalted, that they complaine of their sinne and vnworthinesse, because they haue rested too much on their righteousnesse and worthinesse, and now in time of temptation find it nothing; and that they are thus deeply dejected, because climing vp to aduance themselues in the opinion of their owne worth, this weake staffe or rather reed breaking vnder them, when they were at the highest, they haue fallen downe into the lowest bottome of deepe discontent.

§. Sect. 13. Pride the cause of discontent, discontent of melancholy and this of troubles of mind.

But for the better cleering of this point we are to know that ordinarily melancholy is the chiefe ground of these afflictions and troubles of minde, a principall actor in these Tragedies; and the choisest instrument that Satan vseth to plunge poore Christians into these horrours of minde and terrour of conscience; It is his chaire of estate in which he sitteth and tyrannizeth, and his strongest fort, of which being once possessed, hee is hardly cast out. Now this melancholy is either naturall through the excesse of this humour in the temperature of the bodie, or accidental and aduentitious through some outward causes. Of this latter, Pride is the most vsuall and greatest cause, and (as it were) the leauen of the other which setteth it on working and boyling, ministring vnto it such virulent poison and corruption, that it disquieteth the minde, terrifieth the conscience, and euen racketh and enrageth the heart and affections. For what is the next & immediate cause that breedeth accidentall melancholy, and encreaseth and leaueneth that which is naturall, but impatiencie and deepe discontent? and what is the mother and nurse of these but pride and conceit of our owne worth, when as he who is infected with it is crossed in his hopes and desires; the which will appeare if we consider this pride and discontent, as they are exercised about either worldly or spirituall obiects. For when a man through pride desireth to excell in the world, and to this end ouermuch loueth and desireth worldly things, as credit and esteeme, riches, pleasures, and such like, when he is crossed of his hopes and shortned of his desires, hee fretteth with discontent; groweth impatient of his afflictions, as though hee deserued much better at the hands of God and men, and so this discontent bringeth dejection of minde, heauinesse of heart, dulnesse of spirit, and a generall lumpishnesse in all the powers of bodie and minde: whereas contrariwise when we are throughly humbled and do see and acknowledge our owne vilenesse and vnworthinesse, we expect no great matters, and answerably are not much troubled, when wee are crossed of our hopes; wee are patient in bearing euen great afflictions, because wee know that our sinnes haue deserued much greater, and though with the Church in the Lamentations we were stripped of all, and led captiue of our enemies, so as we might justly complaine that no sorrow is like ours; yet would wee with meeknesse and patience beare all and acknowledge that it is the Lords mercies that we are not viterly consumed. Finally wee are contented in all estates, because wee haue learned wholly to resigne ouer our selues vnto Gods good pleasure, and to submit our wils to his will who knoweth better how to dispose of vs, then wee our selues, and can through his wisdome, power and goodnesse turne all to our good, making those things which seeme crosses and hindrances, helpes and furtherances to our saluation.

Lam. 1. 12. & 3. 22.

Q. Sect. 14. Spirituall pride the cause of melancholy doubting and despaire.

Thus also when pride is exercised about spirituall objects it is a chiefe cause of impatiencie, discontent and melancholy, when as it is crossed of its hopes and desires. For when the Christian after his conuersion expecteth that hee shall in his sanctification attaine vnto angelicall perfection and contrary to his hopes through the reliques of corruption remayning in him, bewrayeth his wants and imperfections, and receiueth many foiles and falls in the conflict of temptations, his minde is much disquieted, his heart vexed, and his conscience grieuously troubled and turmoiled, whereupon hee falleth into discontent and melancholy, whereas if he were so humbled that hee knew with the Apostle, that in him, that is, his flesh dwelleth no good thing; if he had learned to acknowledge with the Prophet, that euen his best righteousnesse were like a polluted cloth, he would not be so affected and turmoiled with the sight and sence of his corruptions and imperfections. So pride maketh men desire to be something in the worke of their saluation, and to haue life eternall not only vpon free gift but partly by purchase, and with some respect of their owne worth. But when looking into themselues they finde their corruptions many and great, and the best duties performed by them full of wanes and imperfections; then this broken reed of their own worth failing, their hopes fall that rested on it, and so they grow discontented and disquieted, affrighted and troubled, and if God should not vphold them with his spirit, making them wholly to abandon themselues and to rest wholly vpon his infinite mercies, and the al-sufficient merits of Iesus Christ, they would be easily swallowed vp in deepe desperation, whereas if being thoroughly humbled, they had wholly denied themselues in the work of saluation, and had ascribed the sole prayse of it vnto the Lord, who hath only right vnto it, they would not be much exalted in their hopes by the sight of their greatest perfections, nor much dejected in the sense of their imperfections, knowing that as their worthinesse cannot saue them, so their vnworthinesse shall not condemne them, so as they rest wholly vpon the free mercies of God, and merits of Christ by a liuely faith. If being truly humbled they were brought to a holy despaire in themselues, they should not be so apt to entertaine that hellish despaire of Gods mercies, and if being wholly stripe and starke naked of all opinion of their owne inherent righteousnesse they would by faith put on the perfect righteousnesse of Christ, their hearts and consciences would not be so tormented with terrours and feares, doubting and despaire, when Gods justice summoneth them to make their appearance, but they would with much comfort and confidence come into his presence hauing to pleade Christs perfect payment, and full satisfaction for their sinnes.

Rom. 7.

Esay 64. 6.

Q. Sect. 15. The twelfth meanes to object Christ against all temptations.

Lastly, if we would withstand Satan, we must object our Sauiour Christ against all his tentations: for if wee apply him vnto vs by a liuely faith, he will be our shield and buckler to defend vs from all Satans blowes. For example, if Satan tell vs that we are miserable sinners, and therefore in the state of damnation; we are to answere that our Sauiour Christ came into the world to saue sinners, and that he was wounded for our transgressions, and broken for our iniquities, and with his stripes we are healed: and so he which knew no sinne, was made sinne for vs, that wee might be made the righteousnesse of God in him. If he say wee are subject to the curse of the Law; we are to answere that Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse of the Law, when he was made a curse for vs. If he object that wee are subject to Gods wrath; wee are to tell him that Christ did beare his fathers displeasure, that hee might make our peace: and whereas wee were strangers and enemies, because our minds were set on euill workes, he hath now reconciled vs in the body of his flesh through death. If hee tell vs that wee are his bondslaues; wee are to answer, that that we were so indeed in time past, but our Sauiour Christ hath payed vnto his Father the price of our redemption, and hath set vs free. If hee affirme that wee are vniust, and therefore shall be condemned before Gods iudgement seate; wee are to answere that Christ who was innocent was condemned, that wee who are guiltie might be acquited; that though we are wicked in our selues, yet we are most just being clothed with his righteousnes; that he that came to saue vs, shall come to iudge vs, and therefore we need not doubt of mercy, if we plead his merits, forsaking the plea of our owne righteousnesse, and renouncing all selfe confidence. If he say that wee shall be held captiue of death and neuer rise to take possession of our heauenly inheritance; wee are to answer that our Sauiour Christ hath broken the bonds of death, and lead captiuitie captiue; that he is risen againe, being the first fruits of them that slept, and is ascended into heauen, to prepare vs a place there. If he obiect that Christ and all his benefits doe not appertaine vnto vs, for euery man shall liue by his owne righteousnesse, and the soule that sinneth shall die the death; wee are to answere that by the Spirit of God and a liuely faith, Christ is become our head and we his members, so that hee is ours and we his, and our sins he hath taken vpon him and bestowed on vs his righteousnesse; hee is become our husband and we his spouse, and therefore as he hath communicated himselfe vnto vs, so likewise all his benefits, his merits, righteousnesse, sanctification, and euerlasting happinesse.

Ioh. 14. 2.

Rom. 18.

Q. Sect. 16. That to auoid Satans importunity, wee must leaue to dispute with him and send him to our Aduocate.

But if Sathan will not thus be answered, we are not to entertaine any further disputation with him, but to send him to our Sauiour Christ who hath taken vpon him to bee not only our Redeemer and our Mediatour and Intercessor vnto God his Father, but also our Aduocate to plead our cause and to answere all suites made against vs both by Gods iustice and the hand writing of the Law; and also by Sathan and all his adherents, as it is 1. Iohn 2. 1. Seeing therefore our Sauiour Christ who is the wisdome of his Father, hath taken vpon him the defence of our cause in all our suites, let not vs our selues be ouer-busie in disputing with this wrangling sophister, but send him for an answere to our Sauiour Christ who hath fully satisfied his fathers iustice in all which it had against vs, and cancelled the hand-writing of the Law, whereby wee were obliged and bound, and therefore much more able is hee to answere all accusations which this cauelling accuser hath against vs. Neither are we to doubt but that our Sauiour will be our Aduocate to plead our cause, especially considering that it doth principally concerne himselfe, and his owne glorie and sufficiencie. For the questions and causes controuersall betweene vs and Sathan, are not about our owne worthinesse, merits, righteousnes, and satisfactions, all which wee renounce and cast away from vs as polluted clouts, in respect of being any causes of our iustification and saluation: but concerning Christs righteousnesse, merit, and the sufficiencie and efficacy of his death and obedience, for the saluation of all repentant sinners which doe apply them vnto themselues by a liuely faith: and therefore wee may assure our selues hee will defend his owne cause against all Satans obiections and imputations.

1. Ioh. 1. 1.

But if Sathan continue his importunitie, and will admit of no answere, wee are as much as in vs lieth to banish his tentations out of our minds, and not to thinke and meditate on them. And to this end we are continually to exercise our selues in feruent prayer, desiring the Lords gracious assistance whereby we may be inabled to withstand all the assaults of our enemie, as also to heare, reade and meditate in Gods Word, and diligently to vse holy conferences with our Christian brethren, and painfully to imploy our selues in the workes of our callings, that so we may haue no leisure to entertaine Satans tentations. For as a vessell which is already full can receiue no more, and whatsoeuer is powred thereinto spilleth vpon the ground: so when our mindes are replenished with holy thoughts, and occupied in godly and honest exercises, there is no roome left for Satans suggestions, and therefore as soone as they offer to enter, we presently reiect them. Whereas on the other side if wee spend our times in idlenesse, and doe not diligently exercise our selues in the duties of Christianity, & of our seuerall callings: then are our minds fit grounds to receiue the seeds of Satans tentations, and to nourish them till they bring forth the fruits of sinne. And if Satan find vs like emptie houses cleane swept and voide of all holy meditations and godly exercises, hee will easily enter, and if himselfe be not strong enough hee will take vnto him seuen other spirits worse then himselfe, that so hee may be more strong to keepe possession. If therefore we would not be ouercome by Satans tentations, let vs beware of idlenesse; for when the minde is emptie of that which is good, it is most fit to receiue that which is euill.

Q. Sect. 17. If we will auoid Sathans importunitie, wee must imploy our selues in holy exercises.

Math. 12. 43.

But if Sathans tentations be at any time entertained into our minds, let vs most carefully take heed that wee doe not suffer them (as it were) to take vp their lodging, by reuoluing them in our thoughts, nor to meditate too earnestly on them, but rather on the preseruatiues which may strengthen vs against their violence; neither are wee so seriously to thinke on Satans obiections, as that in the meane time we forget how to answere them. For example, when hee setteth before

Q. Sect. 18. That wee must not reuolue in our minds Satans tentations, but rather meditate on the contrarie preseruatiues.

our

our eyes the hainousnesse of our sinnes, wee are not to bend all our thoughts to meditate and call to minde all our sins both new and old, both which we haue falne into through infirmitie, and which wee haue willingly committed; for so the huge cloud of our sinnes being neere our eyes, will hide from our sight the shining beames of Gods mercy and Christs merit, though they are without comparison greater: but as soone as wee cast one eye vpon our sins for our humiliation, let vs cast the other presently vpon Christ Iesus, who hath payed the price of our redemption, and suffered all the punishment which we by our sins haue deserued. For if when this fiery Serpent Satan hath stung vs with the sting of sin, wee spend our time in looking vpon the wound and neuer thinke vpon the remedie, euen the true brazen Serpent Iesus Christ hanging on the Crosse: the poyson of sin will so inflame our consciences, that the wound will proue mortall, which at the first might easily haue beene cured, if we would haue applied thereunto the precious balme of our Saniours bloud. So when Satan setteth before our eyes our owne weaknesse and infirmities, to the end we may despaire of victorie, as being neuer able to withstand such strong tentations, wee are not to spend our time in thinking hereupon, but presently to call to minde the almightie power of God who hath promised vs his assistance in this spirituall fight. So when hee obiecteth vnto vs the iustice and wrath of God, in punishing of sinne, and the curse of the Law and torments of Hell prepared for the damned; we are not ouer seriously to reuolue these things in our minds; but presently to call to minde Gods infinite mercie and Christs merits, whereby Gods iustice is fully satisfied, his wrath appeased, the curse of the Law cancelled, and wee made of firebrands of hell, heires of Heauen. And thus if as soone as Satan inflicteth the wound we apply the playster, it will neuer be mortall vnto vs; but if we let the poyson of his tentations run in our minds and neuer thinke of any remedie, though at the first it seemed but a small scratch, it will so inflame our consciences with scorching heate, that they will afterwards very hardly admit of any cure. When therefore Sathan doth cast into our minds his tentations, let vs repell them, and indeauour to quench them whilest they be but small sparkes: for our corrupt mindes are like vnto tinder, and Sathans temptations like the fire: and therefore if in stead of putting them out wee blow vpon them, though they be but a small sparke at the first, within a while they will increase to an vnquenchable flame which will torment our consciences with scorching heate: neither is there any thing but the bloud of Christ, and the water of the Spirit, which will extinguish this wilde fire, when once it hath taken deepe hold on vs.

CHAP. XXIII.

How the Christian being foiled by Sathans tentations may be raised againe.

1. Sect. 1. How a Christian is to behaue himselfe when he is fallen in tentation.

AND these are the meanes whereby the Christian souldier may bee strengthened and incouraged to stand in the combate of tentations. But sometimes it commeth to passe that by reason they neglect these meanes, or else doe not so carefully vse them as they should, they are foiled by Sathan, ouercome by his tentations, and led captiue vnto sin. How therefore must the Christian thus ouertaken behaue himselfe? surely he is not desperately to cast away all hope of victory, and cowardly to yeeld himselfe to be the slaue of Satan, lying contentedly in the chaines of sin, without any desire or indeuour of comming out of his captiuitie: but being falne he is to labour and striue that hee may rise againe, and being taken prisoner by sinne and Satan, he is not willingly to remain in their bonds, but earnestly to desire his freedome and libertie. Now the meanes whereby being fallen he may rise againe, is by vnfained repentance, when as he is heartily sorrie for his sin, because thereby hee hath displeased his louing and gracious father, and stedfastly purposeth for the time to come to leaue and forsake those sins, into which by the malice of Satan and his owne infirmitie he is fallen; and by a liuely faith, when as hee doth apply vnto himselfe all the mercifull promises of the Gospell made vnto all repentant sinners. For though faith in nature goe before repentance, yet the act and fruit of faith, whereby wee are assured of Gods mercie in the free forgiuenesse of our sinnes, alwayes commeth after. Where by the way wee may note a difference betweene the state of Gods children and the wicked. Both fall into sin very often, both also commit hainous and grieuous sins; yea sometimes the child of God falleth into more fearefull and horrible sins, then a meere worldling: but herein the chiefe difference betweene them consisteth, that the child of God after his fall is vexed and grieued, and laboureth to rise againe by leauing and forsaking the sinne which is odious vnto him; but the wicked man after his fall neuer sorroweth nor grieueth, but rather resolueth to liue still in his sin, and to commit it againe and againe with greedinesse and delight when he hath any occasion offered.

A difference betweene the child of God and the wicked.

2. Sect. 2. The complaint of the weake Christian.

But here the weake Christian whose soule is oppressed with the heauy weight of sinne will say vnto me, alas this which you speake is small comfort vnto me, neither can I hereby haue any assurance that I am the child of God; for after I am fallen into sinne, such is the hardnesse of my heart that I cannot bewaile nor be sorrie for it; and whereas euery small worldly losse or crosse maketh mee mourne, weepe and waile, when by my sin I haue offended God, I cannot shed a teare, nor shew any true signe of heartie sorrow; and such is mine vntowardnesse and corruption, that in stead of forsaking my sin, I am ready to fall againe vpon the next occasion: and therefore I cannot haue any faith or full assurance of Gods promises made in Christ, seeing they are all limited & restrained to those sinners which repent and amend. That therefore these mourning soules may receiue some comfort, let them know first, that if they haue an earnest desire of repentance, faith, and the rest of Gods graces; if they haue a good purpose to leaue and forsake their sins, and to spend their liues in the seruice and worship of God: if they are displeased with their corruptions, and according to the measure of grace giuen, pray vnto God, desiring the assistance of his holy Spirit, whereby they may more and more mortifie the old man, and crucifie the flesh, and the lusts thereof: if they hate the sinne they commit, and loue the good which they cannot doe: if they can grieue because they are no more grieued for their sinnes, and be displeased with themselues, because their sins do no more displease them: then may they be assured that they are Gods children, who are acceptable vnto him in Iesus Christ. For hee respecteth not so much our actions as our affections; nor our workes, as our desires and endeuours. To this purpose excellently Augustine. There is no holy and just man free from sinne, and yet for this he ceaseth not to be just and holy, if his heart adhereth to holinesse. And with him agreeth Bernard. An vnwearied desire (saith he) of profiting, and a continued endeuour to attaine vnto perfection, is esteemed perfection. Now if this be to be perfect to labour after perfection; then not to goe forward is to goe backward. So that he who desires to be righteous, is righteous; he that would repent, doth repent; hee that striueth to leaue and forsake his sinnes, God reputeth of him, as if he had left and forsaken them; they that would neuer fall, nor be foiled by their spirituall enemies, God esteemeth as his inuincible souldiers, and valiant Worthies, who were neuer vanquished. For the Lord accepteth the desire for the deed; and if there bee first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that a man hath not, as it is 2. Corinth. 8. 12. So he is accounted blessed, not who hath attained vnto perfect inherent righteousnesse indeed, but he who hungreth after righteousnesse, Math. 5. 6. that is, who hath a sense and feeling of his wants and imperfections, and withall an earnest desire to haue his wants supplied. In which respect one saith, that a just life is alwayes present when we will, because it is justice it selfe if we effectually desire it: neither is there any thing more required to the perfecting of righteousnesse, then to haue a perfect will to imbrace it.

by

Iusta verò vita cum volumus adest, quia eam ipsam plenè velle iustitia est. August. Epist. 45. ad Aruent. Tom. 2.

But yet we must not imagine, that euery flickering and vnconstant desire, proceeding from suddaine passion, and some extraordinary occasion, is pleasing vnto God; for so euery worldling might imagine himselfe to be in the state of grace: but vnto this desire I speake of, there are diuers things required. As first, that this desire bee ioyned with an holy endeuour, and earnest striuing and labouring in the vse of the meanes, whereby wee may attaine vnto those graces which wedo desire: for it is not sufficient that we wish for faith, repentance, and other graces, vnlesse wee endeauour to attaine vnto them, and to this end carefully vse all good meanes ordained of God for the obtaining our desires. Secondly, this desire must not be suddaine like a flash of lightning, vanishing away as soone as it entreth into vs, but wee must constantly persuere in it till it be satisfied. And as Dauid longed at all times after Gods iudgements, so must we long continually after sauing grace and spirituall strength, although wee cannot alwayes doe it with like earnestnesse, as wee may see by comparing Cant. 2. 5. with Chap. 5. 3. Thirdly, it must not be a slight, and indifferent desire, as though we would haue these graces, if we could easily attaine vnto them, otherwise wee doe not greatly care whether wee haue them or no: but it must be very earnest, at least sometime, though not alwayes: So as we may say with Dauid, My soule longeth after thee, O Lord, as the thirstie land. Psal. 63. 1. And, As the Hart brayeth for the riuers of water, so panteth my soule after thee, O God: as it is Psal. 42. 1. And againe; My heart breaketh for the longing that it hath to thy iudgements at all times. Psal. 119. 20. Like the desires of a woman with childe, which can by no meanes be satisfied, vnlesse shee haue her longing. It makes vs like the Spouse in the Canticles euen sicke of loue with Gods graces which wee long after, and at no ease till wee enjoy them. Now our desire will appeare to bee thus earnest when as we are impatient of any delay; Saying (like Rachel) giue mee grace and strength to bring fruits of holinesse, or else I die. And when our soules faint in our longing like a man that is hungry and neere famished; according to that of the Wiseman, hope deferred maketh the heart faint, but when the desire commeth it is a tree of life. Finally, our desires will appeare to be feruent, when as we are inflamed with an an holy anger against all things that crosse vs in them, and with a deuout violence of holy resolutiō doset our selues seriously & courageously against whatsoeuer oppositiō seemes to hinder vs frō obtayning of them. Like the desire of hunger which will breake through a stone wall, and make famished men to tread vnder foot, euen those that doe but a little hinder them from their desired food, as wee see in the example of the hunger-starued Samaritans, 2. King. 7. 17.

Fourthly, this desire is true, and pleasing vnto God, when as it proceedeth from a sense of our owne want and penurie, in regard whereof we are truly humbled. And hereof it is compared to hungring and thirsting; in which two things concurre, first, a sense of want which afflicteth vs, and a desire to haue it supplied.

Fifthly, it is not sufficient that wee haue a continuall and earnest desire of our saluation, vnlesse we desire as earnestly the subordinate causes and meanes tending thereunto; namely, vocation, iustification, sanctification, faith, repentance, and the rest of the graces of Gods Spirit: for euen Balaam himselfe did wish that hee might die the death of the righteous, but his desire was not acceptable to God, because hee wished not also to liue their life: hee desired to die like them, that he might be saued; but he desired not to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life, whereby hee might haue beene assured of saluation.

If therefore we would haue our desires acceptable to God, they must be joyned with an holy endeuour to obtaine those spirituall graces which wee doe desire; they must bee constant, earnest, and proceed from a true sense and feeling of our owne wants, and bee referred as well to the meanes as to the end, and then the desire of grace is the grace it selfe; the desire of faith is faith; the desire of repentance is repentance; not in it owne nature, but in Gods acceptation, who accepteth the will for the deed. According to that excellent saying of Augustine. Hee hath much profited in this life who in his profiting knoweth how farre hee is short of perfect righteousnesse.

Multum in hac vita ille profecit, qui quàm longè sit à perfectione iustitiæ proficiendo cognouit. Aug. de Spirit. & lit. cap. 56.

And in truth this is the chiefe perfection of our righteousnesse, when as we feele our imperfections, and labour earnely after more perfection, * for, wee are Christians rather in our affections and desires then in our workes and abilities; neither doth the Lord bestow vpon his children the full measure of his spirit and the graces thereof in this life, but onely the first fruits, which are as it were but an handfull of corne in respect of the whole field, and the earnest to assure vs of the rest, which is but as a peny in respect of many thousands, which are confirmed vnto vs thereby, as the Apostle speaketh. Rom. 8. 23. 2. Cor. 1. 22. and 5. 5. True it is indeed that God dispenseth and bestoweth his spirit and the graces thereof vpon some of his children in greater measure, and vpon some in lesse, euen as the first fruits may be a greater or lesser handfull, and the earnest is sometimes a peny, and sometimes a shilling, sometimes more and sometimes lesse; but yet the greatest measure which any receiue, is but as an handfull of the first fruits, and an earnest-peny in respect of the maine summe and full measure, which the Lord hath hereby assured vs that he will bestow vpon vs in his kingdome; and he that hath receiued the least earnest, hath as full and perfect assurance of the whole bargaine, which God hath couenanted to make good vnto vs, as hee who hath receiued the greatest, according to the nature of an earnest, to which the measure of grace here receiued is compared. But wherein doth this measure of grace and chiefe perfection of a Christian consist in this life? Surely, not in their workes, for they are all imperfect, and so full of corruptions that they are odious in Gods sight, being considered in themselues, and examined by the rule of his exact iustice; neither in their inherent righteousnes, and begun sanctification; for when they are at the holiest they are polluted with the reliques of originall corruption, which bring forth the fruits of actuall transgressions, and make vs vnable to doe the good wee would, in that manner and measure which wee should. And therefore those which are most righteous are not in this respect acceptable to God: but herein the perfection of a Christian consisteth, when as seeing his imperfections, wants and sinnes, he is grieued and truly humbled with the sight and sense of his owne miserie and wretchednesse; and disclaiming and rejecting his owne righteousnesse and good workes, doth flee vnto our Sauiour Christ, hungring after his righteousnesse, & by a liuely faith applying vnto his wounded soule his merits and obedience, doth looke for saluation in him alone; And lastly, when as in obedience to his commandement, and in true thankfulnesse for his infinite mercies hee hath an earnest desire to glorifie his Name, by a godly and Christian life, striuing and endeuouring continually to forsake his sins, to mortifie his corruption, and to attaine vnto more and more perfection in righteousnesse and holinesse. For, It is the greatest part of Christianitie to desire with the whole heart to become a Christian.

Q. Sect. 4. The Christians perfection consisteth in desiring and labouring after perfection.

If therefore we doe keepe the couenant of the Lord, nay, if wee but thinke vpon his Commandements, to the end wee may doe them, the louing kindnesse of the Lord shall endure for euer vpon vs, as it is Psal. 103. 17. 18. if we can from our heart say with good Nehemiah, O Lord, I beseech thee let thine eare

Q. Sect. 5. The former point proued by testimonies of Scripture. Psal. 103. 17. Nehem 1. 11.

eare now hearken to the prayer of thy seruant and to the prayer of thy seruants who desire to feare thy Name; the Lord will heare vs indeed and grant our requests. If with the Prophet Dauid wee haue but respect of Gods Commandements, with a care to fulfill them, we shall not be confounded. If we but desire to obey Gods commandement, the Lord will accomplish our desire, and quicken vs in his righteousnesse, though we be dull, yea dead vnto all goodnesse. If with the Apostle Paul wee doe the euill which wee would not, and consent to the law that it is good, delighting therein in the inner man; then though wee are with him led captiue vnto sinne, yet it is not wee that offend, but sinne that dwelleth in vs, that is, our old man, our corrupt and vnregenerate part, which cannot fitly be called by our name, because it is mortified alreadie in some measure, and shall be fully abolished by the Spirit of God. Neither doth it liue the same spirituall life with vs, seeing it is not quickned by the same spirit: and therefore as those who haue diuers soules, which giue vnto them life and motion, are themselues diuers and also called by diuers names; so the new and old man liuing as it were by diuers soules, the one being quickned with Gods Spirit, the other by Sathan (whereof it commeth to passe, that the more the one liueth the other dieth, the more strong the spirit is, the weaker is the flesh; and the actions of both are quite contrary) therefore they may fitly be called by diuers names: neither can the actions of the flesh be ascribed to the spirit; seeing they are contrary the one to the other. For as if a cion of a crab tree, and another of a pepin tree being grafted into the same stocke doe both bring forth their seuerall fruits, the one crabs, the other pepins, it may fitly bee said this tree bringeth forth either pepins or crabs, because they grow in the same stocke; but yet it cannot be truly said that the crab tree cion bringeth forth pepins, or the pepin cion crabs: so because the flesh and the spirit are joyned together in the same bodie and soule, wee may in this respect say that this man sinneth, or doth that which is good; but yet when wee speake of the regenerate or carnall man properly and seuerally, as wee cannot truly say that the flesh doth any manner of good, so neither can wee truly affirme that the spirit and regenerate man doth commit that which is euill, but (as the Apostle speaketh) sinne which dwelleth with him. And though the flesh be the farre greater part, yet doth it not denominate and giue the name to the Christian & his actions, because it is partly mortified, partly in mortifying, and partly to be mortified, that is, deputed and destinated to death and destruction; and also because it is the worse and more vnworthy part without compare, and consequently not to giue the name. For as wine mixt with water is called still wine, though the water exceed the wine in quantitie, because it is the more excellent substance; so the flesh being mixt with the spirit, though it be in greater quantitie, it doth not giue the name to vs and our actions, but the spirit, as being our more excellent and worthy part; and of it wee are called spirituall, regenerate and new men, though the least part be spirituall, regenerate and renued. If therefore we are regenerate, and haue in vs the Spirit of God, and the graces thereof in the least measure, wee may boldly say with Paul, that it is no more we that doe offend God, but sinne that dwelleth in vs; neither shall wee receiue punishment but the flesh, that is, our vnregenerate and corrupt part, which shall be mortified and fully abolished by the Spirit of God; as for the spirituall and regenerate part, it shall daily bee more and more strengthened and confirmed in the spirituall life, and the more punishments, afflictions and torments the flesh hath inflicted on it, the more shall the spirituall man grow vp in grace and goodnesse, till our corruption being by little and little mortified, and in the end fully abolished by death, wee shall bee perfect men in Christ, liuing a spirituall and euerlasting life in all glory and happinesse in his kingdome. When therefore the Lord suffereth Satan to afflict vs in our goods, bodies, and in our soules and consciences, as he did Iob, it is not because he hath forsaken vs & giuen ouer his whole interest hee hath in vs to this wicked spirit, but, as the Apostle speaketh in another matter, he deliuereth vs vnto Satan (to bee afflicted) for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saued in the day of the Lord Iesus, 1. Cor. 5. 5.

It may be that the worke of mortification and regeneration doth goe slowly forward, and the Lord may for a time let our corruptions beare great sway in vs, to the end hee may hereby truly humble vs with the sight of our infirmities, and take away from vs all selfe-confidence, presumption and cause of boasting, and make vs wholly to relie vpon his mercie and Christs merits: but though it goe on slowly, yet it shall goe surely, because it is not begun and continued by our selues, for wee cannot so much as thinke a good thought, but all our sufficiencie is of God, as it is 2. Cor. 3. 5. neither can we so much as will and desire that which is acceptable in Gods sight, for it is he that worketh in vs the will and the deed, euen of his good pleasure, as it is Phil. 2. 13. And therefore these holy desires, which are the beginnings and first fruits of regeneration, being the worke of Gods Spirit, he will finish and perfect that which he hath begun, till at last we be fully freed from our corruption, and indued with vnspotted holinesse and sanctification.

9. Sect.6. If we earnestly desire perfection, the Lord will perfect vs, and in the meane time pardon our imperfections.

If therefore we haue but a desire to forsake our sinnes, and to attaine vnto true sanctification, this desire is Gods worke, which he will finish and accomplish, according to that *Psal.*145.19. He will fulfill the desire of them that feare him. For if the Lord doe euen presse vpon vs whilest wee doe not desire his company; if he stand waking and knocking at the doore of our hearts, calling and crying vnto vs that wee will open and giue him entrance; when his holy Spirit hath inflamed vs with true loue of him, and opened our hearts with an earnest desire to haue him enter; will hee now thinke you goe away and refuse to come in when wee inuite him? No assuredly, for he hath promised the contrary, *Reuel.*3.20. Behold (saith he) I stand at the doore and knocke: if any man heare my voice and open the doore, I will come in vnto him & sup with him, and he with me; that is, I will make him a rich banquet of my heauenly graces, and giue him to drinke the water of life, of which whosoeuer drinketh shall neuer be more athirst, but it shall be in him a well of water springing vp into euerlasting life, as our Sauiour speaketh, Iohn 4.14. So our Sauiour Christ calleth such as thirst vnto him, If any man thirst, let him come to mee and drinke: And, I will giue to him that is athirst of the well of the water of life freely. If therefore wee haue a thirsting desire after Gods Spirit and the graces thereof, we shall in Gods good time bee satisfied, and filled with the full measure of them. And in the meane time though our infirmities be neuer so great and manifold, yet in Christ God will be well pleased with vs, when as our corruptions doe displease our selues, so that we earnestly desire to bee freed from them, and to serue the Lord in righteousnesse and holinesse of life. For the Lord esteemeth more of our will than of our deedes, and of our holy endeuour than of our best workes, because this is the seruice and sacrifice of our hearts, wherewith aboue all other things he is most delighted: and therefore, Da cor Deo & sufficit, Giue thy heart to God and it sufficeth, *Prou.*23.26.

10. Sect.7. The former point illustrated by diuers similitudes, Esay 49.15. and 66.13. *Mal.*3.17.

For the Lord is our most gracious Father, whose loue farre exceedeth the loue euen of tender mothers, Esay 49.15. Looke therefore what affection the tender father or mother beareth and sheweth towardes their child: and such, nay, infinitely more will the Lord shew towards vs as himselfe professeth. *Mal.*3.17. And I will spare them, as a man spares his owne sonne that serueth him. Now we know that if a child endeuour to doe his dutie, and striue to doe his best, though through want of power or skill hee is not able to doe as hee would, those things which his father injoyned him; there is no louing father but will winke at his imperfections, and accept his will; commending his obedience and dutifull endeuour, though the worke in it selfe deserue no commendations: how much more therefore will our heauenly father, whose loue is infinite and without all compare, bee well pleased with vs in the middest of our infirmities, if wee haue a desire and care to serue him? The Lord is our shepherd, and wee his flocke and the sheepe of his pasture, as it is *Psal.*23.1. and Iohn 10. Now if a sheepe be intangled in the briars, so as he cannot follow the shepheard, though hee heare his voice calling vnto him, yet if hee struggle and striue to come out to the vttermost of his power, and bleat for the shepheards helpe, when he cannot help himselfe, hereby it appeareth that he is one of his flocke, which the good shepheard will not suffer to be lost; whereas indeed if hee want not power alone, but will also to bee freed and to follow after, it is cleere that hee belongeth to another sheepfold: so if when we are intangled in the briars of our corruptiõs, and so hindred with our imperfections, that we cannot follow the great Shepheard of our soules Iesus Christ in the path of righteousnesse, which leadeth to the sheepfold of euerlasting happinesse, though wee heare his voice calling vnto vs; yet if with the silly sheepe wee struggle and striue to bee freed from the snares of sinne, and when we cannot free our selues by our own power, doe as it were bleate, and after our sheepish manner implore the helpe of our carefull shepheard; crying out with the Apostle Paul (that blessed sheepe of Christ) Wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer mee from the body of this death? then will our louing shepheard Iesus Christ in his good time come and loose vs, and if with strugling in the briars of sin wee are so disabled that wee cannot goe, hee will take vs like the strayed sheepe vpon his shoulders, and carry vs by the wayes of righteousnesse into his sheepfold of euerlasting happinesse. Neither can it possibly be that our heauenly shepheard, who of purpose came into the World to seeke vs whilest wee were lost, and spent three and thirtie yeeres in following & finding vs, who were wandring and strayed sheepe, crying and calling vnto vs euen till hee became hoarse with loud cryes, and passing thorow the thornie wayes of troubles and persecution, till he had shed his precious bloud, and finally laid downe his life for our sakes; should now turne away his eyes and stop his eares when his sheepe desire to follow him, and earnestly earnestly implore his helpe, finding their owne weakenesse and vnabilitie to come so swiftly to him as they should. The Lord is our Sauiour and Redeemer, who hath not spared his owne precious bloud, but hath giuen it to his Father as the price of our redemption, that wee might bee deliuered out of the captiuitie of the Deuill, in which we were detained, as it is 1. Tim. 2. 6. If therefore we haue a sense of our captiuitie, and a desire to be set at libertie, being wearie of our misery, and vnwilling to stay any longer in this cruell bondage; our Sauiour Christ will redeeme vs, for to this end hee came into the world, as appeareth Luke 4. 18. And though like vnto poore captiues who (hauing long time beene clogged with heauy bolts, and galled with strong chaines) haue their limbs so benummed and sore, that they cannot goe after they are freed out of prison; so we, after we haue long beene detained in Satans captiuitie, fettred with chaines of sinne, and clogged with the heauy bolts of our corruptions, be so galled and benummed, that we cannot swiftly follow Christ our Redeemer in the wayes of righteousnes vnto his kingdome of glory, but halt and stumble euery step through our infirmitie and weakenesse; yet if we haue an earnest desire of comming after him, then surely he hath giuen this inestimable price for our redemption, will not now leaue vs in the hands of his and our enemies; but will feed vs with the food of his Word and Sacraments, and strengthen and support vs with his holy Spirit, inabling vs with the graces thereof to follow his steps, till hauing obtained full libertie wee arriue at his kingdome of euerlasting glory.

*Psal.*23.1. Iohn 10.

*Rom.*7.24.

1. Tim. 2. 6. and 2. Tim. 2. 26.

Luke 4. 18.

Lastly, that I may fit the similitude to the spirituall conflict whereof we speake. If we haue an earnest desire of ouercomming our spirituall enemies, and withstanding their temptations, whereby they labour to draw vs to sinne; we may be assured we are Christs souldiers, how weakly soeuer we fight when wee come to the encounter. For though a souldier through sickenesse bee so infeebled that he cannot weld his weapon against the enemie: yet if he march forward, and shew a couragious heart and earnest desire to ouercome, it will hereby plainly appeare that he is faithfull to his Captaine, & therefore hee shall receiue his pay, though at the first onset his limbs should faint vnder him. And so if through sinne we haue our spirituall man so weakned, that he is readie to faint at the first incounter with our spirituall enemies, yet if we march vnder Christs standerd, and fight the battailes of the Lord of Hosts, hauing an earnest desire euen aboue our strength to ouercome our enemies, surely Christ our grand Captaine will acknowledge vs for his souldiers, and will giue vs our pay, euen a crowne of victorie: and seeing his power is omnipotent and his loue incomprehensible, wee may make sure account that if in the fight wee receiue a foile, hee will stand ouer vs to defend vs with the shield of his prouidence and raise vs vp againe: yea if we be taken prisoners and led away captiue by sinne and Satan, he will rescue and deliuer vs. There is no discredit accreweth to a souldier by receiuing wounds, or being by vnresistable violence taken prisoner; nay, rather it argueth his valour, and sheweth that the inuincible courage of his mind doth farre surpasse the weake force of his bodie; but rather hereby is a souldier disgraced, if either he dare not march into the field, or being entred the battle doth shamefully flee away, or cowardly yeeld vnto the enemy: so in this spirituall warfare it is no dishonour to receiue foiles and wounds of our spirituall enemies, for the most valiant souldiers that euer fought the Lords battels, haue sustained the like: nay, if in the fight they be taken prisoners, yet so they resist to the vttermost of their power, and shew an earnest desire to bee out of the captiuitie of sinne and Sathan, this is acceptable to their Captaine Christ, and hee will in pitie and compassion restore them to libertie. But if rather than they would endure the danger of the fight, they professe themselues friends to sinne and Sathan; or if hauing professed themselues Christs souldiers, they at the first encounter of their spirituall enemies tempting them to any sinne, doe forsake Christs standard shamefully, or cowardly yeeld to sinne and Satan, voluntarily liuing in their slauerie without desire of libertie: then either they shew themselues notable cowards, worthy to be cashiered out of Gods Campe; or traiterous rebels, who though outwardly they made a profession that they were Christs souldiers, yet in heart they desired to serue Satan.

§. Sect. 8. That those are Christs souldiers who haue a desire of ouercomming their spirituall enemies.

Here therefore is incouragement for the weake Christian who is discouraged and ashamed to looke his Redeemer Iesus Christ in the face, because of the manifold foiles which he receiueth in this spirituall combat; for howsoeuer before the fight of temptations he resolueth manfully to make resistance and to ouercome, yet when the Deuill strongly assaulteth, the world flattereth or frowneth, and the flesh treacherously betrayeth him, fighting secretly with whole legions of vnlawfull lusts against the spirit, then is hee foiled and often taken captiue of sinne. But let such to their comfort know, that if they continue their earnest desire of fighting still the Lords battailes, and ouercomming their spirituall enemies, they are accepted of Iesus Christ, and in the end hee will giue them strength to obtaine a finall victory. And that their manifold foiles and griesly wounds which they receiue of sinne and Satan may not discourage them; let them consider, that neuer any entred the battle (our chiefe Captaine Christ excepted) but they haue beene subject to the like. Adam who was the stron gest Champion in his owne strength that euer entred the lists, was ouerthrowne at the first encounter, and taken captiue of sinne: in which bondage hee should euer haue remained, had not Christ redeemed him. Noah was ouercome with drunkennesse; and Lot added thereunto incest. Dauid a notable souldier in fighting the Lords battels, was made a slaue to his owne lusts. Peter a stout Champion, ran away and forsooke his master. In a word, there was neuer any that liued, who haue not beene foiled by Satan, and wounded with sinne. One perhaps receiueth more and deeper wounds, or is longer held captiue in the chaines of sinne than another; but none haue escaped altogether. And those who haue receiued the most grieuous hurts, so they haue an earnest desire to haue those wounds healed which sinne hath made in their consciences, to the end they may bee enabled to renew the fight against their spirituall enemies; may assure themselues that Christ the good Samaritan and their most carefull captaine, will powre the oyle of his grace and mercie, and the precious balme of his bloud into their wounds, which will as easily cure them, though they be many and griesly, as if they were but few, and (as it were) but small scratches.

§. Sect. 9. Consolations for those who are vnwillingly foyled in the spirituall conflict.

That Gods most valiant souldiers haue receiued foiles.

9. Sect. 10. That Satan preuaileth against vs not by his absolute power, but by Gods permission.

And so much concerning the first consolation, which may serue for the comforting and raising vp of those who are fallen. In the second place wee are to consider that Satan foileth vs and causeth vs to fall into sinne, not at his pleasure nor by his owne absolute power, but because the Lord hath said, thou shalt thus preuaile for the further manifestation of my glory. For therefore the Lord doth leaue his children sometimes to themselues, so that being assaulted by Satan they fall into sinne, and bewray their infirmities and corruption; to the end hee may shew hereby and declare the riches of his power, mercie, and goodnesse, which otherwise would not so manifestly appeare. And this

2. Cor. 12. 8, 9. the Apostle plainly sheweth, 2. Cor. 12. 8, 9, 10. where hee saith that hee besought the Lord thrice that he might be deliuered from the pricke in the flesh and the messenger of Satan, which did buffet him: but the Lord returned him this answere, My grace is sufficient for thee, for my power is made perfect through weakenesse; after which answere receiued, the Apostle quieteth himselfe notwithstanding his infirmities, nay, glorieth in them, rather then in his reuelations, as hee

Verse 9. professeth saying, Very gladly therefore will I reioyce rather in mine infirmities, that the power of Christ may dwell in mee. Though then our infirmities be great and our falles many, yet are wee not to be altogether discouraged thereby, seeing it is the will of God that we should thus bewray our infirmities and corruptions, to the end his power, mercie and goodnesse, may be made the more manifest, and that both vnto our selues, and vnto others. For such is our spirituall blindnesse and secret pride, that if wee should alwayes alike withstand the temptations of Satan, without receiuing any foile, and neuer fall into any sinne, wee would be readie to thinke that we stood by our own strength, and so ascribe the praise of victorie to our selues, thereby robbing God of the honour due vnto him: and also for the time to come, wee would relie vpon our selues rather then on the Lords assistance; then the which nothing could bee more dishonourable vnto God, nor pernicious vnto our owne soules. But when as in the spirituall combate of temptations, wee sometimes stand and sometimes fall, sometimes resist those assaults which are strong & violent, & another time faint and yeeld in the lightest trials: this maketh it apparent that it is not our owne power, which in it selfe is not much vnlike at all times; but the power of God, which sustaineth vs sometimes, that we may not be wholly discouraged; and sometimes withdraweth it selfe, that we may by receiuing foiles learn to know our infirmities, and wholly to rely our selues on the Lords assistance, returning all the prayse of victory to the Lord, who onely hath sustained vs. As therefore our infirmities in respect of our selues, should serue to abate our pride, and to worke in vs true humiliation and vtter despaire in our owne strength: so in respect that they shew vnto vs the Lords power supporting vs, they should the rather incourage vs to fight the spirituall combate, with assured hope of victory, seeing it is manifest that wee stand not by our owne power, which like a broken staffe or crackt weapon would faile vs when wee did most trust and relie vpon it, but by the almightie power of God, against which neither Satan nor the gates of Hell can any iot preuaile. And in this regard we may well rejoyce in our infirmities with the Apostle Paul, because by reason of them it more manifestly appeareth that the power of Christ dwelleth in vs, which is able to defend vs from Satans malice and violent rage, not only when we stand manfully in the encounter, but also when we are foiled and put to the worst.

That the Lord suffereth vs to fall for the manifestation of his owne power, mercy, and goodnes, and for our humiliation.

9. Sect. 11. Gods power most clearely appeareth in our weakenes.

Yea in this respect the more weake and full of infirmities the poore Christian is, the more is the prayse of Gods glorious might manifested and magnified. For when Satan, who is so malitious, puissant and politicke an enemie, hath long time assaulted a silly weake man or woman, and yet cannot wholly ly preuaile, but returneth away foiled and ouercome; it must needes bee confessed that they are assisted and strengthened by some superiour power which farre excelleth Satan in strength and policie; whereas it seemeth no such wonder when as the strong Christian, who hath obtained a great measure of knowledge, faith, and other graces, giueth Satan the repulse. Neither are men so readie to ascribe the prayse of victory to the Lord, because his immediate power and helping hand doth not so manifestly appeare; although in truth their victory also commeth wholly from him, for without his gifts and graces, they were as feeble and vnable to stand as the weakest; but yet the weaker and smaller the meanes are, the more manifest is the Lords power and wisdome, who hereby doth accompliſh things which are aboue the power of men and Angels. For example; the power and goodnesse of God appeareth great, when as he prouideth for vs food conuenient, and giueth strength thereto to nourish and sustaine vs; and yet it is more manifest, when as he so strengtheneth vs by vertue of one meale that wee need no more in fortie dayes, as he did Elias; but then it shineth as it were in his full strength, when as hee sustaineth vs without any food at all, as he did Moses and our Sauiour Christ. So it is made manifest when as hee giueth vs victory ouer our enemies, though there be some equality in the numbers & other preparations, for it is he that teacheth our hands to warre and our fingers to fight: but it is more euident when as our number is small, as when hee deliuered the Israelites by Gedeon, and his three hundred men, from an innumerable army; and ouercame the whole host of the Philistims, by the weake meanes of Ionathan and his armour-bearer: but then it is most cleere and manifest, when as hee ouercommeth our enemies by his own immediate power, as hee did the Egyptians in the red Sea, and the host of Senacherib at the siege of Ierusalem. And so when hee giueth the strong Christian who is full of grace, victory ouer Satan, his power appeareth; for vnlesse he were strengthned with his graces, he could not stand: but when one who seemeth in his owne eyes destitute of grace, and full of sinne and corruption (so, that he plainly seeth that hee is altogether vnable to withstand the least assault) is notwithstanding so supported by Gods almightie hand, and immediate power, that he doth not onely stand in the battell, but in the end obtaineth victory; hereby the power and goodnes of God most cleerely appeares to himselfe and all the world. Seeing then our sinnes and falls doe shew vnto vs our own infirmities and weakneſse, and these doe declare Gods vnresistable power and might, which notwithstanding our feeblenesse doth vphold vs: therefore let vs so despaire in our selues, as that thereby we may be moued to relie wholly vpon the Lord, hauing so much more hope of victory as the strength of God excelleth the strength of man. Let vs be so humbled with a true sense and sorrow for our owne infirmities and corruption, as that in the mean time we may receiue more sound consolation and true joy; because wee stand not by our own strength, which euery houre would faile vs, but by the power of Gods might. And therfore though Satan and all the power of Hell conspire and band themselues against vs, yet shall they not preuaile; and though they foile vs, yet shall they neuer finally ouercome; for hee that is with vs is stronger then all they who are against vs; and the greater our weaknesse is, the fitter occasion shall the Lord haue of shewing his omnipotent power in giuing vs victory.

But if hauing bewrayed thine infirmities, and gotten a foile in the spirituall conflict, thou presently be discouraged and despaire of victory, surely it is a manifest signe that thou diddest trust too little in Gods assistance, & too much in thine owne strength, which because it hath failed, thou hast cast away all hope: and the greater thy horrour and despaire is which followeth thy fall, the greater was thy selfe-confidence, and the lesse thy affiance in God. For he that altogether relieth vpon the Lords assistance, and wholly distrusteth his owne strength when hee falleth in the time of temptation, is not much astonished with any great wonder, knowing that through his owne infirmitie and weakneſse, hee is most apt to fall when God leaueth him to himselfe; neither is hee vtterly discouraged and ouer-whelmed with despaire, as though now there were no meanes to stand in the spirituall combate, and to obtaine victory; but hating, and with a peaceable and quiet sorrow mourning for his sinne, because thereby he hath dishonoured his God, and offended his diuine majestie, he doth not abate his hope; but with lesse confidence in himselfe and more confidence in God, he renues the fight against his spirituall enemies, with vndaunted courage, knowing that the Lord in whom hee trusteth and wholly relieth will neuer faile him. And therefore let vs no more rest in our selues, if euer wee would enjoy the peace of conscience, or would haue any assurance of the Lords assistance; for he will be all in all, neither can he abide any sharing in the glory of the victory: and therefore so long as wee trust in our owne strength, and fight with our owne forces, hee will withdraw his helpe, till our often falles and foiles haue taught vs to know our owne infirmities and corruptions, that so despairing wholly in our owne strength, we may peaceably rest vpon his almightie power, & promised assistance.

Sect. 12. Horror, feare and despaire following our falls, argue our diffidence in God, & selfe-confidence.

Q. Sect. 13. The last consolation, taken from the experience which we haue had of the Lords assistance.

Lastly, let those who are truly humbled in regard of those foiles which they receiue in the spirituall conflict, comfort themselues by the experience of Gods loue, care, and goodnesse, both towards others & themselues; for how many haue beene cast downe as well as they, and yet haue in the end beene raised vp? how many haue sorrowed and mourned, that now rejoyce and haue receiued comfort; how many haue taken notable foiles & grieuous fals in the spiritual conflict, & yet in the end haue obtained victory? In a word who hath depended vpon the Lord, and hath been rejected? who hath beene truely humbled, and hath not beene comforted; who hath fought against their spirituall enemies, and hath not by the Lords assistance ouercome? And is the Lords arme now shortned, or are his mercies come to an end? hath he forgotten to be gracious, or hath he shut vp his louing kindnesse in displeasure? Nay, rather say it is thine owne infirmitie, for the Lord is the same hee was, without change or shadow of change, and therefore as hee hath comforted and strengthened and giuen victory vnto others, so will hee comfort and strengthen and giue vnto thee a famous victory ouer thy spirituall enemies, if thou wilt depend vpon him and wait his leisure. But if this will not comfort thee when thou hearest of Gods mercie and assistance in supporting others, yet at least let thine owne experience confirme thee in the assurance of Gods loue & succor: for, hast thou not indured many assaults of thy spirituall enemies, and yet thou standest in the incounter? but I pray thee by whose strength? surely not thine owne, for thou art weake and feeble, and thine enemies strong and mightie, and therefore able to destroy thee euery minute, if the Lord did not support thee by his Almightie power. Hast thou not also receiued many foiles, and bewrayed notable corruptions, and yet thou art not quite ouerthrown nor swallowed vp by thy sinnes? And who hath preserued thee? surely not thy selfe; for if thou canst not stand against Sathan whilest thou art fighting, much lesse couldest thou rise vp againe when thou art cast down; but it is the Spirit of the Lord who hath raised thee vp by vnfained repentance, & hath renewed thy strength, so that againe thou art readie to withstand and resist Sathan and his temptations. Why therefore shouldest thou feare left Sathan will in the end ouercome & destroy thee? why shouldest thou doubt of the Lords assistance in the time to come, of which thou hast had sufficient experience in times past? seeing himselfe is vnchangeable and his gifts without repentance, and therefore those whom hee hath defended hee will defend, those that he hath once raised vp, he will euer raise vp, and to whomsoeuer hee hath giuen grace to withstand their spirituall enemies, to those hee will continue and increase his grace, till in the end they haue a finall victory, and the crowne of victory, euerlasting glory.

THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE FISRT PART OF THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

INTREATING OF SATHANS speciall and particular temptations, which hee suggesteth against the seuerall causes of our saluation; and of the answeres whereby they are to be refuted and repelled.

CHAP. I.

Comforts against confused feares and terrours of conscience, wherewith the weake Christian is vsually troubled at his first conuersion.

§. Sect. 1. Of the temptations of Satan which are vnreasonable, and first of terrors & feares, and of the causes why God suffereth the faithfull to be thus afflicted.

WEE haue shewed in the former Booke the common affections of the Christian conflict, namely, his manfull withstanding Satans encounters, and also his fainting and falling into sin. Now wee are to speake of the speciall temptations themselues, and the meanes whereby we may be strengthened against them. The speciall temptations of Sathan wherewith he assaulteth the weake Christian, are either vnreasonable and violent, or else such as are subtill and politike, grounded vpon some probable shew of reason. Of the former sort are those terrours and feares wherewith hee affrighteth the Christian newly conuerted vnto God, or temptations of command. For no sooner doth a man giue his name to Christ, and endeuour to come out of the miserable thraldome of Satan, leauing his former sinnes, and endeuouring to leade a new life, but presently he purseueth him with all his forces, and affrighteth him with all his terrors. And as the Israelites were no sooner escaped out of the bondage of Egypt, but presently they were pursued with Pharaoh, and his hoast, and beset on all sides with difficulties and dangers, so assoone as God giueth vs ouer them of the deliuerance, and cyther shroud our soule so as some as faithfull he escape the bondage and cruell captiuitie of the spirituall Egypt, Satan the Prince of darkenesse pursueth them with all his might, and so assaulteth and encloseth them on all sides with his terrors and feares, that they are oftentimes brought into a doubtfull deliberation, what they were best to doe, whether to goe forward in their spirituall march towards the holy land, notwithstanding all these difficulties and dangers, or to returne againe into their wretched thraldome, that they may recouer their former securitie and peace, and haue the quiet fruition of the fleshpots of Egypt, euen their carnall pleasures, and worldly profits. But as Satan intendeth in this pursute the destruction of Gods children, or to recouer them againe into his seruitude to their vtter ruine; Gall which he powerfully effecteth in the vessels of wrath, and children of rebellion, so contrariwise the Lord disposeth of all this to the good of his true Israelites, and maketh way thereby for their full and finall deliuerance. For therefore hee suffereth the spirituall Pharaoh to pursue them with all his forces, to affright them with feares and terrours, & to bring them into many straits, difficulties and dangers, that distrusting their owne strength, and vtterly despairing of deliuerance by their owne meanes, they may be moued to flie vnto God, when they can flie no way else, and to cry out vnto him for helpe and succour, when they are abandoned of all other hopes. And so the Lord hauing ouercome with their earnest prayers and strong cryes, taketh occasion to glorifie his great and glorious name, and to manifest his irresistable power in the destruction and ouerthrow ouerthrow of their enemies, and in their marueilous and mightie deliuerance out of that seruile subiection. So also by these troubles and trials he maketh way for repentance and for their true conuersion vnto him; and by these seruile feares hee fitteth and prepareth their hearts for the entertaining of holy and sonne-like feare, which is the head of wisdome and roote of godlinesse. For hereby their hearts are bruised and made contrite, which are naturally most stiffe and obdurate, and so humbled that they become fit grounds to receiue the seeds of faith, repentance, and all other sanctifying and saluing graces; hereby their thraldome vnder Satan appeareth more odious and irkesome, that being deliuered they may be more carefull to keepe themselues from comming againe into this cruell bondage; hereby they are moued to abhorre their former sinnes, as being the causes of all these troubles; and haue their consciences made so tender by enduring these feares and terrors, that they would not bee perswaded willingly to wound them by committing any knowne sinne, with all the pleasures and preferments of the world. Finally, the greater their horrour and perplexitie hath beene, the greater is their ioy and comfort in their deliuerance, the greater also their thankfulnesse towards God, by whose mercy & might they are deliuered. All which should serue as effectuall reasons to moue all Christians afflicted with these troubles, and assaulted with these dangers, to beare with patience these horrours and feares, and to waite the Lords leisure for their deliuerance; seeing the Lord disposeth of them for their spirituall good, working by these feares, true securitie, and making these terrors to prepare a way for ioyfull peace and tranquillitie of minde, which shall neuer be taken from them.

§. Sect. 2. Of confused feares which haue no ground, but melancholy abused by Satans subtiltie, and how he worketh on this humour.

Now these terrours are either so confused, that the weake Christian in the middest of his feares knoweth not what he feareth; or else they are grounded vpon some supposed and imagined cause. The former commonly proceed from a mixture of melancholy, with Satans malicious subtilty, whereby he taketh occasion by abusing this humour to worke the ouerthrow of the partie thus affected and afflicted. For that these spirituall terrours and feares are not to be ascribed to nature alone, it may appeare by all such who abounding with this melancholike humour, are not subiect to terrours and feares of this kind, howsoeuer they are naturally timorous; as also by all those contrariwise, who being of other complexions are much afflicted with them. And finally by the experience of Physicians, who though they be able by meanes of physicke to purge and correct this humour, so as it is brought vnto iust temperature with the rest, yet can they not aid their patients of these terrible feares, till the mind and conscience by the helpe of Diuinitie, and powerfull perswasions out of Gods Word be setled and quieted. Neither will their conceit appeare to be well grounded who imagine that these terrors proceed from meere melancholy, because such as abound with this humour are most subiect vnto them; if they consider (as before I haue shewed) that Sathan in his policie fitting his temptations according to the nature, temperature, and disposition of the partie whom he assaulteth, doth thinke these terrors and feares his fittest weapons to preuaile with those who abound with melancholy: for finding them naturally timorous and of an heauie spirit, hee perceiueth that hee cannot easily keepe them asleepe in carnall securitie, for as much as they are naturally fearefull of their estate, and apt to make many doubts of their saluation, nor bewitch them with worldly delights, in which they take no great pleasure & contentment. And therefore following their humour he laboureth to thrust them head-long that way whereunto naturally, or accidentally they encline; and labourcth so wholly to possesse and oppresse them with affrighting terrors, and vncomfortable feares, that they taking pleasure in nothing, & finding themselues vnfit for any good dutie, may grow altogether impatient of their condition, and wearie of their liues. And therefore seeing the cause of this malady is mixt, proceeding partly from Satans subtiltie, and partly from the superfluitie of a naturall humour, and seeing the parts affected are diuers, the Deuils temptations troubling the minde, and melancholicke humours ouer-burthening & distempering the chiefe parts of the bodie, which are the soules organs and instruments whereby it worketh; it followeth that for the perfecting of the cure there bee applied mixt remedies, and that both the Diuine and Physicion doe ioyne together, because as perswasions are not auaileable to purge the superfluous humours of the bodie; so pils or potions cannot worke vpon the mind, nor any cordiall comfort vpon the afflicted conscience surcharged with terrours and feares, and grieuously molested with the temptations of the Deuill. For howsoeuer it is true (as I haue also found it by mine owne experience) that some exceedingly abounding with melancholy, and grieuously afflicted, with doubtings, feares and many temptations (notwithstanding that they haue vtterly refused all meanes of physicke) haue by comfortable perswasions in the publike ministery and in priuate conference, and by the euidence of truth appearing in both, and applied vnto them by the inward operation of Gods holy Spirit, beene strengthened against all temptations, satisfied in all their doubts, quieted in respect of their feares, assured of their saluation, uation, and throughly setled in their minds with much peace and spirituall comfort, though the aboundance of this melancholike humour haue remained in them: yet this is seldome seene, and to be accounted an extraordinary worke of Gods holy Spirit, whereby hee would manifest his diuine power aboue the course of all naturall causes; the which neuertheleſſe is not vsually perfected but in long time, by plentifull meanes of working this comfort and consolation, and great paines and diligence in the vse of them. In regard whereof it behoueth all thus afflicted, that (not thinking what God can doe, or what he hath done in some extraordinary cases, to shew the omnipotencie of his power) they vse the ordinary meanes which hee hath prescribed; and joyne the Physicions counsell for the abating and correcting of their melancholy, with the perswasions and comforts of the Diuine; seeing this superfluous humor is the chiefe instrument which Satan abuseth to worke their ouerthrow, and the most deadly wounding weapon, which he draweth out against them in this combate of temptations. And therefore howsoeuer it is possible through the extraodinary assistance of Gods holy Spirit to ouercome this our enemie, and to obtaine the victory when hee is armed at all points, and in his full strength; yet if wee disarme him of his chiefe weapons, and take away the meanes whereby hee is enabled to maintaine the warre against vs, wee shall obtaine against him a more certaine, speedie and easie conquest.

§. Sect.3. Of the spirituall meanes whereby the weake Christian may be eased of these terrours.

Howbeit wee are not to rest wholly in these naturall helps, seeing the cause is in part spirituall and supernaturall; but hauing by the helpe of physicke vnburthened the bodie of these melancholicke humours, wee also labour also that our minds may bee comforted, strengthened and refreshed against these troublesome feares, and dreadfull passions. And first, if these terrours bee confused and vngrounded, we must labour to bring them to some head, and to search out as much as in vs lieth, the particular causes of them, that so by their remoouall wee may find secure peace, and quiet comfort. For as hee who hath a swelling in any part of his body, can find no ease so long as the corruption is dispersed, till it be drawne to a head, and thereby euacuated: so as long as those corrupt causes of our terrours and feares are confusedly seated in our minds, there is little ease or comfort to be expected, but when we haue drawne them to some head, so as wee can distinctly poinct at them, we may by removing the cause of our feare, be eased of these terrours and troubles of mind. As therefore it fareth in bodily diseases, wherein the greatest difficultie appertaining to the cure is clearely to discerne what the disease is, and from what causes it proceedeth, which being vnderstood the remedies are easie and readie at hand; so also in these diseases of the soule, there is nothing so hard for the curing of them, as to know distinctly what are the true causes of these terrours and feares; seeing the Lord in his Word hath prouided speciall remedies for euery such maladie, which being fitly applied by Gods spirituall Physicions will easily effect the cure. First, then we are to consider that the chiefe causes of all crosses and calamities are our sinnes which infect our minds and consciences with their guilt, from which guiltinesse proceedeth a fearefull expectation of those punishments to which we know that we are iustly liable; neither can wee euer be freed from this guiltinesse and fearefull terrours, vntill our sinnes being done away wee are justified and reconciled vnto God; for then and not before wee haue peace of conscience, boldnes, & confidence, when as we being assured that God loueth vs, and that wee loue him againe, we can securely rest in all difficulties and dangers vpon his gracious promises, and powerfull prouidence for preseruation and protection. And this the Apostle teacheth vs, where he saith, that there is no feare in loue, but perfect loue casteth out feare; for feare hath paine, and he that feareth is not perfect in loue. So the Wise man telleth vs, that the wicked flie when none pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a Lion. And thus Adam, whilest he walked with God in that innocencie wherein he was created, was bold and feated nothing, but no sooner by his fall was his conscience made guiltie of sinne, but presently hee hideth himselfe in the bushes, feareth he knoweth not what, and flieth before he knoweth an enemy to assault him. So Cain hauing his conscience ouer-burthened with the guilt of his sinne, feareth that euery one that met him would kill him, when as yet there was no enemy to assault him: whereas, contrariwise Dauid being assured of the remission of his sinnes, and of his peace with God, grew hereby so confident and courageous, that hee professeth hee would not be afraid for ten thousand of people, that should beset him round about, and that, though hee should walke thorow the valley of the shadow of death hee would feare no euill, because God was with him, and with his rod and staffe comforted him. And thus the Apostle Paul likewise being justified by faith, and assured of Gods loue, groweth to that confidence and boldnesse, that he professeth both for himselfe, and in the name of all the faithfull, that he is afraid of nothing, being fully perswaded that neither death nor life, nor Angels nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, should be able to separate them from the loue of

of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord.

Sect. 4. That those who would be freed from these feares, must labour to attaine vnto faith and repentance.

When therefore we are troubled and turmoiled with these confused feares & affrighting terrours, of which wee can yeeld no cause or reason, let vs first know this in generall, that our sins haue exposed vs vnto them; for where is innocency, there also is security, where there is justification and assurance of the remission of sinnes, there is peace with God, peace with the creatures, and joy in the Holy Ghost. So that if wee would be freed from these terrours and feares, we must carefully labour in the vse of all good means ordained by God for the obtaining of a liuely faith, as hearing the Word, receiuing the Sacraments, Prayer, holy meditation, and Christian conferences; assuring our selues that if wee be not wanting vnto our selues in the vse of the meanes for the obtaining of faith, the Lord will not be wanting vnto vs, but will joyne with these outward exercises the inward operation of his holy Spirit, making them effectuall for the begetting and encreasing of this sauing grace in vs, whereby being justified, that is, assured of the remission of our sinnes, and of Christs righteousnes we shall haue peace with God, as the Apostle speaketh. And lest we should deceiue our selues with a counterfeit shadow of faith, and expell feare with a fond presumption, let vs in the next place approue our faith to be true and liuely by the fruites thereof in vnfained repentance: the which though it doe not purchase forgiuenesse of sinnes by merit and desert, yet doth it assure vs that they are forgiuen, because God, of his free grace and mercie, hath bound himselfe by manifold promises, that all who repent and turne from their sinnes, shall haue their pardon, and in his Sonne Christ be reconciled vnto him. Yea vpon this condition of faith and repentance, the couenant of grace is made with vs, wherein the Lord promiseth that he will pardon our sinnes, receiue vs into his loue, multiply vpon vs temporary and eternall benefits, and preserue vs from all dangers, requiring no more of vs but that we beleeue in Christ, and bring forth the fruits of faith in turning from our former sinnes, and in leading a new life: and therefore if we performe on our part this condition, we may rest assured that wee are in the couenant, and haue interest in all Gods promises, and consequently wee may justly banish all terrors and feares, for as much as our sinnes repented of and being forgiuen, are as though they were neuer committed in Gods estimate, and because wee are now receiued vnder the protection of Gods prouidence, without the wise disposing whereof, nothing can befall vs, whose loue is infinite in caring for vs, and his power omnipotent in defending vs; and who hath assured vs by his infallible truth that all things whatsoeuer, yea afflictions themselues, and euen these terrours and feares shall turne to our good, and working together for the best, shall further the saluation of our soules. Rom. 5. 1. Rom. 8. 28.

Sect. 5. That to be acquited of these feares, there is required a special repentance, for our chiefe and most hainous sinnes.

But besides this repentance for all our sins in generall; there is required for the procuring of our peace and securitie, and for the remoual of these confused terrors and feares, that we enter into a strait examination of our selues, whether some speciall, hainous and grieuous sinne against our knowledge, or vpon presumption, doe not still lie vpon our consciences vnrepented of, which by Gods just judgement may bring vs into these agonies and dreadfull perplexities. For it is a righteous thing with God, that when with an high hand wee haue sinned against him, and will not by the ordinary meanes of the ministery of his Word, or his more gentle chastisements be brought vnto vnfained repentance, that wee should be haunted with these terrors and feares, as it were, with so many hellish furies, that so wee may be forced to come vnto him, by this trouble and perplexitie of minde, who will not come freely of our owne accord. If therefore we would haue these terrors remoued, and attaine vnto peace and securitie in our mindes and consciences, wee must not content our selues with a generall repentance for all our sinnes, but wee must repent more especially for those more speciall and hainous sinnes, wherewith wee haue most grieuously offended God, and most deeply wounded our owne consciences. And then, if notwithstanding wee haue performed these duties of generall and more particular repentance, we be still haunted with these confused feares, we are to take courage vnto vs, and boldly to challenge Sathan, or our owne corrupt hearts, to enter the lists, to alleage their worst accusations, and to make their bils of indictement as hainous and odious as they can, that we may answere vnto them. Then are we to enter into a more narrow examination of our estate, and to say with the Prophet Dauid, Why art thou cast downe my soule, and vnquiet within me? waite on God, for I will yet giue him thankes, for the helpe of his presence: and againe, Why art thou cast downe my soule, and why art thou disquieted within me? waite on God, for I will yet giue him thankes, hee is my present helpe and my God. Art thou troubled because God is thine enemie? heare good comfort, for thy Sauiour hath appeased his wrath and workinga reconciliation, hath in thy behalfe procured his loue. Art thou vexed because thou art liable to the curse of the Law? Christ hath borne it for thee on his crosse, that thou mayest be freed from it, and obtain the blessing. Art thou surcharged with the greatnesse of thy debts, wherein thou art engaged to Gods justice? why Christ as thy Psal. 42. 5, 11.

surety hath satisfied for them all, & hath discharged thy debt to the vttermost farthing. Art thou affrighted with the sight of thy sinnes, which are in number numberlesse, and in their qualitie hainous? feare them not, seeing both the mercies of God and merits of Christ are most infinite, and being washed away with his most precious bloud, they shall neuer bee imputed vnto thee. Finally, art thou afraid of the Deuill, Death, Hell and condemnation? bee of good courage, for Christ Iesus thy blessed Lord and Sauiour hath ouercome, and gloriously triumphed ouer them all, not only for himselfe, but also for all them who are in the couenant of grace, in which number thou mayest assure thy selfe to be one, seeing thou performest that only condition of faith and repentance which he requireth of thee.

Q. Sect. 6. Of those terrours which haue some certaine ground, namely Satans malice and violence.

And thus haue I shewed the means whereby the weak Christian may bearmed against confused feares: besides which there are other terrours that arise from some knowne cause, at least supposed and imagined. And thus ordinarily those who are afflicted and troubled in minde are afraid of receiuing hurt from Sathan by outward violence, as though they were in danger to bee killed, torne in pieces, or carried away by him, and such like. With which affrighting terrours as they are often vexed, so especially when they are alone, or in the darke. And lest any should think that these are meere melancholicke illusions, hauing no other cause but the abounding of that humour: and not at all the tentations of the Deuill, or of our owne flesh; wee are to know that none are more haunted with these feares, then little children, who are of all others most free from the humour of melancholy; which sheweth that these terrours arise from that guiltinesse of conscience which accuseth for sinne, and condemneth vs as worthy to bee giuen ouer of God, to be abused and euen destroyed of the wicked spirits. And therefore the best meanes of being freed from these feares is to labour after a true and liuely faith, which assureth vs of our reconciliation with God, and that being receiued vnder his protection we are safe from all dangers; as also to repent vs of our sinnes which expose vs vnto all perils. For being freed from sinne wee are exempted from all euill, yea euen from the feare thereof, and being by faith and repentance reconciled vnto God, and hauing him on our side to shield and defend vs, there is no appearance of danger from any enemy. For if God be with vs, what matter eth it who oppose against vs? if hee who is most louing and carefull of vs, and all-mightie to defend vs, do watch ouer vs with his all-seeing and all-ruling prouidence, what power of man, Angels, or Deuils can doe vs any hurt? For as for Sathan the Prince of darknesse and his wicked angels, howsoeuer they are most malicious and desirous to destroy vs, and (as the Apostle speaketh) like roring Lions goe about seeking to deuoure vs, yet what abilitie haue they to effect their will, seeing all their might is from God, and that not to be vsed at their owne pleasure, but as the Lord giueth them libertie, and vseth them as his instruments and executioners for the punishment of the wicked, and triall of his children? And this the Apostle Iude teacheth vs, namely that the Lord reserueth the Angels which kept not their first estate, but left their owne habitation, in euerlasting chaines vnder darknesse vnto the iudgement of the great day. Of which wee haue an example in the history of Iob, whom Sathan (though he maligned him) could not hurt, neither in his person nor estate, before he had obtained licence from God: yea so farre is hee from hauing any vnlimited power ouer men (and much lesse the faithfull) that hee could not enter into the Swine vntill our Sauiour had giuen him leaue. Vnto these reasons and examples out of the Scriptures wee may adde the experience of all times and ages, for where or when was it euer heard of, that Satan had any power ouer the bodies or goods of any of Gods seruants, to doe them any hurt, vnlesse it were only for their triall, and for the exercise of their faith, affiance, and patience; that so by some corporall and temporall affliction there might be conueyed vnto them spirituall and eternall good? not because Satan wanteth either power or malice, for if hee had libertie from God, hee both could and would destroy the persons, and wracke the estates of many thousands of Gods Saints; but because he is so limited and restrained by Gods omnipotent power, that hee hath no possible meanes to execute his malice, without a licence and commission from him: for otherwise the more godly and religious men were, and the more carefull to please God, the more obnoxious should they be to the danger of his violence, seeing of all others he most maligneth them. Yea, not only the common experience which we may haue in all others, but that also which euery Christian may haue in himselfe, may sufficiently strengthen him against these feares of suffering from Satan some outward violence; for how commeth it to passe that they haue liued hitherto in safetie, and haue beene preserued both in their estates and persons? was it because Sathan wanted either power or malice to destroy them? or because they haue formerly had more strength and abilitie to stand in their owne defence? no assuredly, for if there had beene no other hindrance, or meanes of their preseruation, they had long agoe beene brought to vtter ruine; but because God hath watched ouer them with his all-ruling prouidence, and hath hath so defended them, and rebuked and restrained Sathan, that though hee were euer most willing and readie, yet hee was neuer able to doe them any hurt. And therefore if hauing experience of Gods loue & power in shielding them from all dangers, they will rest vnder the shadow of his wings, they shall be safe vnder his protection; neither shall Sathan bee euer so malicious and mightie to destroy them, but God will bee much more mercifull and powerfull to defend them. Neither haue they any reason to feare more when they are solitarie, then when they are in company, for if God should leaue them to Satans malice and crueltie, it is not the power of the greatest and most inuincible army that could defend them; and contrariwise if God be with them, it is no principalities and powers, yea all the puissance and strength of all the damned spirits, that can so much as disturbe their peace. And yet so foolish are sinfull men, that they thinke themselues more safe and secure from the danger of these spirituall wickednesses in the presence of a child, then in the most powerfull presence of God Almightie. Finally, there is no more danger in the remotest roome and darkest night, then is at the market place at noone day; neither doth darknesse, but the workes of darknesse expose men to any danger; for if as children of the light wee cast off the workes of darknesse, and put on the armour of light; if we walke honestly as in the day, and by a liuely faith put on the Lord Iesus Christ, taking no thought for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof; then will the God of life and light watch ouer vs with his all, and euer seeing prouidence, and so shield and preserue vs from all dangers, that the Prince of darknes shall not be able to hurt vs in the night, more then in the cleerest day: for all times are alike vnto him, and he as well seeth vs, and as powerfully defendeth vs, in the most palpable darknesse, and deadest silence, as if it were at high noone. And this was holy Dauids meditation; If (saith hee) I say, yet the darknesse shall hide me, euen the night shall be light about mee. Yea the darknesse hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day: the darknesse and light are both alike.

CHAP. II.

Of tentations which haue no other ground but Sathans bare command, and how wee may resist them. And of tentations inciting and mouing men to murther themselues, and how wee may be armed against them.

§. Sect. 1. Of tentations of command,

AND thus much concerning those tentations which work vpon the mind and conscience by affrighting and terrifying them: the other kind of vnreasonable tentations, are tentations of command, which are suggested by Satan, with a certain kind of hellish authoritie, and imperious violence, and leaue such a forcible impression behind them, as compelleth the afflicted partie to yeeld, and bringeth vpon him a certaine kinde of vrgent necessitie of doing something injoyned by Sathan, though it be absurd and impious, contrary to the Word of God, and light of nature; and that without any cause or reason alleaged to perswade to the doing of it. For hauing ruled as the Prince of darknesse in the children of vnbeliefe, and enthralled them in his captiuitie as bond-slaues, enforcing them to doe his will; euen after that they are deliuered by Christ, he seeketh still to tyrannize ouer their consciences, and making his will to stand for law, hee imperiously insulteth ouer them, presuming vpon their weaknesse and his own power, and without any reason hee vrgeth them to doe that which he commandeth. All which tentations commonly tend, either to the wounding of their consciences with some hainous, grosse and grieuous sinne, which hee vrgeth them to commit, that they may re-acknowledge their subjection, and presseth vpon them as an earnest penie, by the receiuing whereof they are engaged and bound to returne into his former seruice: or else to their vtter destruction; as when he vrgeth them to lay violent hands vpon themselus, & vse means to hasten their own death. Against which tentations weake Christians are to arme themselues by attaining vnto, and renuing their faith and repentance, whereby assuring their hearts and consciences, that they are in the couenant of grace, and partakers of that redemption which is wrought by Christ, they may easily withstand all these assaults. For then they may in an holy disdaine refuse to yeeld their obedience vnto these vnreasonable tentations, as being reasonable creatures; and say vnto themselues, or the tempter; Should I who am a man or woman, indued with a reasonable soule, which is giuen me of God to gouerne and guide me in all my actions, become now like a bruite beast without vnderstanding, yeelding vnto such things as are not only vnreasonable, but also absurd and monstrous? yea should I who was created according to Gods Image in all wisedome and knowledge, shew my self worse then a beast, against all reason doing that which will bee hurtfull and pernicious vnto mee, vpon the meere command of my mortall enemy, whereas they by instinct of nature auoide dangers, and shun as neere as they can all things which may doe them harme? Then they may dispute the matter with Satan, and tell him, that howsoeuer hee had some shew of reason to tyrannize ouer them whilest they and how we may withstand them.

they were his slaues and bondmen, and to exact their obedience vpon his bare cõmand, without alleaging any reason; yet now it is most absurd that they being deliuered by Christ, and by the price of his most precious bloud, offered vnto his Father, as a full satisfaction for their sinnes, set at libertie out of his thraldome, should yet yeeld vnto him any such subiection, as they did in former times. Now they may tell him that they are not their owne, and much lesse his, seeing they are bought with a price, and by the law of redemption are bound to glorifie God both in their bodies and spirits, seeing they are his, as the Apostle speaketh; that now they are deliuered by Christ out of the hands of their spirituall enemies, that they should serue him without feare, all the dayes of their life, in holinesse and righteousnesse before him; that now they be made free from sinne and become the seruants of righteousnesse, who must bring forth fruits of holinesse vnto life euerlasting. Now they may aske him what authoritie hee hath to command another mans seruants, or what reason they haue to obey him, especially commanding things which are hurtfull and pernicious both vnto their bodies and soules; seeing if they resist him, they haue a promise out of Gods Word which can neuer faile them, that he shall flee from them? Finally, they may tell him, that their Lord by whom they are redeemed, hath commanded them, that they should not giue any place to the Deuill, nor yeeld any iot vnto his tentations; whom if they obey, notwithstanding their great weaknesse and fraikie, they need not to feare the malice of the Deuill, nor all the power of Hell, seeing he who had power to deliuer them out of his thraldome, when they were embondaged, hath sufficient strength to defend them from his fury, when they are in his owne Family, and his household seruants, being God omnipotent who is almightie to saue, and who hath vanquished and gloriously triumphed ouer him, not for himselfe alone, but in the behalfe of all those who adhere vnto him by a true and liuely faith.

And thus we are to arme our selues against those tentations of Satan, whereby vpon his bare command, hee enforceth men to wound their consciences with some hainous sinne: now wee are to consider of the other kinde, whereby he vrgeth them to lay violent hands vpon themselues, and to take away their precious liues, that so at one blow hee may wound both their bodies and soules vnto their vtter destruction both in this World, and the World to come. In the enforcing of which tentation he commonly imployeth all his forces, and bendeth all his engins of battery against vs to make this breach, because if hee can preuaile in this assault, hee maketh no question of a full and finall victorie. To this purpose hee sometimes vseth to the afflicted Christian no other argument to moue him to the committing of this horrible, vnnaturall, and damnable sinne of selfe-murther, but his peremptory command, which hee presseth vpon him with such tyrannicall authoritie, and vnresistable violence, that without the greater grace and assistance of God hee cannot chuse but yeeld. Sometime hee haunteth him with affrighting terrours and horrible feares, as it were with hellish furies, which suffering him to take no rest, do so tire and weary him, that hee is willing by death to seeke some ease; for fear foolishly casting himselfe head-long into those euils he feareth, and seeking for ease by exchanging worldly miseries which are but momentary, for hellish torments which are intolerable and euerlasting. Sometime he draweth him hereunto by loading him (if so God permit him) with grieuous afflictions, either in his name, or state, bodie or minde, making him beleeue that there is no meanes of ease or comfort but by taking away his life, as though (like vnto beasts) death were vnto him an end of all miseries; whereas it is to those who die in their sinnes and are defiled with their owne bloud, but the porch of hell, and a little fore-taste of neuer ending sorrowes. Finally, sometime he surchargeth his conscience, made tender by terrours and feares, with the intolerable waight of his hainous sinnes, and affrighteth him with a cõceit that he hath committed crimes which are vnpardonable: and namely that fearefull and damnable sinne against the Holy Ghost; and therefore in vaine it is for him to vse any meanes to attaine vnto saluation; and vnprofitable, yea hurtfull and pernicious it is for him to liue any longer, seeing he shall spend his time in horror and despaire, and by adding more sinnes vnto the former, increase that fearefull measure of his future condemnation. But in the meane time hee hideth from him the hainousnesse of this sinne of selfe-murther, and hellish despaire, which is more horrible and abominable in the sight of God, then all his other sinnes, which he should euer commit, though hee should liue to old age: as also the intolerable and endlesse torments of Hell fire, into which hee wilfully leapeth without hope of recouerie; which as much exceed all worldly miseries, griefes and punishments, as the wounding of the heart, or the racking of the limbs, exceedeth the pain of a prickt finger, or scratch of a pin.

Q. Sect. 3. That the world and the flesh further the former tẽtation, and of the inward causes moouing vnto selfe murther.

But besides his owne forces, Sathan vseth his common aids, the world and the flesh. And first for the world it doth exceedingly vrge the afflicted Christian to this fearefull designe of selfe-murther. For it is vsuall with worldlings to wonder at those who are troubled in minde, as the Owle is wondred at by by the little birds; to traduce their names, and to make them the subiect of their table discourse; to condemne them as notorious sinners, who haue committed some outragious wickednesse, for which they now suffer deserued punishments; to censure them for mad men, who are fitter for Bedlem then for any good company. Of all which disgraces the poore Christian is often so impatient, hauing lately much esteemed his reputation, and the Worlds fauour and good report, that hee had rather die then to liue thus blemished and contemned. The flesh also ministreth no small strength in this encounter to worke his ouerthrow and destruction, nourishing in it many damnable and vnruly lusts, which make an easie entrance for the Deuils and the Worlds forces. As first hellish pride which will not suffer him to resigne himselfe ouer to Gods will & pleasure, nor to stoop & submit himselfe to his afflicting hand; but rather chuseth not to liue at all, then to liue otherwise then himselfe desireth. And this also maketh him to disdaine that hee should be pointed at as he passeth by, and be disgraced in all companies, as a man loaded with sinne and left of God; and to skorne to outliue his reputation, hee being not now able through his manifold afflictions to hold vp his head, and maintaine his former credit & esteeme. Secondly, impatiencie which maketh him impotent in bearing those afflictions which lie vpon him; and when he can no otherwise shift them off, nor bee eased of them, to chuse rather to die then to liue so vncomfortably and endure such miserie. Where by the way we may obserue that to kill a mans selfe to be rid of griefe and affliction, argueth not true courage, fortitude, & magnanimitie; for these shew themselues in patient suffering that which they cannot nobly and Christianly auoid; but base pusillanimitie, and impotent weaknesse of minde, which is not able to beare the least burthen of affliction, nor with inward puritie of conscience comfort it selfe against a causeles scandall; farre vnlike vnto the holy Apostle who held on the course of Christianitie, and approued himselfe vnto God by honour and dishonour, euill report and good report. 2. Cor. 6. 8. Thirdly, infidelitie, diffidence and distrust in Gods prouidence and promises, which causeth him, being hopelesse and heartlesse, to despaire of being euer deliuered from trouble, and therefore hauing no confidence in God for his deliuery, either because hee thinketh that he cannot, or at least will not free him from those miseries which hee endureth, in desperate manner hee vseth these wicked meanes to deliuer himselfe, leauing not only his life, but with it all hope of Gods fauour, and assurance of his saluation, that so he may rid himselfe from some momentanie afflictions. And vnto these we may adde vnnaturall crueltie exercised first against others, and so being fleshed in bloud, through the just judgement of God, turneth it owne edge against it selfe, as we may see in the example of Saul, Achitophel, Iudas, Nero, and many others. But howsoeuer not only the World, but also the corrupt flesh act a part in this dreadful tragedie, and make way for Satans encounters when he assaulteth vs, yet seeing this horrible sinne of self-murther is vnnaturall, and euen terrible to flesh and bloud; therefore it is to be thought that the Deuill himselfe (who hath beene a murtherer from the beginning, and from the first foundation of the World hath beene continually fleshed in bloud and crueltie) is the chiefe actor and agent in these horrible attempts and executions; as it may also heereby more then probably appeare, in that weake and tender hearted women, who naturally haue not courage enough to see their owne bloud, are, as often as men, their owne cruell executioners. And thus we reade in the Gospell that these foule spirits caused the heard of Swine vnnaturally to drowne themselues in the Sea; that they cast the childe possessed sometime into the fire, and sometime into the water, to destroy him; and finally that thus Satan presumed to tempt our Sauiour Christ, to cast himselfe head-long from the pinacle of the Temple, that vnder colour of getting honour among men, hee might haue tempted God, and so haue perished in his sin. Matth. 8. 32. Mark. 9. 22. Luke 4. 9.

And therefore let all and euery Christian carefully arme himselfe against this horrible and hellish tentation, seeing the chiefe author thereof is the Deuill, who thirsteth after their bloud, and taketh his chiefe delight in seeking their destruction and damnation. And to this end let vs know that howsoeuer there are many causes of this selfe-murther, and many excuses alleaged, to make it seeme sometime tolerable, and sometime commendable, if not to others, yet at least to those who commit it, notwithstanding it is for no cause, in any kind, at any time, or vpon any occasion whatsoeuer lawfull or excusable. For (as one saith) as it was not in our power or choice to be borne, so neither to die, for otherwise if it were in our power to die, it would be also in our power, not to die. Wee doe indeed in our extremities and miseries desire the rest of death; because it is a comfort to speake of our good, when wee endure euill according to the custome of Sea-faring men, who in their dangerous passages and stormie tempests are refreshed in speaking of the safetie of their desired hauen; and though they cannot attaine vnto it, yet they take delight in wishing their arriuall at it. There are I confesse many cases propounded by heathenish and worldly men or ignorant Christians, in which they thinke this libertie may be taken; as first in some grieuous and intolerable

Q. Sect. 4. That self-murther is no cas[e]

lerable afflictions, losse of friends or good name, losse of wealth or preferments, tedious and grieuous sicknesses, terrors of conscience and such like. But these are not intollerable in their owne nature, but through their ill bearing of them; and therefore not their liues, but their impatiencie were to bee laid aside. Againe, these are the chastisements of our heauenly Father, which he inflicteth on vs for our amendment; and hee is but a bad child who had rather die then endure his louing fathers chastisements, to be bettered by them. Finally, they are but light, and of short and momentary continuance; and therefore what folly is it, for the easing vs of these troubles which are light and temporarie, to cast our selues head-long into those which are truly intolerable and euerlasting. Secondly, in detestation of others sinne, or for the preuenting of their owne, which by force they should bee compelled to commit, they thinke selfe-murther warrantable. Of the former we haue an example in Lucretia, who killed her selfe because shee had beene rauished by S. Tarquinius. Of the other in certaine Virgins in the Primitiue Church, of whom Augustine maketh mention, who cast themselues into the riuer to preserue their chastitie from being polluted by their wicked persecutors. But of her we may say, that shee was carried with a blind and a wicked zeale, if not with heathenish pride, committing her selfe a greater sinne, because another had committed a lesse. For in truth it was not her sinne, that shee was by force defiled, seeing her heart and minde were pure and chast, no more then a man sinneth who hauing a knife in his hand is therewith forced violently to stab his owne bodie. And of them, vnlesse (as Augustine supposeth) they might haue some speciall warrant by reuelation, their fact is to be condemned, seeing it is not lawfull to doe euill for the auoiding of euill, nor to commit a certaine sinne, for the shunning of one which is vncertaine. For what knew they but that the Lord might haue found out in the very instant meanes which were lawfull for the preseruing of their chastitie, if not by the assistance of man, yet by changing the hearts of their persecutors, or by striking them with his immediate iudgements; as we see in the example of Abimelech, restrained by this meanes from defiling Sara, and in the Sodomites smitten with blindnesse when they would haue abused Lots strangers? Thirdly, this selfe-murther is thought excusable in case it proceed from an extraordinary desire of attaining vnto the ioyes of the life to come; and thus wee reade that Cleombrotus hauing read Plato his bookes of the immortalitie of the soule, cast himselfe headlong from a wall, that hee might come vnto the ioyes therein specified. But vnto him we oppose the example of the Apostle Paul, who though hee earnestly desired to be dissolued and to bee with Christ, yet hee hastened not his owne death, but attended the Lords leisure. And good reason, for he that will seeke to rush into the Bridall chamber to be partaker of that supper of eternall ioy, being not inuited and called by God, may iustly feare that he shall heare that speach in the parable, Friend how camest thou in hither, not hauing on a wedding garment, but a garment imbrewed and defiled with thine owne bloud *Math.*22. 12. And he that thinketh to enter into heauen by the foule gate of so hainous a sinne, doth much mistake his way, and in all likelihood shall neuer haue entrance, yea rather being speechlesse and hauing nothing to answer in excuse for so foule a fact, hee may with horror expect that terrible sentence. Bind him hand and foote, and take him away and cast him into vtter darknes, where shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth. Fourthly, this murther is caused through desperation, when men hauing committed some horrible sinne, and being tormented with guilt and terrour of conscience, and the apprehension of Gods wrath, they find their burthen so intolerable that they can find no rest but in death. But this is a sottish folly, when being ouer-burthened with sin, they seeke ease by committing another notorious crime, and so adde to their former burthen; and in stead of casting off their grieuous load, by laying it on Christ thorow faith, who offereth to ease vs if we will come vnto him, to tie it fast vnto them by finall impenitencie, and by depriuing themselues of all meanes of their future conuersion. Finally, it is thought most excusable when this murther is committed in zeale to Gods glorie, and in an vtter detestation of sinne; as when they see that through their frailtie they are euery day prone to commit sinne to Gods dishonour, and the wounding of their owne consciences; and therefore that Gods glory may not by their often fals bee impeached, nor their consciences ouer-burthened, they take away their liues, that they may put an end to their sinnes. But let such know that we must not by dishonoring God in the highest degree, preuent our dishonouring him by infirmitie; nor by wilfull and presumptuous sinning, preuent sinnes of frailtie and weaknesse. Wee must not presently doe euill, that wee may not doe euill for the time to come, nor put such an end to sinne, as will make vs die in sinne without repentance, and for euer after disable vs for performing the contrary duties of holinesse and righteousnesse. Finally, we must not vse such a meanes to free vs from sinne, as God hath condemned and cursed; but those meanes which he hath ordained for this purpose, as namely earnest prayer for Gods grace, whereby we may bee strengthened against our corruptions, the hearing of the Word, which being made effectuall by the inward operation of Gods Spirit, bringeth vs to a true sight and sorrow for sinne, and to a holy purpose of leauing it, that we may serue God in newnesse of life. So likewise reading, meditation, conference, the consideration of Gods mercies and iudgements, shewed both to our selues and others, and such like.

9. Sect. 5. That neuer any of Gods Saints in former times haue hastened their owne deaths.

So that it is vtterly vnlawfull in any case to commit this horrible sin of selfe-murther; and therefore the Saints of God, the Patriarkes, Prophets, and Apostles, howsoeuer they endured many great and grieuous miseries, afflictions, and persecutions; many troubles of body, and sorrowes of minde, yet neuer any of them shortned their dayes by laying violent hands vpon themselues, but waited the Lords leisure for their deliuerance; enduring the fierie triall, and fighting the Lords battels with courage and patience, till the Lord himselfe their great Cõmander, after victory obtained, sounded the retraite, & called them to receiue the crowne of victory promised to all that ouercome. Thus Iacob confesseth that his dayes were Gen.49.7. few and euill; but because they were euill, he did not seeke to make them fewer, but patiently passed his pilgrimage vntill God called him, and gaue him entrance into and possession of his heauenly Countrie. Thus though Dauid were continually persecuted by his enemies, loaded with miseries, affrighted with the terrours of the Almightie, Psal.22.1. and in his owne sense forsaken of God; yet he neuer sought ease, or the shortning of his sorrowes, by taking away his life, but with all meeknesse and patience waited on God for helpe and deliuerance, as he often professeth. So though Iob were as miserable as the Iob 6.4. malice of Satan could make him, and besides all his outward griefes which were vnspeakable, conceiued of God as of his enemy, who had set him vp as a mark, against whom hee shot the impoysoned arrowes of his wrath; and though he had no rest from these intolerable afflictions either day or night, yet hee would not vse any meanes to shorten his life, that with it hee might put an end to his miseries, but contrariwise sharply rebu- Iob 2.10. keth his wife, when as the Deuils instrument she made but a motion which tended to that purpose. Finally, though the Disciples and Rom.7.23. Apostles suffered cruell persecution, imprisonments, whipping, stoning and other tortures, yea, though some of them had the Law of their members leading them captiue to the Law of sinne, and the messenger of 2.Cor.12.7. Sathan to buffet them; yet we neuer read of any (notwithstanding their assured hopes of future glory and happines) that by any violent meanes shortned their owne liues, but rather according to their masters commandement, being persecuted in one Citie, they did flee vnto another, and preserued their liues as long as they lawfully could, that they might be seruiceable to God and his Church, by aduancing his glory in their saluation. And therefore let vs follow their example as good precedents, seeking all good meanes for the preseruing of our liues; and abhorring the contrary practice of selfe-murtherers; and that the rather, because wee reade of none but such as we would be loth to resemble, who haue beene guiltie of their owne deaths. As for example hypocriticall Saul, who was a man forsaken of God, and destitute of all true goodnesse; cursed Achitophel, and treacherous Iudas the betrayers of their Masters, wicked Nero, vnjust Pilate, and such like, whose liues as they were most wicked and worthily odious, so ought their deaths to be vnto euery Christian most hatefull and abominable. Matth.10.

9. Sect.6. The example of Samson, Ionas, Rex obiected and answered.

But against this is vsually obiected, first the example of Samson, who did willingly pull downe the house vpon his owne, and the Philistims heads, who notwithstanding is, by the Apostle numbred among the faithfull. Heb.11.32. To which I answere, that this fact of Samson was altogether extraordinary; in which hee was particularly guided by the speciall counsell of God, and strengthened by his Spirit, for the atchieuing of this enterprise, entended for the deliuerance of Gods people, and destruction of his enemies; that therein hee might be a liuely type of our Sauiour Iesus Christ, who by his death ouercame all the enemies of our saluation. And this appeareth by his prayer, made vnto God, for the restoring of his strength, which for his sinne was taken from him; for which prayer he had some ground by speciall reuelation from God, seeing otherwise it could not haue beene made in faith; as also in that God heard his prayer, and gaue vnto him power and might for the accomplishing of this fact, that so hee might take reuenge on his owne, and the Churches enemies. Secondly, the example of Ionas is obiected, who appointed the Mariners to cast him into the Sea, for the stilling of the tempest. To which the answere is easie; for Ionas was a Ionas 1.12. Prophet, who might by the spirit of prophecie haue this reuealed vnto him, that it was the will and counsell of God, who in this would also haue him to be a type of his Sonne, as our Sauiour applieth it. And besides, he saw this will of God manifested in his workes, seeing he had, for his sake, sent such a tempest, as could by no other meanes bee quieted; and therefore when after all meanes vsed, he saw that it could be no otherwise, hee commanded them to cast him into the Sea; not therein ayming at his owne destruction, which if he could, he would haue auoided; but at the preseruation of his company, Matth.12.

pany, whom he was loath should perish for his sinne. Thirdly, the example of Razis is alleaged, who hauing killed himselfe to auoid the tyranny of Nicanor, is in the booke of the Maccabees, commended for this fact. To which I answere, that this booke is not Canonicall Scripture, and consequently of no authoritie, where it is contrary to the holy Word of God: as it is in this particular, seeing it commendeth a fact, which is so often in the booke of God condemned: So that the commendation of this selfe-murtherer addeth no grace to him, but rather disgraceth the commender, who speaketh not out of true iudgement, but out of his liking of carnall and ill-guided valour. For then are we called to suffer captiuitie, reproach or any disgrace, when God granteth not vnto vs lawfull meanes, whereby wee may auoid them, among which selfe-murder cannot be numbred. And thus doth Austine elevate, and lightly esteeme the authoritie of this author, when as the Donatists sought to justifie this fact of selfe-murther by this example, where he saith, that the Iewes did not esteeme this booke of Maccabees, as being of like authoritie with the Law and the Prophets, to which God giueth testimony, as to his owne witnesses, &c. but it is not vnprofitably receiued of the Church, if it be with sobrietie read or heard; namely, to stirre vp Christians by the example of the Macchabees who suffered so much for the Law, to suffer much more with constancie and patience for the Name of Christ, seeing their present sufferings are not worthy the glory that shall be reuealed. So in the same place he sharply censureth this fact of Razias, to bee more wonderfull then wise. And yet not very admirable in respect of true valour, and Christian fortitude, which is alwayes guided by diuine wisdome shining in the Word of God; For (as hee saith elsewhere) what great wonder is it, if being tainted with haughtie pride, hee desired rather to kill himselfe with his own hand, then after all that great honour which hee had in the sight of his people, he would suffer a dishonourable seruitude in the hands of his enemies? And afterwards; this Razias warsar from the practice of those words, where it is read: Whatsoeuer commeth vnto thee, receiue it patiently, sustaine thy selfe in thy griefe, and haue patience in thy humiliation. And therefore this man was not wise in chusing this death, but impatient of carrying himselfe humbly. It is written that hee would die nobly and manfully, but doth it hereof follow, that he died wisely? &c. And againe: This fact of his was great, but not therefore good; for euery thing is not good which is great, because there are also great euils. God hath said, Thou shalt not kill the iust and innocent; If therefore hee were not innocent and iust, why should he be propounded for imitation? And if hee were iust and innocent, why was hee a murtherer of one who was innocent and iust? Lastly, the speech of the Apostle is obiected, if I giue my body to be burned, and haue not charitie, it is nothing; therefore it is inferred, that if it be ioyned with charitie, it is commendable to giue a mans bodie to be burned, and consequently to bee the cause of his owne death. I answere, first, that this in their sense is impossible, seeing hee who doth so, hath no true charitie towards himselfe. Secondly, they wrest the words of the Apostle who thus take them, for they are not to bee vnderstood of a voluntary casting a mans selfe into the fire, but of a voluntary yeelding a mans body into the hands of Tyrants and Persecutors to bee burned, rather then hee will denie Christ, and the profession of the Gospell. And thus the three Children gaue themselues to bee burned, that is, rather yeelded to be burned by Nebuchadnezzar, then they would worship his Image; and so Christ is said to haue giuen himselfe to bee crucified, when he was content to yeeld himselfe to the rage of his enemies, to be crucified by them, that he might by his death perfect the worke of our redemption.

Dan. 3. 18.

And thus haue I shewed, that selfe-murder is in no case lawfull or excusable. Now in the next place I will proue, that it is not only barely vnlawfull, but a notorious and most hainous sinne, to the end that it may be vnto all Christians execrable and abominable. For he who committeth this selfe-murder sinneth grieuously, both against God, his neighbour and himselfe. Against God, and that both the whole Trinitie iointly, and also against euery person seuerally. And first they sinne against God by wilfull transgressing, and violating his Law, and that both the Law of Nature written in euery ones heart, which requireth that euery man should carefully vse all good meanes for the preseruing of his life, and auoid all contrary dangers which might hurt and shorten it: and also the Law written in the Tables of stone by the finger of God; which indefinitely forbiddeth all murther: Thou shalt not kill; that is, neither thy selfe, nor thy neighbour. For if it be a hainous sin to kill another; it is much more hainous to kill a mans selfe; for the Law and rule of charitie, whereby a man loueth another, is to bee squared and proportioned according to that charity, whereby a man loueth himselfe. If therfore murthering of a mans neighbour be so often condemned for such an hainous, and abominable sinne in the sight of God, as that it doth with the guilt thereof, not onely defile the partie by whom it is committed, but also the whole Land where it is not punished, then how much more hainous and outragious is this selfe-murther, which more highly violateth this Law of Charitie? Secondly, they grieuously sinne against God in violating his Image in which they are created; for if it bee treason vnto an earthly Prince, to offer violence against his dead Image, painted on a Table, or stamped in his Coine; then how much more hainous treason doe they commit against the glorious Majestie of the King of Kings, who deface, and wilfully violate that liuing Image of God, in which they were created? And this reason the Lord rendereth, why he will not let this horrible sinne of murther goe without seuere punishment: Who so (saith hee) sheddeth mans bloud, by man shall his bloud be shead, for in the image of God hath hee made man. Finally, they sinne against God, as hee is Lord of Hosts, and supreame Master and Gouernour of Heauen and Earth. For he hath appointed vnto euery one of his Souldiers, in the Church Militant, his station and standing wherein he is to fight manfully against the enemies of our saluation, til the Lord himselfe, who placed him there, do call him away, and by death sound the retrait; that so hauing finished his warfare, and obtained victory, he may receiue the crowne of euerlasting glory. And if any man, either because he is wearie of the fight, or for cowardly feare of the enemy, or because hee doubteth of his Lords power or will to defend him, will leaue his standing and flie away, or kill himselfe for feare of the encounter; he dishonoureth his Lord, betrayeth his cause, discourageth his fellow-souldiers, and as much as in him lieth, by making this breach, and leauing his place vnmanned, giueth the spirituall enemies of our saluation an easie entrance, for the surprising the Citie of God, the Church Militant. The Lord as Master of the Family hath appointed vnto euery one their labour, and the time also, how long they must continue at their work; and therefore if any will giue ouer his businesse before he is called from it by his Lord, he hath little hope to receiue his wages. Yea, if he desperately kill himselfe, rather then he will indure the paines of his masters seruice, hee shall not scape without heauie punishment, seeing he much dishonoureth his Lord, in making him so hard a Master, that he had rather die then doe him seruice; and accuseth him of the greatest crueltie, in that hee imposeth vpon his seruants such an intolerable taske, that it is better for them to die, then to sustaine their labour; whereas in truth it is not the greatnesse of their paines, but the smalnesse of their patience; not because they are ouer-burthened by God, but because they haue by their frowardnesse and waywardnesse, so enfeebled themselues, that they can beare nothing. Finally, we are by our great Land-lord placed, as tenants at will, in these houses of clay; and therefore if it be vnlawfull for Tenants to pull downe, and destroy their earthly habitations, without the Lords consent and approbation, and if they doe, they violate the Law, and giue him cause of a just action against them, how much more vnlawfull it is for any to destroy this house of their bodie, contrarie to the expresse command of our great Land-lord, and to pull his building down to the ground, thereby making themselues liable to a fearefull action, or rather inditement, which (if they bee found guiltie) concerneth them no lesse, then the losse of their soules, and their euerlasting imprisonment, in the Goale of Hell.

9. Sect. 7. That the selfe-murtherer sinneth haynously against God.

Exod. 20. 13.

Gen. 9. 6.

And as they many wayes offend against God the Father, and the whole Trinitie; so in more speciall manner against our Sauiour Iesus Christ. For he hath with no lesse price then his most precious bloud ransomed and redeemed vs, that being freed from all our spirituall enemies, we might become his seruants. So as being bought with a price, we are no more our owne, but his who hath thus dearely paid for vs, as the Apostle speaketh; and therefore what haue we to do to kill another mans seruant? Why should wee thus defraud him of that seruice which is due vnto him by law of redemption? Why should wee bee so vnthankfull, as to chuse rather to die, then we will performe that seruice which he requireth, seeing he was content to die, to free vs out of the captiuitie of Satan, and that first seruing him in earth, we might after raigne with him in Heauen? Or how shall we escape his heauy indignation, and fearfull condemnation, in the Day of his appearing, when wee are so impatient of seruing him in the spirituall conflict, that if wee may not serue him in that manner which our selues desire, we had rather die, then wee would submit our selues vnto his will, and bee at his appointment? Valesse wee would foolishly imagine, that our tentations and trials come vnto vs by chance, and are not disposed of by his all-ruling power, and all-seeing prouidence. Againe, we offend against our Sauiour Christ by this selfe-murther, in offering violence to his mysticall body; for being members thereof, and (as the Apostle speaketh) of his flesh and bones, what doe we by destroying our selues, but make a maime (as much as in vs lieth) in his glorious body? As therefore the Apostle reasoneth, to make whoredome abominable, Shall I take the members of Christ and make them the members of an Harlot? so let vs reason against this selfe-murther; Should I take the members of Christ, and by destroying them rent them from his glorious body. And should I in the same act, (as much as in me lieth) draw in my Sauiour to be both an agent and patient in this horrible sinne of murther? God forbid.

Ephes. 5. 30.

1. Cor. 6. 15.

Finally,

9. Sect. 8. That self-murtherers sinne hainously against Christ our redeemer. 1. Cor. 6. 20.

9. Sect. 9. That the selfe-murtherer sinneth against the holy Spirit, and his gifts & sauing graces.

Finally, they sin directly against the Holy Ghost the sanctifier, in opposing against his actions and operations; for his office is to sanctifie, but they defile themselues with their owne bloud; he preserueth them by his holy directions, that as pure and vnblameable they may be offered vp vnto God; but they pollute their soules with desperate wickednesse, and make them guiltie of the horriblest kind of murther. Againe, we are (as the Apostle speaketh) the Temples of the Holy Ghost in which hee dwelleth; & therefore what doe they who kill themselues but race & ruinate Gods owne habitation, thrust him out of his lodging, and (as it were) pull downe his house ouer his head? whereby as they commit an hainous sin, so doe they subject themselues to a fearefull punishment. For (as the Apostle saith) if any man destroy the Temple of God, him shall God destroy. But most grieuously doe these selfe-murtherers sinne against the sanctifying gifts and graces of Gods holy Spirit, as against knowledge whereby they are inlightened; which hath reuealed vnto them the infiniteneſſe of Gods mercies, the all-sufficiencie of Christs merits; Gods wise disposing of all things, though they seeme neuer so hurtfull, to the good of all who louing him, doe resigne themselues ouer to be guided by his will; and the horribleneſſe of this sinne of selfe-murther. Against which, which assureth vs that God will suffer no man to be tempted aboue his power, but will giue a good issue vnto the tentation, if wee will trust and depend vpon him. That he who resisteth the Deuill shall put him to flight; that he who fighteth vnto the end shall surely ouercome, and obtaine the crowne of victory; whereas they despaire of a good issue and of withstanding the encounters of Sathan, and therefore shamefully yeeld, being content to murther themselues at his appointment, to preuent further mischiefe. In the same respects also they sinne and offend against affiance and hope in God distrusting his promised assistance (as though hee either meant to falsifie his word, and would not, or were impotent in power, and could not defend them in all their troubles and trials) and casting away all hope of ease and comfort, doe end their dayes in fearefull desperation. So also against true fortitude and Christian magnanimitie, which resting vpon God, valiantly endureth the assault, till it hath obtained a finall victorie; and cowardly faint vpon a causeleſſe feare, & yeeld themselues ouer into the hands of their enemies, who could not possibly by any other meanes obtaine the victorie. Finally, they offend against patience, which endureth all in assurance of reward; and make their burthen much more intolerable, by their waiwardneſſe and froward strugling, then it is in it owne waight. And the like might be said of the rest of Gods sanctifying graces: but these shall suffice.

1. Cor. 3. 16.

2. Cor. 3. 17.

10. Sect. 10. That the selfe-murtherer sinneth grieuously against his neighbours.

And thus the selfe-murtherer sinneth most hainously against God: hee offendeth also grieuously against his neighbours; and that both particular persons, and also whole societies, as the family, Church and Common-wealth, whereof he is a member. Hee sinneth against particular men by his euill example, especially if he haue beene such an one as hath beene of any credit for his former life and conuersation; for others so afflicted and through like impatiencie weary of their burthen, are much heartned and incouraged to follow the same practice, that so (as they falsely imagine) they may put an end vnto all their miseries. In which respect as they were at their last departure guiltie of that horrible sin of murthering themselues; so are they euen after their death the causes of murthering others. But more principally they offend against their neere kindred, by robbing them of their friends, especially if they depend vpon them for the meanes of their maintenance, as when they are their parents or patrons. In which case they expose them to want and miserie, and mooue them through discontent (if they be not preuented by Gods grace) to follow their example. Or though they stand not in these termes of dependancie, yet doe they much wrong them by oppressing their friends hearts with griefe and sorrow; not only in regard of their owne losse, whereby they are depriued of their friendship and societie; but also in respect of their losse who haue made wilfull shipwracke of their liues, and, for ought that any man can judge, of their saluation. So that whereas in naturall deaths they only bewaile their temporary separation, because of their assured hope of meeting; in this case of selfe-murther they no otherwise lament them, then as vtterly lost and perished. Finally, by making such a wicked end they confound their friends with shame, & leaue vnto them as a legacie a share of their reproch. For if it be a disgrace and blemish to a neere Kinsman, in regard that they are so conjoyned in the bond of consanguinitie, to haue his Father or Mother, Sister or Brother, Wife or Daughter, come to a shamefull end, and to bee executed as Traitours, murtherers, or Felons, though it be by course of justice inflicted as a punishment (notwithstanding that it is oftentimes a meanes to bring them to repentance, which is alwayes accompanied with the eternall saluation of their soules) then how much more reprochfull is it vnto them, when as not being able to beare their wickednesse, they become most vnjustly their owne executioners, dying in the very committing of such an horrible sin, without any likelihood of repentance, and ending their dayes in horror & desperation?

Lastly, they sin against Societies, as against the family whereof they are members, which they defile with their bloud; against the Church, in making a rent in that bodie, and in disgracing of their holy profession of religion; for it is not vnusuall for worldlings to censure their ouer-much studying of the Scriptures, their hearing of the Word, and their ouer-much busying themselues in questions of Diuinitie, as the causes which haue brought them to this fearefull selfe-murther, wherein as they giue occasion to wicked men to blaspheme Gods Truth, and in that respect are accessary to their sin: so doe they expose that true religion which they professe to their slanders and calumniations. In regard whereof (like excommunicate persons) they are debarred of the priuiledges of buriall, which ordinarily belong to other Christians: for their corps are not suffered to be laid in the vsuall places, nor carried to the graue in a decent and comely manner; but are reproachfully cast into an hole by the high-way side, or common field, with some marke or signe of disgrace affixed to them, to giue occasion vnto the passers by, to speak by way of detestation of their horrible crime. To conclude, they sin also against the Common-wealth in depriuing it of a member, & their King of a subject, which might haue done them seruice. For recompence of which detriment, their goods are vsually confiscate, to the vse of the Weale-publike, and alienated from the vse of their heires and executors.

9. Sect. 11. That the selfe-murtherer sinneth most hainously against himselfe: and first by defiling his soule with sinne.

But as they sinne against all others among whom they liue; so most of all against themselues, both by making their soules guiltie of horrible sinne, and also obnoxious and subject to most grieuous punishments. For first they sinne most vnnaturally against that naturall loue and affection which euery one beareth vnto his owne person, whereby hee thinketh himself bound by all good means to preserue his life, & to aduance the good both of his body and soule; and to auoid carefully all perils and dangers which might bring vnto him any hurt. Yea so doth this loue naturally preuaile in man, that he desireth rather to be any thing, then not to be, and to spend his dayes in misery, rather then to end them by immature death, if he be not otherwise inclined by his heauenly hopes, and assurance of bettering his present condition. And this naturall affection which man hath for the preseruing of his life, Satan was well acquainted with, and therefore he saith vnto the Lord; Skin for skin, and all that euer a man hath will he giue for his life. Yea this naturall loue and desire of preseruing life is in the very beasts & vnreasonable creatures; and therefore that man who seeketh to destroy himselfe and hasten his owne death, is herein more senseless and destitute of vnderstanding then the brutish creatures. But much more hainously doe they sinne against that spirituall loue, which euery Christian ought to beare to the saluation of his soule, whilest they make themselues guiltie of a most hainous crime, which is (as it were) a misshapen monster compounded of many sins: as namely hellish pride, which will not let them stoope vnder Gods afflicting hand; impatiencie, whereby they murmure and repine against his prouidence, and will not submit themselues to be ruled according to his good will and pleasure; horrible desperation, whereby they cast aside all hope of mercie; as if the goodnesse of God, and infinitenes of his mercies, and Christs merits, were farre exceeded by their sinnes; and most bloudie crueltie, whereby they become their owne butchers and executioners. In which last respect, he that killeth himselfe is to be judged a much more hainous offender, then he who killeth another man: for if he be justly thought a much more wicked murtherer, who killeth his Kinsman or friend, then he who killeth a stranger; and among parricides hee be most wicked, who killeth his neerest Kinsman, as his brother, father, or childe; then how is his sinne out of measure sinfull, who becommeth his owne murtherer, seeing there is no man so neere vnto him as he is vnto himselfe? Neither doth it make any matter at all, whether he be sinfull and hath deserued death, or innocent and hath not deserued it; for no man is allowed in this case to be his owne judge or executioner. And in both respects he alike sinneth against his owne soule; for the more innocent he is; the more hainously he offendeth in murthering an innocent; the more hainous sinner he is, the more desperately he sinneth against his owne soule, by this selfe-murther, seeing hee taketh away all hope of repentance, and consequently of remission and saluation. And in this regard hee who committeth this selfe-murther most highly and hainously, sinneth against his owne person; in that hee maketh himselfe guiltie of a most grieuous sinne, and taketh away the meanes whereby he might be cured of it. As if a man should inflict into his bodie a deadly wound, and then desperatly cast away the cloth that should binde it vp, and keepe him from bleeding to death; and the salue wherewith, if it were applied, it might be healed. For whereas the only condition of the couenant of grace is faith and repentance, which being performed; assureth vs of pardon and forgiuenesse, and being neglected leaueth no hope of mercie, they who lay violent hands vpon their owne bodie, at the same instant make themselues guiltie of an horrible sinne, and disable themselues for performing this condition of beleeuing in Christ, and repenting of their sinne, hauing no time left after the committing of this crime for the performance of these duties. Most horrible there-therefore is this sin of selfe-murther against his owne person that committeth it, seeing, as it were, with one stroke hee murthereth both his bodie and soule, and at once depriueth himselfe of all the comforts which either concerne this life, or the life to come.

Iob 2. 4.

Tanto grauior censetur delict, quanto innocentior in causa fuit ex se occidendus putauit, Aug. de ciuit. Dei, lib. 1. cap. 17.

Quanto grauiora peccata sunt tanto magis in se puniri, quoniam parcit punienti ansam.

And hereby also it appeareth that they who murther themselues, doe most grieuously sinne against their owne soules; in that they do not only defile them with abominable sinne, euen then when they must appeare before God; but also doe draw vpon them most intolerable punishments. For not onely they inflict vpon themselues that capitall punishment of a temporary death, but also cast bodie and soule (as it were) head-long into the flames of Hell. Which if men would but throughly consider, they would abhorre this abominable sinne, if not for it selfe, yet at least for feare of future punishment. And when the Deuill and their owne impatiencie should moue them to commit it, that thereby being rid out of the World, they might haue an end of their present miseries; they would easily withstand these tentations as absurd and sottish: for what folly and madnesse is it for a man to draw vpon himselfe a farre greater punishment, that hee may be eased of a lesser? to drinke the full vials of Gods wrath, that hee may not a little taste them? to be so impatient of the heat of the Sunne, as to leape into the fire for ease? to acquit himselfe of light and momentany afflictions, which if hee bore them with patience would turne to his good, by running head-long into those horrible torments which are intolerable, and yet euerlasting? to exchange (that they may finde ease) the miseries of the the World, in which the deerest children of God haue their share and part, for the dreadfull fire of Hell prepared only for the Deuill and the damned? Yea but they may repent of their sinne in the very act, and so obtaine remission, and with it saluation. I will not deny but that if they doe attaine vnto vnfained repentance, and lay hold vpon Christ, by a liuely faith, they shall receiue pardon, and finde mercie, though it bee in the very houre of death; for Gods promises are indefinite, and limited vnto no time, so wee performe the condition which he requireth. But this I say, that if any man presume to commit this horrible sinne in hope of this repentance and mercy, it is ten thousand to one he shall neuer attaine vnto them. For what hope haue they to repent at the last instant, when the agony and pangs of death are vpon them (which vsually depriue men of their memory, and the vse of their vnderstanding) who could not performe this dutie as they ought in their perfect health? Besides, wee haue not repentance at our owne command, but it is the free gift of God, which he bestoweth on whom hee will, and therefore what hope can they haue of obtaining it, who commit such a fearefull sinne, presuming to haue repentance at their pleasure, and so adding vnto their fearefull sinnes of murther and desperation, most vaine confidence, and audacious presumption. And if there be yet any hope, who in his right wits would not rather indure the age of the longest liuer, all the torments and miseries which the most wittie and malicious Tyrant could inuent, then to hazard the eternall saluation of his soule vpon so tickle and vnlikely a point, especially if we adde vnto the former difficulties the Deuils powerfull and malicious businesse in finishing that which he hath begun, and in keeping them from rising by repentance, whom he hath ouerthrowne and plunged into these most hainous sinnes.

§. Sect. 13. Whether wee are to iudge all selfe-murtherers to be condemned.

But shall wee then conclude, that all who fall into this sinne of selfe-murther are condemned? what shall we then thinke of some who haue led an holy and vnblameable life, and haue shewed many euident signes of their election, and yet through the violence of Satans tentations haue fallen into this grieuous sinne of selfe-murther? I answere, Deut. 29. 29. let the secret things belong vnto God, and finall iudgement to the Iudge of Heauen and Earth. As I may not iustifie the wicked, so may I not condemne another mans seruant, let them stand or fall to their owne master. I dare not say that they are damned, because of their holy life; I dare not say they are saued, because of their sinfull death. But leauing vnto the Lord his royall prerogatiue, whereby he may shew mercie where he will, and make that possible, yea easie, which is difficult and impossible vnto men; I see no hope by any thing which God hath reueiled, that any man, what shew of pietie soeuer hee hath made, should attaine vnto saluation, if being in his right minde, vpon his owne free choice, after mature deliberation, he resolue to commit this horrible sinne, and so perish in the very act; and especially if to his sinne of murther, he adde that fearefull sinne of presumption; therefore falling into this wickednesse, because before hand he presumeth that hee shall repent, and so obtaine mercie and forgiuenesse. But on the other side, I dare not iudge al those to be cõdemned who hauing lead a godly life, doe after these good premises make such a bad conclusion. For there are some (that the infinite riches of Gods mercie may appeare, to the praise of the glorie of his grace) who haue liued for a time after their deaths wound inflicted, and haue had time not only to repent, but also to manifest vnto the World their vnfained repentance, not only in generall for all their sinnes, but also in particular, and that more seriously for this selfe-murther. There are some also through abundance of melancholy distracted of their wits, who vpon no set-

led purpose, or willing choice, but in a sudden passion, being affrighted and terrified with Satans tentations, doe run head-long into this sin, not knowing what they doe; of whom there is the same iudgement, that is, of those who die in lunacie, frenzie, or rauing in some burning Ague, not caring what they either speake or doe. And finally there are some, who for their sinnes, and to manifest Gods righteous iudgement in punishing of them, are giuen ouer vnto Satan to haue this temporary affliction of death inflicted on them; whom (after that hee hath receiued this commission) he affrighteth with his terrors, vrgeth with his powerfull commands, and carrieth head-long with the violence of his tentations, which being vnresistable leaue no free choice behind them of escaping that destruction which he hath prepared for them. In all which Satan is the principall cause of this cruell murther, and the parties his bare instruments whom he ruleth, not without force and violence. And therefore as hauing power giuen of God ouer the Swine, he entred into them, and carried them head-long into the Sea, making their owne legs to serue as the instruments of that destruction which their natures abhorred: so if for their sinnes he should haue this liberty granted vnto him by God ouer any of the faithfull, to inflict vpon them this temporarie iudgement of death, hee is able to make their hands or legs or other members of their bodie his instruments for their ruine and destruction, though both their nature, and regenerate part doe exceedingly abhorre it.

Matth.8.32.

9. Sect.14. Of the meanes whereby wee may be preserued against this fearefull sinne of selfe-murther, first we must auoid the causes thereof.

But this as I said is no comfort or encouragement vnto those who being in their right minde, doe through pride or impatiencie, vpon deliberation and free choice, murther themselues, that they may be freed from some miseries, losses or disgraces which they will not beare and out-liue; who haue no ground for any assurance of pardon and saluation, but their owne presumption, which being a sinne as hainous as the other, doth but increase Gods wrath, and adde to the measure of their fearefull condemnation. And therefore that all men may be preserued from this sinne, and so escape those heauie iudgements, I will in the last place propound some means to helpe them in this endeuour. And first, they who would not fall into this sinne, must auoid the causes thereof before mentioned, as namely, pride which maketh men discontent, when their estate doth not euery way answere to their high desires; and labour after true humility which maketh men content with any condition, as being better then in their owne iudgement they deserue; and to submit themselues in all things to Gods good will and pleasure, as knowing better then they what is good and profitable for them; and being readie in his infinite loue to order all things so, as that they may further the saluation of their soules. They must also flie impatiencie which maketh euery light burthen intolerable; and labour patiently to submit themselues to bee ruled by Gods good prouidence, assuring themselues that nothing befalleth them but by his disposing; who will order all things so (if they will trust and depend vpon him) as that they shall turne to their good; and when they seeme almost consumed with the fire of his wrath, and the heat of affliction, it shall tend but to the purifying and purging of them from the drosse of their sinnes, that like pure gold they be fit for his his heauenly treasury. They must arme themselues against doubting and desperation, and vse all good meanes to attaine vnto a liuely faith, grounding their assurance of mercie & saluation, not vpon their owne workes and worthinesse, which will fall away like the sand in the day of tentation, and most faile them when they most rest vpon them; but vpon Gods infinite goodnesse and free grace, and vpon the all-sufficiencie of Christs merits and satisfaction, which will continue a firme foundation for our faith to rest vpon, when our vnworthinesse and want of desert doe most discourage vs. They must take heed of exercising crueltie towards others, and endeuour to haue tender hearts full of loue, pitie and compassion, and so shall they bee more apt to exercise these graces towardes themselues, and more hardly drawne to offer violence and outrage against their owne persons. Finally, they must carefully shunne all manner of sin, especially hainous crimes committed against their knowledge and conscience; which doe wound and weaken faith, and make them doubt and despaire of Gods loue and fauour, or if through infirmitie or the violence of their passions and corruptions, they haue fallen into any such sin, they must speedily and seriously repent of them; that so they may be blotted out of Gods remembrance, and no more be matter of accusation in their owne consciences. For so long as we lie in sins vnrepented of, he may in his righteous iudgement make vs to become our owne executioners, or deliuer vs ouer vnto the power and malice of Satan, who can easily make vs the readie instruments of our owne ruine.

9. Sect.15. Of other meanes to keepe all from selfe-murther.

The second meanes is that we meditate of the hainousnesse of this sin, as before it hath beene described, and of the greatnesse of the punishment; and by reason of them both, of the desperatenesse of their condition who fall into it. And then thinke with our selues, that though our estate be neuer so wretched, either in respect of our sins or punishments; either in regard of our externall or internall afflictions, there is some hope of deliuerance, if we will carefully vse the meanes ordained by God, and waite his leisure for his helpe and blessing; or that both in our bodies and soules wee should endure all the miseries which are incident vnto mankinde in this life, yea in time they will haue an end, yea in comparison shortly and within a while: whereas contrariwise if through pride and impatiencie wee lay violent hands vpon our selues, we are vtterly hopelesse and helplesse, and in a most fearefull and desperate estate; casting our selues head-long into Hell and destruction, from which there is no redemption, no comfort and refreshing; no place to repentance or hope of mercie, or end of intolerable torments. Thirdly, when our minds are fild with horrors & fears, our consciences ouer-burthened with sin, and when wee are assaulted with such tentations of Satan as wee cannot answere, wee must in any case take heed that out of a foolish shamefastnesse and proud feare of being disgraced, we doe not seeke to smother and keepe it secret vnto our selues; which were no other then like fresh-water souldiers to suffer our selues to bee surprized and ouerthrowne by our mightie enemies, because we would not haue our Captaine discouer our weaknesse and want of skill: but wee must seeke for helpe and comfort, counsell and assistance from Gods faithfull Ministers, or some other wise and able Christians, laying open our sinnes which ouer-burthen our consciences, making knowne our state in all particulars, and discouering those subtill tentations of Satan, which wee cannot answere, or with which we are incessantly vexed, chusing rather to shame our selues in this life, then to haue our faces couered with shame and confusion in the day of Gods appearing. Finally, we must often haue our recourse vnto God by fesuent and effectuall prayer, craving his blessing vpon all these meanes vsed, and desiring him that hee will not lead vs into tentation, but deliuer vs from euill; that hee will rebuke Satan, and not suffer him to haue any power ouer vs for our destruction, that he will strengthen vs against all his assaults, and giue vs a good issue out of these tentations, grounding our faith in these our petitions on his most gracious promises, that hee will not suffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power; and that if we call vpon him in the day of our trouble he will deliuer vs, that we may glorifie him. And so will hee manifest his power in our weaknesse, giue Satan a repulse and ouerthrow, and vs strength to endure his encounters; and howsoeuer he may deferre for a time to free vs from these troubles, for his owne glory and our good, yet wee may assure our selues, and bee certainly perswaded that in the end wee shall haue helpe and deliuerance, joy in the Holy Ghost, victory ouer our enemies, and the crowne of victory euerlasting glory, which hee hath promised to all those who ouercome.

by

CHAP. III.

Answeres to those tentations of Satan whereby he perswadeth carnall men to presume, and true Christians to doubt of Gods loue.

AND thus much concerning those tentations of Satan, which are vnreasonable, and the meanes whereby the weake Christian may be armed against them: now we are to speake of the other sort, for the enforcing whereof he pretendeth reason, and alleageth many arguments and testimonies, that hee may hinder vs from entring into, or diuert vs out of the course of Christianitie, and make the meanes of our saluation altogether vneffectuall and vnprofitable. Where first we are to consider that these tentations of Satan are not alwayes one and the same, neither impugne one or two points alone of our faith and religion; but as the causes and the meanes of our saluation are manifold, so also doth hee gather manifold objections against euery one of them, if they truly appertaine vnto vs, that so hee may impugne and race our faith; or else doth fill vs with vaine presumption, perswading vs that all the causes and meanes of saluation concurre together in vs, when as in truth wee are void and destitute of them all. Let vs therefore consider of the seuerall causes of our saluation, and obserue what tentations Satan suggesteth in our minds against euery one of them. The first and principall cause of our saluation is Gods eternall loue and immutable good will, wherewith he hath loued his creatures from before the foundations of the World were laid; the which loue and good will in himselfe did moue him to elect them to saluation, whom hee so loued without any deserts in themselues: for how could they deserue any thing at Gods hand before they were? or what good could the Lord foresee in them, but that which in his eternall counsell hee purposed to bestow and impart vnto them? First therefore wee will speake of those tentations which concerne the loue of God towards vs, which are of two sorts; the first leading vs to vaine presumption and carnall securitie; the other, to horror and desperation. For if Satan see men liuing in carnall securitie, & frozen in the dregs of their sins, so as in truth there is no true signe that they are beloued of God; hee will perswade them that they are highly in his fauour and loue, and therefore though they raine on in their wicked courses, yet they shall be saued. Doest thou not perceiue (will hee say) that God dearely loueth thee? Why, consider that

Q. Sect. 1. That Satans tentations impugne all the causes and meanes of our saluation.

Satans tentation whereby he perswadeth carnall men that they are beloued of God.

that hee hath made thee one of his chiefest creatures, whereas otherwise he would haue made thee a Toad or Serpent; he hath also like a tender Father preserued and nourished thee from thy infancy, and which is more, he hath sent his dearely beloued Son to die for thee, and hee hath made choice of thee amongst many others to be a member of his Church, where thou enjoyest the preaching of the Gospell, and the vse of the Sacraments, to the end thou mayest be assured of thy saluation without all question or doubting: vnto these thou mayest adde all those temporall benefits, in which thou aboundest aboue many others, for God hath giuen thee health & strength of bodie, and secure peace of mind, thou enjoyest great preferments in the world, and art well esteemed amongst all, thou hast varietie of pleasures, and sufficiencie, yea plentie of all earthly blessings: thou louest and art beloued of thy Spouse, and thy children like Oliue branches stand about thy table.

Finally, thou hast the World at will, and prospereſt in all which thou takest in hand. All which benefits being promised by God to his children and seruants as rewards of their obedience, and pledges of his loue, doeshew, that thou hast deserued well at his hands, and art in such a course of life alreadie, as hath aduanced thee into an high degree of his speciall fauour. Neuer therefore take care nor trouble thy selfe concerning thy saluation, vse not such strictnesse and preciſenesse of life, but take thy pleasure, and follow those delights which the Lord hath bestowed vpon thee as pledges of his loue; for thou art not now a slaue but a sonne, and therefore mayst more freely follow thine owne desire, and vse thy libertie: cast away all seruile feare, which maketh thee take such paines in vsing all meanes whereby thou maist be assured of saluation; for thou art assured of the principall, namely of Gods loue, and therefore thou needest not to doubt of the rest, nor to debarre thy selfe of thy pleasures, spending thy time in feare and care, to the end thou maist get the assurance of that which thou needest not to call into question.

9. Sect. 2. The answere to the former temtation.

And thus doth the Deuill fill men with presumption, and lull them asleep in carnall securitie to their vtter destruction, and therefore it behoueth vs to arme our selues against him, that wee bee not circumuented. And to this end let vs cõsider that Gods loue goeth not alone, neither is it idle in those whom he loueth: but as the first linke of a chaine draweth all the rest of the chain with it, so the loue of God, which is the first cause of our saluation, is accompanied with all the other causes which are subordinate thereunto. For whom God loueth, them he electeth; whom he electeth, those in his good time he calleth; whom he effectually calleth, them he iustifieth; and whom hee iustifieth, those he sanctifieth. If therefore we be not sanctified, we are not iustified; if we are not iustified, we are not called; if we are not called, we can haue no assurance that we are elected, nor yet of Gods loue and fauour; and consequently whosoeuer liue in their blind ignorance, in their infidelitie, and wallow themselues in the filthy puddle of their sins, without any true sorrow for those which are past, or any good purpose of heart to forsake them in the time to come, they can haue no assurance of Gods loue, but rather iustly to feare lest they are in the number of those whom the Lord hath eternally rejected, if they continue in this their miserable and desperate estate.

Temporall benefits no infallible signes of Gods loue.

Neither let Satban bewitch them with that vaine opinion of Gods loue towards them, because of those generall benefits, which like the raine and Sun-shine are bestowed both vpon the good and bad, for what in this respect can they promise more to themselues then Esau and Saul? Were not they men created according to Gods owne likenesse? Were they not preserued and nourished by God, and that more liberally then many of Gods owne children? For Esau had so much that hee professed to his brother Iacob that he had enough, and was attended vpon by foure hundred men. And was not Saul a mightie King, who had all at command? Were not both these in the Church of God, and outwardly enjoyed the Word and Sacraments as well as any other; and yet God himselfe saith that he hated Esau, and had rejected Saul. And therefore let vs neuer bragge of our assurance of Gods loue, because of these outward and common benefits which hee indifferently bestoweth both vpon the elect and reprobate; but if we would be assured indeed of Gods loue, let vs looke into our selues, and consider if hee haue bestowed vpon vs his spirituall graces, faith, hope, patience, loue of him and our brethren, true repentance for our sinnes, and holinesse of life and the rest; and then by the fruits of sanctification wee may be assured that we are sanctified, and consequently iustified, called, elected, and eternally loued of God.

9. Sect. 3. How Satan perswadeth weake Christians that they are not beloued of God.

And thus doth Satan falsly perswade the carnall worldling that hee is highly in the loue and fauour of God: but contrariwise when he assaulteth the weake Christian, he changeth his copie, and goeth about to perswade him that he is not beloued of God, but subject to his wrath and heauie displeasure. And this hee inforceth by two sorts of arguments: the one drawne from his manifold corruptions, whereby hee is vnworthy of Gods loue; the other from those grieuous afflictions and crosses which the Lord in this this life inflicteth on him; both which hee thus vrgeth against him. Canst thou vile wretch conceiue the least hope that thou art beloued of God? Why, doe but take a view of thy selfe, and thou shalt see that originall corruption hath ouer-spread both thy bodie and soule like a filthy leprosie; vnto which thou hast added actuall transgressions more in number then the haires of thy head, or the starres of Heauen; for daily, nay hourely thou omittest some dutie which thy God hath commanded thee, and committest some sinne which he hath forbidden. Can therefore the Lord, who abhorreth wickednesse, loue the wicked? canst thou obtaine his fauour, & yet doest nothing but displease him? He that loueth God keepeth his Commandements; but thou by transgressing them all, doest shew that thou louest him not: and will the Lord loue them who hate and rebell against him? Can iustice it selfe loue wickednesse, and perfect holinesse impure corruption? No verily; for in his Word hee hath threatned his wrath against all such notorious sinners, and he is no lesse true in his threatnings then in his promises. But if all this will not perswade thee that the Lord thee, yet at least be perswaded by thine owne experience. For, hath not thy just God begunne alreadie to make thee taste the cup of his wrath, of which hereafter thou shalt drinke in full measure? Hath he not spoiled thee of thy goods, taken away thy good name, made thee an abiect amongst men, afflicted thee in bodie with grieuous and continuall sickenesse, and filled thy soule full of horrour and despaire? Is not thy conscience stung with sinne, and hath not the poyson thereof drunke vp thy spirit? Doest thou not plainly apprehend his wrath, and is not thy soule as it were set vpon the racke, so that there is not one part of thee, either of bodie and soule which is not full of miserie and wretchednesse? Do not therefore fondly flatter thy selfe with a vaine opinion of Gods loue, but beleeue, if not my words, yet at least thine owne senses: And seeing thou hast no hope of Gods loue, if thou beest wise loue thy selfe, follow thy pleasure, eate and drinke and cheere vp thine heart, and do not vainly macerate and turmoyle thy selfe in labouring after impossibilities, and in striuing for the assurance of Gods loue, of which, when thou hast done what thou canst, yet shalt thou neuer be assured.

Sect. 4. How wee may know the vnfained beloued of God.

And thus you see the manner of Satans temptations, whereby hee laboureth to perswade vs that we are out of the loue and fauour of God; against which we must more carefully arme our selues, as being most odious and injurious vnto God, and most pernicious vnto our owne soules. It is most injurious vnto God, if wee doubt of his loue towards vs seeing he hath giuen vs innumerable pledges and most certaine testimonies thereof, and omitteth nothing which might doe vs good. Hee hath created vs after his owne Image, he hath continually preserued and sustained vs, giuing vs our meate in due season, and oft-times hath succoured and defended vs before wee craued his helpe. But which is more, he hath giuen his dearely beloued Sonne to die a bitter death, to redeeme vs out of the hands of our spirituall enemies: and to the end we should be made partakers of Christ and all his benefits, he hath giuen vs his Word, and made his Couenant with vs, that in Christ he will be our God, and we his people, hee our Father, and wee his children. And lest yet there should be any place left to doubting, he hath added to his Word, his Sacraments, which like Seales may assure vs of his loue and fauour. What injurie therefore shall we offer vnto God, if notwithstanding all this wee doubt of his good will, of which hee hath assured vs by so many pledges, testimonies and seales? We know that a kind friend will take it most vnkindly, if after hee hath heaped vpon a man innumerable benefits, and shewed all testimonies of true loue, he notwithstanding doubt of his good will, and suspect his friendship: and so surely the Lord will take it ill at our hands, and thinke himselfe much abused, if after hee hath bestowed such infinite benefits, euen his dearely beloued Sonne to die for vs, we now suspect his good will, and grow iealous of his loue; if we doubt of his loue, who is loue it selfe, as the Apostle speaketh, 1. Iohn 4.8.

Q. Sect. 5. That carnall men haue no assurance of Gods loue though they boast thereof.

But against this which I haue said, there are two obiections, the first is made by the worldling, the other by Satan. The worldly man will say, that the Lord hath made him also partaker of all these benefits, and therefore there is no cause why hee should doubt of his loue; nor any reason why hee should bee censured or condemned for his faith. I answere, that hee is not reprehended for his perswasion of Gods loue, nor for his assurance of Gods promises in Christ; but for his boasting of this faith, perswasion, and assurance, whereas there is nothing in him in truth but a dead carcasse of faith, carnall securitie, and vaine presumption. For true faith purifieth the heart, and worketh by loue, it is plentifull in good workes, and prouoketh vs to performe all good duties to God and our Neighbours: and it is impossible that we should be truly perswaded of Gods loue, and not loue him againe: it cannot be that we loue God, if we shew no care in glorifying his name, by letting our lights shine before men, nor any desire to performe obedience to his will. For as our Sauiour saith, Hee that loueth mee keepeth my Commandements, and he that loueth mee not, keepeth not my words, as it is Iohn 14.23, 24. If therefore wee liue in our sins without repentance, if Acts 15.9. Gal. 5.6.

1. Iohn 14.23.

if we make no conſcience of our wayes, and ſhew no zeale in glorifying Gods Name; if our faith bee deſtitute of the fruits of good workes, then is our perſwaſion but fond preſumption; our aſſurance, carnall ſecuritie; our faith dead, and like a carcaſſe which Iames 2. 26. breatheth not, as Iames ſpeaketh, Chap. 2. 26. Wee doe not then reprehend any for being perſwaded of Gods loue, gathering his aſſurance out of his manifold mercies, and innumerable benefits beſtowed on his Church: nay, contrariwiſe we affirme, that notwithſtanding all our ſinnes and vnworthineſſe, wee are to bee perſwaded of Gods loue in Chriſt, yea, and to beleeue againſt beliefe, and to hope againſt hope, when as there is no ground or reaſon of either in our ſelues: but this wee maintaine, that whoſoeuer hath this aſſurance and faith, in the leaſt meaſure begun in him, doth truly loue God againe, and earneſtly laboureth after mortification and newneſſe of life. And whoſoeuer is deſtitute of Gods loue, and liueth in his ſinnes, without any ſorrow for thoſe which are paſt, or purpoſe to leaue them for the time to come, he may well brag of his faith and aſſurance of Gods loue, but in very truth there is as yet nothing in him but carnall ſecuritie and vaine preſumption.

Q. Sect. 6. That euery particular Chriſtian may aſſure himſelfe of Gods loue.

Secondly, the tempter will obiect that the Lord hath giuen all theſe teſtimonies and pledges of his loue vnto his Church, & that it therfore may well be aſſured thereof; but as for particular men, they notwithſtanding may juſtly doubt of his loue, ſeeing they haue no ſpeciall reaſons to perſwade them that theſe teſtimonies and pledges were giuen particularly vnto them. But I anſwere, that this is a fond obiection. For what is the Church, but the whole company of Gods Saints? What is it but a bodie conſiſting of many members, which are particular Chriſtians? How therefore can the whole Church be perſwaded of Gods loue, if all the ſeuerall members doubt thereof? How can any thing belong to the whole, which belongeth not to the particular parts? As though a whole Citie could be aſſured of the Princes fauour, and yet all the particular men in the Citie ſhould thinke themſelues in his diſpleaſure. Saint Paul teacheth vs another leſſon in his Galath. 2. 20. owne perſon, ſaying; Galath. 2. 20. Who hath loued me and giuen his life for me: hee ſaith not, who hath loued and giuen his life for the Church, but for himſelfe. Nor doth the Apoſtle here ſpeak this by reuelation, whereby hee might extraordinarily bee aſſured of Gods loue: but he vſeth for his argument a reaſon common to all Chriſtians; namely, that God loued him, becauſe hee had giuen himſelfe to death for him: whoſoeuer therefore beleeueth with Paul that Chriſt died for him, may bee aſſured alſo with him of Gods loue. Neither is he thus perſwaded of this loue to himſelfe onely, but alſo towards all the faithfull, Rom. 8. 38. I am perſwaded that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor Principalities, &c. ſhall be able to ſeparate vs from the loue of God which is in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord.

Secondly, if we doe not beleeue that God loueth vs, wee make him a liar, for hee hath profeſſed his loue, and giuen vs many teſtimonies thereof in his Word, neither doth he require any condition at our hands but that wee beleeue him. For his merciſull promiſes doe not exclude any for their vnworthineſſe, but for their vnbeliefe: according to that, Iohn 3. 16. So God loued the world, that hee gaue his onely begotten Sonne, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him ſhould not periſh, but haue euerlaſting life. And Verſe 18. Hee that beleeues on him is not condemned, but he that beleeueth not is condemned alreadie becauſe he hath not beleeued in the Name of the onely begotten Sonne of God. Seeing then there is no other condition required but faith for the aſſurance of Gods loue and euerlaſting life; ſurely, moſt deſperately doe we ſinne againſt our owne ſoules, and moſt blaſphemouſly againſt God, if wee will not beleeue his Word confirmed by his Seale, no not his Oath whereby hee hath ratified his Couenant betweene him and vs, but make him, who is truth it ſelfe, a liar, a couenant-breaker, yea, a perjured perſon. For ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1. Iohn 5. 10. Hee that beleeueth not God hath made him a liar, becauſe hee beleeued not the record, that God witneſſed of his Sonne. Though therefore wee ſinne, yet let vs not thus blaſpheme; though we be grieuous ſinners, and vnworthy Gods loue, yet let vs not adde this to all our other ſins and vnworthineſſe, to diſtruſt Gods Truth in his gracious promiſes: for if we put all our other ſins into the one ſcale, & this alone into the other, yet will it weigh downe all the reſt; neither are wee damned for our owne ſins, if wee doe not adde vnto them infidelitie. For whereas the precious balme of our Sauiours bloud is a ſoueraigne ſalue to cure all other ſores of ſinne; yet this it cannot help, becauſe it doth refuſe the cure, and as it were pulleth off this precious playſter when it is laid on it.

Q. Sect. That doubting of Gods loue is iniurious vnto him.

Iohn 3. 16.

1. Iohn 5. 10.

But as this diſtruſting and doubting of Gods loue is injurious vnto him, ſo alſo it is pernicious vnto our owne ſoules. For firſt, it tormenteth our minds, and ſetteth our conſciences vpon the Racke, when as wee haue no other aſſurance of Gods loue, but only ſo farre forth as wee find our ſelues worthy of it. For ſo often as wee fall, and the ſight of our ſins commeth before our eyes, hauing no other ground of Gods loue but our owne deſerts, we doubt and ſtagger like a ſhip toſſed with the billowes of the Sea, and in the end ſinke into the gulfe of deſpaire, being ouerballanced,

ballanced, and too heauily laden with the vnsupportable waight of our sinnes; whereas if wee were throughly perswaded of Gods free loue and good will, grounded on his owne good pleasure, and not on our worthinesse, if we did fall we would be grieued indeed euen at the very heart, because wee had displeased our gracious God and louing Father; but yet our sins would not make vs despaire or doubt of his loue towards vs, because it is not grounded on our worthinesse, but vpon Gods owne free mercie, grace and good will.

Secondly, if wee doubt and distrust of Gods loue towards vs, wee shall neuer loue him from our hearts: for who loueth him entirely, of whose loue he is not perswaded? or who can performe the duties of loue to such an one as hateth and abhorreth him? Cos amoris amor, Loue is the whetstone of loue. And if this be true amongst men, then much more betweene God and vs: for wee loue him because he loued vs first, as the Apostle saith, 1. Iohn 4.19. As therefore the cold stone can of it selfe cast forth no heate, till it be first warmed by the Sun-beames, & then it reflecteth againe some of the heate which it receiued: so no more can our cold hearts cast any beames of heartie loue towards God, till they bee warmed with the apprehension of his loue towards vs, & then they begin to returne some sparkes of loue towards God, after they are inflamed with the beames of his loue cleerely shining in them. Vnlesse therefore wee bee assured of Gods loue wee cannot loue him, and consequently cannot performe any dutie of loue in obedience to his will: for as loue is the fulfilling of the Law, so the want of loue is the transgressing of al the Commandements: for all consist in the loue of God, which is the fountaine of all true obedience; and in the loue of our Neighbour, which as a spring issueth from it. Nay, when wee despaire of Gods loue, then doe we despaire of our saluation, and therefore hauing no hope of happinesse in the life to come, wee are readie to seek all the pleasures and delights which this life will affoord vnto vs, giuing our selues ouer to the satisfying of all the filthy lusts of the flesh, and spending our times in all Epicurisme and sensualitie.

Lastly, our doubting and distrusting of Gods loue doth ouerthrow our patience, in the time of affliction, and causeth vs to mourn and repine against God, blaspheming him to his face. It hindereth all Christian resolution in suffering for the Name of Christ, for how should we suffer any thing patiently for his sake of whose loue we are not assured? It maketh the day of death horrible, when as we are not perswaded that wee shall render vp our soules into the hands of a gracious Father, but into the hands of a seuere Iudge: whereas on the other side, when we are thoroughly perswaded of Gods loue, then may we patiently, yea joyfully suffer all afflictions, because we know that they are but gentle trials, and fatherly chastisements, which our gracious God doth inflict on vs for our euerlasting good: when wee are persecuted for our profession of the Gospell, wee will triumph with joy, because wee are thought worthy to suffer any misery for the Name of Christ, who hath laid downe his life for our sake; when the day of our departing approcheth we rejoyce, because we desire nothing more then to bee dissolued, and to bee with Christ, who so tenderly loueth vs. In a word, come prosperitie, come aduersitie, come affliction, come persecution, come fire, come sword, come life, come death, come what will come, nothing can come amisse, nothing can dismay or discourage vs, if wee be once fully assured of Gods loue in Christ, both because our loue of God, which by his loue is wrought in vs, will make the heauiest and most tedious burthen seem light and momentany, which it shall please our heauenly Father to lay vpon vs: and also because wee know that all things (euen miseries, afflictions, persecutions, yea death it selfe) worke together for the best vnto them that loue God. As it is Rom. 8.28.

CHAP. IV.

That our sinnes and vnworthinesse should not make vs doubt of Gods loue.

Q. Sect. 1. Satans temptations answered whereby he moueth vs to doubt of Gods loue, because of our vnworthinesse.

SEeing therefore that our doubting and distrusting of Gods loue towardes vs, is both injurious vnto God & pernicious vnto our selues; let vs in no case admit of Sathans tentations whereby hee laboureth to perswade vs that the Lord hateth vs. But forasmuch as there is no perswasion without knowledge and faith, neither can we know and beleeue that we are in Gods fauour, vnlesse we haue some ground and warrant out of Gods Word, whereupon wee may cast our wauering minds, and confirme our fainting faith against the boysterous blasts of Satans tentations: therefore let vs examine Sathans reasons, whereby hee goeth about to perswade vs that wee are not beloued of God, by the touchstone of Gods Word; and waigh his objections in the scales of the Sanctuary, to see if they be of any waight or substance, or else but fruthie, light, and of no sound consequence. First, therefore whereas Satan objecteth that we are miserable sinners, vnworthy altogether of Gods loue, and most worthy of his wrath and heauie displeasure; that God is infinitely just, and therefore cannot nor will not loue vs being notoriously wicked: we are to answere, that indeed wee are in our selues vnworthy the least dram of Gods loue, by reason of our originall corruption and actuall transgression; and therefore if our assurance of his fauour, had no other foundation but our owne deserts, wee had great reason not onely to doubt, but also vtterly to despaire of his loue towards vs. But the loue of God is not grounded vpon our worthinesse which is nothing, but vpon his owne good will and pleasure, which is infinite as himselfe is infinite; and therefore though in our selues wee are most miserable and wretched, yet this is no reason why wee should distrust or in the least degree doubt of Gods loue, seeing it ariseth not from any thing in vs, but from himselfe who is vnchangeable. The truth hereof manifestly appeareth by the Scriptures, where it is said that the Lord hath loued vs, not for our excellencie and worthinesse, but of his free grace and louing kindnesse. So *Hos.*14.5. I will heale their rebellion; I will loue them freely, &c. And the Apostle Iohn telleth vs that herein Gods loue appeareth, in that when we loued not him, he so dearely loued vs, that hee sent his Sonne to be a reconciliation for our sinnes; 1.Iohn 4.10. And Paul saith, that hereby *God setteth out his loue towards vs, seeing that whilest wee were yet sinners, Christ died for vs, and when wee were enemies God reconciled vs vnto himselfe by the death of his sonne: Rom.*5.8,10. If therefore the Lord loued vs when wee were enemies vnto him and dead in our sinnes; how much more will hee loue vs now being reconciled in Christ, and in some measure purged from our corruption, and quickned by his Spirit to newnesse of life? If when wee were most vnworthy, hee freely shewed such exceeding fauour towardes vs: how much more hauing by his Spirit & the graces thereof made vs (in Christ) more worthy, will hee continue his loue vnto vs? If hee hath hitherto loued vs not for any deserts of ours, but of his free mercy, because he is loue it selfe, as Iohn calleth him, and the God of grace, as Peter stileth him, why should we doubt of Gods loue in respect of our vnworthinesse, seeing his loue hath not his ground vpon our worthinesse, but vpon his owne nature which is immutable, and therefore whom he once loueth, he loueth them vnto the end, though in themselues they are miserable and wretched, Iohn 13.1.

Q. Sect. 2. Gods election not grounded on our workes & worthines. *Rom.*11.5,6.

But as the Scriptures shew that God hath loued vs freely from all eternitie; so also doe they as plainly declare, that God hath manifested this loue in the worke of our saluation freely, and without any respect of our worthinesse: as may appeare in the seuerall causes thereof. As first hee hath elected vs of his owne free loue and good will, and not for any of our deserts. So *Ephes.*1.5. Hauing predestinated vs vnto the adoption of children by Iesus Christ vnto himselfe: according to the good pleasure of his will. And therefore it is called the election not of vertue and workes, but of grace, *Rom.*11.5. Yea, it is flatly opposed to workes in the Verse following. And if (saith the Apostle) it be of grace, it is no more of workes, or else were grace no more grace: but if it be of workes it is no more grace, or else were worke no more worke. So that our election is not grounded vpon our worthinesse, but on Gods grace and good will: and therefore it cannot bee ouerthrowne by our vnworthinesse, so wee wholly relie vpon Gods free mercie in Christ. Secondly, the couenant betweene God and vs, wherein he professeth himselfe our God, and taketh vs for his people and heires of his promises is not the Couenant of workes but the Couenant of Grace: in which hee offereth freely in Christ, his grace and mercy to all who will receiue it by the hand of a liuely faith. And this the Lord himselfe expresseth, *Ier.*31.31. Behold the dayes come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new couenant with the house of Israel (that is, my Church) 32. Not according to the couenant which I made with their fathers (that is, the couenant of workes) the which my couenant they brake, &c. but this shall be my couenant that I will make with the house of Israel, after those dayes, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people. So the Apostle Paul saith, that the promise made to Abraham and his seed, was not giuen through the law, but through the righteousnes of faith, and that it was not therefore by faith that it might come by grace: and the promise might be sure to all the seed. For if the couenant were of workes and not of faith, of deserts and not of grace, we should continually disanull and make it of no effect.

Our worthinesse is not the condition of Gods Couenant.

*Ierem.*31.3.

*Rom.*4.13.

Thirdly, as weare elected before all times, so were wee in time redeemed freely, and without respect of our owne worthinesse, of the meere mercie and loue of God; although our Sauiour Christ payed the full price of our redemption vnto God his Father for vs: and this appeareth, *Ephes.*1.7. *By whom we haue redemption through his blood, euen the forgiuenesse of sinnes, according to his rich grace, Vers.*8. Whereby hee hath beene abundant towards vs in all wisdome and vnderstanding. So that our redemption was not free vnto our Sauiour Christ, for it cost him the inestimable price of his most precious bloud; but it was free vnto vs, without any respect of our workes and worthinesse. For wee were like desperate debters, deeply ingaged vnto God, and not able to pay the least farthing; and therefore were cast into the prison of euerlasting death, there to be detained till wee had discharged the whole debt: which which being impossible vnto vs, it pleased our Sauiour Christ of his meere pitie & free good will to become our suretie, and to make full satisfaction to his father, euen to the least mite, that so wee might bee released and set free. We were all of vs miserable captiues, held in the thraldome of sinne, Sathan and death, vnable to deserue in any measure to be set at libertie; for we were the children of wrath, who were not sicke only, but euen dead in our sinnes, as it is *Ephes.*2.1,5. But our Sauiour Christ of his vndeserued loue did pay the price of our redemption, and set vs out of our captiuitie, quickning and raising vs vp from sinne to newnesse of life; as the Apostle setteth it downe *Ephes.*2.3. And you were by nature the children of wrath as well as others. 4. But God which is rich in mercy, through his great loue wherewith hee loued vs, 5. Euen when we were dead by sins, hath quickened vs together in Christ, by whose grace yee are saued. 6. And hath raised vs vp together in heauenly places in Christ Iesus: 7. That he might shew in ages to come the exceeding riches of his grace, through his kindnesse towards vs in Christ Iesus. So that there is no worthinesse in our selues which the Lord respected, for wee were all alike the children of wrath, and dead in our sinnes, but onely of his free mercy and great loue, hee hath redeemed vs by Christ.

*Ephes.*2.1,5.

*Ephes.*2.3,4.

*2. Sect.*4. Our worthines no cause of our calling.

Fourthly, as the Lord hath freely redeemed vs, so also he hath freely called vs to the knowledge of the mysterie of our redemption wrought by Iesus Christ, and chosen vs amongst all Nations to bee his Church and peculiar people, and that of his meere grace and free good will, without any respect of our worthinesse, as appeareth 2.*Tim.*1.9. Who hath saued vs, and called vs with an holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his owne purpose of grace which was giuen vs through Christ Iesus before the world was. So Moses telleth the children of Israel, that the Lord had called and made choice of them aboue all other Nations to be his Church and people, not for any respect of themselues, or their owne worthinesse, but of his free loue and vndeserued mercy, as it is *Deut.*7.7,8. *Psal.*44.3. Fiftly, as the Lord hath freely called vs, so being called he hath freely iustified vs, not for any inherent righteousnesse in our selues, but of his owne grace and good will, through the righteousnesse and obedience of Iesus Christ which he imputeth vnto vs. And this is euident *Rom.*3.24. where it is said, that we are iustified freely by Gods grace, through the redemption which is in Christ Iesus. And Titus 3.7. where the Apostle saith, that we are iustified by his grace. And lest wee should joyne with Gods grace our owne works and worthinesse, hee telleth vs that Abraham himselfe, though a most righteous and holy man in respect of his sincerities and integritie of heart, was notwithstanding not iustified by his workes, but Abraham *beleeued God, and that was imputed vnto him for righteousnesse, Rom.*4.3. and Verse 5. hee flatly excludeth workes from being any causes of our iustification; To him (saith hee) that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousnesse. So that we are freely iustified of Gods grace and good will, without any respect of our owne workes and worthinesse, as being any causes of our iustification, although they are necessary and inseparable fruits thereof. For the same death and bloudshed of Christ, whereby wee are freed from the guilt and punishment of sin and euerlasting death, doth free vs also from the death of sinne to newnesse of life, and doth not onely iustifie but also sanctifie vs, as the Apostle plainly sheweth, *Tit.*2.14. Who gaue himselfe for vs, that he might redeeme vs from all iniquitie, (that is, free vs from the guilt and punishment of sinne to which we were subject) and purge vs to be a peculiar people vnto himselfe, zealous of good workes.

*Rom.*4.3,5.

*Tit.*2.14.

Sixtly, our sanctification and inherent righteousnesse it selfe, what is it else but the free gift of God, begun, increased, and finished by his gracious Spirit? What are the graces in vs but Gods free and vndeserued gifts? What are our best workes but the fruits of his Spirit working in vs? For by nature we are dead in our sinnes, and the children of wrath as well as the vnbeleeuing heathen or most prophane worldling, *Eph.*2.1,3. By nature we are not able so much as to thinke a good thought, or to will that which is good, no more then those who remaine in the state of condemnation, as appeareth, 2.*Cor.*3.5. *Phil.*2.13. but it is our Sauiour Christ, who so loued his Church, that he gaue himselfe for it, that he might sanctifie it and cleanse it, by the washing of water through the word, &c. as it is *Ephes.*5.25,26. So that when wee haue attained to the highest measure of sanctification that wee can possibly attaine vnto, wee must in all humilitie confesse with Paul, that by the grace of God we are that we are, as it is 1.*Cor.*15.10. Neither must we attribute any thing in the work of our saluation, vnto our sanctification and good workes, but ascribe all to the free grace and vndeserued loue of God in Christ, whereby wee are sanctified and stirred vp to new obedience, who were altogether polluted, yea dead in our sinnes. So that our sanctification and worthinesse is not the cause of Gods loue and mercy towards vs, but his loue and free good will is the cause of our sanctification, and maketh vs, who were vnworthy in our selues, worthy in Christ of his loue and fauour. And therefore we must not mea-measure Gods loue by our worthinesse and abundance of grace as being a cause thereof; nor despaire of his fauour and mercie, when wee see our vnworthinesse and weaknesse in sanctifying graces; for these are no causes of his loue but effects, and consequently when we wat them altogether, though there be no cause of hope whilest wee remaine in this state, yet wee are not vtterly to despaire for the time to come, seeing the Lord in his good time may begin his good worke in vs; and when it is begun, and wee haue receiued the least measure of sanctification, euen a desire and holy endeuour to liue in holinesse & righteousnesse, wee may be assured that it is Gods worke, which hee hauing begun will finish and accomplish, according to that, Phil.1.6. In the meane time let vs possesse our soules with patience, and with a quiet and peaceable minde labour after the increase of grace, vsing all good meanes ordained of God for this purpose, submitting our selues, in regard of the measure of grace, which wee doe desire, to his good will and pleasure, who will dispose of all so, as shall bee most for his glory and our good. And in any case let vs beware that wee doe not so impatiently and violently desire encrease of more grace, as that in the mean time wee forget to bee thankfull to God for that we haue, turning our songs of prayse for Gods great benefits, into murmuring and repining. Let vs not be like vnto rich Misers, who haue their mindes so intent vpon the getting of that riches they haue not, as that they forget to enjoy and take comfort of that they haue. Let vs not resemble those vnthankfull men, who when they haue receiued many benefits, doe still desire more, and when their desires are not presently satisfied, vngratefully murmure against their benefactors as though they had receiued nothing: but let vs make vse of those graces which we haue receiued to Gods glory and our comfort; let vs desire more, that wee may more glorifie him with his owne gifts; and though our desires be not presently satisfied, let vs not fall into impatiencie, but submit our selues vnto his good will and pleasure, and bee truly thankfull for that portion of grace, which it hath pleased him of his abundant mercy to bestow vpon vs.

Q. Sect.7. Our own worthinesse no cause of our saluation.

Lastly, our saluation it selfe dependeth not vpon our owne worthinesse, but vpon Gods free mercie and vndeserued loue; for saluation is the free gift of God, and not the wages of our owne worthinesse, as death is the wages of sinne, as appeareth, Rom.6.23. And wee are saued by grace through faith, and that not of our selues; it is the gift of God, as it is Ephes.2.8. And the Apostle telleth vs, Tit.2.11. that the grace of God bringeth saluation, And teacheth vs to deny vngodlinesse and worldly lusts, and that wee should liue soberly and righteously and godly in this present World: so that our forsaking sin and imbracing holinesse and righteousnes is not the cause of our saluation; but the grace of God, by which all these effects are also wrought in vs. But most plaine is that of the Apostle, 2.Tim.1.9. where he excludeth our owne workes and worthinesse, to the end he might ascribe the whole worke of our saluation to Gods grace and good will. Who hath saued vs (saith hee) not according to our workes, but according to his owne purpose and grace. So Titus 3.5. Not by the workes of righteousnesse which we had done, but according to his mercy he saued vs, by the washing of the new birth, and renning of the holy Ghost.

Rom.6.23.

Ephes.2.8.

Tit.2.11.

2.Tim.1.9.

Tit.3.5.

But for the better cleering of this point, let vs further consider that the Lord hath so dispensed and ordred of the causes and means of our saluation, as though he had purposely aimed at this, to beate downe our pride and opinion of our owne merit and worthinesse, to make vs vtterly to deny our selues in the worke of our saluation, and to ascribe vnto him the whole glory and prayse of it. For whereas hee might haue wrought some graces and abilities in our selues, which might haue beene some grounds of our assurance and comfort, he hath not done it, but rather diuided the whole worke of our saluation, both for the beginning, performing, perfecting and applying of it betweene the three persons of the blessed and glorious Trinitie. And first God the Father beginneth the worke by louing vs with an euerlasting loue, and electing vs of his meere grace in his Son vnto life eternall, whom hee purposely sent out of this infinite loue into the World, to effect this great worke of our redemption. Then God the Sonne taking vpon him our nature, performeth all things on our behalfe necessary for our saluation; satisfying Gods justice by his perfect righteousnesse and obedience, and sauing and deliuering vs out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies. And now there remaineth nothing but the powerfull applying of that which Christ hath done and suffered for vs to our vse and benefit; and this is principally effected by God the holy Spirit, who working effectually in vs by his Word, Sacraments and holy Ordinances, doth inlighten our mindes with the saving knowledge of God, and this great worke of redemption wrought by Christ, causeth vs to assent vnto the truth of the Gospell, and stirreth vp in our hearts feruent desires to be made partakers of Christ and his benefits; which are neuer seuered from a true and liuely faith, whereby wee receiue Christ giuen vnto vs of God as an all-sufficient Sauiour; and doe wholly rest vpon him for our saluation; and besides this faith there is nothing else required of vs in this worke. By which it plainly appeareth how little or rather nothing wee are in the worke of iustification and saluation. For what is required of vs vnto it but only faith? And what is faith but a gift and grace of God wrought in vs by his holy Spirit, in which worke wee are no agents at all, but meere patients who only receiue that which God giueth? And of what nature & quality is this grace of faith which God will haue vsed in this worke? Surely of no efficiencie and vertue in it selfe, but only an instrument to apply those causes of saluation, which alone in themselues are effectuall, as Gods mercifull promises, and the perfect obedience of Christ. What is it but only as a hand of a poore beggar to receiue an almes of a bountifull Prince, which it can no wayes merit by receiuing it? Finally, what is it but a grace herein differing from all other vertues and graces (sauing those that as effects and fruits doe depend vpon it) that whereas other vertues as charity, iustice, obedience and the rest doe make vs to reflect and looke vpon our selues, as vpon somthing worth the beholding, this grace of faith though it bee in vs, yet it causeth vs to looke quite out of our selues vnto another for the effecting of its worke, namely vnto God, our Sauiour Christ, and his holy Spirit, acknowledging them to be all in all in the worke of our saluation.

Now why hath the Lord thus wholly excluded vs and all our abilities, but because he would haue the whole glory of his owne worke? Why would he haue our saluation to rest only vpon himselfe, and in no part vpon vs, but because hee would haue vs to enjoy a more firme ground of assurance and comfort, then any thing in our selues could be? And therefore if wee can wholly deny our selues in the worke of our saluation, and resting wholly and only vpon Gods free grace, and the all-sufficient merits and obedience of his Sonne ascribe vnto him alone the whole glory and praise of his owne worke, there is no cause why wee should doubt at all in regard of out vnworthinesse, seeing there is no worth or abilitie in vs, which in whole or part doth further our saluation.

§. Sect. 9. The conclusion perswading to rest only vpon God for saluation.

Seeing therefore Gods loue is not grounded vpon our owne worthinesse, seeing hee electeth, redeemeth, calleth, iustifieth, sanctifieth, and finally saueth vs of his meere mercie and free good will without any respect of our owne merits or good works, let vs not restraine the infinite loue of God to our deserts, nor measure his vnmeasurable good will by the short ell of our owne merits, but as the Lord hath freely loued vs, so let vs acknowledge his free and vndeserued loue, and relie wholly thereupon, notwithstanding our vnworthinesse, seeing our worthinesse is no cause of his loue, but it is his loue which maketh vs, and will surely make vs worthy to be beloued, if wee rest wholly vpon him in Christ by a true and liuely faith. For so much as wee despaire in respect of our owne vnworthinesse, so much would wee ascribe to our owne worthinesse; and looke how much wee attribute vnto our selues in the worke of our saluation, so much wee detract from Gods free mercy and Christs merit. And therefore let vs humbly acknowledge our owne vnworthinesse; and become nothing in our owne eyes, that wee wholly relying vpon God hee may be all in all. For well worthy are wee to thirst if wee leaue the fountaine of liuing waters, and digge vnto our selues broken cisternes which will hold no water; well worthy are wee to fall into the gulfe of despaire, if we forsake the firme pillar of our saluation Gods mercy and Christs merit; relying and resting vpon the broken staffe of our owne righteousnesse; well worthy are wee to be damned, if we enuie the Lord the praise and glory of our saluation, desiring rather to ascribe it vnto our selues. Ier.2.13.

§. Sect. 10. That being vnworthy in our selues, we are loued, elected, and saued in Christ.

But here the tempter will obiect that God is iust, and therefore in his iustice cannot loue, elect, iustifie and saue vs who are vnworthy his loue, polluted with sinne, and destitute of righteousnesse. I answere, that God doth not loue, elect, iustifie and saue vs in our selues, but in our Sauiour Christ, in whom being vnworthy of our selues wee are made worthy; being vnjust in our selues, wee are made just, after wee are adorned with the rich robe of his righteousnesse; being in our selues the children of wrath and firebrands of Hell, wee are made children of God and heires of Heauen. For hee is made vnto God, wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification and redemption, that hee who reioyceth might reioyce in the Lord, as it is 1. *Cor.*1.30.31. And therefore the Apostle teacheth vs, that God hath giuen his grace, not simply vnto vs, who were altogether vnworthy thereof, but in Iesus Christ, 1. *Cor.*1.4. and that in all things wee are made rich in him, as it is Verse 5. So hee telleth vs, that grace doth raigne by righteousnesse vnto eternall life, through Iesus Christ our Lord, *Rom.*5.21. And that hee hath shewed the exceeding riches of his grace, through his kindnesse towards vs in Christ Iesus, *Ephes.*2.7. And as God is gracious to vs in Christ, so hath hee declared this his loue towards vs in Christ only, as may appeare in the seuerall causes and means of our saluation. For in him God hath elected vs to saluation, as appeareth *Ephes.*1.5. In him is made the couenant of grace, as being that seed of Abraham in whom all the Nations of the earth are blessed, *2. Cor.*1.30,31. *1. Cor.*1.4. Verse 5. *Rom.*5.21. *Ephes.*2.7. *Ephes.*1.5.

blessed, and to whom all the promises were made, as it is *Gal.*3.16. In him are we called and gathered together into one body, whereof hee is the head, as it is *Ephes.*1.9,10. *2.Tim.*1.9. In him wee are justified as appeareth, *Rom.*5.18,19. Esay 53.5. *1.Cor.*1.30. In him wee are reconciled vnto God, *Col.*1.20, 21. *Ephes.*1.6. and 2.12,13,14. &c. In him we are adopted to be the sonnes of God. *Gal.*4.4,5 6,7. *Ephes.*1.5. In him we are sanctified, *1.Cor.*1.30. In a word, in him we are saued, as appeareth. 1.Iohn 5.11. God hath giuen vs eternall life, and this life is in his sonne. Though therefore the Lord could not in his justice bestow vpon vs these his benefits, because wee were vnworthy of the least of them, and most worthy of all his judgements and punishments: yet in Christ wee haue fully satisfied his justice, and performed perfect obedience, and therefore euen in his justice hee could not but bestow these his mercies and graces vpon vs, because in him wee deserued his loue, though in our selues wee haue deserued eternall shame and confusion. And therefore not trusting in our owne worthinesse, nor yet distrusting in Gods mercy and free loue in regard of our vnworthinesse, let vs cast off all selfe-conceit and opinion of our owne righteousnesse, that so we may put on the righteousnes of Christ; and acknowledging our owne weaknesse, yea our nothing, let vs neuertheless be strong in the grace which is in Christ Iesus, as the Apostle exhorteth, *2.Tim.*2.1. In his name let vs goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, that wee may receiue mercy, and find helpe in time of need: for though in our selues we are the children of wrath, yet are we reconciled and accepted of God, as his beloued in his best beloued, as it is *Ephes.*1.6.

That temporall afflictions are rather signes of Gods loue, then of his hatred.

¶. Sect.1. Afflictions markes rather of our adoption then of our reprobation.

THe second argument whereby Satan seeketh to perswade vs that we are out of the fauour of God, is taken from the manifold afflictions which are laid vpon many of Gods children, whilest they remayne in this vale of misery. But it is easie to answere this objection, if wee be but a little conuersant in the booke of God, for there we may learne that afflictions & crosses are rather signes of Gods loue then of his hatred; and markes rather of our election and adoption, then of reprobation and eternall damnation. For the Lord hath fore-shewed vs that his children should mourne when the World should reioyce, that they should bee hated and persecuted for his Names sake; that all who will liue godly in Christ Iesus, shall suffer persecution and affliction, 2.Tim.3.12. That they who will be conformable to him in glory, must also be conformable vnto him in his sufferings, *Rom.*8.29. That this short and momentany affliction, shall cause vnto vs a farre most excellent and eternall waight of glory, 2.*Cor.*4.17. That if wee suffer with Christ, wee shall also raigne with him, 2.*Tim.*2.12. That whom the Lord loueth he chasteneth: and scourgeth euery sonne that he receiueth, as it is *Heb.*12.6. That those whom he doth not thus correct, are bastards and no sonnes, Verse 8. And to these we may adde the examples of Gods children from time to time, as of Abraham, Iacob, Ioseph, Moses, Dauid, Iob, the Apostles, but especially our Sauiour Christ himselfe, who was hungry, harborlesse, despised, scoffed, reuiled, buffeted, spit vpon, crowned with thorne, and lastly crucified; and yet euen whilest hee suffered all these afflictions, hee was the only begotten and best beloued Son of his heauenly Father.

Rom.8.29. 2.Cor.4.17. 2.Tim.2.12. Heb.12.6.

So that both by testimonies and examples it is manifest, that afflictions are signes rather of Gods loue, then of his hatred; and markes of the children of God, rather then of the children of wrath. But here the tempter will demand how this can bee, considering that the Lord promiseth to his children all good things; whereas afflictions are euils, and punishments inflicted on the wicked. To this wee may answere, that though in their owne nature they be euill, yet through the wisdome and gracious prouidence of our God, they turne to the good of his children; and though to the wicked they are plagues and punishments, yet to the Godly they are but trials and fatherly chastisements. For all their sinnes are punished in Christ, neither wil it stand with Gods justice to punish them againe in the faithfull; and therefore there is no other end of them but the manifestation of Gods glory, and our spirituall good and euerlasting saluation. For as they are trials they serue to shew vnto all the world, and especially to our selues, our faith, hope, patience, obedience, constancie, and the rest of the graces of Gods Spirit, to the prayse of his glory who hath bestowed them, and to the comfort of our owne soules who haue receiued them. And as they are chastisements they serue for sharpe eye-salues to cleere our dimme sight, so as we may see our sinnes, and truly repent of them. They serue for sowre sawces to bring vs out of loue with our sweet sinnes, and for fire and files, whereby we are purged and scoured from the drosse and rust of our corruptions. They are sharpe pruning kniues, to lop and trim vs, that we may bring forth plentifull fruites in godlinesse. They are spurs to pricke vs forward in the Christian race, and hedges to keepe vs from wanwandring out of the way. They are sharpe salues to draw out our secret corruptions, and bitter potions to cure our desperate diseases. They are that worme-wood, whereby the Lord weaneth vs from the loue of the world, whose pleasing delights wee would euer suck without wearinesse, if our mouthes were not distasted with some afflictions. They are rods, wherewith being scourged, wee are made more circumspect in our wayes, and more carefull to performe obedience vnto all the Commandements of our heauenly Father. In a word, they are the strait path which leadeth to euerlasting happinesse, and a bridle to restraine vs from running head-long into the broad way, which leadeth to endlesse woe and misery. And therefore seeing our momentany afflictions doe serue for the manifesting of Gods glory, for the encreasing of spirituall graces and furthering of our eternall saluation, let not Satan perswade vs that we are out of Gods loue and fauour because of our afflictions, but rather let vs repute them as they are indeed signes of his gracious prouidence and fatherly care which he hath ouer vs.

But heere the tempter will obiect that this I speake is true of the outward afflictions of the body, for thereby the flesh is mortified and subdued, and the sanctifying graces of Gods Spirit exercised and increased in vs; but thy afflictions (will he say) are farre different, for thy soule is filled with horrour and feare, thy conscience is mortally stung with sinne, and the waight thereof ouerwhelmeth thee; thou seest thy selfe subiect to the curse of the Law, and art alreadie tormented with the paines of Hell; thy God who looketh vpon his children with an amiable countenance, frowneth vpon thee like a seuere Iudge, and thou tastest of nothing but of his heauie wrath and displeasure. In a word, thou hast not one sparke of true consolation wrought in thee by Gods Spirit, with which those that are Gods children are fully replenished, and whereby they are incouraged patiently to abide all afflictions, but thy inward vexations are the torments of an euill conscience, and the flashings of Hell fire wherewith hereafter thou shalt eternally be burned. To this tentation wee must answere, that it cannot bee denied but that the afflictions of the mind are far more grieuous then the afflictions of the bodie; and that the torments of conscience caused by the waight of sinne, and the apprehension of Gods fearefull wrath, are as it were Gods three-stringed whip, in respect of the gentle rod of outward afflictions; for a sorrowfull mind driueth vp the bones, as it is Prou. 17.22. and the spirit of a man may sustaine his other infirmities, but a wounded spirit who can beare? as the Wiseman speaketh Prou. 18.14. Neuertheles, though these corrections are more sharpe and grieuous, then the outward afflictions of the body, yet it cannot bee denied but that these also are the chastisements which our heauenly Father inflicteth vpon his children, sometimes for his owne glory, and sometime for their triall or chastisement, when more light correction wil not reclaime them. For first those places of Scripture before quoted, are spoken generally of all afflictions, and therefore are not to be restrained to the outward afflictions of the bodie, seeing they extend themselues also to the afflictions of the minde, neither doth our heauenly Father correct all alike, but some he rebuketh only by his Word, and stayeth here when as this reclaimeth them; but if this will not preuaile, he goeth a step further, and chastiseth them with gentle correction, as with outward crosses and afflictions; but if this will not reforme them, hee taketh his whip into his hand, wherewith hee grieuously scourgeth them, to the end they may more sensibly taste of his displeasure, and amend that which is amisse. And this hee doth by making them feele the waight of sin, and apprehend his wrath and heauie displeasure, which by their sinnes they haue iustly incurred; and yet notwithstanding all this he still remaineth their gracious Father, who seeketh not their destruction but their reformation. Neither need this dealing of our heauenly Father seeme strange vnto vs, seeing earthly parents take the same course with their children whom they tenderly loue; for when they offend them, they first seeke their amendment by words and fatherly admonitions; and when this will doe no good they proceed to blowes, and in a gentle manner doe correct them; and if this preuaile not with them, then they vse more sharpe and seuere chastisement; but if all this bee to no purpose, then will they disguise their fatherly affection vnder the vizard of wrath and heauy displeasure; they banish out of their countenance all signes of loue, and assume terrible lookes and bitter frownes; yea they will sometimes thrust them out of doores, and reject them awhile, leauing them to shift for themselues, and to endure all miserie. And whence proceedeth all this? surely not from hatred, but from loue and tender care which they haue ouer them for their good. And this maketh them vse the bridle of correction, to restrain them from running into all licentiousnesse, which causeth them to pretend wrath in their countenance, that they be not by their wantonnesse forced to entertaine it into their hearts; this moueth them to reiect them for a time that they may reclaime and receiue them for euer. Neither doth our heauenly Father, who is infinite in loue, deale otherwise with his disobedient children; hee vseth but his word if his word will suffice, he goeth no further then gentle chastisement if if that be enough; but if he sharply scourge vs, yea if hee looke vpon vs with a frowning countenance, and shew nothing in outward appearance but his wrath and heauie displeasure; if he seeme to reject vs for a time, and to giue vs ouer to be tormented by Satan: yet vndoubtedly all this proceedeth from his loue and that fatherly care hee hath ouer vs, for our euerlasting good and saluation. Hee seeketh not our destruction, but amendment; hee frowneth on vs for a time, that hee may looke graciously on vs for euer; hee seemeth to reject vs for a while, that like the prodigall sonne wee may returne againe, and bee receiued into his euerlasting loue and fauour.

Q. Sect. 4. That spirituall afflictions tend to our mortification.

Secondly, the Lord sendeth afflictions to mortifie in vs the old man, the flesh and vnregenerate part: now the flesh is not onely in our body, but also in our soule and euery part and faculty thereof, and therefore the Lord doth not afflict the body alone with outward calamities, but euen the soule also with griefe of mind and horrour of conscience, with the waight of sinne and sense of his wrath, to the end that our corruptions both in bodie and soule may bee mortified, the olde man with the lusts thereof crucified, and in the end fully abolished. And therefore doth the Lord breake our hard and stonie hearts, Ier.4.4. therefore doth hee plow and teare them vp like fallow ground, to the end that the seed of his grace being sowne in them may take roote, fructifie and bring forth a plentifull harueſt of godlinesse, to his glory and our comfort. It is not therefore for want of loue, that our heauenly Father doth thus bruise vs and euen crush vs in pieces; it is not because he will reject vs and cast vs off: but when we are truly humbled, when our hard hearts are softned, and our spirits broken and made contrite, then will hee regard vs and shew his tender loue and mercifull kindnesse vnto vs as hee hath graciously promised, Matth.12.20. *Matth.*12.20. The bruised reed will he not breake, and smoking flax shall he not quench. So Psal.51.17. *Psal.*51.17. The sacrifices of God are a contrite spirit, a contrite and broken heart O God thou wilt not despise. And this the Lord himselfe testifieth; I dwell with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to reuiue the spirit of the humble, and to giue life vnto them that are of a contrite heart. Esay 61.1,2,3. Esay 57.15. And the Prophet telleth vs that our Sauiour Christ was sent into the world to preach glad tidings vnto the poore, to binde vp the broken hearted, &c. to comfort all that mourne, to giue them beautie for ashes, the oile of ioy for mourning, the garment of gladnes for the spirit of heauines, &c. as it is Esay 61.1,2,3. Luke 4.18.

Q. Sect. 5. Gods dearest children subiect to spirituall afflictions.

Lastly, that the afflictions of the mind, the apprehension of Gods wrath, the sting of sinne, and torments of conscience, are not any true and certaine signes of Gods hatred, hereby it plainly appeareth: in that the most deare children of God haue been subiect to them, and that in great measure. For example, Iob who by Gods owne testimony was the iustest man that liued on the earth, notwithstanding was so grieuously afflicted both in body and mind, that he burſteth out into these grieuous complaints, Iob 6.4. The arrowes of the Almightie are in me, the venome whereof doth drinke vp my spirit, and the terrours of God fight against mee. And *Chap.*9.*Vers.*17. *Hee destroyeth mee with a tempest and woundeth mee without cause.*18. He wil not suffer me to take my breath, but filleth me with bitternes. So, *Chap.*13.24. Wherfore hidest thou thy face and takest mee for thine enemie? And *Vers.*26. Thou writest bitter things against mee, and makest me to possesse the iniquities of my youth. And Chap. 16.9. His wrath hath torne me, and he hateth me and gnasheth vpon me with his teeth; mine enemie hath sharpened his eyes against mee. And *Chap.*19.11. He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Looke also vpon the example of the Prophet Dauid, who though he were a man according to Gods owne heart, yet was hee made to drinke a deepe draught in this cup of inward afflictions, and was vexed not only outwardly in his estate, goods and bodie, but also, in his soule, with the sense of Gods wrath, with the waight of sinne, and the terrours and torments of conscience, which made him to vtter these and such like pittifull complaints in the booke of the Psalmes, Psal. 6.3. My soule is also sore troubled: but Lord how long wilt thou delay? And *Vers.*6. I fainted in my mourning: I cause my bed euery night to swim, and water my couch with my teares. So *Psal.*38.2. Thine arrowes haue light vpon me, and thine hand lieth vpon mee. 3. There is nothing sound in my flesh, because of thine anger: neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sinne. 4. For mine iniquities are gone ouer mine head, and as a waighty burthen they are too heauie for me, &c. And *Psal.*88.7. Thine indignation lieth vpon me, and thou hast vexed me with all thy waues. And *Vers.*14. Lord why dost thou reiect my soule, and hidest thy face from me? 15. *I am afflicted and at the point of death: from my youth I suffer thy terrors, doubting of my life.*16. Thine indignations goe ouer me, and thy feare hath cut me off. So in the 77. Psalme hee taketh vp this lamentable complaint: *Vers.*7. Will the Lord absent himselfe for euer? and will hee shew no more fauour? 8. Is his mercie cleane gone for euer? doth his promise faile for euermore? 9. Hath God forgotten to be mercifull? hath hee shut vp his tender mercies in displeasure? 10. And I said, this is my death. Looke also vpon the Apostle Paul, who though he were a chosen vessell,

vessell, whom God had separated from his mothers wombe to carrie his Name before the Gentiles, yet was he afflicted grieuously, not only outwardly in bodie, as hee professeth, but also in minde; for the messenger of Satan was sent to buffet him, and hee had a long time a pricke in the flesh, from which he could not be freed, though hee often begged this fauour at Gods hand, as appeareth, 2. Cor. 12. 7, 8. And the burthen of sin grieuously afflicting his conscience, forced him to cry out, Ro. 7. 24. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me frō the bodie of this death?

So that by these and many such like examples, that is manifest vnto our comforts which the Apostle speaketh, 1. Cor. 10. 13. There hath no tentation taken you but such as appertaineth to man; for the same afflictions (which wee suffer) are accomplished in our brethren which are in the world, as it is, 1. Pet. 5. vers. 9. Yea the same and far greater were endured by our head Iesus Christ himselfe, who receiued deepe and grisly wounds, in respect of those small scratches which we suffer, and drunke the full cup of Gods heauy displeasure, of which we onely sip or taste. For he was not onely in his outward state dejected and reputed as an abject amongst men, nor persecuted by his cruell enemies alone, euen to the taking away of his precious life, by a cruell and shamefull death; but also inwardly in his soule hee sustained farre more heauie crosses then that which hee outwardly carried on his shoulders, though the waight thereof caused him to faint for wearinesse. For to say nothing of Satans tentations and the power of Hell which was set against him, let vs consider of that bitter agonie which he sustained in the garden, where the burthen of Gods anger, for our sinnes was so heauie vpon him, that it pressed out of his blessed bodie a sweate of water and bloud: nor was he presently eased of this vnsupportable waight, but hee was faine to beare it euen vnto his crosse; neither was he comforted in mind when the pangs of death had taken hold of his bodie, but euen then he was so vexed with the sense of his Fathers displeasure, that in bitternesse of soule he cryeth out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Nor that he despaired vtterly of Gods loue and assistance, or thought himselfe a reprobate and cast-away, for hee calleth him still his God: but the Deitie hauing for a time withdrawne it selfe, to the end the humane nature might suffer that punishment which wee had deserued euen vnto death it selfe, which otherwise it could not haue bin subject vnto, he vttereth this speech truly according to his present sense and apprehension. Now if wee consider who it is that was thus grieuously afflicted both in bodie and mind, wee shall find that it was not one hated of God, but his onely begotten and best beloued Sonne, in whom he professeth himselfe to be well pleased, Matth. 3. 17. Matth. 3. 17.

Seeing therefore our Sauiour Christ who was the naturall Sonne and heire of God, and so tenderly beloued of his heauenly Father that in him he loueth all his children, did notwithstanding endure not onely grieuous afflictions of body, but the intolerable burthen of his Fathers displeasure in his soule also: why should wee imagine that either our outward or inward afflictions are any signes or arguments that God hateth or hath rejected vs? especially considering that hee hath predestinated vs to be made like to the image of his Sonne, not onely in his glory, but also in his afflictions: so that first we must suffer with him, and after raigne with him, as it is Rom. 8. 29. 2. Tim. 2. 12. Rom. 8. 19. 2. Tim. 2. 12.

Obiection.

But it may bee objected that our Sauiour Christ suffered all this, not for any sinne that was in himselfe, for he did no sinne, neither was their guile found in his mouth, 1. Pet. 2. 22. but he was wounded for our transgressions, he was broken for our iniquities, as it is Esa. 53. 5. And therefore considering that the Lord did thus hate sin, euen when his dearely beloued Sonne did take it vpon him; how much more will he hate it in vs? if hee so seuerely punished his deare Darling when hee had taken the sins of others vpon him; how fearefull punishments are prepared for the sinners themselues? I answere, that indeed Christ who was iust did suffer for vs who were vniust, as it is 1. Pet. 3. 18. and that sinne is so odious to Gods eyes, that rather then it should not be punished, hee would punish it in his dearely beloued Sonne. The consideration whereof should make vs also to hate and flie from it as the greatest euill. But yet this should be so farre off from discouraging vs, or from making vs doubt of Gods loue, that nothing in the world doth more assure vs thereof; no consolation can be imagined more comfortable. For what greater testimonie of Gods loue can bee imagined, then that when we were strangers, yea enemies to God, he should send his deare beloued Sonne to die for vs, to the end that by this meanes his iustice might be satisfied, his wrath appeased, and we being receiued into grace and fauour, might be made heires of euerlasting life? what greater assurance can we haue that our sinnes are forgiuen vs, then that they are alreadie punished in Christ? it being against the iustice of God to punish the same sinnes twice? What stronger argument can bee brought, to proue that we shall neuer be subject to Gods wrath, nor be cast away in his heauie displeasure; then that our Sauiour hath borne his Fathers anger, to the end hee might reconcile vs vnto him? And therefore though our Sauiour suffered these outward and inward afflictions, not as hee was the dearely beloued Sonne of God who was free from sin, but as he was our Mediator, who had taken vpon him our sins, to the end hee might satisfie his Fathers iustice; yet seeing he endured these things in our stead, to the end we might be freed from them, hence ariseth vnto euery true Christian sound comfort, and certaine assurance of Gods loue and goodnesse towards him.

Q. Sect. 7. A dangerous tentation grounded vpō our not profiting by affliction.

But the tempter will further vrge this obiection after this manner. Let it be granted (will hee say) that God doth chastise sometime his children whom he loueth, both with outward and inward afflictions, and that they suffer euen the same miseries which thou endurest; yet seeing they are sometimes punishments also which he inflicteth vpon the wicked, hence thou canst not gather that they are fatherly chastisements and signes of his loue to thee: yea contrariwise thou mayest assure thy selfe, that they are fearefull punishments and signes of Gods hatred, which God in iustice inflicteth on thee for thy sinnes, that others may bee warned by thine example. For if they were chastisements and fatherly corrections, then would they indeed correct thee, that is, reforme and amend thee; for this is the end why God inflicteth them on his children, & his end cannot be frustrate: but in thee there is no reformation wrought, nor any encrease of patience; whereas in the faithfull, tribulation bringeth forth patience, as euen by the Scriptures it is manifest. Yea contrariwise when the hand of God is vpon thee, thou bewrayest great impatiencie, and vttrest inconsiderate speeches, which tend to Gods dishonour, giue offence to the World, and wound thine owne conscience. And therefore howsoeuer to others, these are fatherly chastisements, yet to thee they are seuere punishments, which moue thee rather to despaire, then assure thee of Gods loue.

Rom. 5. 3.

That it is no fit time to iudge of our spirituall graces in the conflict of tentations.

To this we answere, that it cannot be denied, but that Gods corrections doe correct and amend his children, and that afflictions serue to the encreasing of their patience, faith and other graces; but yet let vs know that Sathan playeth the false deceiuer, when hee mooueth vs to looke for the assurance of Gods loue, and for our amendment and increase of Gods grace, in the very time when the hand of God is vpon vs, whilest the conflict lasteth, and the tentation grieuously shaketh and battereth vs. As if hee should come to a man who hath endured much and tedious sicknesse, and should say vnto him, thou diddest imagine thy selfe a while agoe very beautifull and exceeding strong, but thou wast much deceiued, for if thou lookest in a glasse thou shalt presently perceiue that thou art leane, pale and deformed, and if thou makest triall of thy strength, thou shalt find that it is scarce sufficient to sustaine the waight of thine owne bodie. Now who would not deride such fond reasoning? Who could not easily answere, that iudgement is not to be taken of the beautie and strength of the body in the time of sickneſſe, but in the time of health? But this is the very like case, and thus sottishly doth Satan conclude, or rather delude Gods children in the time of tentation. For he saith thus vnto them, thou diddest perswade thy selfe that thou art the childe of God, and in his loue and fauour, that thou art endued with faith, patience and other graces, and daily increasest in them; but now thou art come to the triall it proueth farre otherwise; for thy faith is turned into doubting or infidelitie, and thy patience to impatiencie, and therefore there is no likelihood that thou art beloued of God, for then thou wouldest profit by afflictions, and increase in grace and strength, whereas thou bewrayest nothing but thy manifold corruptions. But we are to know that wee are not to iudge of our grace and strength, in the time of tentation and of the spirituall conflict, when as our soules are grieuously sicke with the sense of sinne and apprehension of Gods heauie displeasure incurred thereby, when as the fire of Gods Spirit is couered with the ashes of our corruptions, and the fruits and graces thereof nipped with the cold winter and boysterous blasts of tentations, but wee are to looke into our selues when the fit is past and the conflict ended, and then shall we find our patience by experience of Gods loue confirmed, our faith renued, and all other graces strengthened and increased; and then shall wee cleerely discerne the bright beames of Gods loue and fauour, shining vpon vs, when the clouds of tentation are past away which did hide them from vs.

But if in the time of triall and tentation we iudge according to our present sense and feeling, wee must needs be deceiued: for it cannot be denied but that euen the deare children of God who haue receiued a great measure of grace; when the hand of God is vpon them doe doubt of his loue and fauour, and when they are grieuously afflicted doe bewray their corruption, and shew their impatience by vttering inconsiderate speeches. For while wee continue in this life, we haue the reliques of sinne hanging on vs, and we are partly flesh and partly spirit, yea the flesh is the stronger part, and therefore it is no maruell if the flesh being pinched in the time of tentation doth complaine, and being lanced deeply with the razor of sharpe afflictions doth cry out for paine, complaining of the Chirurgion that he dealeth too rigorously with him. And if men through bodily sicknes haue their iudgements blinded, their vnderstanding dazled and misled, their memory ouerthrowne, so that they can put no difference betweene their friends and their enemies, nemies, but euen raile vpon those who in the time of their health they dearely loued, and think none so much their enemie as their Physitian, raging and inconsideratly speaking they know not what; what wonder is it if the like effects follow the sicknesse of the soule, when it is (as it were) set vpon the racke, pressed with the burthen of sinne, and tormented with the apprehension of Gods anger, considering that these kind of afflictions are farre more grieuous and without comparison more intolerable, for a man may sustaine his infirmities, but a wounded spirit who can beare? as it is Prou. 28.14. What maruell then is it, if they take God for their enemie, when they feele his sharpe medicines, though in truth he be their louing Physitian, who by this meanes cureth them of their diseases of sin and corruption? what wonder is it if they vtter raging speeches when the sense of paine presseth them so sore? how is it possible but that they should doubt of Gods gratious loue & fauour, when as they presently taste of nothing but his rigor and iustice?

Wee must not therefore iudge of our state while the crosse is vpon vs, for so should we condemne the generation of the iust to bee most wicked, then should we imagine those who haue excelled in patience to bee most wayward and impatient. Looke vpon Iob who is renowned for patience, and you shal finde that while the hand of God was vpon him, hee bewrayeth the corruption of the flesh and sheweth notable impatiency, cursing the day of natiuitie, and wishing that he had neuer beene borne, or else that he had presently after his birth beene swallowed vp in the iawes of death, Iob 3. So chapter 6. 8. 9. hee thus crieth out like a man vtterly desperate: O that I might haue my desire, and that God would grãt me the thing that I long for. 9. That is, that God would destroy mee: that hee would let his hand go and cut me off. 10. Then should I yet haue some comfort: though I burne with sorrow: let him not spare, &c. Where Iob seemeth to deale with God as a condemned malefactor with a iust and seuere Iudge, who seeing the anger of the Iudge incensed against him for his crime, hath no hope that hee can by intreatie and perswasions moue him to reuoke his sentence of death, and therefore onely desireth a mitigation of the tortures, and that he may quickly bee dispatched and rid out of his paine, nam misericordia genus est citò occidere, it is a kind of mercie to bee speedie in execution: So Iob hauing no hope to be freed from his miseries, desireth onely this fauour at Gods hands, that he would not (as it were) torment him peece-meale, but make a quick dispatch of him by laying on a greater waight of afflictions, till by their vnsupportable burthen the breath were pressed out of his bodie. And Chap. 10. 18. Wherefore hast thou brought mee out of the wombe? Oh that I had perished, and that none eye had seen me! 19. And that I were as I had not beene, but brought from the wombe to the graue. Looke vpon the Prophet Dauid who was a man according to Gods owne heart, endued with a stedfast faith and constant patience; and you shall perceiue that Gods loue, and the graces of Gods Spirit in him, were so shadowed with the grieuousnesse of his present afflictions, that hee could not discerne them. For he complaineth like a man vtterly cast off and rejected of God. Psal. 88. 14. Lord why doest thou reiect my soule, and hidest thy face from me? 16. Thine indignation is gone ouer me, and thy feare hath cut me off. The like complaint hee taketh vp, Psal. 77. 8, 9, 10. Neither had the Prophet in these times alwayes the spirit of supplication and prayer, but sometimes the grieuousnesse of his paine did shut his mouth so as hee could not confesse his sinne, nor humble himselfe before his God; though through the waight of affliction, his bones were consumed, and hee roared for griefe all the day long, as appeareth Psal. 32. 3, 4. So Ieremie seeing the Word of Gods Ambassadours despised and contemned, could not beare it, but bursteth out into great impatiencie, cursing the day of his birth, and euen the man that brought newes thereof to his Father, because hee was borne to see labour and sorrow, and that his dayes should be consumed with shame: Ier. 20. 14, 15, 18. If therefore wee iudge of Iob, Dauid, and Ieremie, according to their outward behauiour and their owne inward feeling in the time of afflictions, and in the combat of tentations; wee should thinke them void of faith, impatient, and destitute of all assurance and hope of Gods loue and fauour: but the Scriptures teach vs otherwise, propounding them vnto vs as patternes of patience and true godlinesse; and themselues also at other times doe shew their singular faith, incomparable patience and the rest of the graces of Gods Spirit. Seeing then this is not our case alone, but the state of Gods dearest children, let vs not beleeue the tempter telling vs that wee are not Gods children, because wesee not Gods graces so plainly in the time of tentation and triall, yea contrariwise bewray our impatiencie and other corruptions: but let vs bee truly humbled in the sight of our infirmities, labouring and striuing so reforme them, and iudge of our state, not as wee finde it in the time of the conflict, but as it was, or is before, or after the combat is ended.

not wholly to despaire of Gods loue, yet we must doubt thereof: and to this purpose they alleage that saying, Eccles. 9. 1. which they reade thus: I haue handled all these things in my heart that I might curiously vnderstand: Iust and wise men and their workes are in the hand of God; and notwithstanding a man knoweth not whether hee be worthy of loue or hatred, but all things are kept vncertaine for the time to come, &c. I answere, that if Gods loue or hatred did depend vpon our owne worthinesse or vnworthinesse, wee might well doubt; nay I will say more, wee might iustly despaire of his grace and good will, and certainly assure our selues that wee were hated and abhorred of God; for this, if any thing, we haue deserued. But the truth is, that as Satan tempting our Sauiour, and quoting Scripture for his purpose, left out that which made against him; so heere by his instruments assaulting his members, he addeth to the Scriptures that which maketh for him. For neither in the Hebrew, which is the originall, nor in the Greeke translation is there any one word of our worthinesse or vnworthinesse; but thus it is in the text as it is truly translated in our Bibles; No man knoweth either loue or hatred of all that is before them: and whereas they reade the words following thus; But all things are kept vncertaine for the time to come, they most grosly deprave the text, which is thus to be read as wee haue it translated; All things come alike to all, and the same condition is to the iust and the wicked: & thus also doth Arias Montanus, one of the most learned amongst themselues translate it.

Neither will their corrupt translation stand with the sense and truth of the place: for as hee saith, no man knoweth whether hee be worthy of hatred: but this is vtterly false; for so should we say that we could not know whether the Sodomites for their filthinesse, the Canaanites for their idolatrie, Iulian for his apostasie were worthy to bee hated of God; whereas the Scriptures witnesse the cleane contrary, & euen they themselues doe confesse, that they who desperately giue ouer themselues into all sin and wickednesse, are not to doubt but that they are worthy of Gods anger and heauy displeasure. why therefore on the other side may not those who are truely conuerted vnto God, and indued with a liuely faith which worketh by loue, be assured of Gods loue and fauour, seeing hee hath assured them hereof in his Word? Nay in the same Chapter, Verse 7. their corrupt exposition is ouerthrowne; for there he biddeth vs to eate our bread with ioy, and to drinke our wine with a cheerefull heart, for God now accepteth our workes. Now, though God did indeed accept our workes, yet we could not be moued to ioy and cheerefulnesse of heart hereby, vnlesse also wee might be assured of his acceptation.

But let vs examine these words and shew the true sense of them. There are two expositions giuen, which may stand with the analogie of faith and the circumstances of the text. For some vnderstand these words not of Gods loue or hatred, but of mans loue towards those things he desires, and of his hatred towards those things he flieth; & then this is the sense of the place; A man knoweth not whether those things which hee loueth, as pleasures, honours, & riches, or those things which he hateth, namely, crosses & afflictions shall happen vnto him, because they are only disposed by the prouidence of God who giueth these outward things indifferently to all both iust and vniust. So that if the words are thus to be vnderstood, there is no shew of reason in the Papists exposition. Secondly, let it be granted that it is to be vnderstood of Gods loue towards vs, yet it will make nothing for their purpose: for then this is the plaine sense of the words; No man can know whether hee be loued or hated of God by these common outward things which happen alike to all, and in respect whereof there is the same condition to the iust and the wicked, and to the pure and polluted, to those that worship God & those that worship him not. There is no iudgement that can be giuen, either of our selues or others in respect of our outward state; for sometime the iust are poore, the vniust rich, the wicked aduanced to honour, and the godly afflicted and persecuted. For example, Esau enioyed his delights and plentie of all things, Iacob like a poore Pilgrime went into a strange Country, hauing no other riches but his clothes on his backe and his staffe in his hand, and when hee was come amongst his friends hee endured tedious labours, and many miseries. And so Dauid was persecuted, whilest Saul did sit on the throne; yea our Sauiour Christ himselfe was arraigned at the barre and condemned, whilest Pilate and the cheife Priests and Pharisies sate in the seate of iustice, ouersweying all at their owne pleasures. And yet at the same time, Iacob was beloued, Esau hated; Dauid chosen of God, Saul rejected; our Sauiour Christ the deare sonne of his heauenly Father, and his enemies the instruments and limmes of Satan. So that it is most true that Salomon speaketh, namely, no man can haue assurance of Gods loue and fauour by these outward benefits bestowed both vpon the godly and wicked; neither by his aduersities and afflictions can gather that the Lord hateth him: for these befall all indifferently, as it pleaseth God to punish the reprobate, or to chastise his owne children. But though wee can gather no sound argument from these outward things of Gods loue, yet it followeth not that that there is no other means to assure vs hereof: for by the same reason we may conclude that man is no better then brute beasts, and that there is no immortalitie of the soule, because it is said, *Eccles.*3.19. that the condition of the children of men and the condition of beasts is the same. But as the Wiseman speaketh there of their outward mortalitie alone, and not absolutely in all respects; and therefore he saith that they are alike to see to, that is, in outward appearance, Verse 18. and explaineth himselfe in the words following; for (saith he) as one dieth so dieth the other: so he doth not meane heere simply that there is no assurance of Gods loue, but onely in respect of these outward things, and therefore he addeth, that in these outward respects all things come alike to all, and the same condition is to the just and the wicked.

*Eccles.*3.19.

Q. Sect. 12. How Gods loue towards vs is manifested and knowne.

Though then there is no assurance of Gods loue to bee gathered out of our worldly estate, yet it cannot hence bee concluded that therefore there is no meanes whereby wee may bee assured hereof. For the Lord hath giuen vnto vs his Word and mercifull promises, hee hath giuen vnto vs his holy spirit *crying in our hearts Abba Father, and witnessing to our spirits that we are the sonnes of God, Rom.*8. He hath manifested his loue by giuing vs his onely Son, and begetting in vs by his Word and Spirit a liuely faith, whereby we may apply him & all his benefits vnto vs. Whosoeuer therefore beleeueth truly in Iesus Christ, he may be assured of Gods loue and euerlasting life, according to that Iohn 3. 16. So God loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him should not perish, but haue euerlasting life. If therfore we beleeue in Iesus Christ, we need not to despaire, no nor to doubt of Gods loue and fauour towards vs; notwithstanding our vnworthinesse, nor yet in regard of the manifold afflictions which God inflicteth on vs, neither in respect of those manifold infirmities which we bewray whilest the hand of God is vpon vs: but we may soundly and assuredly conclude with the Apostle Paul, *Rom.*8.38. I am perswaded that neither death nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, 39. Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate vs from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord.

CHAP. VI.

Of Gods election, the causes, subiect, obiect and properties thereof.

Q. Sect. 1. Of the author and chiefe efficient of our election.

AND so much concerning the first cause of our saluation, namely Gods loue and good will, and also the tentations of Satan, whereby hee laboureth to impugne our assurance therof. The second cause is Gods free election, which proceedeth from the other; for whom he loueth, those he electeth vnto euerlasting life and happinesse, it being an inseparable fruit of loue to seeke the good and felicitie of the partie beloued. Election therefore is that part of Gods eternall and immutable decree, whereby of his free loue and vndeserued grace hee hath pre-ordained some in Christ vnto saluation, and to the vse of the meanes tending thereunto, for the prayse of the glory of his grace. In this definition is set downe first the efficient cause or author of our election, namely God himselfe, the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost; and this appeareth, *Ephes.*1.4. Hee hath chosen vs in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, &c. And Iohn 15,16. Yee haue not chosen mee, but I haue chosen you, and ordained you that yee go and bring forth fruit, &c. Secondly, the motiue or impulsiue cause of Gods election is expressed, namely, Gods free loue, meere good will and vndeserued grace. And this also is manifest, Luke 12.32. Feare not little flocke, for it is your Fathers pleasure to giue you a Kingdome. And *Ephes.*1.5. who hath predestinated vs to be adopted through Iesus Christ vnto himselfe, according to the good pleasure of his will.

Q. Sect. 2. That there was no other cause which moued God to elect vs, but his free grace and meere good will.

Here therefore are excluded all other causes, wherewith diuers haue imagined God was moued to elect vs; as namely our owne will, the foreseeing of our workes, worthinesse or faith, and the merits of our Sauiour Christ. And that these were not the causes which moued the Lord to elect vs, it may be proued by manifest testimonies of Scripture. First, our owne will is expresly excluded, *Rom.*9.16. It is not in him that willeth or runneth, but in God that sheweth mercie. Secondly, not the foresight of our own works, for the Apostle plainly affirmeth, *Rom.*9.11, 12. that before the children were borne, and when they had neither done good or euill, that the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by workes, but by him that calleth: 12, It was said vnto her, the elder shall serue the younger: 13. As it is written, I haue loued Iacob and hated Esau. And chap. 11.5,6. hee saith, that Gods election is of grace, and if it bee of grace it is no more of workes, or else were grace no more grace. Thirdly, not the foresight of any worthines in vs more then in others: For there is no difference, for all haue sinned and are deprived of the glory of God: as it is *Ro.*3.23. And the Apostle affirmeth both of himselfe & others, *that they were all dead in their sinnes, and by nature the children of wrath as well as others, Ephes.*2.1,3. Fourthly, the Lord respected not our faith as an impulsiue cause mouing him to elect vs, but onely as an effect of our election; neither was the Lord mercifull vnto vs in making choice of vs to be partakers of euerlaſting happineſſe, becauſe wee were faithfull, but that we might be faithfull, as Paul profeſſeth of himſelfe, 1. Cor. 7. 25. And the Holy Ghoſt affirmeth, Acts 13. 46. that as many of the Gentiles as were ordained vnto eternall life beleeued. Laſtly, although the merit of Chriſt was the onely meritorious cauſe of our ſaluation, yet it was not the cauſe of Gods election, for Gods election was from all eternitie, and the cauſe of Chriſts merits, which were in time and the effects of Gods election, and therefore that which came after could not be the cauſe of that which was from all eternitie, neither can the effect produce the cauſe, but the cauſe the effect. Moreouer, wee are not ſaid in the Scriptures to bee choſen for Chriſt, but in Chriſt, Epheſ. 1. 4. And the Apoſtle Iohn affirmeth, that Gods eternall loue; was the cauſe which moued the Lord to ſend his Sonne to redeeme vs by his death, and not that his death was the cauſe of his loue, Iohn 3. 16.

Q. Sect. 3. Of the materiall, formall finall cauſes & effects of Gods election.

And ſo much concerning the efficient cauſe of our electiō. The materiall cauſe thereof was the purpoſe or counſell of God himſelfe, whereby hee determined to elect vs. The formall cauſe was the ſeuering and ſetting apart of certaine men which were to be ſaued, ſelected from the reſt who were rejected. The end of Gods election was twofold: the firſt and chiefe end was the glory of God, ſet forth by manifeſting his grace and mercie in the ſaluation of the faithfull. And this the Apoſtle plainly expreſſeth, Rom. 9. 23. namely, that the end of Gods election is, that he might declare the riches of his glory in the veſſels of mercie, which he hath prepared vnto glory. And Epheſ. 1. 4, 5, 6. hee ſaith, that he hath choſen vs in Chriſt and predeſtinated vs, to the praiſe of the glorie of his grace. The ſecond end which is inferiour and ſubordinate to the other, is the ſaluation of the elect, and this alſo is expreſſed by the Apoſtle, Rom. 9. 23. where he ſaith, that the elect are prepared vnto glorie. And Act. 13. 48. the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, as many as were ordained to eternall life beleeued: thereby implying that the ſaluation of the elect is the end of Gods election. And theſe are the cauſes of Gods election. The effects which inſeparably follow hereupon, are Chriſt the Mediatour, and the whole worke of his mediation & our redemption wrought by him, our adoption, effectuall calling, juſtification, ſanctification, and glorification; and theſe are the degrees and meanes of our election, which are as well contained in Gods Decree as our ſaluation it ſelfe.

Q. Sect. 4. Of the ſubiect, obiect, and properties of Gods election.

The ſubject in which wee are elected, is Chriſt Ieſus our Mediatour and head; not in regard of his Deitie alone, for ſo hee is the efficient and primary cauſe; nor in reſpect of his humanitie alone, but as hee is God and man. And we are therefore elected in him, both becauſe in our ſelues wee were not capable of ſuch glorious dignitie, as alſo becauſe hee alone is a fit Meditatour in whom we ſhould be elected, ſeeing with our election there is an vnion and conjunction of vs with God who hath elected vs. The obiect of Gods election are all thoſe who are pre-ordained vnto euerlaſting life, and whom the Lord will eternally ſaue; which being conſidered in themſelues are a great number, but yet in reſpect of the number of the reprobates but a ſmall and little flocke; for though many be called, yet few are choſen, as Chriſt himſelfe affirmeth, Matth. 22. 14. The laſt thing, which alſo is expreſſed in the definition, are certaine properties attributed to Gods election; namely, that it is eternall, free and immutable. That this decree is eternall, it appeareth, Epheſ. 1. 4. Hee hath choſen vs in him before the foundation of the world. So Rom. 9. 11. Secondly, that it is free and of his meere grace, it is manifeſt, Ro. 9. 18. He hath mercy on whom he will, and whom he will hee hardeneth. So Epheſ. 1. 11. In whom we are choſen when wee were predeſtinate, according to the purpoſe of him which worketh all things after the counſell of his owne will. Laſtly, that it is immutable and moſt firme and certaine, it plainly appeareth, 2. Tim. 2. 19. The foundation of God remayneth ſure, and hath this ſeale, the Lord knoweth who are his. Where wee may obſerue, that this immutabilitie and certaintie of Gods decree, doth not depend vpon vs or our perſeuerance, but vpon Gods good pleaſure and foreknowledge, for it is a foundation in it ſelfe firme and ſtable, and hath not the ſeale of our worthineſſe or perſeuerance in grace, but of Gods fore-knowledge whereby he knoweth who are his.

CHAP. VII.

Satans tentations concerning Gods election anſwered, and firſt thoſe wherewith he aſſaulteth carnall worldlings.

Q. Sect. 1. Satans tentation wherein he perſwades worldlings that all in the end ſhall be ſaued, and not reprobated.

NOw concerning this decree of election and the aſſurance thereof, there are two ſorts of Satans tentations: the firſt he ſuggeſteth into the minds of carnall worldlings to nouriſh in them fond preſumption and carnall ſecuritie: the other, into the minds of weake Chriſtians, whereby hee mooueth them to doubt and deſpaire of their election to euerlaſting life. The worldly man hee aſſaulteth with two principall tentations: firſt, he perſwadeth him that there is no election at al or reprobation, but that all in the end ſhall be ſaued. Which groſſe abſurditie that he may make make more plausible and probable, hee setteth before them the infinite mercie of God, and the generall promises and consolations in the Gospell: as, that he will not the death of a sinner, and that hee will that all men shall be saued, in both places cunningly dissembling that which followeth; for to the first place is added, but that he repent, and in the latter, that they who shall be saued must also come to the knowledge of the truth. But this tentation is so palpably absurd, that it becommeth not Satans policie to vse it to any, but those onely whose hearts are hardned, their eyes blinded, their consciences seared, and who hauing not beleeued and loued the truth, are giuen ouer of God to beleeue strong delusions; and therefore I will not spend much time in answering it: onely let such men as are seduced with Satans lies know thus much, that Gods mercie is a just mercie, as his justice is a mercifull justice; that God is infinite in both, & no lesse glorified in the manifestatiō of the one then of the other. Let them know that there are no promises of the Gospell so generall, which are not limited with the condition of faith, and the fruit thereof vnfained repentance. Let them know, that God who is not onely mercifull but also true, yea truth it selfe, hath in his Word reuealed his will, as well concerning the eternall death and destruction of the wicked, as the saluation of the godly, Hee hath said, that many are called and few chosen; that the gate of Heauen is so strait, that there are few who find it; that hee will say to the workers of iniquitie, Goe your wayes, I know you not; that he will make a separation betweene the sheepe and the Goats, and as he saith to the one, Come yee blessed of my Father, inherit yee the Kingdome prepared for you from the foundations of the world, so he will say to the other, Depart from me yee cursed into euerlasting fire, which is prepared for the Deuill and his angels. Let them know that neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor wantons, nor buggerers, nor theeues, nor couetous, nor drunkards, nor railers, nor extortioners, nor any that liue in the like sinnes without repentance, shall inherit the Kingdome of God, for truth it selfe hath spoken it, 1. Cor. 6. 9, 10. but they shall haue their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death, as it is, Reuel. 21. 8. And therefore let not Satan bewitch them, by setting before their eyes Gods mercie; for as sure as God is just and true of his word, so surely shall such as continue in their sinnes, without repentance, be eternally condemned; neither is it any impeachment to Gods mercy, if he exercise his justice in inflicting due punishment vpon obstinate and rebellious sinners, seeing it is sufficiently manifested in the saluation of those who repent and beleeue.

Verse 23.

Mat. 25. 34, 41.

Cor. 6. 9, 10.

Reuel. 21. 8.

The second tentation which Satan suggesteth into the minds of carnall men, to the end they may runne on in their desperate courses, and wallow still in the pleasing filth of their corruptions, he thus frameth; Why enjoyest thou not (saith hee) thy pleasures? why art thou afraid to satisfie all thy desires? what needest thou to take any paines in performing Gods worship and seruice, and to what purpose shouldest thou forsake thy pleasing sinnes, studying and striuing after mortification and newnesse of life, which is so bitter and vnpleasant vnto thee? for Gods decree of predestination is sure and most vnchangeable as himselfe is without change, and therefore if thou art elected of God thou mayest follow thy delights, go on in thy sins, liue as thou list, yet surely thou shalt be saued, and hee will giue thee repentance, though it be deferred to the last gaspe. But if on the otherside thou art a reprobate, rejected of God in his eternall counsell, then take what paines thou wilt, make thy throate hoarse with praying, and thy bags emptie with giuing almes, be neuer so diligent in Gods seruice, neuer so carefull in mortifying thy sins, yet all is in vaine, for those whom hee hath reprobated shall be condemned. And therefore much better were it to take thy pleasure and to follow thine own desires whilest thou art in this life, for the punishments of the life to come will be enough, though thou addest no torments of this life vnto them.

2. Sect. 2. Satans tentations grounded vpon the vnchangeableness of Gods predestination

And thus doth Satan reason in the minde of a carnall man, partly to continue and increase his securitie in the course of sinne, and partly to discredit the holy doctrine of Gods eternall predestination, as though it it opened a doore to all licentiousnesse. But if wee consider of this tentation aright, and sound it to the bottome, wee shall find first that it is most foolish and ridiculous, secondly, that it is most false and impious. That it is most foolish it will easily appeare, if wee vse the like manner of reasoning in worldly matters; for it is all one as if a man should thus say: thy time is appointed, and the Lord in his counsaile hath set downe how long thou shalt liue; if therefore it be ordained that thy time shall be short, vse what meanes thou wilt of physicke and good diet, yet shalt thou not prolong it one day; but if God hath decreed that thou shalt liue to old age, take what courses thou wilt, runne into all desperate dangers, vse surfetting and all disorder of diet, nay, eate no meate at all, and yet thou shalt liue till thou art an old man. Or as if he should say; God hath decreed already whether thou shalt be rich or poore, and if he hath appointed thee to be poore, take neuer so much paines, follow thy calling as diligently as thou wilt, abstaine from all wastfulnesse and prodigalitie, yet shalt thou neuer get any wealth: but if thou art pre-ordained to be rich, sell all thou hast and scatter it abroad in the streets, spend thy time in gaming, drinking and whoring, neuer troubling thy head with care, nor thy hands with worke, yet shalt thou bee a wealthy man. Now who would not laugh at such absurd manner of reasoning if any should vse it? because euery man knoweth, that as God hath decreed the time of our life, so hee hath decreed also that wee should vse the meanes whereby our liues may bee preserued, so long as hee hath ordained that wee should liue, namely, auoyding of dangers, good diet, and physicke; and as he hath decreed that a man should be rich, so he hath decreed also that hee should vse all good meanes of attaining vnto riches, namely, prouidence and paines in getting, and care and frugalitie in keeping that he hath gotten; and whosoeuer vse not the meanes, doe make it manifest that they were not ordained vnto the end. Although indeed, because the Lord would shew his absolute & almighty power, he doth not alwayes tie himselfe vnto means, but sometime crosseth and maketh them vneffectuall to their ends, and sometime hee effecteth what he will, without or contrary to all meanes; and hence it is that some quickly die who vse all meanes to preserue health, and some become poore who vse all meanes of obtaining riches, whereas others being depriued of the meanes attaine vnto long life & riches by the immediate blessing of God. But ordinarily the meanes and end goe together, and therefore it is fond presumption to imagine or hope, without the vse of the meanes, to attaine vnto the end. And thus it is also in spirituall matters appertaining to euerlastiug life; those whom God hath elected, he hath ordained also that they should attaine vnto & vse all good meanes tending thereunto, namely faith, repentance, sanctification; and newnes of life: and therefore it is as absurd for any to imagine, that they shall be saued continuing in their ignorance, infidelitie, vnrepentancie, and filthy corruptions, as it is for a man to thinke that he shall liue to be old, and yet runneth into all dangers, forsaketh physicke yea and food also whereby his life should be sustained. For the spiritual meanes of saluation are as well (nay much more) contained in Gods decree, as the corporall meanes of preseruing life: for it hath beene heard of, that some haue liued in the middest of dangers, and in the absence of meate, for a long time; but it was neuer heard that any haue attained vnto euerlasting life without faith, repentance, and sanctification: for euen the thiefe vpon the crosse beleeued in Christ, and shewed the fruits of his faith in acknowledging his own sinne, reprouing his fellow, in confessing our Sauiour Christ euen then when his Apoles denied and forsooke him, in calling vpon his Name and desiring by his meanes euerlasting life.

3. Sect. 3. That the former tentation is both foolish & ridiculous, false and impious.

But as this tentation is foolish, so also it is false: for whereas he saith that though we liue in our sinnes without repentance, yet we may be elected and therefore shall be saued; and though we take neuer so great paines in Gods worship and seruice, and most carefully indeuour to spend our liues in holinesse and righteousnesse, yet wee may be reprobates and therefore shall be condemned; this is vtterly vntrue: for whomsoeuer the Lord hath ordained to euerlasting life, those also he hath ordained to vse the meanes whereby they may be saued, and consequently whosoeuer carefully vse these meanes may be assured of their saluation, whosoeuer neglect and despise these meanes they manifestly declare that they are not in the number of the elect, so long as they continue in their neglect and contempt: for the end and the means tending to the end, are inseparably joyned in Gods decree; so that they who vse the one shall obtaine the other, they who neglect & contemne the meanes shall neuer attaine vnto the end.

Q. Sect. 3. Satans tentation grounded vpon the vnchangeablenes of Gods Decree, false and impious.

Now the end of Gods election is two fold. The chiefe and principall is his owne glory, as appeareth, Ephes. 1.5,6. Who hath predestinated vs to be adopted through Iesus Christ vnto himselfe, according to the good pleasure of his will; to the praise of the glorie of his grace. And this end the Lord will not suffer to be frustrate: for his glory shall shine in all his elect, and therefore wee also are most carefully to labour that we may further this end; for the more that the praise of Gods mercy doth shine in vs, the better assurance we haue of our election. And seeing God is most glorified when as our lights shine brightest before men in a godly and Christian life, therefore let vs bee most carefull to spend our time in holinesse & righteousnesse, that thereby wee may glorifie our heauenly Father, and also make our owne election sure; for he hath chosen vs that wee should bee holy, and therefore if wee bee holy it is a most certaine signe that hee hath chosen vs.

The end of Gods election two-fold. Ephes. 1.5,6.

Matth. 5.16. 1. Pet. 2.12.

Ephes. 1.4

The second end of Gods election.

The second end of Gods election is the saluation of his elect; for the just accomplishing whereof, he hath pre-ordained diuers subordinate causes or meanes, which are the inseparable effects and fruits of his election; all which are so linked one with another, as that the precedent meanes is the cause of that which next in order followeth, and Gods Decree the cause of all. The effects of Gods election, which are the subordinate causes or meanes of our saluation, are principally three; Vocation, Iustification, and Sanctification. By vocation we are separated from the world, made members of the Church, and ingrafted into the body of Christ; and this this is ordinarily done by the preaching of the Word, being made effectuall by the inward operation of Gods Spirit; or extraordinarily by some other meanes, or immediatly by the illumination of the Holy Ghost. In our justification wee haue the pardon and remission of all our sins by vertue of Christs merit, and are adorned with his righteousnesse imputed vnto vs: and this is done, principally by God himselfe, and instrumentally by a liuely faith. Our sanctification consisteth in our dying to sinne, and rising vp to newnesse of life; which is begun, increased, and finished in vs by Gods Spirit. Whosoeuer therefore are predestinated to saluation, they also are effectually called, that is, separate from the world, and ingrafted into the body of Christ; and this they attaine vnto by diligent and attentiue hearing of the Word. Whosoeuer are effectually called, are also justified; and therefore haue obtained a true and liuely faith. Whosoeuer are justified are also sanctified, that is, die vnto their sinnes, and rise againe to newnesse of life. And consequently whosoeuer are still meere worldlings and no true members of Christs bodie (as all those are who make no conscience of hearing Gods Word diligently, reuerently, and attentiuely, nor of treasuring it vp in their hearts) they are not truly called; whosoeuer haue not Christs righteousnesse and obdience imputed and applied vnto them (which none haue that are destitute of a true and fruitfull faith) are not justified; whosoeuer liue in their sinnes, without repentance, without any earnest desire and heartie endeuour of seruing the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse of life are not sanctified, and whosoeuer are not called, justified & sanctified, shall neuer be saued; for the end and the meanes tending thereunto are joyned together in Gods Predestination. So that where the one is, there the other is; where the one neuer is, there the other shall euer bee wanting. And therefore as by our sanctification, justification, and vocation, wee may certainly conclude that we are elected and shall be saued, so if we be without these wee may certainly inferre, that we are rejected, & shal be condemned if we liue and die in this state. Seeing then this is Gods truth, let not Satan lull vs in securitie with that sophisticall cauill; if wee be elected wee shall be saued liue how we list; if we be reprobates we shall be condemned, be we neuer so earnest in labouring after godlinesse; for these principles may well stand together, it is impossible that the elect should perish, and as impossible also that any who beleeue not in Christ, and bring not forth the fruits of their faith in a godly and Christian life should be saued; it cannot bee that the reprobate should attaine vnto euerlasting happinesse, and that any should not attaine thereunto, who desireth and endeuoureth to serue and feare the Lord: because predestination and saluation are so coupled together with the meanes that come betweene them, that they cannot possibly be seuered from one another, nor the meanes from either of them, nor yet amongst themselues; euen as the first linke of a chaine is joyned with the last by those which are betweene them, and these which are in the middle one with another.

CHAP. VIII.

Satans tentations whereby he moueth the weak Christian to doubt of his election, answered.

AND these are the tentations wherewith Satan assaulteth the worldling: but if he haue to deale with a true Christian, who is indeed elected of God, and sheweth the fruites of his election, by desiring and endeouring to serue the Lord in holinesse and righteousnes, then he perswadeth him to doubt of his election, and to hang as it were wauering in the aire, sometime lifted vp with hope, sometime dejected and cast downe with feare, till at last hee being weary and tired with his doubtfull thoughts, and hauing no where to rest himselfe, is swallowed vp of desperation. Like vnto a silly bird which flieth ouer the maine Ocean, and one while hopeth to attaine vnto the land, another while feareth, seeing no place where to light till at last being so weary that she can fly no further, she falleth downe and is drowned in the Sea: So these one while hope, and soone after finding their owne infirmities, and not seeing where they may rest their wauering minds, doubt and feare, till at last through wearines they sinke downe and are swallowed vp in the gulfe of desperation, where they are drowned and destroyed, if it doe not please the Lord to lift them vp againe, and to shew them the firme Rocke Iesus Christ, whereupon they may rest their weary mindes, and refresh their fainting soules; which hee alwayes doth performe to those that belong to his election; for it is impossible that any of them should perish, though Satan and all the power of Hell seeke their ruine and destruction. But at this marke Satan aymeth though he neuer hitteth it, and though hee neuer finally prenaile, yet to this doubting, and in the end despairing, hee laboureth to perswade the true Christian. Neither doth he content himselfe with the forces of his owne tentations, but hee joyneth with him the world, which is as ready as Satan himselfe to oppugne the certaintie of our election, and our owne trayterous flesh which is easily moued to doubting and despaire, when as it seeth nothing in it selfe whereupon it may rest. In the world he maketh his choice not of silly ignorant men, but of the most sub-till Sophisters and learned Doctors, the true successors of the Scribes and Pharisies, euen the whole rabble of the Popish Clergy: who stand on Satans part stoutly fighting his battailes, being perswaded and ouercome by that tentation which our Sauiour Christ withstood, All this will I giue thee. For to what end (I pray you) doe these great Doctors so stifly stand in the defence of Satans cause, perswading men might and mayne to doubt of their election, and consequently of their saluation? Surely that by emptying mens minds of all true comfort, they may fill their owne chests, and get the treasures of the earth into their possessions. For when the weake conscience wauereth and doubteth of his election, and not finding any true consolation whereupon it may rest, commeth vnto them for some comfort & better assurance; they behaue themselues like vnto vngracious Surgeons, who intending to make a pray of their patients, and to get their gaines out of their paines and tortures, doe one day heale, and the next day hinder the cure, making the wound worse then it was when they tooke it in hand, till at last they haue so poysoned the sore that it is past their cure, whereas they could easily haue healed it at the first, if they had not regarded their profit more then their owne credit, or their patients health; or like vnto deceitfull Lawyers, who sometimes speake in their clients cause and sometimes betray it, going about in a tedious circuit, whereas the direct way lieth open before them, that so their Clients cause being made more doubtfull and tedious, and themselues impatient of delayes, are faine to double and treble their fees, and yet oftentimes to no purpose, because the more they receiue, the fitter they thinke them to be their perpetuall Clients. So doe these Popish Chirurgions and Romish Counsellers deale with their Patient and Client; for shewing his wounded conscience, and desiring some comfort at their hands, they will not make any soueraigne salue of the simples which they might gather out of Gods word, whereby hee might soone be healed, for then their cure, and consequently their gaines were at an end: but they hold him in suspense, and increase his disease of doubting, applying thereunto poysons in stead of salues, whereby at last his wound is made desperate. Thou canst not (will they say) attaine vnto any certaine assurance of thine election, for that were fond presumption; but thou art to hope well: and that thou mayst confirme thy hope, thou must make vowes & goe on pilgrimage, to inuocate and offer vnto these and these Saints, thou must doe these workes of supererogation, build such a Monastery, repaire such a Church, giue so much money to such a Cloyster, buy these Indulgences, whereby thou mayst receiue pardon for thy sins; and for more surety sake, thou shalt at thy death bequeath so much money to the Priests, for Masses, Trentals and Dirges, that if it happen thou goe into Purgatory, thou mayest speedily be deliuered. But all this while they speake not a word of Gods vndeserued grace and free election, not a syllable of Christs death and satisfaction for our sins; no, this were too soueraigne a salue, and would too soon heale the wounded conscience, and so marre the market of these Mount-bankes, making their Vowes, Pilgrimages, Masses, Dirges, Indulgences, & other trūpery-ware not worth the cheapning.

9. Sect. 1. The causes which moue Satan and his instruments to perswade the weake Christian to doubt of his election.

But let vs consider the state of the question betweene vs and Satan, with his Doctors and Proctors, whom he seeth with worldly riches to plead his cause. We hold that a man truly conuerted, indued with a liuely faith and sanctified, may ordinarily bee assured that he is the child of God, elected to saluation: but they affirme that it is presumption for such to haue any certaine assurance hereof, vnlesse it be by extraordinary reuelation; hee may hope indeed that hee is elected and shall be saued, but this hope must be tempered with feare, and mixt with doubting; and this doubting they call humilitie, which they doe not account an infirmitie, but rather a vertue which doth commend their faith, esteeming firme assurance to be but heretical confidence and damnable presumption, and pronouncing him accursed in their counsell of Trent, who affirmeth that wee are to beleeue without doubting the remission of our owne sinne and euerlasting life in particular. And because they cannot but confesse, that doubting and beleeuing, in themselues are opposed one against another; they teach, that their faith is assured of Gods mercie and Christs merits, as in themselues infinite and sufficient; but it doubteth (in respect of our vnworthinesse and manifold imperfections) to apply them particularly vnto our selues: so that when we look vpon God and Christ, there is cause of firme assurance, but when wee looke vpon our selues, there is nothing but matter of doubting. There is indeed some place left to their staggering hope, but none to assurance of faith. As though our faith were grounded on our owne worthinesse, and not vpon Gods free mercy and Christs merits; and as though resting vpon these alone, it could not haue certaine assurance of our election and saluation, notwithstanding our vnworthinesse and corruptions. But let vs arme our selues against this their doctrine, which containeth nothing else but principles whereupon Satan may ground his tentations, whereby he perswadeth vs first to doubting, and afterwards to despairing of our election and saluation; for when the troubled conscience hath no other assurance of Gods loue and his owne election, but that which is gathered from his owne worthinesse and workes, he still doubteth whether yet hee be worthy, or haue fulfilled the measure of workes required; and then further examining himselfe to cleere his doubt, and finding his his best workes exceeding imperfect, and that his sins and corruptions are innumerable, then is his conscience set vpon the rack, and his soule plunged into deepe despaire, hauing no other stay but the broken staffe of of his owne righteousnesse, which most deceiueth him when he most trusteth to it.

Q. Sect. 2. The state of this question betweene the Christian and Satan with his assistants.

And that wee may be confirmed against Satans tentations, and the subtill sophistrie of these his Doctors, I will handle this point at large, and will plainly proue, first, that the child of God being conuerted, justified and sanctified, may bee certainly assured of his particular election, and that without any speciall reuelation after an ordinary manner. Secondly, I will shew the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto this assurance; and the infallible signes of our election. Lastly, I will answere such objections as are made against it by Satan and his adherents. Concerning the first, namely, that wee may bee certainly assured of our election and saluation, it may be proued by testimonies of Scriptures, and also by infallible reasons grounded vpon them. For we must not thinke that we can haue this assurance, by ascending into Heauen, and there searching into Gods secret Decree, but wee must gather it out of Gods Word wherein the Lord hath reuealed his will vnto vs: and in regard hereof, though Gods will in it selfe be secret, so that wee may aske, who hath knowne the will of the Lord? yet seeing the Lord hath reuealed his hidden will in his Word, we may say with Paul, that we haue knowne the mind of Christ. Now this knowledge of Gods will concerning our election, is not to be gathered out of the Law, as the Papists would haue it; for by reason of the condition annexed to the promise of euerlasting life (Doe this and liue) it leaueth our consciences in perpetuall doubting, nay, rather in vtter desperation, because we know that we are farre from the exact obedience thereof, but out of the gracious promises of the Gospell, freely made to euery one who beleeueth, without any condition of our owne workes and worthinesse. And therefore if wee beleeue the promises of the Gospell made in Christ, we may be assured of our election and saluation, though in our selues wee are miserable sinners, who haue transgressed all Gods Commandements: for the couenant and promises of God made to Abraham and his seed, was not through the law, but through the righteousnesse of faith, as it is, *Rom.*4.13. and therefore it is by faith, that it might come by grace, and the promise might bee sure, not in it selfe onely, and in respect of the sufficiency of Gods mercy and Christs merits, as the Papists dreame; but to all the seed, that is, to all that beleeue, and be the children of Abraham, who was the Father of the faithfull both Iew and Gentile. For otherwise we should haue no better assurance of saluation by the Gospell then by the Law; for euen the promise of the Law was most sure in it selfe and on Gods part, yet not sure to vs who could not performe the condition: and therefore the Lord made a new couenant, not of workes but of grace, onely on the condition of faith; that so the promise might be sure, not onely in it selfe and on Gods behalfe, but also vnto vs who are Abrahams seed, that is, true beleeuers, as appeareth *Rom.*4.16. And this also notably appeareth, *Heb.*6.17,18. where the Apostle saith, that God willing more abundantly to shew vnto the heires of promise the stablenes of his counsaile, bound himselfe by an oath, 18. That by two immutable things wherein it is impossible that God should lie, wee might haue strong consolation, which haue our refuge to hold fast the hope that is set before vs, 19. Which we haue as an anchor of the soule both sure and stedfast. In which words the Apostle plainly sheweth, that the Lord hath added his oath to his promise, not to the end that in it selfe it should be confirmed, or needed any confirmation on Gods part (for his bare word is yea and Amen, so infallible & sure, that though Heauen and earth passe away and perish, yet not one iot or title of his word shall faile till all things be fulfilled) but to the end that we to whom the promises are made, might be assured of the stableneesse of his counsaile, and thereby receiue strong consolation, and might rest our soules in the tempests of tentations vpon firme hope, as it were vpon a stedfast and sure anchor. Now what stabilitie, what strong consolation, what stedfastnesse of hope, if wee are still vncertain of our election, sometimes hoping, as when wee looke vpon Gods mercie and Christs merits, and sometimes doubting, as when we looke vpon our owne sins and vnworthinesse? For what is this but to be shaken from our anchor-hold, and to be tossed vp and downe with the waues of doubting, till at last wee dash against the rockes of despaire, and so make shipwracke of our soules?

2. Sect. 4. Particular testimonies prouing this point.

And thus you see that the couenant of grace was therefore made with vs, that wee might be assured of our election, and that the whole Gospell is nothing else but Gods ambassage, whereby hee certifieth vs of his free and vndeserued loue in Iesus Christ. But let vs further consider of some speciall testimonies whereby this assurance is confirmed. *Rom.*5.1. it is said, that being iustified by faith, wee haue peace towards God through our Lord Iesus Christ. But what peace can

we haue, if we be not assured of our election, but haue our minds distracted and racked betweene faith and doubting, hope and despaire? Rom. 8.38. the Apostle professeth, that he is perswaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, &c. nor any other creature should bee able to separate vs from the loue of God which in Christ Iesus our Lord. It is true (will the tempter say) that Paul had this assurance of his election and saluation, but it was by some speciall reuelation, and not ordinarily; and therfore it followeth not hereof that euery particular Christian can haue this assurance. I answere, that the Apostle groundeth not his faith on reuelations in that place, but on a foundation common with him to all true Christians, namely on the death of Christ, Vers. 32. on Gods free justification, Vers. 33. and vpon Christs intercession, Vers. 34. & from hence hee confirmeth his and our resolution, that nothing should separate vs from the loue of Christ, Vers. 35. that is, from the loue of God in him. Whosoeuer therefore with Paul beleeueth that Christ died for him, that God freely justifieth him through Christs merits, and that our Sauiour sitteth at the right hand of his Father to make intercession for him, he may be assured of Gods loue, and consequently of his election. Secondly, Paul speaketh this not of himselfe alone, but also of all the faithfull, and therefore hee vseth the plurall number, I am perswaded that nothing shall be able to separate vs. So Ephes. 3.12. the Apostle saith, that wee haue through Christ boldnesse and entrance with confidence by faith in him. And Heb. 4.16. he exhorteth vs to goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, that we may receiue mercy, &c. And Chap. 10.22. Let vs draw neere with a true heart in assurance of faith, &c. But I would faine know what entrance with confidence, what boldnesse and assurance of faith, when wee draw neere vnto God, and present our selues before his throne of Majestie, if wee remayne doubtfull of his loue and our election? So Heb. 6.19. he saith that our hope is a sure and stedfast anchor of the soule; but what certaintie or stedfastnesse is there in it, if it wauer and stagger through doubtfulnes, so often as we looke vpon our sinnes and vnworthinesse? The Apostle Peter also doth tell vs, that the trust which we haue through Iesus Christ must bee perfect, that is, entire and perpetuall, till we enioy the thing which we hope for, 1.Pet. 1.13. And 2.Pet. 1.10. hee exhorteth vs to vse all diligence that wee may make our calling & election sure, which if we could not doe, he should perswade vs to the vndertaking of a needlesse labour. Nay, he plainly assureth vs, that if wee doe these things (to wit, if we ioyne vertue with our faith, and with vertue knowledge, and with knowledge temperance, and with temperance patience, and with patience godlinesse, and with godlinesse brotherly kindnesse; and with brotherly kindnesse loue) wee shall neuer fall; because these are effects and vndoubted signes of our election. And the Apostle Iohn would not haue it a matter doubtfull, whether wee are elected and shall bee saued or no; but certainly knowne and vndoubtedly beleeued: and therefore hee aimeth principally at this marke, and propoundeth this as the chiefe end of his Epistle, namely to shew how wee might know ordinarily, and be fully assured that we are beloued of God, elected, and shall be saued. So 1.Iohn. 3.14. We know that we are translated from death to life, because wee loue the brethren. And therefore in the latter end of his Epistle he saith, that he had written it to this end, that we might know that we haue eternall life, Chap. 5.13. Seeing then the Scriptures doe commend vnto vs a stedfast and assured faith, whereby wee particularly are assured and perswaded of our election and saluation, notwithstanding our sinnes and vnworthinesse: therefore let not the tempter perswade vs to cast away this certaine perswasion, and to wauer in doubting; but let vs say with the Apostle Paul, 2.Tim. 1.12. Though I am vnworthy, yet I know whom I haue beleeued, and I am perswaded that he is able to keepe that which I haue committed to him.

But against that which hath beene said the tempter obiecteth, that the promises of the Gospell are generall and indefinite, and therefore no man can gather out of them any certaine assurance of his particular election. I answere that this consequence is false: for out of a generall and indefinite proposition wee may truly and by the Lawes of reason gather and inferre a particular conclusion, though not contrariwise. For example; if I thus conclude; all men are reasonable creatures: but I am a man; therefore I am a reasonable creature: it is rightly and truely inferred. Though therefore the promises of the Gospell be contained in generall propositions, yet may euery faithfull man as certainly conclude, that they belong vnto him, as if they were particularly applied vnto him by name. For when the Lord by his Ambassadours maketh this generall proposition in the preaching of the Word; Whosoeuer truly beleeue in Christ, they are all elected vnto euerlasting life; the faithfull hearer maketh this assumption in his minde, But I by the grace of God, and by the preaching of his Word made effectuall by his Spirit, haue a true faith begotten in mee, whereby I beleeue in Christ my Sauiour; and therefore Gods promise of life and saluation belongeth vnto mee. And thus also doth the conscience of man out the generall curses of the Law conclude that hee is accursed; for when the Law deliuereth this proposition in generall, full, Cursed is euery one who abideth not in all things which are written in the booke of the law to doe them; euery particular man maketh this assumption in his owne conscience, But I haue not continued in all to doe it, nay, in stead of doing all, I haue neglected all, in stead of continuing in obedience, I haue been continually disobedient, in stead of doing the duties commanded, I haue committed the sins forbidden, & therefore by the sentence of the law I am accursed. So that though both the threatnings of the law, and the promises of the Gospell be generall and indefinite, yet doth euery mans conscience truly informed by Gods Word, gather out of them most certaine particular conclusions.

But here the tempter will obiect further; It is true indeed that euery faithful man may apply the generall promises of the Gospell vnto himselfe, but all the question is whether thou canst know that thou hast faith or no, seeing many who continue in their infidelity, bragge most of their faith. I answere, that it cannot be denied but that many are deceiued, by contenting themselues with their carnall securitie, in stead of a liuely faith; but hence it followeth not, that because many are deceiued with an opinion of faith, therefore those that beleeue indeed cannot be assured that they haue faith; nomore then this followeth, some men dreame that they are rich, and are not so indeed when they awake, therfore no man knoweth whether he be rich or no; for what is their secure opinion, but an idle dreame of their owne braines, which hath no warrant out of Gods Word? where as faith certainly and euidently perswadeth, and like a Candle doth not onely manifest other things, but also it selfe appeareth by his own light. So that as a man who seeth and feeleth the fire and the heate thereof, doth certainly know that he seeth & feeleth it, so he that beleeueth in Christ doth know that he beleeueth indeed: yea as much more certaine is this knowledge, as the knowledge of faith grounded vpon Gods Word which is infallible, is more certaine then the knowledge of the senses, which are often deceiued. Furthermore, if wee could not be assured that wee haue faith, then to what purpose serues the admonition of the Apostle, 2. Cor. 13.5. Trie your selues whether you are in the faith, examine your selues: know you not your owne selues, how that Iesus Christ is in you, except ye bereprobates? In which words the Apostle plainly implieth, that we may know that we haue a true and liuely faith, or else this triall and examination were vaine; nay, he plainly saith that we may know that Christ is in vs, except we bee reprobates, and consequently that wee haue faith; for this only is the hand whereby we apply Christ vnto vs and all his benefits. So 1. Cor. 11.28. the Apostle willeth vs to examine our selues before wee come to the Lords Table, that so wee be not vnworthy guests; in which examination the chiefe thing which we are to respect, is whether we haue a true faith; for this is the mouth of the soule, whereby wee feed vpon the body and bloud of our Sauiour Christ; and therefore vnlesse we can know whether wee haue faith when wee are truely indued therewith, this admonition of the Apostle were to no purpose; neither can wee haue any assurance to our owne soules, that we are worthy guests of the Lords Table, & consequently we rest doubtfull whether we receiue the Sacrament to our spirituall good and saluation, or to our iudgement and condemation. Thirdly, wee are assured of this by Gods Word, that whatsoeuer is not done of faith is sinne. Rom. 14.23. And without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11.6. If therefore wee cannot be assured that we haue faith, wee can haue no assurance that our best actions, our calling vpon Gods Name, our hearing of his Word, and all other duties of Pietie and Iustice, are any better then sinnes, and odious in Gods sight: whereof it must needs follow that these actions, how good soeuer in themselues, will be done of vs in doubting, because wee know not whether they bee done in faith, and being done doubtingly they become sins indeed, and therefore displeasing in Gods sight. Lastly, if I can know whether I beleeue a man vpon his word, and whether I truth and relie my selfe vpon his promise or no; why may I not much more know whether I beleeue Gods gracious promises made vnto all repentant sinners, and amongst them vnto my selfe, namely, that for the obedience and merits of Christ, I shall haue remission of my sinnes and euerlasting life? seeing this faith is not out of our selues, but a gift of God wrought in vs by his holy spirit, which is not idle in vs, for it purifieth the heart, and worketh by loue, it mooueth vs to hate and flie from those sinnes wee haue loued, and to imbrace and loue that holinesse and righteousnesse of life, which heretofore hath beene loathsome vnto vs. As therefore the fire is knowne by his heate, the Sunne by his light, the good tree by his fruits; so when our cold hearts are inflamed with the loue of God, and a feruent zeale of his glory, when our blind vnderstandings are inlightned with the knowledge of God, and of his true religion, when wee bring forth the fruits of our profession in a godly and Christian life, then may we certainly know that wee are indued with a true and liuely faith.

Obiect. 7. A tentation grounded vpon our assurance of faith, answered.

But heere the tempter will take occasion to perswade the weake Christian and the troubled conscience, that hee hath no faith, seeing hee doth not certainly know that hee hath it, nor discerneth these signes and fruits of faith in himselfe. To this suggestion wee are are to answere, that wee doe not say that the weake Christian may be assured at all times, that he hath faith by his present sense; for first when we are newly conuerted, and the seeds of faith are sowne in our hearts, wee doe not presently discerne it. But as the Corne which is cast into the ground, is for a time couered, and after springeth vp the blade, and then the eare, so faith being sowne in our hearts, which first like fallow grounds are plowed vp, and as it were harrowed and broken with the threatnings of the Law, and apprehension of Gods anger due vnto our sinnes, doth in the time of our humiliation and contrition, lie couered so as we cannot discerne it, till being more and more watered with the water of the spirit, and the heauenly promises of the Gospell, which in the preaching of the Word, like sweet dewes and pleasant showers distill vpon it, it sendeth forth the blade, namely an holy desire and earnest endeuour to serue God, & afterwards the fruit, euen a plentifull haruest in godlinesse and righteousnesse of life. And secondly, sometime after that faith is begun in vs, and wee haue seene the fruits thereof to our comfort, it is after hid from vs againe, as when either wee wound our conscience by committing some grieuous sinne against knowledge wittingly and willingly, or when it pleaseth the Lord to exercise vs in the spirituall conflict of tentations, for then sometimes it commeth to passe that our faith for a time lieth hid vnder the ashes of our corruptions; and the cloud of our sinnes, and the apprehension of Gods anger, doth so ouer-shadow the eyes of our vnderstanding, that we cannot discerne the beames of Gods loue and fauour shining vpon vs. Although when the conflict is ended, our faith againe flameth out in the loue of God, and zeale of his glory, and the louing countenance of the Lord shineth graciously vpon vs when these clouds of tentations are ouer-past. And therefore though we doe not certainly know our faith by the fruits thereof, either soone after our conuersion, or in the time of tentation, yet this must not discourage vs, because these are no fit times to judge thereof: onely when we want this knowledge and full assurance, let vs vse all good meanes ordained of God that we may attaine thereunto, if we neuer had it; or recouer and againe renew it, if after wee haue once had it, wee lose the sense and feeling thereof, either by falling into hainous sins, or by the violence of Satans tentations.

CHAP. IX.

That we may be assured of our election, proued by diuers arguments.

9. Sect. 1. First, because the Gospell

AND thus haue I shewed by plaine testimonies of Scriptures, that we may infallibly bee assured of our election. Now I will also proue the same by strong arguments, drawne from the same fountaine. First, therefore we may thus reason: Whatsoeuer is manifestly shewed vnto vs in the Gospell, that wee are bound to beleeue, and of that wee may be assured: but it is manifestly declared in the Gospell, that we are elected vnto euerlasting life: and therefore wee are bound to beleeue it, and may bee assured that wee are elected. The proposition or first part of this reason containeth two branches: the first is, that we are bound to beleeue whatsoeuer the Gospell reuealeth: the second, that we may be assured of it; both which are euident truths. For that which Christ commandeth, that we are bound to performe: but he commandeth vs to beleeue the Gospell, Marke 1.15. Repent and beleeue the Gospell. So this is his commandement that we beleeue, &c. 1. Ioh. 3.23. The breach of which Commandement is punished with euerlasting death. For hee that will not beleeue shall be damned, as it is Mark. 16.16. And as wee are bound to beleeue it, so wee may also come to be assured thereof; seeing the Gospell commandeth vs nothing, which it doth not also by the inward and ordinary co-operation of Gods Spirit enable vs to performe. For this difference is betweene the Commandements of the Law and the Commandements of the Gospell: the Law sheweth vs the duties which we should performe, but ministers vnto vs no power whereby we may be enabled to performe them; but the Gospell being assisted with the operation of Gods Spirit, doth command, and withall giueth vs abilitie to performe the Commandement, for the words of the Gospell are spirit and life, as our Sauiour speaketh, Ioh. 6.63. and with the preaching thereof the Spirit inwardly worketh, quickning and strengthening vs to performe that which it enjoyneth. The assumption or second part of the reason is also cleer, namely, that the Gospell manifesteth vnto vs our election. For what else is the whole Gospell but a declaration of Gods loue, and of our election and redemption in and by Iesus Christ? What is it else but the ambassage whereby God reconcileth vs vnto himselfe? What else is contained therein, but Gods merciful promises of life and saluation, made on no other condition but on the condition of faith, which wee need not feare to performe, seeing it is commanded vs of God. And therefore though wee had no other reason to beleeue, yet we should beleeue in obedience to Gods Commandement, seeing hee commandeth nothing which is not good in it selfe, tending to his owne glory and our saluation; and if we doe beleeue, though our vnworthinesses bee neuer so great, yea though our faith be neuer so weak and small, yet may we thereby be assured of our election and saluation. For this is Gods will, that whomanifestly shewed vnto we are elected.

Ioh. 6.63.

9. Sect. 2. ondly, wee assured we are eemed, & sequently we are fted, whosoeuer beleeueth in his Sonne shall haue euerlasting life, as it is Iohn 6. 40. So Iohn 3. 36. He that beleeueth in the Sonne hath euerlasting life. But most notable is that place, 1. Iohn 5. 10. He that beleeueth in the Sonne of God, hath the witnesse in himselfe: that is, they need no other reasons to perswade them that the testimony which God hath giuen of his Sonne (namely, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him shall haue euerlasting life) is true; for they haue a full and sufficient assurance hereof by their faith. Whosoeuer therefore can be assured that they beleeue in Iesus Christ (as all may who bring forth the fruites of faith in sanctification and holinesse of life, or at least desire and endeuour to serue the Lord in the duties of pietie and righteousnes) they may be assured, nay, they are bound by Gods expresse commandement, vndoubtedly to beleeue that they are elected and shall be saued, because all the promises of the Gospell are made vnto them without any other condition.

9. Sect. 3. hat our assu- ance should ot be mixt ith doubting.

Secondly, whosoeuer are bound to beleeue that Iesus Christ is their Sauiour and Redeemer, they are also vndoubtedly to beleeue, and may also be assured of their election, but euery Christian is bound by Gods expresse commandement to beleeue that Iesus Christ is their Sauiour and Redeemer, as appeareth 1. Iohn 3. 23. and therefore they are vndoubtedly to beleeue, and may be assured of their election. The proposition is manifest, seeing all those and those onely are saued and redeemed by Christ, who are elected to saluation in Gods eternall decree. The assumption is most certaine, for whereas God commands vs to beleeue in Iesus Christ, he doth not onely enioyne vs to beleeue that hee is a Sauiour of his Church in generall, or of the Patriarches, Prophets, and Apostles alone, for this also the diuels beleeue as well as we; but we are to beleeue that hee is our Sauiour and Redeemer, and to applie all the promises of life and saluation made in him, particularly vnto our selues; for otherwise how should we haue that assurance of faith, and that bold confidence when we approach vnto the throne of grace, which the Apostle requireth of vs, if we cannot be assured that hee is our Sauiour and Redeemer, in whom God loueth and hath elected vs?

Neither must this faith and assurance of our election and saluation bee mixt with doubting, as the Papists would beare vs in hand, who make doubting not an infirmitie, but a commendable vertue of their faith: for faith and doubting though they are often mixt in Gods children, yet in respect of their owne natures, they are opposed in the Scriptures one against the other. So it is said of Abraham, that hee doubted not of Gods promise through vnbeleefe, but was strengthned in the faith, Rom. 4. 20. Where the Apostle sheweth, that doubting is a fruite of vnbeleefe, and not a commendable vertue; yea, hee opposeth it to faith, saying, that hee doubted not of the promise, but was strengthened in the faith. So the Apostle Iames, chap. 1. 5. saith, If any man lacke wisedome, let him aske in faith and wauer not; where hee opposeth faith to wauering or doubting. And our Sauiour Christ also maketh this opposition, Matth. 21. 21. saying, If yee haue faith and doubt not, So that though faith and doubting are not opposed in respect of the subiect wherein they are, for euen the most deare children of God haue their faith often mixt with doubting, they being partly flesh and partly spirit; yet these two in their owne natures are opposed one against the other; and euen in respect of their subiect they thus farre disagree, that though they haue their subsistence in the same subiect, yet not in the same part; that is, though they bee in the same man, yet not in the same part, for faith is in the regenerate and spirituall part, doubting in the vnregenerate or fleshly part. Doubting then is no vertue of faith, but opposed thereunto as a fruit of vnbeleefe; it proceedeth not from the spirit but from the flesh: and as a fruite of the flesh it is condemned in Gods word, though the Papists highlie commend it. So Matth. 14. 31. our Sauiour reprehendeth Peter for his doubting; O thou of little faith, wherefore diddest thou doubt? And Luk. 12. 29. hee telleth vs that wee must not stand in doubt, or (as the word μὴ μετεωρίζεσθε signifieth) be not like vnto meteors which are carried about in the aire with euerie winde. And the Apostle Iames, chap. 1. 7. compareth him that wauereth or doubteth, to a waue of the sea tost of the wind & carried away. And Paul is so farre from commending doubting for a vertue, that hee doth not onely condemne it as a sinne in it selfe, but also as a cause which maketh our actions which are indifferent or good in themselues to become sinnes. So the eating of this or that meate is a thing indifferent and lawfull if it be receiued with prayer and thanksgiuing, but yet the Apostle telleth vs, Rom. 14. 23. that he who doubteth is condemned if hee eate; and he rendreth this reason; because he eateth not of faith, and whatsoeuer is not of faith is sinne. So that by this hee sheweth, that hee who doubteth, eateth not of faith; and whatsoeuer is not done of faith is sinne. Seeing therefore doubting is opposed vnto faith, and is in it selfe not onely a sinne, but also a cause of sinne; let vs not entertaine it though it bring letters commendatorie from the Pope and all his shauelings; but labour to banish it out of our hearts, and striue after faith and full assurance of our election and saluation in Christ Iesus: And though we find our great vnworthinesse of the least of God mercies, and cannot see any reason in our selues why wee should beleeue that we are elected and shall be saued, yet let vs hope against hope, and beleeue against beleefe, for it is not a thing left to our choice but enioyned vs by God, as the chiefe and maine dutie required in the Gospell: And therefore laying aside all reasoning and disputing, let vs resolue to beleeue in obedience to Gods Commandement; and then though wee are neuer so full of corruptions, yet will this faith purifie vs; though wee are most backward in performing any good worke, yet will it be fruitfull in vs, and will worke by loue; though we be most vnworthy, it will make vs more worthy, by applying vnto vs the righteousnes of Christ and the merits of his death and bloudshed, which wil not onely free vs from the guilt and punishment of sinne, but will also purge vs from the vices and corruptions themselues.

Acts 15.9.

Gal. 5.6.

9. Sect. 4. Thirdly, faith is a certaine & particular perswasion, & not a doubtfull opinion or generall notion.

Thirdly, the certaintie of our election may bee prooued, by an argument drawne from the nature of faith: which is not a doubtfull opinion, but a certaine perswasion; not a generall notion, but a particular assurance, whereby wee doe apply and appropriate vnto our selues those things which we doe beleeue. Whosoeuer therefore hath true faith, he doth certainly beleeue and is particularly assured of his election, justification and saluation. That faith is a certaine perswasion, it may appeare first by those properties and names which are giuen vnto it in the Word. Heb. 11.1. faith is said to bee ὑπόστασις, that is, a subsistence or present being of things hoped for; so that hope waiteth for them in time to come, but faith enioyeth them as being present, namely, in respect of the certaine assurance and particular application of the promises vnto our selues. And therefore the Apostle saith, that hereby wee may know (not that we shall haue, but) that we haue eternall life, 1. Iohn 5.13. not in possession, but in assurance of faith. It is called ἔλεγχος in the same place, which word is quite contrary to doubting, as signifying a manifest demonstration which doth not only shew a thing probably, but also doth conuince with strong arguments, and make that truth cleere and manifest, which was otherwise obscure and secret, and therefore in the text it is called a demonstration of things not seene. So there is ascribed vnto it fulnesse of perswasiō: Heb. 10.22. Let vs draw neer with a true heart, in πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως, in full assurance of faith: and also boldnesse with confident trust, Ephes. 3.12. by whom wee haue boldnesse and entrance with confidence (not by extraordinary reuelations, but) by faith in Christ: which full assurance, boldnesse and confidence wee could not haue, if wee were not assured of Gods loue and our election, but remained doubtfull whether wee were beloued of God and elected or no. To these names and properties of faith, we may adde some plaine testimonies of Scriptures, which cleerly shew that faith is not a doubtfull hope, but a certaine perswasion. 1. Iohn 3.14. The Apostle saith, that we know that wee are translated from death to life (not by reuelation but) because wee loue the brethren; hee doth not say that we know that wee shall be, but that we are translated from death to life, to note the certainty of this knowledge and perswasion, Rom. 5.2. the Apostle saith, that by Christ we haue accesse through faith vnto Gods grace, wherein wee stand and reioyce vnder hope, or, as the word signifieth, glory and triumph with joy. So that wee doe not wauer & stagger, but stand firmely through faith; we doe not feare and timerously hope, but euen glory and triumph in our rejoycing: saying with the Apostle, Rom. 8.33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that iustifieth. 34. Who shall condemne? it is Christ which is dead: yea, or rather which is risen againe, who is also at the right hand of God, and maketh request for vs. 35. Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ, &c. So, that though our sinnes be manifold, our vnworthinesse great, and our faith weake; yet if it be true, it may also be certaine in the assurance of Gods loue and our election: because it is not grounded on our worthinesse, but vpon Gods free justifying and accepting of vs, as righteous in Christ, and vpon Christs death, resurrection and intercession for vs vnto God his Father; which is a most sure foundation that cannot faile. Indeed if our faith and the anchor of our hope did pitch, rest, and fasten it selfe, vpon the light and hollow sands of our owne merits and worthinesse; the surging waues and boysterous blasts of Satans tentations, would disanchor and tosse vs to and fro, till at length we should make shipwracke of our faith, against the rockes of despaire: but seeing we take hold and rest vpon the firme and sure anchor-hold Christ Iesus his merits and righteousnesse; well may the tempests of Satans tentations shake vs, but they shall neuer remoue vs from our firme hold and certaine assurance which wee haue in Christ; because we apprehend him, nay rather, are apprehended or taken hold of by him, as the Apostle speaketh, Phil. 3.12. And no man (no not the whole power of Hell) is able to plucke vs out of his hands, as our Sauiour assureth vs, Iohn 20.28. For though they bee mighty to destroy, yet Christ is almighty to saue, as it is Esay 63.1. and therefore let vs not suffer our soules to be racked betweene hope and feare, but let vs trust perfectly on the grace that is brought vnto vs by the reuelation of Iesus Christ, as the Apostle exhorteth, 1. Pet. 1.13.

Lastly, that wee may bee most certaine of this

9. Sect. 5.

this certaintie of faith, we will adde to these testimonies, some examples of beleeuers mentioned in Gods Word. And first let vs consider the faith of Abraham: which was not wauering and doubtfull, but most certaine and assured; for aboue hope hee beleeued vnto hope, and hee was not weake in faith, neither did hee doubt of the promise of God through vnbeleefe, but was strengthened in the faith, and gaue glory vnto God, being fully assured that he which had promised was able to performe it; and therefore it was imputed vnto him for righteousnesse; as the Apostle setteth it downe, *Rom.*4.18,19, 20,21,22. Now Abraham was not only a bare beleeuer, but the Father of the faithfull; neither was his faith propounded vnto vs as a wonder to admire at, but as an example for all his sonnes to imitate. And therefore it is said, Verse 23. That this is not written for him only that his faith was imputed to him for righteousnesse. 24. But also for vs to whom it shall be imputed for righteousnesse, which beleeue in him, who hath raised vp Iesus our Lord from the dead. But it may bee obiected, that Abraham is not said heere to beleeue thus certainly his owne election or saluation, but that hee should haue a sonne, and become a Father of many Nations: I answere, though this were the next and immediate obiect of his faith, yet this was not the chiefe and principall; but the promise of blessednesse and happines, which was made to him and all the Nations of the earth, in his seed Christ. For Abraham could not be iustified by beleeuing that hee should haue a Son, but by beleeuing in the Messias, which should come out of his loines, by whose righteousnesse and obedience hee should be saued. And therefore the Apostle, *Gal.*3.16. doth appropriate that promise made vnto Abraham, *Gen.*22.18. In thy seed shall all the Nations of the earth be blessed, vnto the promised seed Iesus Christ. Looke also vpon the Prophet Dauid and you shall see that though his faith was often shaken with doubting, yet in it selfe it remayned certaine: like a tree shaken with the winds, which is not ouerthrowne, but taketh more firme and deep roote: *Psal.*23.4. Though I walke thorow the valley of the shadow of death, I will feare no euill, for thou art with me. So *Psal.*27.1. The Lord is my light and my saluation, whom shall I feare? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? Neither had he only this assurance in himselfe, but sheweth that it is also the state of all the faithfull, Psal. 125.1. They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Sion, which cannot be removed, but remaineth for euer. So Iob in the middest of his afflictions sheweth his certaine assurance & faith, saying, Iob 13.15. Lo, though he slay me yet will I trust in him. And Chap. 19.25. I am sure that my Redeemer liueth, and he shall stand the last on earth. 26. And though after this skin, wormes destroy this body, yet shall I see God in my flesh, &c. And Paul speaking not only of his owne assurance of Gods loue, but of all the faithfull, saith, that he is perswaded, that nothing in the world should be able to separate vs from Gods loue in Christ, Rom.8. *Rom.*8.38.

And thus haue I shewed, that faith is a certaine assurance of Gods loue and fauour in Christ. Now I will also proue that it particularly perswadeth vs of our owne election and life euerlasting. For first, such a faith is begot now in our hearts, by the preaching of the Word, as was begot in the hearts of men, by our Sauiour Christ himselfe; for as there is but one God, so there is but one true and iustifying faith, *Ephes.*4.5. but by that faith they were particularly perswaded of the remission of their sinnes, and consequently of their iustification and saluation, as appeareth, Luke 7.42,50. where our Sauiour saith thus to the woman: Thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, thy faith hath saued thee, goe in peace. So *Matth.*9.2. hee saith to the sicke of the Palsie, Be of good comfort, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, goe in peace. So *Matth.*9.2. hee saith to the sicke of the Palsie, Be of good comfort, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee. And therefore the faith which is now begot in vs by the preaching of the Word, doth also particularly perswade vs of our sinnes and eternall saluation. For as our Sauiour Christ by his owne absolute authoritie, did remit the sinnes of those that did beleeue; so hee hath left this authoritie to his Ministers (not absolutely by their owne power to remit sins, which the man of sinne doth challenge vnto himselfe, but) to declare and pronounce their sinnes forgiuen who truly beleeue in the Son of God, and repent them of their sinnes: the which their sentence is ratified in Heauen, according to that *Matth.*16.19. I will giue vnto thee the keyes of the Kingdome of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou shalt bind in earth shall be bound in heauen, and whatsoeuer thou shalt loose in earth shall be loosed in heauen. Which authoritie is not giuen to Peter alone and his successors, as the Papists dreame, but as Peter answered, not only for himselfe, but also in the behalfe of all the rest, so hee receiueth this power both for himselfe and for all the Apostles; yea, for all Gods true Ministers, the vndoubted successours of the Apostles, as our Sauiour expounded himselfe, Iohn 20.23. where hee giueth this authoritie to all the Apostles, saying, Whose sins soeuer ye remit, they are remitted vnto them, & whose sins soeuer ye retaine, they are retained. So that the Ministers of Gods Word, by the preaching thereof, may assure men particularly of the remission of their sinnes: for when hee maketh this generall proposition, Whosoeuer beleeueth and repenteth him of his sinnes shall haue them remitted, and be made an heire of euerlasting life; and the particular hearer doth truly assume that hee beleeueth and repenteth, the Minister hath authoritie giuen him of God to make this conclusion: Therefore be thou assured that thy sinnes are forgiuen thee in Christ, and that thou art an vndoubted heire of euerlasting life. Secondly, as the Lord doth offer vnto vs his gracious promises of life and saluation, so doe we receiue them by faith; but the Lord doth not only generally in the Word offer these his gracious promises to all that will receiue them, but also particularly in the right vse of the Sacraments to euery faithfull receiuer. For in the Sacraments we must consider a relation and correspondency between the outward signes and things signified: as therefore the Minister doth offer and giue, and I receiue and eate the outward signes of Bread and Wine; so am I as certainly to beleeue that God doth offer and giue, and that I doe receiue and feed vpon Christ Iesus and all his benefits, with the hand and mouth of faith, vnto the nourishing of my particular soule to euerlasting life, as my body is nourished with these outward Elements of Bread and Wine. Lastly, the Apostle saith, that through faith we haue entrance vnto God with boldnesse and confidence, Ephes. 3.12. and therefore by faith the beleeuer is particularly perswaded of the remission of his sinnes, and of his reconciliation with God. For with what boldnesse or confidence can the poore sinner come before God, who is terrified with the threatnings of the Law, with the tentations of Satan, and with the consideration of his owne vnworthinesse and selfe-guiltinesse; if hee be not particularly assured that his curse is borne by Christ, that hee is forgiuen the whole debt of his sinnes, and reconciled vnto God? What assured comfort can hee receiue, if hee beleeue that God hath elected Peter and Paul and all his Church, if he be not also assured that he is in this number? If a whole Citie should rebell and commit high treason against a Prince, and the Prince should send out a Proclamation, declaring that vpon such conditions hee would receiue them to mercy; with what boldnesse or confidence can any in this City come before him, if hee be not assured that hee hath performed these conditions? But this is our case, we haue rebelled against God, and hee hath proclaimed in his Gospell the pardon of our sinnes; so we lay hold vpon Christ by a true and liuely faith, and repent vs of our sinnes; If therefore we could not be assured that we haue a liuely faith and true repentance, and consequently that Gods mercifull promises belong particularly vnto vs; with what boldnesse or confidence can we come before him? But the Apostle saith, that by faith we haue this boldnesse and confidence, and therefore it followeth that we may be assured that we haue faith and repentance, and thereby may certainly be perswaded of Gods loue and of our particular election.

Fourthly, that we may certainly be assured of our election, it may be proued by an argument drawne from the doctrine and vse of the Sacraments; for the Lord hath added to the couenant of grace, his Sacraments as seales, not to confirme Gods promises in themselues, which are so vndoubtedly true that they need no confirmation, but to strengthen our faith in this ful assurance that they belong particularly vnto vs. For whereas in the Word the promises of grace and saluation are generally propounded to all beleeuers; in the vse of the Sacraments, they are particularly applyed to euery worthy receiuer; to the end that all doubting being remoued, they may certainly be assured that all the promises of the Gospell doe belong particularly vnto themselues. Now if the Lord would haue vs doubt of our election and saluation, and if this doubting were a vertue of faith, as the Papists teach, then surely there were no vse of the Sacraments; for the Word is sufficient to beget that generall faith which is mixt with doubting; and the Sacraments which doe further assure vs and apply vnto vs Gods promises, would be rather hurtfull then profitable, because they take away doubting, which is a vertue of their faith. But we are otherwise instructed by Gods Truth, namely, that the Lord would not haue vs doubt of his promises: and therefore hee hath not only written his Couenant, but also hath confirmed it by his Seale, and hath thereby particularly applyed it to the vse and benefit of euery one who receiueth it by the hand of a liuely faith, that there may be no place left to doubting. And hence it is that the Sacrament of Circumcision is called the seale of the righteousnesse of faith, Rom. 4.11. because thereby as by a seale Abraham was confirmed in the truth of Gods promises, and assured that the righteousnesse of faith, that is, the righteousnes of Christ, who was the promised seed, did belong vnto him. And answerable to this Sacrament is Baptisme, wherein Christ and all the gracious promises of life and saluation made in him, are particularly applyed to the party baptized; and therefore the Apostle saith, that all that are baptized into Christ haue put on Christ, Galath. 3.27. where hee compareth Christ to a garment which by the hand of faith is put on by euery particular beleeuer. So in the administration of the Lords Supper, the Bread and Wine is particularly deliuered vnto all the Communicants, to signifie vnto them, that euery one who stretcheth forth the hand of faith doth receiue Christ and all his benefits, whereby his soule is nourished vnto euerlasting life. Whosoeuer therefore hath faith, hee may be assured

9. Sect. 7. The fourth argument, drawne from the doctrine & vse of the Sacraments.

Rom. 4.11.

Gal. 3.27.

assured that he receiueth Christ; and whosoeuer receiueth Christ, he may be assured of his election and saluation; for to as many as receiue him, to them he giueth power to be the sonnes of God: and who are those? euen those that beleeue in his Name, as it is Iohn 1.12. And whosoeuer eats his flesh and drinkes his blond hath eternall life, as our Sauiour saith, Iohn 6.54. Now if we would know how we feed vpon him, it is by the mouth of faith, as he expoundeth himselfe, Verse 47.

Fiftly, whatsoeuer wee are bound to pray for; that wee may bee assured of, nay, wee ought stedfastly to beleeue that wee shall receiue it: and this is euident, 1. Iohn 5.14. This is the assurance that wee haue in him, that if we aske thing according to his will he heareth vs. 15. And if we know that hee heareth vs whatsoeuer we aske, we know that we haue the petitions that wee haue desired of him. And the Apostle Iames would haue vs to aske in faith without wauering, that is, not doubting to receiue that we aske. But we are taught to pray for the remission of our sins: and therefore we are certainly to beleeue that our sins are remitted, and consequently that wee are justified, called, elected, and shall be saued; for whom he did predestinate, them also he called, and whom he called, them also he iustified, and whom he iustified, them also he glorified.

Sixtly, whatsoeuer we professe in the Articles of our faith, that wee should beleeue, and of that wee may and ought particularly to be assured: but euery man professeth that he beleeueth the remission of sins and life euerlasting, that is, that the Lord doth not onely forgiue sinne, and granteth vnto some the fruition of euerlasting life, for this the Deuils beleeue as well as we, but also that he doth particularly forgiue mee my sins, and that hee will make mee an heire of eternall happinesse: for this is the nature of faith, to assure vs particularly of that which wee beleeue, as we haue shewed: therfore we ought to be assured of the remission of our sins, and that we shal attaine vnto euerlasting life, and consequently that wee are elected, seeing none enjoy it but Gods chosen. But it may be obiected, that if euery one be bound to beleeue as an article of his faith that his sins are forgiuen, and that hee is an heire of euerlasting life, then some are bound to beleeue that which is false, for those who liue and die in their sins without repentance, shall neuer obtaine either the one or the other. I answer, that we are not bound to beleeue, being destitute of a true and a liuely faith, for this were rather fondly to presume, then surely to be perswaded of the promises of the Gospell, but wee are first bound to haue a true, liuely and justifying faith, and so to beleeue and apply vnto our selues the promises of the Gospell. But those that liue in their sins without repentance, they are altogether destitute of true faith, which wheresoeuer it is purifieth the heart, and worketh by loue, mouing the beleeuer to endeuour and striue to mortifie his corruptions, and to rise from the death of sin to newnesse of life. And therefore well may they securely presume, but it is impossible that they should truly beleeue, because they are vtterly destitute of a liuely faith, and where the cause is not the effect cannot follow: and consequently for their infidelity they are subject to eternall plagues and punishments, because they doe not that which they are bound to performe. Neither must we thinke that euery kind of Faith, or rather euery fond perswasion of faith is enjoyned vs, but such a faith as is grounded vpon Gods Word; but the Word of God doth teach vs, that whosoeuer liue in the flesh cannot please God, and if wee liue after the flesh wee shall die, Rom. 8.8.13. That the vnrighteous shall not inherit the Kingdome of God, 1. Cor. 6.9. That the workers of iniquitie shall be reiected of Christ, Matth. 7.23. And that no vncleane thing, nor whatsoeuer worketh abomination and lies shall enter into the Kingdome of Heauen, Reuel. 21.27. And therefore those who liue in the flesh, those who are workers of iniquity, vnrighteous and vncleane, in which ranke are all those who liue in their sinnes without repentance, fulfilling the lusts of the flesh, and falling continually into sinne with pleasure and delight, are not bound simply and absolutely to beleeue, so long as they resolue to continue in this state, for so should they be bound to beleeue that which is false and repugnant to Gods Word, but they are bound to haue a true faith, which being wrought in their hearts will moue them to forsake their sins by vnfained repentance, to hunger after righteousnesse, to endeuour to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life, and so beleeue in Christ as their Sauiour and Redeemer, which fruits if our faith bring not forth, wee cannot bee assured that wee haue true faith, or doe truely beleeue. For though in nature faith be before repentance, yet in our sense and feeling it alwayes followeth it: neither doth faith euer soundly and truly perswade vs of Gods loue, till we haue sorrowed for our sinnes, and at least in purpose of heart haue forsaken them. So that whosoeuer liueth still in his sins with pleasure and delight, and yet beleeueth that hee is elected to saluation, and that hee is in Gods fauour, and shall continuing in this state be made an heire of eternall life, he is not indued with true faith, but with fond presumption and carnall securitie, which maketh him to beleeue that which is false and repugnant to Gods Word. Though then all men, euen carnal worldlings and reprobates are bound to beleeue, and because they doe not, are subject to condemnation, as committing a great and fearefull sinne; as appeareth, Iohn 3.18 and 16.8,9. where our Sauiour saith, that the Holy Ghost should reproue the world of sin, because they beleeue not in him: yet they are not bound to beleeue continuing in worldlinesse, and resoluing to goe on in their sins, for such a faith were but fond presumption; but they are bound so to beleeue as that their faith may bee grounded vpon Gods Word, which it can neuer possibly be if it be seuered from true repentance, and for want of this faith they are condemned.

Rom 8.8,13. 1.Cor.6.9. Matth.7 23. Reuel.21.27.

Iohn 3.18. & 16.8,9.

CHAP. X.

The last argument grounded vpon the testimony of Gods Spirit.

Q. Sect. 1. LAstly, whatsoeuer the Spirit of God doth testifie in the heart and conscience of a man, and doth fully assure him thereof, that he is to beleeue, and of that hee ought vndoubtedly to be assured: but the Spirit of God doth testifie to the faithfull, and doth fully assure them that they are the sonnes of God by adoption and grace, and consequently that they are elected; for none are the sonnes of God but those who are predestinate to be adopted through Iesus Christ, as it is Ephes. 1.5. and therefore the faithfull are to beleeue, and ought vndoubtedly to bee assured that they are the sonnes of God elected to euerlasting life. The proposition is manifest; for what more certaine truth can be imagined, then that which the Spirit of God witnesseth vnto our spirits, and confirmeth vnto vs, seeing all the properties required in a true witnesse, doe concurre in him in the highest degree, namely knowledge, truth, and faithfulnesse? for knowledge, hee is infinite and knoweth all things, euen the eternall counsell and decree of God concerning our election, as appeareth 1. Cor. 2.10. The Spirit searcheth all things, euen the deepe things of God; and this Spirit doe wee receiue that wee may know the things that are giuen to vs of God. As it is, Vers. 12. What fitter witnesse therefore can be imagined in this respect then Gods Spirit, who wholly and only knoweth all his secret counsels? In respect of truth hee is most true, yea, Truth it selfe, and in regard hereof hee is called the Spirit of truth which leadeth vs into all truth. Iohn 16.13. And therefore as in respect of his knowledge he cannot be deceiued, so in respect of his truth hee cannot deceiue. In respect of faithfulnesse he is most faithfull and iust in all his wayes, Psal. 145. 17. 1. Cor. 1.9. especially in his Word; for his testimony is sure, as it is, Psal. 19.7. and therefore he cannot lie, neither will he conceale the truth for any respect of persons; and consequently, whatsoeuer this al-knowing true and faithfull witnesse testifieth, wee are vndoubtedly to beleeue as being most sure and certaine. If an Angell sent from Heauen should assure vs from God that wee are elected, euen the Papists themselues could not deny, but that wee might be assured thereof by such a reuelation without any manner of doubting: but the testimony of Gods Spirit witnessing to our spirits that wee are the sonnes of God, is so much more certaine and without exception then the testimonie of Angels, as the Spirit of God better knoweth the counsels of God then Angels, as it excelleth them in truth and faith, as the testimonie which is imprinted in the heart is more firme then that which is spoken in the eare, which may easily bee begotten. And therefore if by their doctrine we might be assured of our election by the extraordinary reuelation of an Angell; then much more certainly may we be assured hereof by the ordinary testimony of Gods Spirit which he witnesseth in the hearts and consciences of the faithfull.

The proposition being manifest, let vs proue the assumption; which containeth two branches, first that the Spirit of God testifieth to our spirits, that we are the sonnes of God; and secondly, doth fully assure vs of this testimony that it is most vndoubted true; both which are manifest by Gods Word. First, that Gods Spirit giueth this testimony in the hearts of the faithfull, it is euident, Rom. 8.15,16. For yee haue not receiued the spirit of bondage to feare againe; but yee haue receiued the spirit of adoption, whereby wee crie Abba Father: the same Spirit beareth witnesse with our spirit, that we are the children of God. So Galath. 4.6. Because yee are sonnes, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Sonne into your hearts which crieth Abba Father. Which places doe so euidently proue this point, that there needs no more reasons or allegations; for first hee excludeth the spirit of bondage, which like the Papists faith causeth vs to feare and doubt of our election and saluation; and then he telleth vs that we haue receiued the spirit of adoption, which beareth witnesse vnto our spirit, that we are the children of God.

Q. Sect. 2. That Gods Spirit testifieth that we are the sonnes of God.

Rom. 8.15,16.

Gal. 4.6.

Secondly, because we are exceeding weake and the graces in vs shadowed with imperfections and our faith mixt with doubting: because we are saued as yet but by hope, as it is, Rom. 8.24. And wee walke by faith and not by sight, as it is, 2. Cor. 5.7. and this our faith is continually shaken with manifold tentations, therefore lest we should doubt of Gods loue and our election, adoption and saluation, the Lord hath giuen vs his Spirit to seale, and further to confirme this assurance in our hearts; and that it might be an earnest and a sure pledge vnto vs, whereby hee might secure vs concerning the couenant which hee hath made with vs. The truth wherewhereof appeareth in many places of the Scripture. 2. *Cor.*1.22. Who hath sealed vs and hath giuen the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts. So *Ephes.*1.13. In whom also ye haue trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, euen the Gospell of our saluation, wherein also after that ye beleeued, yee were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise. 14. Which is the earnest of our inheritance, vntill the redemption of the possession purchased vnto the praise of his glory. And *Ephes.*4.30. the Apostle exhorteth vs not to grieue the holy Spirit of God, by whom we are sealed vnto the day of our redemption. And 2. *Cor.*5.5. hee saith that God hath giuen vnto vs the earnest of his Spirit.

Which wordes doe minister vnto euery faithfull man no small consolation, if they be rightly weighed; for first wee vse to seale those things which we would haue most certaine and out of all controuersie; as when a man hath made a promise or couenant with another, for his better securitie he doth commit it to writing, and lest yet there should any scruple or doubt rest in his minde, he doth confirme it by adding his seale, to put the matter out of all question; so the Lord hath added to the written couenant of his Word, whereby he hath assured vs of our election, adoption and saluation, the outward seale of the Sacraments, and the inward seale of his Spirit, whereby hee hath ratified it, not in it selfe, but in our hearts, that so all cause of doubting being taken away, wee might certainly be assured of his promises, that they belong vnto vs not after a generall manner as the Papists teach, but particularly, euen as this assurance is particularly sealed by Gods Spirit in the heart of euery true beleeuer, *Rom.*4.11. The end therefore why wee are sealed to saluation by Gods Spirit, is not that we should doubt thereof, but that it might be out of all question fully ratified and confirmed vnto vs: for this is signified by this metaphor here vsed of sealing, as may appeare not only by the ordinary custome amongst vs, but also by the vse thereof in former times. So when Ahashuerosh would haue letters written in the Kings Name, which no man might reuoke, hee commandeth that they should bee sealed with the Kings Ring. *Hest.*8.8. And Iohn 6.27. it is said that God the Father had sealed our Saviour Christ, that is, confirmed him in his office of mediation, by giuing euident testimonies and manifest signes that the people might not doubt of his calling & anointing, *Matth.*3.17. and 17.5. and Iohn 1.32. So, whereas the Holy Ghost in the faithfull is called the earnest of our inheritance, this ministreth vnto euery true beleeuer no small consolation, nor doubtfull assurance of his saluation; for wee know that an earnest is giuen amongst men to ratifie and bind a bargaine, so as they cannot go from their agreement after earnest is giuen and receiued. The word arrhabo, which is here translated earnest, hath also other significations which minister vnto Gods faithfull ones the same assurance and the like true comfort, *Genes.*38. 17,18. this word is vsed to signifie a pledge or pawne, then the which there can bee no better assurance of performing promise, and 2. *King.*14.14. it signifieth a hostage in warres, which is giuen for assurance to confirme couenants agreed vpon. Whereas therefore Gods Spirit in the faithfull is called arrhabo, which signifieth an earnest, pawne and hostage: wee are hereby assured that the Lord will performe his couenant betweene vs and him, that he will not misse a day in the performing of his promise; that howsoeuer we were enemies, yet now being reconciled by the death of his Sonne, hee hath giuen vs an hostage to assure vs of eternall peace; euen his holy Spirit. And therefore let not Satan nor al his assistants cause vs to doubt of Gods couenant, wherein he hath assured vs of our election, adoption and saluation; seeing hee hath sealed this couenant with his Spirit, and hath giuen vnto vs this earnest and pawne, to assure vs that he wil performe his promise and bargaine.

Q. Sect. 5. That wee may discerne Gods Spirit by the effects thereof.

But here the tempter obiecteth, that wee cannot know and discerne whether we haue he Spirit of God, vnlesse it should bring forth in vs some extraordinary effects: and though it should be granted that wee were enduced therewith, yet wee cannot discerne the testimonie thereof from our owne thoughts, vnlesse it be by some speciall reuelation. To the first I answere, that though many lulled asleepe with carnall securitie, do vainly dreame that they haue Gods Spirit, and so are deluded with their owne phantasies; yet this hindereth not, but that hee who hath the Spirit of God indeed, may certainly be assured that it dwelleth in him. For it sealeth in vs the assurance of Gods couenant, and who can receiue this seale and not feele the impression. It is an earnest, and who receiuing an earnest cannot know whether he hath receiued it? for otherwise how can it assure vs of our bargaine, if of it selfe we haue no assurance. It is a pawne of Gods loue & our saluation, and who hauing a pawne in his custody cannot know that hee possesseth it. It is a heauenly light which doth illuminate our vnderstandings, which were blind and ignorant in the knowledge of Gods Truth, and who cannot discerne betweene blindnesse and sight, light and darknesse? It is a water which purgeth vs from our corruption, and who that is thus washed and clensed, can doubt that this water hath touched him. It is a fire which inflameth our cold frozen hearts with a zeale of Gods glory, and loue of our brethren, and how can fire which is carried in our breasts be hidden from vs. It is a precious oile which mollifieth our hard stony hearts, and maketh them flexible and pliable to Gods will, which before were so stiffe and obdurate that they would rather haue broken then bowed to obedience; it suppleth also our stiffe joynts, and maketh them actiue and nimble in the works of holinesse and righteousnesse, and who finding those strange alterations in himselfe, may not be assured that hee is anointed with this oyle? It is the Lords Champion fighting in vs against the flesh, and subduing the lusts thereof, and who feeling this intestine warre in his owne bowels can doubt that the Combatants haue their residence in him? In a word, it is onely this spirit which restraineth vs from the euill, which naturally wee loue, and prouoketh vs to imbrace that good, which through naturall corruption we lothe and abhorre: if therefore sinne grow vnpleasant vnto vs, and vertue and true godlinesse delightfull, wee may bee assured that this is the worke of Gods Spirit dwelling in vs. Would wee then bee assured that we are endued with the Spirit of God? Why then let vs consider if our eyes blinded with ignorance are inlightned in any good measure, with the knowledge of Gods Truth; if our soules polluted with the filth of sinne, are purged in some sort from our corruptions; if our cold hearts are inflamed with the zeale of Gods glory and the loue of our brethren; if our hearts more hard then adamant, and more inflexible then steele, are softened and made obsequious to Gods will; and if the other members of our body, which were benummed and as it were taken with a dead palsie, be made nimble and actiue in the workes of holinesse and righteousnesse; if wee feele a fight and combat betweene the flesh and the Spirit, the one striuing to leade vs captiue vnto sinne, the other resisting and drawing vs out of this captiuitie; if the sins which heretofore wee haue loued, be now lothsome vnto vs, and the vertues which wee haue abhorred be delightfull and pleasant; and then wee may assure our selues that it is the light of Gods Spirit which hath shined vpon vs, it is this heauenly water which hath washed vs, it is this diuine fire which hath inflamed vs, it is this precious oyle that hath mollified and softned vs, it is this Champion of the Lord of Hosts which maketh warre against our traiterous flesh, and subdueth the lusts thereof; in a word, it can bee nothing but Gods Spirit, which makes vs hate that sin which naturally wee so dearely loue, and to loue vertue and godlinesse which by nature is lothsome and bitter vnto vs.

Gal. 5. 17.

Sect. 5. How wee may discerne the testimony of

And thus it is manifest that wee may bee assured that we haue Gods Spirit, by the ordinary fruits thereof in euery faithfull man.

Now let vs consider how we may know the testimony of this Spirit, witnessing in our hearts that we are elected, adopted and shall be saued, from our owne phantasies caused through carnall security and vaine presumption. And to this end we are to know, that the preaching of the Gospell is the ministery of the spirit, whereby wee are sealed and confirmed in the assurance of our saluation, as appeareth, 2. Cor. 3. 6. And hence it is that the Preachers of the Gospell are called the Ministers by whom the people beleeue, 1. Cor. 3. 5. And the words of the Gospell are called by our Sauiour Christ spirit and life, because it is the ministery of the spirit which quickneth vs, as it is Iohn 6. 63. And Gal. 3. 2. the Apostle saith that wee haue receiued the spirit by the hearing of faith, that is, the doctrine of faith preached in the ministery of the Gospell. If therefore the testimony of saluation in the minds of the faithfull, be conceiued by the preaching of the Gospell applyed vnto them by faith, then is it most certainly the testimony of Gods Spirit; for the inward testimony of Gods Spirit is not different from the outward testimony of the Word; but if this perswasion be not grounded vpon Gods Word, as theirs is not who perswade themselues that they are elected, adopted, and shall be saued, notwithstanding that they liue in their sinnes without repentance, making no conscience of their wayes, nor endeuoring to serue the Lord in holinesse and righteousnes of life; then is it not the testimony of Gods Spirit, but a presumptuous phantasie, and a secure and carnall imagination: for the testimony of Gods Spirit in the conscience, is the same with the testimony of the Word, and therefore it doth not beare witnesse nor giue any assurance that they are saued, which Gods Word pronounceth to be in the state of damnation. When therefore this testimony is giuen in a faithfull man, and agreeable to Gods Word; it is the testimony of the Spirit which sealeth vs in the full assurance of that we beleeue: according to that Ephes. 1. 13. where the Apostle saith, that after the faithfull had receiued the Word of truth, euen the Gospell of their saluation, and beleeued therein, they were sealed with the holy spirit of promise. But those who make no conscience of hearing the Gospell preached, and when they heare it, doe not beleeue it, nor apply it to themselues by a true and liuely faith, nor bring forth any fruits thereof in a holy and Christian life, they haue neither Faith nor Gods Spirit: and therefore if they haue any perswasion of their election and saluation, it is not the testimony of Gods Spirit, but their owne phantasie, and a vaine opinion arising from carnall securitie and presumption.

Gods Spirit from our owne presumption.

Secondly, the testimony of Gods Spirit may hereby be knowne: first, in that it thoroughly roughly perswadeth the faithfull of their election and saluation: secondly, by the manner of perswading them: thirdly, by the effects of this testimony and perswasion. For the first, the Spirit of God doth not onely giue this bare testimony that we are elected, adopted, and shall be saued: but also doth fully perswade vs hereof, as being a thing most certaine and without question. So 1. Corinth. 2. 12. the Apostle saith that wee haue receiued the spirit of God, that we might know the things that are giuen to vs of God. And Ephes. 1. 17, 18. Gods Spirit is called the spirit of wisdome and reuelation, which doth inlighten the eyes of our vnderstanding, that we might know what the hope is of his calling, and what the riches of his glorious inheritance is in the Saints; and what is the exceeding greatnesse of his power, particularly towards vs that beleeue, according to the working of his mightie power. So the Apostle Iohn saith, hereby we know that Christ abideth in vs, euen by the spirit which hee hath giuen vs, 1. Iohn 3. 24. So that wee may be assured that wee haue Gods Spirit, and thereby bee thorowly perswaded that Christ dwelleth in vs, and consequently that wee are elected and shall bee saued. And Chap. 4. 13. Hereby know we that we dwell in him and he in vs, because he hath giuen vs of his spirit. And the Apostle Paul by the Spirit of God was so stedfastly assured of Gods loue, that he professeth that hee was firmely perswaded that nothing could separate him from it, Rom. 8. 38, 39. So that the Spirit of God thoroughly perswadeth the faithfull that they are elected and shall bee saued; whereas the wicked who are destitute of Gods Spirit, may well haue a fond opinion and a foolish conceit, that they are highly in Gods loue & elected to saluation, through carnall securitie and vaine presumption; but they are neuer thoroughly perswaded hereof; for when any affliction of body or minde is inflicted on them, their vain perswasion vanisheth away, and nothing remaineth but doubting, which in the end bringeth them to vtter cperation.

But here the tempter will take occasion to discourage the weake Christian, and to perswade him that he hath not Gods Spirit, seeing hee doth not feele in himselfe this firme perswasion of Gods loue and his election & saluation. To which we are to answere, that Gods Spirit doth throughly perswade, although not at all times, neither in our present sense and feeling; for immediatly after our conuersion when wee are newly regenerate, and like new borne babes in Christ, the motions of the Spirit are but weak in vs, and we are not skilfull in vnderstanding this heauenly language of the Spirit, wherewith we haue beene altogether vnacquainted; but the spirit waxing stronger in vs, and we growing to a ripe age in Christ, doth cry in our hearts, Abba father, and testifieth to our spirits that we are the sonnes of God; which wee then being better acquainted with this heauenly speech, do well vnderstand, and are throughly perswaded thereby. And secondly, when the poore Christian who hath receiued a great measure of the spirit is exercised in the spirituall conflict, the hideous noise of Satans tentations which like Canon-shot sound in his eares, and the tumultuous outcries of his owne passions do so disturbe and wholly possesse him, that hee cannot heare the voice of the spirit perswading him that he is the childe of God; till the skirmish bee past and the noyse of tentations ceased, and then againe as in former times he heareth to his comfort the Spirit of God perswading him of Gods loue, and hereby hee is againe assured thereof. So that wee are not to iudge of the hauing of Gods Spirit in the time of our Christian infancie and spirituall nonage, nor yet according to our present sense in the time of tentation, but when wee are come to perfect age, and when the conflict of tentations is ceased.

9. Sect. 8. That the testimony of the spirit is known by the manner of perswading vs.

Secondly, the testimony of Gods Spirit perswading vs of his loue and our election, is knowne by the manner whereby it perswadeth vs: namely, it perswadeth vs hereof with arguments grounded vpon Gods word, and drawne not from any worthinesse in our selues, but from Gods free grace and vndeserued mercy, and from the righteousnesse & merits of Christ; whereas Satan and our own flesh neuer vse such reasons, but either moue vs to a bare and vaine opinion which hath no ground at all but selfe-loue, which maketh men easily beleeue that which they desire; or else with some arguments drawne from some outward common benefits bestowed indifferently vpon the good and bad; or lastly, from a Pharisaicall conceit and false opinion of our owne worthinesse and deserts.

9. Sect. 9. The third meanes to discerne the spirit, namely by the fruits thereof.

Lastly, the testimony of Gods Spirit is knowne and discerned by the effects thereof; for after that it hath effectually perswaded vs, that we are elected and the deare children of God, wee are moued thereby to trust wholly in God, and to loue him as our gracious Father. From which loue proceedeth a zeale of his glory, and a true hatred of sin, because thereby our heauenly Father is dishonoured and displeased with vs; and a true loue and hearty endeuour of imbracing holinesse and righteousnesse, because thereby our gracious father is glorified and well pleased with vs. If therefore these effects and fruits follow this perswasion of Gods loue and our election, we may be assured that it is the Spirit of God which doth perswade vs; but if wee haue no such trust and affiance, no such loue of God, no zeale of his glory, no hatred of sin, no loue nor desire of imbracing righrighteousnesse, but remayne as carnall, worldly, and prophane as euer we were, then let vs bragge as much as we will of our perswasion of Gods loue and our election, yet it is most certaine that this perswasion is not wrought in vs by Gods Spirit, but is a vaine conceit and fond opinion which proceedeth from selfe-loue, carnall securitie, and fond presumption, which in the end vanishing away will leaue vs in despaire.

CHAP. XI.

Of the meanes whereby we may be assured of our election.

Q. Sect. 1. The first meanes the testimony of the Holy Ghost.

AND thus haue I prooued that those who are conuerted vnto God, iustified, & in some measure sanctified, may ordinarily attaine vnto the assurance of their election: Now I will shew the means & signes wherby we may be thus assured. The first and principall meanes which assureth vs of our election, is the inward testimony of Gods Spirit which crieth in our hearts Abba Father, and witnesseth vnto our spirits that wee are the children of God, as it is Rom. 8. 15, 16. Which testimony it doth not giue by extraordinary reuelation, but by a secret application of the promises of the Gospell vnto vs, and by an inward co-operation whereby it maketh the outward ministery of the word effectuall for the begetting of faith in vs, whereby as with an hand we do appropriate the generall promises of the word vnto our owne selues. And when the Ministers vse reasons to perswade vs of Gods loue in Christ, then the holy Ghost openeth our deafe eares, and inlightneth our blinde vnderstandings, and powerfully inclineth our wils, so that wee may attentiuely heare, truly vnderstand, and bee fully assured of that truth which is deliuered, not onely in repect of the whole Church, but also of our selues particularly, so as we can say, I beleeue that these promises of God are true, and that they belong to all the faithfull, and consequently vnto mee who doe beleeue and am assured of them, seeing they are promised on no other condition.

Rom. 8 15, 16.

Diuers differences betweene the testimony of the spirit and presumptuous securitie.

But the tempter will obiect, that many through carnall presumption doe perswade themselues, that all the promises of the Gospell doe belong vnto them, and therefore we may easily bee deceiued, not being able to discerne betweene the testimony of the spirit and presumptuous securitie. I answere, that those who are indued with Gods Spirit, may easily discerne the testimony of the spirit from the carnall language of presumption, as it is euident by that which before I haue deliuered, and also may more plainly appeare by manifest differences, if the one be compared with the other. For presumption is a fruit of originall corruption which accompanieth vs from our mothers wombe, till it be beaten downe with Gods sanctifying Spirit; but the testimony of the spirit is a thing supernaturall, which no man euer feeleth before his conuersion vnto God, when as by the preaching of the word hee is humbled vnder the burthen of sinne, sorrowing and grieuing for his sins past, and detesting them from his heart, and purposing to leaue and forsake them in the time to come. If therefore we haue had alwayes this testimony in our minds that we are in Gods fauour and elected, and neuer felt our conuersion, nor discerned any fruits thereof; then doth this testimony proceed from carnall presumption and not from Gods Spirit. Secondly, those who haue the testimony of the Spirit make conscience of the diligent and carefull vse of the outward meanes of saluation, as the hearing and reading of the word, the receiuing of the Sacraments, and other holy duties of Gods seruice, because they know that the inward testimony of the Spirit is not ordinarily seuered from the outward testimony of the word; and the assurance of Gods loue and our election is not wrought immediatly in vs by reuelation of the Spirit, but by the preaching of the word & vse of the Sacraments, made effectuall by the inward cooperation of the holy Ghost. But presumption as it ariseth not from the vse of these meanes made thus effectuall, but from carnall security, so is it not confirmed thereby: for the lesse that the presumptuous man heareth the word and performeth the duties of pietie and Gods seruice, the more confidently doth he boast of his faith and full assurance; and therefore hee maketh no conscience of vsing these meanes ordained of God; yea, contrariwise hee will not sticke to affirme, that the hearing of the word too often is the cause that troubleth mens minds and afflicteth their consciences, mouing them to doubt of Gods mercie, which before they neuer called into question. And why is this, but because hereby men are rouzed out of their sleepe of securitie, and haue their confident presumption beaten downe? If then we are carefull to vse all holy meanes ordained of God to assure vs of our saluation, that assurance and testimony which followeth is the testimony of Gods Spirit: otherwise it is nothing else but fond presumption. Thirdly, presumption is most confident, and neuer doubteth nor maketh any question of his election and saluation who thus presumeth; but this testimony of the Spirit is much assaulted with doubting, and oftentimes thereby so exceedingly weakened that wee cannot heare the voice thereof: as wee may see in the example of Iob, Dauid, the father of the poſſeſſed child, the two Diſciples who journied to Emaus, and in all Gods children who haue not yet attained vnto fulneſſe of perſwaſion, vnto which none can come but by degrees. And therefore if we can bragge with ſecure worldlings, and ſay with the proud Phariſie, I neuer was troubled I thank God with any doubting of mine election and ſaluation, as many are; but alwayes haue had a ſtrong beleefe that I am in Gods loue and ſhall vndoubtedly bee ſaued: wee may aſſure our ſelues that this is the voice of preſumption, and not the teſtimony of Gods Spirit. Fourthly, preſumption is joyned with worldlineſſe and prophaneneſſe, but the teſtimony of Gods Spirit is neuer ſeuered from ſanctification, or at leaſt from an earneſt deſire and holy endeuour of ſeruing the Lord in holines and righteouſneſſe: for (as I ſaid) the teſtimony of the Spirit in the conſcience is neuer contrary to the teſtimony of the Spirit in the Word, neither doth it beare witneſſe that thoſe are in Gods loue and elected to ſaluation, which the Scriptures witnes to be in Gods diſpleaſure and in the ſtate of condemnation, namely, all vnrepentant ſinners continuing in their vnrepentancie. And therefore if the aſſurance which wee haue of our election and ſaluation bee not joyned with a deſire to leaue our ſinnes, and with an earneſt endeuour of ſeruing God in the duties of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, then it doth not proceed from the teſtimony of Gods Spirit, but from carnall ſecuritie and fond preſumption. Laſtly, preſumption no longer perſwadeth men of Gods loue and fauour, then they enjoy the outward benefits of this life; but when the Lord layeth vpon them any grieuous affliction, either outwardly in body and ſtate, or inwardly in minde; then this perſwaſion vaniſheth, and nothing remayneth but doubting, which commonly endeth in vtter deſpaire: but the teſtimony of the Spirit is conſtant and permanent; and howſoeuer we cannot by reaſon of the grieuouſneſſe of afflictions, and the violent noiſe of our owne paſſions heare the voice thereof at ſome times, yet afterwards againe it crieth aloud in our hearts Abba Father, and witneſſeth vnto our ſpirits that we are the ſonnes of God. So that the chiefe meanes whereby we are aſſured of our election is the Spirit of God. But ſeeing we haue it not naturally in our ſelues, how may wee attaine vnto it? Surely wee are to haue our recourſe vnto the Father of lights by earneſt prayer, from whom deſcendeth euery good and perfect gift, hauing our faith grounded vpon Gods gracious promiſe, namely, that if wee aske wee ſhall receiue, and more eſpecially, that hee will giue his holy ſpirit to them that aske it, as it is Luke 11.13.

The ſecond meanes whereby wee may attaine to the certainty of our election, is the hearing of the Word, wherein the Lord manifeſteth his grace and good will to all beleeuing and repentant ſinners, and whereby alſo he ordinarily begetteth this faith and repentance in all his children. For howſoeuer Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but God alone giueth the increaſe; yet Gods bleſſing ordinarily accompanieth his owne ordinance, making it effectuall by the inward operation of his Spirit, for thoſe ends for which he hath ordained it. And though the word may long ſound in our eares before it peirce the heart, or beget any ſauing grace in vs, vnleſſe the Lord open our hearts and make the ſeed of his word fruitfull: yet thoſe who make conſcience of hearing the word, with diligence, reuerence and attention, and pray for the aſſiſtance of Gods ſpirit, whereby it may become profitable to their ſaluation, may conſtantly expect the bleſſing of God vpon his owne Ordinance, which they carefully vſe in obedience to his will. Whereas thoſe who neglect and contemne Gods Word haue no ſuch aſſurance, becauſe it is the means and inſtrument which is ordained of God for this purpoſe, without which the Spirit of God doth not ordinarily beget faith, or any ſauing grace in vs. Though therefore we doe not after long hearing of the word, feele this aſſurance of Gods loue & our election, yet let vs not giue it ouer but expect Gods bleſſing vpon it, & waite his leaſure, aſſuring our ſelues that in the end, hee will make this his owne Ordinance effectuall for thoſe ends, for which he hath ordained it.

1. Cor. 3.6.

The third meanes whereby wee may attaine to the aſſurance of our election, is the frequent and religious vſe of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, whereby our faith is more and more confirmed in the truth of Gods promiſes. For the Lord to the preaching of his word which is the Couenant of grace, hath added theſe Seales that we might bee the more thoroughly aſſured of his loue and fauour; and therefore if wee conſcionably frequent this holy Sacrament, the Lord will bleſſe alſo this his owne Ordinance. Moreouer they who worthily receiue theſe holy myſteries, doe receiue Chriſt Ieſus, and haue the vnion and communion which is betweene him and them, more and more ſtrengthened and confirmed, for hee that eateth his fleſh and drinketh his blood dwelleth in Chriſt, and Chriſt in him, As it is Iohn 6. 56. Now there is no condemnation to thoſe that are in Chriſt Ieſus, and therefore they need not doubt of their election and ſaluation.

Iohn 6.56. Rom. 8.1.

The fourth meanes whereby wee may be aſſured of our election, are the effects of Gods predeſtination, which are the vndoubted ſignes thereof; for the effects argue the cauſe, as the cauſe the effects, and that not one-onely in naturall things, but also in those which are supernaturall and spirituall. And therefore as certainly as we know that there is fire because it casteth forth heate, and the Sunne by his casting forth of bright rayes whereby the world is lightned; and that a tree is good by the good fruites which it bringeth forth; so also may we as certainly be assured that we are elected of God, when we find in our selues the effects and vndoubted signes of our election. Neither are these effects bare signes onely of our election, but also manifest seales which by their plaine impression, doe euidently assure vs thereof: so that though wee doe not directly and immediatly know Gods election, predestination, and eternall decree of saluation in God himselfe, electing, predestinating, and decreeing that we shall be saued; yet we may plainly see apparant seales and impressions hereof in our selues, liuely resembling that which is secret in Gods hidden counsell. And as we not seeing the seale which maketh the impression, doe easily discerne the forme, fashion, and quantity thereof by the print which it hath made, so wee not seeing Gods secret decree of predestination, may notwithstanding attaine to the euident knowledge thereof, by that impression which it maketh in vs. This also may further be illustrated by a familiar similitude; namely, as the Sun-shining vpon vs with his bright beames, doth imprint as it were in our eyes the Image of his light, whereby wee see the Sun and the light thereof (the beames of the Sun which are cast vpon vs, being reflected backe againe to the Sun it self) so the foreknowledge of God whereby he hath decreed that we shall be saued before all eternitie, is secret in it selfe, so that we cannot see nor vnderstand it directly, but yet whilest God doth acknowledge vs for his elect, hee doth expresse the Image and forme of this his fore-knowledge in those whom he hath elected, whereby we doe also acknowledge him our gracious God who hath elected vs; and so it commeth to passe that by the true knowledge of God, which is communicated vnto vs, whereby we acknowledge him for our God and Father, wee also know his foreknowledge, whereby hee knoweth and acknowledgeth vs for his sonnes and children. For first God knoweth vs, and then by the light of this knowledge communicated vnto vs, he enlightneth our hearts with the true knowledge of himselfe, as the Sun first inlightneth our eyes, and by this light wee see the Sun it selfe. And this our Sauiour Christ intimateth, Iohn 10.14. where first hee saith hee knoweth his sheepe, and then hee addeth that he is also knowne of them. As though he should say, whilest I know and acknowlege them for my sheepe, hereby I bring to passe that they in like manner by the participation of this my light and knowledge, doe acknowledge mee for their true Pastor. If therefore we know and acknowledge God, for our gracious God and louing Father in Christ, it is a most certaine signe, that he also by his fore-knowledge, doth know and acknowledge vs for his people and children. But if we remayne in our ignorance, without the knowledge of God, and his Sonne Christ, we can gather no assurance vnto our selues of our election; for if the fore-knowledge of God had shined vpon vs, the beames thereof would haue illuminated our hearts, so as wee should by their light haue knowne God also. The like may be said of Gods eternall loue, wherewith hee hath loued vs in Christ; for God louing vs, hath imprinted the Image of his loue in our hearts, whereby we loue him againe: and when this heauenly heate of Gods loue hath descended on vs, and warmed our cold hearts, frozen in the dregs of sinne, then doe wee reflect some of those beames of Gods loue towards him againe. And this the Apostle Iohn plainely sheweth, 1. Iohn 4.19. where hee saith that we loue God because he loued vs first; that is, by that eternall loue wherewith God loued vs in Christ, there is imprinted in our hearts the loue of God. And hence it is that hee saith, Verse 7. that loue commeth from God: because wee can neither loue God, nor our neighbours aright, till his loue towards vs hauing shined vpon vs, hath inflamed our hearts. So the Apostle Paul saith, Rom. 5.5. that the loue of God is shed abroad in our hearts, by the holy Ghost which is giuen vnto vs, whereby loue towards God is begotten in vs. If therefore the loue of God be in our hearts, wee may bee assured that it is but an impression which is made in vs, by the seal of his loue towards vs; but a little sparke kindled by this heauenly flame and a smal modell or little counterfeite resembling the infinite loue of God, wherewith from all eternitie he hath loued vs in Christ. Thus also Gods eternall election, whereby before all worlds hee hath chosen vs in Christ, doth make an impression, and sealeth in our hearts the forme or Image thereof, whereby we make choice of the true God Iehouah, amongst all the gods of the Nations to bee our onely God, whom we will serue and worship, and therefore if we haue made this election, and dedicated our selues wholly to Gods worship and seruice alone; it is a most certaine signe of our election, whereby God hath chosen vs; for our choosing of God is an effect of his choosing of vs, and an impression or print wherewith by his election hee hath sealed vs.

Iohn 10.14.

And thus it appeareth that the effects of Gods election doe not only as signes signifie, but also as seales confirme vnto vs the assurance thereof. But let vs further consider the Gods loue cause of our loue.

1. Iohn 4.19.

Verse 7.

Rom. 5.5.

Q. Sect. 5. The first effect of our election is our Saui... Christ, by the speciall effects of our election, whereby wee may bee assured that wee are chosen of God. The first effect, is our Sauiour Christ himselfe set apart of God to be the Mediator to reconcile all Gods elect vnto him, dwelling in vs by his Spirit; who may justly bee called the first effect of Gods election, because all the other, namely our vocation, justification, sanctification, and saluation, are by him and through him alone. Whosoeuer therefore are assured that Christ dwelleth in them, and they in him, they haue a most vndoubted signe of their election: and whosoeuer haue not Christ dwelling in them by his Spirit, can haue no assurance that they are chosen, as the Apostle plainly sheweth, 2. Cor. 13.5. Know you not (saith he) that Iesus Christ is in you except you be reprobates? but how shall wee know whether Christ dwelleth thus in vs and we in him? the Apostle telleth vs, Rom. 8.1. that those who are in Christ Iesus walke not after the flesh but after the spirit, that is, those who doe not willingly submit themselues to be ruled and led by the lusts of the flesh, but labour and striue to resist and subdue them, studying and endeuouring to liue a spirituall life, in holinesse and righteousnes. For in whomsoeuer Christ dwelleth by his spirit, those he regenerateth and raiseth from the death of sin, to newnes of life; and his bloud is effectuall, not onely to purge them from the guilt of sin, but also to cleanse them in some measure from the corruptions themselues.

Sect. 6. The second effect of our election, is our effectuall calling.

The second effect of our election, is our effectuall calling; whereby we are separated from the world, and ingrafted into Christ, and made liuely members of his body: and this is done ordinarily by the diligent and attentiue hearing of the word, joyned with the inward operation of Gods Spirit. If therefore wee haue heard Gods Word preached diligently and attentiuely; if thereby we haue attained vnto the knowledge of the worke of our redemption wrought by Iesus Christ, and are delighted therewith; if by this meanes wee haue our hearts somewhat weaned from the world, and fixed vpon our Sauiour and heauenly things; and thinking it sufficient to haue spent the rest of our liues past in the lust of the Gentiles, do liue henceforward after the will of God: then are wee truly and effectually called; for those are Christs sheepe that heare his voice and follow him, Iohn 10.4. Those are ingrafted into his body, who bring forth no fruites of godlinesse. For as the branch can bring forth no fruit except it abide in the Vine, so neither can wee bring forth any fruits of pietie and righteousnes except we abide in Christ; and therefore if wee doe bring forth these fruits, it manifestly appeareth that we are in Christ, and consequently truly called and elected, for without him wee could doe nothing, as it is, Iohn 15.4, 5.

Iohn 15.4, 5.

Sect. 7. The third effect is our iustification.

The third effect of Gods election, is our justification, consisting in the remission of our sins, and the imputation of Christs righteousnesse: and to this is required a true and liuely faith, which assureth vs of the remission of our sins, and applyeth vnto vs Christs righteousnesse. If therefore we beleeue that our sins are forgiuen, and by faith apply vnto vs Christ and his righteousnesse, wee may be assured that wee are justified, and consequently elected. Now this perswasion and liuely faith, is discerned by the fruits thereof; for it purifieth our hearts, and worketh by loue; and it worketh in vs an hatred of sin, and loue of righteousnesse, which is our sanctification.

Acts 15.9. Gal. 5.6.

Sect. 8. The fourth effect is our sanctification, which is the touchstone of all the rest.

So that our sanctification which is the last effect of Gods election wrought in vs in this life, is the true touch-stone of all the rest: whereby wee may certainly know whether wee be effectually called, that is, separated from the World, and ingrafted as liuely members into the body of Christ; and whether wee bee truly justified, that is, purged from the guilt and punishment of our sinnes by Christs bloud, and adorned with his righteousnesse imputed vnto vs. For if we be separated from the world, then doe we not set our minds vpon worldly things, but haue our conuersation in Heauen from whence we looke for a Sauiour, euen the Lord Iesus Christ. If we are ingrafted into the body of Christ who is the true Vine, then doe we bring forth the sweet grapes of holinesse and righteousnesse in our liues and conuersations, as it is Iohn 15.5. If wee haue by a true faith the assurance of the remission of our sins, then will we loue God who hath forgiuen vs so great a debt, and labour to expresse our loue by glorifying his Name, in causing our light to shine before men. And if the bloud of Christ be effectuall vnto vs for the purging away of the guilt and punishment of sin, then will it also in some measure purge away the corruptions themselues. For wee are grafted with him into the similitude of his death and resurrection, and our old man is crucified with him, and the body of sin destroyed, that from henceforth wee should not serue sinne, as it is Rom. 6.5, 6. And as our sanctification is the onely vndoubted signe of our vocation and justification; so also of our election; for the Lord hath chosen vs that wee should be holy, Ephes. 1.4. And therefore if we be holy wee haue a manifest effect and inseparable fruit of our election; if we be not holy nor in any measure any conscience of seruing the Lord in the duties of Pietie and Christianitie, we haue no assurance that we are elected: for though the foundation of God remayneth sure on Gods part being sealed and confirmed in his eternall counsell, yet it is not sealed in our hearts vntill we depart from iniquitie, as it is 2. Tim. 2. 19. Though then there bee no place vnto our sanctification in Gods Decree, as being any cause thereof; and therefore when the question is asked why we are elected, wee must answere, not for any deserts or holinesse in our selues, but because of Gods good pleasure and vndeserued grace; and when it is demanded in whom wee are elected, we must reply in Christ Iesus onely; yet there is chiefe place vnto our sanctification in the assurance of our election, so that when the question is asked who are elected, answere is to be made, those onely who are also sanctified in Gods good time by his gracious Spirit; for without this holinesse no man shall euer see God, as it is Heb. 12. 14.

2. Tim. 2. 19.

Heb. 12. 14.

¶. Sect. 9. Wherein our sanctification consisteth. And that those who will be assured of their election must begin their assurance at their sanctification.

Now our sanctification doth principally consist in a loue of righteousnesse, and a true hatred of sin; from whence proceedeth an earnest desire, and hearty endeuour of forsaking that which is euill, and of cleauing vnto that which is good: and for the better effecting hereof, a carefull studie of mortifying the flesh and the lusts thereof, and painfull diligence in vsing all good means whereby the spirit may bee strengthened, and the gifts and graces thereof increased, that so we may not bee so prone to fall into that sinne which wee hate; nor so backward in imbracing and following that righteousnesse and holinesse which wee loue. And this is the sanctification which is an inseparable fruit and effect of Gods election in al his children, which though it bee the last in nature and next vnto saluation it selfe, for first God electeth, and those whom hee hath elected, in his good time he calleth, and whom he calleth those he iustifieth, and lastly, whom hee iustifieth those he sanctifieth and saueth; yet when wee are to gather assurance of our election, we are not to obserue this order, but to begin where the Lord endeth, and so ascend from the lowest degree till wee come to the highest. For as it is a foolish thing for a man to thinke that he can leape to the top of an high ladder at the first step, and therefore euery one beginneth with the lowest staffe, and so ascendeth step by step till he come to the highest: so it is a foolish thing for a man to imagine that hee can leape into Heauen, and there search the vnsearchable counsels of God, and so know whether hee is elected or no; but wee must begin at the lowest step, namely, our sanctification which being attained vnto, we may ascend a step higher in our assurance, namely, that we are iustified, and so the next, that wee are effectually called, and lastly, to the highest that we are elected. Otherwise if wee curiously diue into the bottomlesse secrets of Gods counsels, we shall be drowned and ouer-whelmed; if wee approach vnto this approachable light, the eye of our vnderstanding will be dazled, yea starke blinded; if we presume to vnderstand beyond sobrietie, we shall by the iust iudgement of God bee infatuated, and thrust our selues into an endlesse labyrinth, out of which we shall neuer find way, wanting the line of Gods Word to guide vs. And therefore if we would haue any true assurance of our election, wee must examine our selues whether we be sanctified; and if we find in our selues sanctification by the fruits therof, we may vndoubtedly conclude that wee are iustified, called, elected, and shall be saued. If we walke not after the flesh but after the spirit, wee may bee assured that wee are in Christ Iesus, and therefore there is no condemnation belonging vnto vs. If wee bring forth the fruits of righteousnesse and holinesse, wee may be assured that wee are good trees of Gods owne planting. If wee bee fruitfull branches wee may assuredly know, that we are ingrafted into the true Vine Iesus Christ, Iohn 15. 4, 5.

Rom. 12. 1.

Matth. 7. 17.

Iohn 15. 4, 5.

¶. Sect. The vse of the former doctrine.

Seeing then our sanctification assureth vs of our election and saluation, and without it there is no assurance; what stronger argument can be imagined to make vs flee sinne, and labour after mortification and newnesse of life? What keener knife can bee vsed to cut in sunder the cords of vanitie, wherein naturally wee are fettered and intangled? What sharper spurre to pricke vs forward in the course of godlinesse, then to know and consider that by our sanctification and holinesse of life, wee are certainly assured that God hath elected vs, to be heires of the vnspeakable ioyes of his Kingdome, and that by our wickednesse and prophanenesse wee haue no lesse certaine assurance that we shall haue our portion for euer in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone? For if wee liue holily like true Christians on earth, wee shall liue happily like glorious Angels in Heauen: but if here wee lie frozen in the dregges of our sinnes, without any sense of sorrow for those which are past, or any desire and purpose of heart to forsake them in the time to come, wee shall bee thrust from the Lord amongst the workers of iniquitie, and the wrath of God shall pursue, ouertake and consume vs. What sinne therefore can be so pleasant to our taste, which this consideration will not make more bitter then Worme-wood? What dutie of holinesse and righteousnesse so displeasant and grieuous, which this will not make sweet and delightfull?

¶. Sect. Diuers kinds of counterfeit holinesse which giueth no assurance of our election.

Now that wee may not deceiue our selues with a counterfeit holinesse, in stead of true sanctification, we are to know that this assurance of saluation, doth not proceed from euery kind of holinesse, but from that which is true and vnfained: for there is an holines of the tongue, seuered from the holinesse of the heart, in shew but not in deed, in profession but not in practice. There is an holines

in

in performing outward duties of Gods seruice, seuered from righteousnesse towardes our brethren. There is an holinesse in leauing some or the most sins, without any desire or purpose to forsake some one or two sins by which we receiue greatest pleasure or profit. There is an holinesse in tything Mint and Cummin, which neglecteth the waighty things of the Law, and which maketh cleane the out-side of the platter and cup, leauing the in-side full of rapine and excesse; and outwardly maketh a glorious golden shew, when as within there is nothing but putrifaction and rottennesse. There is an holinesse which consisteth in the Pharisaicall censuring of poore Publicans, and in extolling our owne vertues. The first kind is of those whom the Prophet reproueth, Esay 29.13. who drew neer vnto God with their lips when as their hearts were far from him: & of those whom the Apostle brandeth, 2. Tim. 3.5. who make a shew of godlinesse, but in their liues deny the power thereof: in which ranke many professors also in these dayes may fitly march. The second kind is of those who are content to serue God in the outward duties of his worship, because they find them good cheape, yea often gainfull; but cannot away with righteousnes, because that is sometimes painfull and sometimes requireth cost. And these men in stead of making godlinesse their gaine, make a gaine of godlinesse. The third kind is Herods holinesse, who heard Iohn gladly and did many things, yet could not abide to leaue his incest: and such holinesse is in some now adayes, who will be content to leaue all grosse outward sins, so they may continue in their couetousnesse and voluptuousnesse. The fourth is the holinesse of those Pharisies which are most zealous in ceremonies and their owne traditions but key-cold in those duties which most concerne Gods glory and their neighbours good. The last kinde was the holinesse of the ancient Pharisies, and is the holinesse of our new Brownists, who place the most of their religion in censuring and condemning the corruptions of the Church, and misdemenours of priuate men, not looking into their owne, pride, bitternesse, enuy, and want of charitie.

But none of these, no nor yet all these joyned together, will euer giue vnto vs any sound assurance of our election; but it is that true sanctification indeed, which beginneth not in the mouth but in the heart, and sanctifieth our will and affections, making vs to loue and imbrace to our vttermost power, vertue and godlinesse, and to abhorre and flee from sinne and iniquitie. And from the heart it proceedeth to the tongue and hands, making the Word of God and all holy conferences hony in the mouth, and inciting vs to the practice of that which wee professe. It alwayes approoueth golden piety to bee pure, and without mixture of the drosse of hypocrisie, by the touchstone of righteousnesse; it is as carefull in approuing the heart and secret actions vnto God, as the outward actions vnto men; it causeth vs to hate as well one sin as another, and that sin most of all into which wee are most prone by nature to fall, though it bring neuer so much pleasure and profit; it imbraceth afflicted godlines, attended with losse, pouerty, & shame as wel as when it is waited vpon with gaine, pleasure, and the praise of men; it is very charitable in censuring the faults of others, but most seuere and strict in judging and condemning the sinnes which our selues haue committed. And therefore if our sanctification haue these properties, we may most certainly be assured thereby that we are elected & shall be saued; but if these be wanting, it is but a counterfeit holines which affoordeth no such assurance.

9. Sect. 13. The miserable estate of those who haue not so much as a shew of godlinesse.

Now if this be true, what hope can they haue who haue not so much as a shew of godlinesse? How desperate is their state, who euen in outward appearance shew nothing but wickednesse and prophanenesse? If the figge tree which beareth faire greene leaues be accursed, what curses, what misery and wretchednesse are they to beare and suffer, who haue not so much as leaues, that is, an outward profession of godlinesse? If Herod be a damned wretch in Hell, who heard Iohn the Baptist willingly, and did many things according to his doctrine, because hee nourished one sin in his bosome; what fearefull condemnation are they to expect, who contemne and neglect Gods Word, not thinking it worth the hearing, and cannot find in their hearts to submit themselues to the obedience of any part thereof neither will be brought to forsake any one sin wherewith they are delighted, till it leaue them? And yet such is the blind ignorance, carnall securitie, and vaine presumption of such men that they will not sticke to brag that they are sure of Gods loue, and that they are elected to saluation, though there be no shew of reason, whereupon they may probably ground their foolish perswasion. But the truth is, that whilest they continue in this damnable estate, consolation it selfe cannot giue vnto them any true comfort, for without sanctification there is no hope of election or saluation. And seeing the Lord hath elected vs that wee should be holy, therefore without holinesse there is no assurance that wee are elected: seeing hee hath sworne that all those whom he hath redeemed and saued, out of the hands of their spirituall enemies, Hell, Death and the Deuill, shall worship him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of their life; what hope of redemption and saluation can they conceiue, who liue in impiety & vnrighteousnes, seeing by Gods oath they are excluded from both, whilest they continue in this state?

CHAP. XII.

Of the signes and infallible notes of our election.

¶. Sect. 1. The first signe an earnest desire after the meanes of our saluation.

WEE haue set downe the meanes whereby wee may bee assured of our election: Now let vs consider of some speciall signes which are infallible notes of those that are elected. The first signe is an earnest desire after the meanes of our saluation and a conscionable endeauour in vsing them after we enjoy them. For the end and the meanes are neuer separated in Gods Decree, & therefore those that carefully vse the meanes may bee assured that they shall attaine vnto the end. For example, the hearing of Gods Word is the chiefe meanes of our conuersion, being made effectuall by the inward operation of Gods Spirit; and as thereby we are begotten vnto God, so also it is that bread of life, wherewith our soules are nourished and strengthened in all spirituall graces. So that whomsoeuer God hath elected, those he hath decreed to call ordinarily by these meanes; and by the same also to furnish with his graces being called. Whosoeuer therfore labour to purchase this precious pearle, whosoeuer hunger after this heauenly Manna, and are content to enjoy it not onely when it is good cheape, but also when it is very chargeable; whosoeuer enjoying it do attentiuely & diligētly heare it & receiue it with delight, they vse the means of their saluation, & therefore may be assured that they are elected, for the means and the end goe together. And that this is a note of Gods child it appeareth, Iohn 10.3,4. where our Sauiour saith, that his sheepe beare his voice. And Matth. 13.45. he compareth the true member of the kingdome of grace to a Merchant who rather then hee would want the precious pearle of Gods Word, selleth all he hath to buy it. Those therefore who make this precious account of Gods Word, and carefully, diligently and attentiuely heare it when they enjoy it, may to their comfort assure themselues that they haue an vndoubted signe of their election. And on the other side, those who had rather be without it then enjoy it, those who will bestow no cost to obtaine it, nor forgoe any pleasure or commoditie that they may heare it, nor when they doe heare it are affected with any delight, but are glutted with loathing satietie, hearing no part of the Sermon with any pleasure but the conclusion onely; they can haue no assurance of their election, because they neglect the meanes of their saluation, which are joyned with the end in Gods eternall Decree. The like also may be said of other meanes, as Prayer, the receiuing of the Sacraments, meditating in Gods Word, the workes of holinesse and righteousnesse, and the rest.

Iohn 10.3,4.

Matth. 13.45.

The second signe of those that are elected, is the spirit of supplication, when as they powre forth their soules in feruent and effectuall prayer vnto the Lord, confessing their sinnes, and imploring his grace, and mercie: for this is a notable fruit of Gods Spirit working in vs, which we cannot by any naturall meanes attaine vnto; for of our selues wee know not what to pray as wee ought, but the spirit helpeth our infirmities, and maketh request for vs with sighes which cannot be expressed, as it is Rom. 8.26. Prayer therefore is a most inseparable fruit and vndoubted signe of Gods Spirit, and Gods Spirit certainly assureth vs of our election and adoption, for it beareth witnesse with our spirits that we are the sonnes of God, as it is Verse 16. So Rom. 10.13. it is said, that whosoeuer call vpon the Name of the Lord shall be saued. But this prayer must proceed from faith; for, as it followeth, How shall they call on him in whom they haue not beleeued? and must be performed in spirit and truth, and not with deceitfull lips; for it is to no purpose to draw neere vnto God with our mouthes, if our hearts be farre from him, Esay 29.13.

¶. Sect. The second signe, that is the spirit of supplication.

Rom. 8.26.

Verse 16.

Rom. 10.13.

Esay 29.13.

The third signe of those who are elected & adopted to be the children of God, is, when as their hearts are somewhat weaned from the World, and seated in Heauen minding the things that are aboue; and when their tongues being set a worke by the heart, doe gladly entertaine godly and religious conferences; for there as the treasure is, there will the heart be also, and with whatsoeuer the heart is affected, the tongue is delighted. Now that these holy meditations, and religious discourses are signes of the childe of God, hereby it plainly appeareth; in that they cannot possibly proceed from our corrupt nature, to which they are irksome and tedious, but from the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, and guiding and directing vs in our thoughts and words; and whosoeuer are thus led with the Spirit of God, they are the sonnes of God, as it is, Rom. 8.14. He that is right heire to a Royall Kingdome, and not yet possessed thereof, is neuer weary of thinking on it, nor glutted with such discourses as tend to the extolling the riches & glory which there attend him, or shew the meanes whereby he may be assured to come into speedy and peaceable possession of his right: and so those who are elected by God, and adopted to be the heires of his euerlasting Kingdome of glory, are neuer satisfied in meditating and speaking of the riches and joyes of this heauenly inheritance, or of the meanes whereby they may be assured vndoubtedly to obtaine it, whereas those who haue no such interest nor hopes, thinke and talke of these things with loathsome weari-

nesse, as being matters not concerning them; and therefore when such thoughts come into their mindes, they vanish as suddenly as a flash of lightning, and when they are present at any spirituall discourses the time seemeth long, and they sit vpon thornes vntill they be ended; and they remaine dumbe as though they were tongue-tied, vnlesse they take occasion to interrupt such holy conferences, and to divert them to some worldly affaires.

The fourth signe of the child of God who is elected to salvation, is, when hee seeth his sins and imperfections, and truly repenteth of them, that is, bewaileth those which are past, and endeavoureth to forsake them in the time to come. For naturally wee are blind, and yet do not perceive our blindnes, we are most sinfull and miserable, and yet doe not see our sins and misery, but with the proud Pharisie, and justiciary Papist, we think our selues righteous, and with the Church of the Laodiceans we imagine that we are rich, and haue need of nothing, not knowing that wee are wretched, miserable, poore, blind and naked; vntill it please the Lord to annoint our eyes with the eye-salve of his spirit, whereby we are inabled to discerne the pure gold of Christs merits, which onely maketh rich, from the drosse of our owne workes, and the white raiment of Christs obedience from the polluted ragges of our owne righteousnesse. And though we see our sins, yet naturally we are not sorry for them, nay, we delight our selues with their remembrance; or if we sustaine any griefe, it is not for the sin, but for the punishment which either wee feele presently inflicted, or feare as being hereafter threatned, vntill it please the Lord to adopt vs for his sonnes, and to giue vs the spirit of adoption, which moueth vs to grieue and sorrow for our sins not so much for feare of punishment, as for sonne-like affection, because by our sins wee haue dishonoured and displeased our gracious and louing Father: and because we cannot wholly mortifie them so long as we continue in this life, we lamentably cry out with Paul, O wretched man that I am who shall deliuer mee from this body of death? And because we know that we shall be neuer freed from it altogether so long as we liue, we wish earnestly with the Apostle that wee may bee speedily dissolued, being contented to part with our liues, because we can no otherwise part with our sins. Whosoeuer therefore hath this sorrow for sinne, he may be assured of his election and salvation: for as it is 2. Cor. 7. 10. this godly sorrow causeth repentance vnto salvation not to be repented of, whereas worldly sorrow causeth death; and all the promises of life and eternall happinesse, are made onely to such repentant sinners, and to them only they appertaine. And as Gods children are grieued for their sins past, so doe they hate and detest them, as in all others so especially in themselues, which hatred causeth them to flee from them, and auoid all occasions which might cause them to fall into the like wickednesse, striuing and endeauouring to mortifie their lusts and euill concupiscences, and to lead their liues in holinesse and righteousnesse, because herewith their heauenly Father is well pleased. Whereas the wicked man, if hee bee not restrained with a seruile feare of Gods judgements, or of temporary punishments, goeth on in his sins with pleasure and delight, adding drunkennesse vnto thirst, and drawing iniquity vnto him with the cords of vanity. Whosoeuer therefore haue this sonne-like care, and holy endeuour of forsaking their sins, and betaking themselues to serue the Lord in the duties of holinesse and righteousnesse, they may be assured that they are elected and adopted to be the sonnes of God; but those who haue no such purpose can neuer haue this assurance; for if they were the sonnes of God, they would bee affected like louing children to such a gracious Father.

Sect. 4. The fourth signe is the sorrow of sinne

Sect. 5. The fift signe is an hungring desire after Christs righteousnesse.

The fifth signe of the child of God elected to salvation, is, when as feeling his owne misery and wretchednesse, he earnestly desireth, and euen as it were hungreth and thirsteth after Christs righteousnesse, looking for life and salvation in him alone; for such as these our Saviour Christ calleth vnto him: Iohn 7. 37. If any man thirst let him come vnto me and drinke; and to such he promiseth euerlasting happinesse, Reuel. 21. 6. I will giue to him that is a thirst of the well of the water of life freely, of which whosoeuer drinketh shall neuer be more a thirst, but it shall be in him a well of water springing vp vnto euerlasting life. And to this we may adde also, an high and incomparable estimation of Christ and his righteousnesse, after that we are assured of them, whereby we prise and value them so much aboue all worldly things, that with Paul we esteeme them all but drosse & dung in respect of gaining Christ, Phil. 3. 8. and are content not onely with the Merchant to sell all we haue that we may buy these pretious pearles, but also to suffer tribulation, anguish, persecution, famine, nakednesse, perill, sword, yea death it selfe, rather then we would be separated from the loue of Christ, as the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 8. 35.

Sect. 6. The first signe is the inward fight betweene the flesh and the spirit.

The first signe of the child of God, is the inward combat which they feele, betweene the flesh and the spirit, whereby on the one side they are drawne vnto sinne, and on the other side incited vnto holy obedience; now delighted in the Law of God, and yet soone after led captiue vnto sinne; one while rowing against the tide of their carnall affections, and another while carried violently downe the streame, by reason of their weaknesse, and the strength of their inbred corruption. For naturally wee goe all one way without any stop, opposition or resistance, euen the broad way which leadeth to Hell and destruction: naturally wee serue sinne, and willingly subject our selues to liue in the bondage of our spirituall enemies, vntill the Lord do with his holy Spirit renew our wil, and sanctifie our affections, working in vs an earnest desire to come out of this miserable captiuity, that we may attain to the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God. Which renuing and sanctification, because it is done but in part, therefore is it opposed by the contrary corruption which we haue by nature, so that what the spirit loueth the flesh hateth, what the spirit imbraceth the flesh abhorreth, what the spirit would haue vs doe, the flesh hindreth and inforceth vs to leaue vndone, with whatsoeuer the spirit is delighted, with that the flesh is vexed and displeased; and this spirituall fight is in all Gods children, as appeareth, *Rom.*7.23. *Galath.*5.17. which should be so farre from discouraging vs, that nothing more can assure vs of our election; for naturally wee are all flesh, wholly submitting our selues to be ruled by Satan, neither is there any fight or opposition in vs; for Satans kingdome is not diuided against it selfe, and whilst the strong man wholly keepeth the house, all that hee possesseth is in peace, vntill our Sauiour Christ, by the operation of his spirit, thrusteth him out of his possession, and seeketh to rule in vs by the scepter of his Word; and then the Deuill rageth and striueth to keepe his hold, and the flesh stormeth, desiring still to serue his old master. When therefore we feele this inward fight within our selues, wee may be assured that Christ is come to dwell in our hearts by his holy Spirit, and consequently, that we are the children of God, and heires of euerlasting life, for as many as receiue him, to them hee giues power to be the sonnes of God, euen to them that beleeue in his name, as it is Iohn 1.12.

9. Sect.7. The seuenth signe, is new obedience.

The seuenth signe of the child of God is new obedience, when as he applyes his heart to the keeping of Gods Commandements, desiring and indeuouring to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life, for if any man keepeth Gods Word, in him is the loue of God perfect indeed, and hereby we know that wee are in him, as it is, 1.Iohn.2.5. And whosoeuer abideth in him sinneth not, whosoeuer sinneth hath not seene him, neither hath hee knowne him, as it is Chap.3.Verse 6. So Verse 10. In this are the children of God knowne and the children of the Deuill, whosoeuer doth not righteousnesse is not of God, &c. So that our new obedience is a signe of the child of God, and the neglect thereof a marke of the child of darknesse. But we are not to vnderstand this of that exact obedience which is required in the Law; for thereby none liuing can haue any assurance of their election and saluation, but rather of reprobation and damnation: but it is to be vnderstood of an Euangelicall obedience, which consisteth in an holy desire and earnest endeauour of keeping all Gods Commandements; with which the children of God are so wholly possessed, that after their true conuersion it is impossible that they should fall into any knowne sin, with full consent of will and with their whole hearts. And this is the obedience which the Gospell requireth, and of which the Apostle speaketh, and thus wee neuer sin, but keepe all Gods Commandements, namely, in respect of our desire and earnest endeuour. This is that righteousnesse which is accepted, as though it were perfect before God, who spareth vs as a man spares his sonne whom hee tenderly loueth, as hee professeth, Malach. 3.17. and therefore measureth our obedience not according to our actions, but according to our affections, and accepteth of the will for the deed, as before I haue shewed.

*Mal.*3.17. Luke.

But yet that we may not deceiue our selues with a counterfeit shew, we are to know that this Euangelicall obedience hath these properties; first, it must be totall, and that both in respect of the subiect and of the object; that is, we must not share our selues betweene God and the World, giuing one the tongue, the other the heart; one our outward actions, and the other our inward affections; but wee must performe our obedience with our whole hearts, yea with the whole man, body soule and spirit: for though we be regenerated and sanctified but in part, yet is there no part of the whole man vnregenerate and vnsanctified, howsoeuer the flesh and the corruption of nature be spread likewise and mixed therewith throughout the whole body and soule. And therefore though all our obedience sauour of the flesh, and is mingled with manifold imperfections, yet it doth proceed from the whole man body and soule, because regeneration from which it proceedeth is not of any part alone, but of the whole man. So also it must be totall in respect of the object; for it is not sufficient that with Herod, wee obserue diligently many things, if wee nourish willingly any one sinne taking therein pleasure and delight, but we must desire and endeuour to forsake all our sinnes, and to performe obedience vnto all Gods Commandements; for if we nourish one sin in our hearts, it will open a doore to let in more when wee are tempted vnto them; as wee may see in the example of Herod and Iudas, the one harbouring incest, the other couetousnesse: if we neglect willingly, obedience to one precept of Gods Law, it will so harden our hearts and seare our consciences, that soon after we shall neglect all. If therefore we would haue

our obedience acceptable vnto God, we must with the Prophet Dauid, *Psal.*119.6. haue respect vnto all Gods Commandements; for, hee that faileth in one is guilty of all, as it is, *Iam.*2.10.

Secondly, this obedience must be perpetuall, continuing in a constant course from the time of our conuersion to the end of our liues; for we are not to iudge of our selues or others, by one or two or many actions whether they be good or euill, but by the whole tenour and course of our liues, so that he who in this respect is holy and righteous, he is so accepted before God, notwithstanding his many falls and great infirmities; hee that in the course of his life is wicked and profane, is so esteemed of God, although he seeme to himself and others religious by fits, and performeth many excellent duties and good workes. It is not therefore sufficient that we begin in the spirit, if we end in the flesh, Gal. 3.3. It is not sufficient to professe and practice godlinesse in our youth, if wee breake off in our age; it is not enough that we enter into the Christian race and runne well in the beginning, if wee stand still in the midst, or before we come to the goale; for hee only that endureth to the end shall be saued, as it is *Matth.*24.13. As for him that layeth his hand on the plough and looketh backe, hee is not fit for Gods Kingdome, as our Sauiour affirmeth, Luke 9.62.

Lastly, our obedience must be grounded vpon Gods Word, and therefore performed because the Lord hath enioyned such duties vnto vs; it must proceed from faith, which first purifieth the heart, and then worketh by loue; it must not bee done for any worldly respect, but of a conscionable care of performing our duties, and in a feruent zeale of Gods glory which is magnified when as our lights shine before men; which zeale will make vs goe forward in our course of godlinesse, through euill report, and good report, honour and dishonour. And if our obedience spring from these fountaines, and bee referred to this end that God thereby may be glorified; then will we make no lesse conscience of secret, then of open sins; then will we be no lesse ready to serue God in the duties of piety and righteousnesse, when there is no witnesse of our actions, then if all the world should looke vpon vs: then will wee be as fearefull to offend God in the breach of any of his Commandements in our secret Chambers in the darke night, as in the Church or market place at noone day.

The eight signe of the child of God, is the loue of our brethren in obedience to Gods Commandement; when as a man loues intirely a Christian, because he is a Christian, and ingrafted into the same body of Christ whereof he is a member. For as it is impossible that one member of the body should not loue, cherish, and defend another, because they are quickned by the same soule and gouerned by the same head; so it is not possible but that one true Christian should loue, cherish, and defend another, because they are quickned by the same spirit and ruled by the same head Iesus Christ. And this is made a marke of Gods child by the Apostle Iohn, 1. Iohn 3.14. We know that wee are translated from death to life, because wee loue the brethren: as the want of this loue is a sure note of the child of wrath; for as it followeth in the same Verse, he that loueth not his brother abideth in death.

1. Iohn 3.14.

Now the vndoubted signes of loue and Christian Charitie are two; giuing to those that want, and forgiuing those that offend: for it is a propertie of true loue to be bountifull, 1.*Cor.*13.4. as to all, so especially to those that are of the household of faith, as it is *Gal.*6.10. and on the other side, He that hath this worlds good, and seeth his brother haue need and shutteth vp his compassion from him, he is destitute of the loue of God, and consequently of the loue of his brethren, which is but a streame issuing from this fountaine, 1.Iohn 3.17. And this Christian liberalitie as it is a signe of true loue, so also of our election and saluation; for our Sauiour Christ hath shewed vs, that according to these fruits of charitie, and actions of Christian liberalitie, he will pronounce the sentence of euerlasting joy and happinesse at the day of judgement, *Matth.*25.34,35,36. and on the other side, that hee will pronounce the sentence of condemnaton against the neglectors of these duties of Christian charitie, Verse 41.42,43. The second signe of true loue is forgiuing, when as we are ready for Gods sake, and in obedience to his commandement to remit and pardon those injuries which are offered vs, for loue is not prouoked to anger, and therefore much lesse to reuenge; it suffereth all things, it indureth all things, as it is, 1.*Cor.*13.5,7. Nay, it doth not only not render euill for euill, but it ouer-commeth euill with goodnesse, leauing reuenge vnto God, and to his Deputies and Vice-gerents the Magistrates', as wee may see in the example of our Sauiour Christ, and the blessed Martyr Stenen, who prayed for their persecutors; whose example we are to imitate, as the Apostle exhorteth, *Rom.*12.14. Blesse them that persecute you, blesse I say and curse not. And so shall we haue a certaine signe of true loue, and an vndoubted note of Gods Spirit dwelling in vs of the remission of our sins, and consequently of our election and saluation. For naturally wee are Wolues, Leopards, Lions, yea, Cockatrices who kill with their lookes, as the Prophet speaketh, Esay 11.6,8. and like bruite and sauage beasts willing to offer all injuries, but impatient of suffering any: and therefore when our sauage crueltie is turned into charity, and wee become as meeke and harmeleſſe, as the Lambe, Calfe, or little Childe, it is a manifeſt ſigne that our ſtout courages are abated and beaten downe with the rod of Chriſts mouth, that wee are borne anew and quickened by his Spirit, and that now we are ſeated in the mountaine of his holineſſe, and ſhall be heires of his Kingdome of glory. So alſo hereby wee are aſſured of the remiſſion of our ſins, when wee find our ſelues ready and willing to forgiue our neigbours; for our Sauiour Chriſt hath promiſed, that if wee doe forgiue men their treſpaſſes, our heauenly Father will alſo forgiue vs, *Mat.*6.14. & conſequently we may aſſuredly gather, that we are iuſtified, called, elected, & ſhalbe glorified.

*Matth.*6.14.

9. Sect. 10. The ninth ſigne, is the loue of Gods Miniſters.

The ninth ſigne of the child of God elected to ſaluation is the loue of Gods true Miniſters and Ambaſſadours, not onely becauſe they are Chriſtians, but alſo becauſe they are ſent of God to execute theſe holy functions, for the gathering together of Gods elect. And this our Sauiour Chriſt declareth, *Matth.*10.41. He that receiueth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, ſhall haue a Prophets reward; that is, euerlaſting joy and vnſpeakable happineſſe in Gods Kingdome; for, they that turne many vnto righteouſnes, ſhall ſhine as the ſtars for euer and euer. And becauſe none ſhould pretend that by reaſon of their pouerty they cannot ſhew their loue to Gods Miniſters, therefore the Lord encourageth euen the pooreſt, to ſhew their good will and affection vnto them, *Matth.*10.43. ſaying, Whoſoeuer ſhall giue to any of theſe little ones to drinke, a cup of cold water onely, in the name of a Diſciple, verily, I ſay vnto you he ſhall not loſe his reward, namely, in Gods Kingdome. Moreouer, thoſe that loue Gods Ambaſſadours, doe prooue vnto themſelues and ſhew vnto the world, that they haue receiued good by their ambaſſage, euen reconciliation with God, peace of conſcience and aſſurance of ſaluation, which maketh them to thinke no worldly benefit ſufficient to requite theſe ſpirituall graces, which by their meanes and Miniſterie they haue receiued: and therfore with the Galathians they could be content, if it were poſſible to doe them good hereby, to pull out their owne eyes, and to giue them vnto them, ſeeing by their meanes the blinde eyes of their vnderſtandings, are inlightened with the knowledge of God and Chriſt their Sauiour. And becauſe they haue receiued from them to their comfort the glad tidings of peace and good things; therefore their feet, that is, their approaching and comming vnto them, ſeeme beautifull and delightfull, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, *Rom.*10.15. If an Ambaſſadour were ſent from a mighty Prince, who was our enemy in time paſt, and able at his pleaſure to deſtroy vs and our Country, to the end he might conclude a peace; and not onely ſo, but to offer vs the free vſe of all the riches and commodities of his Kingdome; who would not receiue him with joy, and giue him royall entertainment, if they were perſwaded of the truth of his ambaſſage? But we by our ſins had made the glorious of Heauen and Earth our enemy, who is able euery minute to deſtroy vs with the breath of his noſtrils; and it hath pleaſed the Lord to ſend his Ambaſſadours, not only to offer peace, but alſo to beſeech vs that wee would bee reconciled vnto him, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 2. *Cor.*5.20. and vpon this reconciliation, he aſſureth vs of the riches of his Kingdome; who therefore receiuing and beleeuing this ambaſſage, will not loue the Ambaſſadours that bring theſe bleſſed tidings vnto them? Who can be aſſured of ſuch ineſtimable benefits, and yet ſhew no token of thankfulneſſe towards them, who are the meanes whereby they are deriued vnto them?

*Matth.*10.41.

*Dan.*12.3.

*Matth.*10.43.

*Gal.*4.15.

*Rom.*10.15.

2. *Cor.*5.20.

Whereby the way wee may note, how few the number is in theſe dayes, who receiue the Lords ambaſſage to their ſpirituall comfort; how few they are to whom it is effectuall for the begetting in them the graces of Gods Spirit; how few hereby come to the true aſſurance of the remiſſion of their ſinnes and euerlaſting happineſſe: ſeeing the number is ſo exceeding ſmal who loue and reſpect the Lords Ambaſſadours in regard of their ambaſſage. Nay, rather the moſt, euen for their Miniſtery ſake doe contemne thoſe, whom otherwiſe in reſpect of their learning, wiſdome and other excellent gifts of body and minde, they would reſpect and highly eſteeme if they were not of the Miniſtery. So that their honourable calling, which aboue all things ſhould commend them, doth aboue all things make them baſe and contemptible; and no maruell, ſeeing the moſt are fleſh and not ſpirit, the children of Mammon, and not the children of God: and therefore, ſauouring only the things of the fleſh, and not perceiuing the things of the Spirit of God, they ſeeme fooliſhneſſe vnto them, and the Preachers of them fooles, and men of ſhallow conceits. But let ſuch know, that God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe, and weake things to confound mighty things; and vile things of the world, and things that are deſpiſed hath God choſen and things that are not, to bring to nought things that are, that no fleſh ſhould reioyce in his preſence, as it is, 1. *Cor.*1. Verſ. 27, 28. Let them know that this their contempt, or at leaſt ſmall regard of Gods Ambaſſadors, is a moſt manifeſt ſigne that they neuer receiued good by their ambaſſage: for had they receiued from them ſpirituall things, they would neuer grudge to beſtow vpon thē their worldly things, which in the true Chriſtians eſteeme are not to be cōpared with thē, and

1. *Cor.*4.14.

and much lesse would they against their own conscience defraud them of their own right, which by the Lawes of God and man is due vnto them, whereby it commeth to passe that whereas all men being industrious and frugall, may liue plentifully euen of their meanest trades, only the Lords Ambassadours, though neuer so painfull in their callings, liue in want and misery.

The last signe of Gods child elected to saluation, which I will speake of, is their earnest desire that our Sauiour Christ should come to judgement: whence proceedeth that patheticall prayer, Come, Lord Iesus, come quickly, Reuel.22.20. and that prayer which our Sauiour hath taught all the faithfull to pray daily, let thy kingdome come, Matth.6.10. Now that this is a note of those that are elected to saluation, it appeareth plainly, 2.Tim.4.8. where the Apostle saith, that a crowne of righteousnesse is laid vp for all those that loue his appearing. And Rom.8 23. he telleth vs, that those who haue the first-fruits of the Spirit, doe euen sigh in themselues, waiting for the adoption euen the redemption of their bodie, when as their corruption shall put on incorruption, and their mortall body immortalitie, as hee speaketh, 1.Cor.15.53. So our Sauiour Christ hath told vs, that his faithfull children should at his comming, looke vp and lift vp their heads, because their redemption draweth neere, Luk. 21.28. and on the other side, that the kinreds of the earth shall mourne, and that the prophane worldlings and reprobates shall say to the mountaines and rockes, Fall on vs, and hide vs from the presence of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lambe, Reuel.6. Verse 16. So that by these places it is manifest that if we loue the appearing of the Lord Iesus, and desire his comming to judgement; wee are the children of God indued with his Spirit, which assureth vs of our saluation. For naturally wee abhorre to thinke of this fearefull day, and tremble with feare when mention is made of the appearing of our Iudge, because by our sins wee haue deserued euerlasting damnation: but when the Spirit of God by the Ministery of the Word, hath begot faith in vs, whereby we apply vnto our selues Christ Iesus, and all his merits, by whom we are reconciled vnto God and made friends who before were enemies, and sonnes of God and heires of euerlasting happinesse who before were the children of wrath and firebrands of Hell, then doe wearnestly desire the company of our heauenly Father; when wee are assured that our Iudge shall bee our Sauiour, then can we go boldly to his judgement seate without feare of condemnation; when we are assured that we are the beloued Spouse of Christ, then wee long for nothing more then for the comming of our Bridegroome; when we are certainly perswaded that by Gods Spirit we are ingrafted into the body of Christ, and are become liuely members of his body; then doe we heartily wish with the Apostle to bee dissolued, that wee may be with Christ our head in his kingdom of glory, where together with him we shall receiue, and be fully satisfied with such incomparable joyes, as neither eye hath seene nor eare heard, nor the heart of man conceiued. 1.Cor.2.9.

CHAP. XIII.

The obiections alleaged against the assurance of our election answered.

ANd thus much concerning the signes whereby wee may be assured of our election. Now I will answere such objections as are brought against this doctrine by the enemies of Gods truth. And these are of two sorts, first testimonies of Gods Word, & secondly, reasons: the testimonies of Scriptures are diuers: first, they obiect such places as these; 1.Cor. 10.12. Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. Prou.28.14. Blessed is the man that feareth alwayes. Rom.11.20. Bee not high-minded but feare. Phil.2.12. Make an end of your saluation with feare and trembling. 1.Pet.1.17. Passe the time of your dwelling here in feare; to all which and many other such like places, wee may answere generally, that the Holy Ghost would not hereby take away our certainty of faith, but carnall securitie; hee would not depriue vs of the assurance of the remission of our sins and our election, but rather by these admonitions as with a bridle he curbeth in our vnruly affections, and restraineth vs from running into all licentiousnesse vnder this pretence that we are assured of our election; hee would not haue vs doubt of God grace, but he would not haue vs too much trust and rely on those graces which wee haue receiued. And therefore he putteth vs in minde of our owne weaknes and infirmity, not to the end wee should doubt of our election, and despaire of, or feare our perseuerance, but to the end that distrusting our owne strength we may wholly relie vpon the power, loue and promises of God, and thereby gather so much more certaine assurance of our election and perseuerance, as the power of God is aboue the power of man. Lastly, he giueth vs not these admonitions to bring vs into doubting, but would hereby stirre vp our faith vnto the exercise of holinesse and righteousnesse, that it may not through idlenesse faint and waxe stiffe and benummed, and vnable to performe these holy actions, whereby this assurance and certainty of our election, on, would bee infeebled and not so sensibly discerned. And therefore these and such like speeches tend not to this end that wee should doubt of our electiō, but rather that we shold be preserued from doubting; to which, carnall security, selfe-confidence, negligence in the duties af holinesse and righteousnesse, & continuance in sinne, would in the end bring vs; all which the Spirit of God by these admonitions and exhortations preuenteth. Secondly, I answere that these and such like admonitions, are not directed only to the faithfull, who may and ought to be assured of their election, but in generall to the whole Church, wherein there are many Hypocrites who content themselues with a bare shew of godlines, and many worldly men who please themselues with carnall security, and a carcasse of faith, which neuer so much as breatheth, and much lesse performeth any actions of holinesse and righteousnesse: and therefore as it was necessary that the faithfull should bee more and more confirmed with the promises of the Gospell, so was it requisite that Hypocrites and secure Worldlings should be rouzed out of their securitie, with these and such like admonitions and comminations.

1.Cor.10.12. Prou.28.14. Rom.11.20. Phil.2.12. 1.Pet.1.17.

9. Sect. 2. Admonitions and comminations profitable for Gods children.

Neither were they necessary for Hypocrites and Worldlings alone, but euen for the deare children of God: who because they are partly flesh and partly spirit, therefore as they haue need that the spiritual man should be comforted and their faith confirmed against diffidence and doubting, with the sweet promises of the Gospell; so had they need to haue their vnruly flesh curbed in, and restrained from falling into wretchlesse security, by these admonitions and comminations. And because by reason of this diuision which is in our selues, we are readie as it were to mutiny, one part of our forces being ready to march cheerefully to the land of promise, the other to forsake the way, somtimes on the one side being ready to turn back again, as vtterly despairing of attaining to the end of our journey, when we consider the sonnes of Anakim our spirituall enemies, in respect of whose stature and strength we are but as Grashoppers, and the mightie oppositions which are made against our weake force, and sometimes to goe on in a way which God hath not appointed, presuming vpon our owne strength and abilities. Therefore that we may keepe the strait way without declining on either hand, God doth as it were hedge vs in on both sides, to restraine vs from wandring: on the one side with sweet promises, that we may not despaire, but relie our selues on his strength and assistance; on the other side with strict admonitions & fearefull comminations, that wee may not trust too much vnto our owne power, nor presume vpon our owne abilities. And by meanes of the one, he doth as it were pricke vs forward in our journey, keeping vs from once thinking of standing still, or returning againe into Egypt; and by the other as with an hand hee doth vphold vs, when wee are weary and ready to faint, hauing an eye to the crowne of glory, and the garland of happinesse, which is prepared for vs at the end of our course, and race of Christianitie. And as a skilfull Pilot, when his ship is in a tempestuous and straight Sea, in danger to runne on the rockes, or to sinke in the sands, doth cast out anchor on both sides, or more carefully looke vnto the sterne to keepe it in an euen course: so wee sailing in the tempestuous sea of this miserable World, are in danger on the side to dash vpon the rockes of presumptuous securitie, and on the other side to sinke in the sands, and to plunge into the gulfe of desperation: and therefore the Lord doth stay vs from both, as it were with two strong cables; the first is legall comminations and strict admonitions, to keepe vs from carnall security, and hypocriticall presumption; the other is sweet promises, whereby he keepeth vs from falling into doubting and desperation; neither doth one of these hinder another, but both stay vs from falling into these extremes.

9. Sect. 3. The true meaning of the seuerall places obiected.

So that these admonitions are not giuen to make vs doubtfull of our election, but partly to take away the presumption and security of hypocrites and carnall worldlings, and partly to bridle and restraine the flesh from running head-long into sin, and from growing insolent ouer the spirit euen in Gods children, whereby indeed their assurance of saluation would be abated, and languish. The truth whereof appeareth if we examine the seuerall places. For first, whereas the Apostle, 1. Cor. 10.12. saith, Let him that thinketh hee standeth, take heed lest hee fall; he doth not moue those that are faithfull, to doubt of their perseuerance, but those that want true faith, not to deceiue themselues with vaine presumption, and with an opinion of faith in stead of true faith indeed: and therefore hee saith not simply, let him that standeth, but let him that thinketh hee standeth, that is, hee that doth not stand in deed but in his owne fond opinion. Neither can it necessarily be proued, that this falling is to be vnderstood of finall falling away from God; but rather as the coherence of the text sheweth, of falling into those sinnes which the Israelies fell into: and though it were, yet is it but an admonition to take away carnall security, not giuen to make vs doubt of our standing, but to preserue vs from falling.

1. Cor. 10.12.

Secondly, whereas the wiseman saith, Pro. 28.14. Blessed is the man that feareth alwayes: hee doth not vnderstand thereby a doubtfull feare of our election, but a feare to sinne, sinne, and a conscionable care of auoiding those things which are displeasing in Gods sight; which feare is opposed to carnall securitie and hardnes of heart, as appeareth in the same place where this is added, But he that hardneth his heart shall fall into euill. As though hee should say, that man is blessed which feareth the Lord, for this will worke in him a conscionable care of auoiding sin, which is odious in the eyes of God, and of imbracing holinesse and righteousnes, which being acceptable vnto God, he will reward with eternall blessednesse; but he that hardneth his heart and continueth in carnall securitie, runneth head-long into the euill of sinne, and consequently the euill of punishment, euen euerlasting condemnation.

Pro. 28.14.

Rom. 11. 20. Thirdly, whereas the Apostle, Rom. 11. 20. exhorteth vs not to be high-minded but feare; hee doth not meane that wee should doubt of our election & saluation, but doth hereby beate downe our spirituall pride, and opinion of our owne righteousnesse and holinesse, whereby wee are ready to insult ouer the Iewes, as though wee were chosen and preferred before them, for some excellencie or worthinesse in our selues, and so derogate from the free grace and goodnesse of God, whereby he hath chosen vs without any respect of our deserts. And that this is the meaning of these words, appeareth in the eighteenth Verse, where he willeth the Gentiles not to boast themselues against the Iewes who were the naturall branches. Neither doth the Apostle write this to the faithfull onely, but to the whole Church of the Gentiles, in which were many Hypocrites and carnall men, who contenting themselues with a bare name of Christians, would insult ouer the Iewes, whom God had cast off from being his Church and people whom he warneth not to be puft vp in pride, as though in this respect their state were most secure & out of all danger; for as (saith he) they were cast off for their infidelity, euen when they were naturall branches, so shall you much more be reiected, who being wild branches were grafted in their places (that is, called to be the members of the visible Church) if you continue in the like infidelitie, contenting your selues with vaine confidence and fond presumption, in stead of a liuely faith.

Sect. 4. Fourthly, whereas the Apostle, Phil. 2. 12. doth exhort vs to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling; he doth not hereby take away from vs assurance of our election and saluation, but carnall securitie and selfe confidence, that so despairing of our owne strength, as being vnable of our selues to thinke a good thought, or to will that which is good, we may in all humility rest and relie our selues wholly vpon the Lord. And that this is his meaning, appeareth by the reason which hee adioyneth in the Verse following: for saith he, it is God which worketh in you both the will and the deed. As though he should say, there is no reason why you should be secure, as though you were able to stand by your owne strength; there is no cause why you should be lifted vp with fond presumption, or be carried away with selfe confidence, for of your selues you are not able so much as to will that which is good, or to performe it though you should will it, vnlesse it please the Lord of his owne good pleasure and free will to worke both in you; and therefore respecting your owne infirmities and imperfections, you should be so farre from carnall security or selfe confidence, that contrariwise you should continually feare, least through your corruption, you should be ouer-taken of sin, and so displease the Lord which is your soueraigne King and gracious Father. So that the Apostle doth not here exhort vs to doubt of our election and saluation, but to a godly feare that we doe not fall into sin: hee would not haue vs to doubt of Gods grace and free promises, but of our own strength, by which we are altogether vnable to stand if hee leaue vs to our selues: he would not haue vs feare lest we should be rejected and damned, after we are truly conuerted vnto God, but lest wee fall into sin, and neglect that dutie which we owe to our heauenly Father. These two therefore may well stand together: for the more wee distrust our owne weaknesse, the more firmely we rest vpon the power and assistance of God, and the more we relie vpon him, the more sure wee are of standing vnto the end: the surer wee are of Gods loue and fauour, the more wee loue him againe; and the more we loue him, the more fearefull we are to displease him: the more wee see our proneness to sin, the more wee feare lest we should fall into it; and the more we suspect our selues, the more earnestly wee implore the assistance of Gods Spirit, whereby wee are inabled to withstand tentations. And therefore Dauid joyneth these together, Psal. 2. 11. Serue the Lord in feare, and reioyce in trembling; noting thereby that Gods children feare, yea, euen tremble in regard of their owne infirmities and corruptions, and yet at the same time they rejoyce and are filled with consolation, in respect of that full assurance which they haue of Gods loue and fauour, and their election and saluation. And as he joyneth them in precept, so also in his owne practice, Psal. 5. 7. I will (saith he) come into thine house in the multitude of thy mercy; and in thy feare will I worship towards thy holy Temple: so that at the same time, when as hee was incouraged by the consideration of Gods great mercie, to goe boldly and with a liuely faith vnto the throne of grace; hee was also touched with a godly feare in regard of his vnworthinesse thinesse and imperfections; not that he doubted lest hee should not bee accepted of God, but lest in worshipping God hee should bewray his corruption, and not doe it in that manner and measure which God requireth.

9. Sect. 5. Obiection. 1. Iohn 4.18. But against this it may bee obiected that Iohn saith, 1. Epist. 4.18. There is no feare in loue, but perfect loue casteth out feare, &c. I answere, that there is a twofold feare mentioned in the Scriptures; the first is a seruile feare proceeding from incredulity, whereby men feare God as a seuere Iudge, who is ready to inflict on them those iust punishments which by their sinnes they haue deserued, which feare is expelled when as we are assured of Gods loue and loue him againe. The other is a sonne-like feare, which is a fruit of faith, whereby wee doe not feare God as an enemy or an angry Iudge, but as a gracious Father, whose displeasure wee would by no meanes incurre; not that we feare his wrath and vengeance, as though it were ready to fall vpon vs; but because wee would not thus abuse his mercie and goodnesse towards vs, nor doe any thing which might cause him to looke vpon vs with a frowning countenance, or if we doe feare Gods iudgements, it is as they are inflicted on another subiect, and not as being ready to fall vpon vs. For this difference is betweene the feare of the wicked and Gods children; they like malefactors which are led out to punishment, are filled with horrour and feare when they thinke of the torments which they are to endure, but yet did neuer feare to commit such crimes as deserued the punishments, and though they should escape, yet this would be no warning for the time to come; but Gods children seeing the iudgements which are exercised vpon the wicked, doe feare, not lest they should be inflicted vpon them presently, but lest they should so offend and deserue the like punishments, first auoiding sin, that they may not receiue the wages thereof. And this son-like feare is commended vnto vs in the Scriptures, as being a part of the honour and seruice which wee owe vnto God, as appeareth, Malac. 1.6. A sonne honoureth his Father, and a Seruant his Master; if I be a Father, where is mine honour; if I be a Master, where is my feare saith the Lord? So Psalme 34.9. Feare the Lord yee his Saints, for nothing wanteth to them that feare him. And Psalme 112.1. Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord and delighteth greatly in his Commandements. In which places weare not to vnderstand a seruile and slauish feare, but an ingenious and son-like feare, which drawes vs backe from falling into sinne, and incites vs to performe all good duties of holinesse and righteousnesse to God and our brethren, because would not incurre the displeasure of our heauenly Father, but doe those things which are acceptable in his sight. Lastly, whereas the Apostle Peter, 1. Epist. 1.17. exhorteth vs to passe the time of our dwelling here in feare; hee doth not vnderstand such a feare as maketh vs to doubt of our election and saluation, but such an one as prouoketh vs to obey Gods Commandements, and restraineth vs from wallowing and defiling our selues in sin: for with this feare in the Verse following he ioyneth certaine knowledge of our redemption, and consequently of our election and saluation, knowing (saith hee) that yee were not redeemed with corruptible things, as siluer and gold from your vaine conuersation, &c. but with the precious bloud of Christ. So that this feare doth not take away the certaine knowledge of our election and redemption, but this knowledge causeth vs to feare lest we fall into sinne after we are assured of this great benefit of our redemption, and thereby displease our gracious God, and defile our soules after they are purged with the precious bloud of Iesus Christ.

1. Pet. 1.17.

Besides these places, there are others also obiected, as that Iob 9.21. Though I were perfect, yet I know not my soule; therefore I abhorre my life. To which I answere, that Iobs scope and drift in this place is to shew, that euen the most iust and holy man cannot stand before Gods iudgement seate in his owne righteousnesse and holinesse, which is polluted and imperfect, and that therefore it behoueth euery one to despaire in himselfe and his legall righteousnesse, as not being able to iustifie him in Gods sight, in respect of whose puritie euen the very Heauens are vncleane, that so hee may wholly relie vpon Gods mercy and Christs merits: and this appeareth, Verse 2,3. I know verily (saith he) that it is so, (that is, that God is iust and all men are sinners, who are righteously punished for their demerits, as Bildad had reasoned in the former Chapter) and therefore how should man compared vnto God be iustified? 3. If he would dispute with him, he could not answere him one thing of a thousand. And Vers. 20. If I would iustifie my selfe, mine owne mouth should condemne me; if I would be perfect, he shall iudge me wicked. 21. And though I were innocent or perfect, (that is, though I seemed iust in mine owne eyes, and knew nothing by my selfe) yet I know not mine owne soule, not what secret corruptions may lurke in it, and therefore I will not hereby looke to be iustified, nay, in this respect I abhorre my life, and cast mine owne righteousnesse from mee as a polluted clout. By which manner of reasoning hee confuteth Bildads obiection, who affirmed that Iob and his sonnes were punished of God for their sins and that iustly, and therefore they were not so iust and innocent as they had seemed. To this Iob answereth, that it

Iob 9.2.

Vers. 3.

it is true indeed he could not justifie himselfe in respect of his owne righteousnesse, if hee compared himselfe with Gods exact justice, but must needes condemne himselfe for a wretched sinner; yet hence it followed not that therefore God thus afflicted him, seeing this was the state not of him onely, but of all men whatsoeuer: and therefore this could not be the onely cause of his extraordinary afflictions. So that this place makes nothing against the assurance of our saluation, which is grounded vpon Gods free mercy and Christs merits; but against that presumption which relieth it selfe in whole or in part, vpon our owne legall righteousnesse.

The like place to this is that saying of Paul which they object, 1. Cor. 4.3,4. I iudge not mine owne selfe, for I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iustified, but hee that iudgeth mee is the Lord. For answering whereof, wee are to know, that there were diuers in the Church of Corinth, who censured Pauls Ministery and disgraced his gifts; against which detractions hee bendeth his speech and maketh an apologie for himselfe, saying, that hee would not take vpon him to judge himselfe, concerning the excellencie and worth of his Ministerie and gifts, but would leaue the judgement and approbation thereof vnto God, whose Ambassadour hee was; and though hee knew nothing which might be objected against him in regard of his Ministerie, yet hereby he would not look to bee justified in Gods presence. So that if this be the sense of the words, as appeareth by the coherence and the drift of the place, it maketh nothing for Popish doubting. But let it be granted that Paul speakes not of his Ministerie, but of his righteousnesse and obedience to the Law, yet this maketh nothing against the certainty of our election; for the Apostle speaking of his owne righteousnesse and innocency, doth disclaime it from being any cause of his justification: neither doth he say that in regard thereof he doubteth, as the Papists would expound him, but he affirmeth directly that he is not thereby justified, and rendreth this as a reason, that it is God who judgeth him: and therefore though hee were vnblameable before men, yea though hee knew nothing by himselfe, yet hee could not hereby be justified before the just judgement seate of God, who requires such perfection and exact obedience as can be found in no man liuing; for he that once only breaketh but one Commandement, is guiltie of all, as it is, Iames 2.10. And therefore it behoued the Apostle and all others, not to seeke for justification in themselues and their owne righteousnesse, but in the righteousnesse and obedience of Christ, which we may boldly present before Gods exact judgement seate, and there be accepted as righteous. And of this justification the Apostle speaketh, not doubtfully or timorously, but boldly and certainly, Rom. 5.1. Being iustified by faith, we haue power towards God through our Lord Iesus Christ. 2. By whom also wee haue accesse through faith vnto his grace wherein we stand, and reioyce vnder the hope of the glory of God. So Rom. 8.33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? It is God that iustifieth. 34. Who shall condemne? It is Christ who is dead, yea rather which is risen againe, &c.

Rom. 5.1,2.

Rom. 8.33.

Moreouer, they object these places to moue vs to doubt of our election and saluation. Ioel 2.14. Who knoweth if hee will returne and repent; and Amos 5.15. It may be that the Lord God of hosts will be mercifull vnto the remnant of Ioseph. And Ionas 3.9. Who can tell if God will turne and repent, and turne away from his fierce wrath that we perish not? To which I answere, that the Prophets in these places doe not speake of the election or eternal saluation of those that truly repent, but of their deliuery from outward afflictions and temporary calamities threatned against them for their sinnes: Which sometimes the Lord doth inflict on his children after their true repentance, either for their chastisement, that they may thereby hate sinne for the time to come, when they feele the smart of it, or else for their triall. And sometimes also the Lord after he hath threatned them against the wicked, doth notwithstanding hold backe his hand, and as it were put vp his sword of justice againe into the scabberd, which hee had drawne out to punish their sinnes, vpon their outward humiliation and fained repentance, that hee may shew hereby how highly hee esteemeth the true repentance of his children, as appeareth in the example of the Ninuites, and of Ahab, 1. King. 21.29. And therefore seeing the Lord keepeth no certaine course in these temporary chastisements, but sometime inflicteth them vpon the repentant whom he dearely loueth, and sometime spareth the wicked when they but outwardly humble themselues before him; therefore the Prophets speake doubtfully and exhort to repentance, referring the euent to Gods wise and gracious prouidence. And thus doubtfully doth Dauid speake in this respect, 2. Sam. 12.22. Who can tell (said hee) whether God will haue mercy on mee that the childe may liue? and Chap. 16.12. It may bee the Lord will looke vpon mine affliction; and yet though he were doubtfull whether he should be freed from these temporall crosses, he was notwithstanding certainly perswaded of his election and saluation; as he professeth, Psal. 16.11. So that these places speaking of temporary chastisements, make nothing against the certainty of our election.

. Sect. 7. Cor. 4.3,4.

Sect. 8.

Sect. 9. Acts 8.22.

Peter exhorteth Simon Magus to repent of his wickednesse, and to pray vnto God, that if peraduenture the wicked thought of his heart might be forgiuen him. To which I answere, first, that the originall word εἰ ἄρα, which is translated, if peraduenture, and in our Bibles, if it be possible, sometimes also signifieth, that truly, and in this sense it maketh nothing for doubting. Secondly, though we vnderstand it as a speech of doubting, yet it maketh not for their purpose; for it is not to be referred vnto God, as though it were doubtfull whether he would forgiue the sins of the Magician, if he did truly repent and call vpon him; for he hath certainly assured vs by his gracious promise, that whosoeuer truly repenteth him of his wicked wayes, he will receiue to mercy, Ezech. 33. 11. But it is to be referred to Simon Magus, of whose repentance and liuely faith Peter might well doubt, lest either they would be none at all, or else fained and hypocriticall, seeing his heart was not right in the sight of God, but in the gall of bitternesse and bond of iniquitie. Lastly, though it should be a doubtfull speech and be referred also to God, yet it maketh nothing against the certaintie of faith; for the Apostle seeing him in the gall of bitternesse and bond of iniquitie, thought it not fit to raise him vp suddenly, by applying vnto him the sweet promises of the Gospell, nor to cast those precious pearles before such a filthy Swine, vnlesse he preserued them as it were in the cabinet of a doubtfull and perplexed speech, from being trampled vnder his bemired feet, till he had washed them in the teares of vnfained repentance. Moreouer, he thus doubtfully speaketh to giue him a more cleere insight of the hainousnesse of his sin, as though it might be well doubted of, whether the Lord would forgiue it or no, that so his mind hereby being perplexed, he might by the consideration of his horrible sinne be beaten downe and truly humbled, and because those things which are hardly obtained are more earnestly sought, therefore Peter intimateth vnto him by this doubtfull speech, that it was no easie matter to obtain forgiuenesse for such outragious wickednesse, that he might hereby work in the Magician more earnest and hearty repentance, and incite him to call vpon the Lord for mercy with more vehemencie and feruencie of spirit. It is not therefore the Apostles meaning to ouerthrow the cerainty of faith, or to call into question Gods mercy, whether hee will extend it or no to hainous offenders who truly repent of their sinnes and beleeue, for this were contrary to the whole course of the Gospell; but hee vseth this doubtfull speech to this desperate sinner, that hee might not make the soueraigne salue of Gods gracious promises base and contemptible, by applying it to the festred sores of a filthy Dog, which were neuer cleansed with the sharpe corrasiues of the Law; and also for the good of this malicious sinner, for he doth not absolutely assure him of mercy and forgiuenesse, that hee might bee stirred vp with more earnestnesse and care to seeke it; for the easines of obtaining maketh the suiter careless and negligent in seeking and suing. Neither doth he absolutely exclude him from all hope of grace, lest hee should neuer labour after it, but desperatly run on in his wickednesse; for when hope is cut off, the desire also fainteth, and therefore hee vseth a perplexed and wise tempered speech, which on the one side might preserue him from secure presumption, and on the other side from falling into hellish desperation.

Ezech. 33. 11.

Lastly, they obiect that saying, Eccl. 5. 5. which they thus reade: De propitiato peccato noli esse sine metu, neque adijcias peccatum super peccatum: That is, be not without feare concerning sinnes forgiuen, neither adde sin vnto sin. To which, first I answere, that this Booke is not Canonicall Scripture, and therefore not to be alleaged for the determining of questions in controuersie, nor for the confirming of the doctrines of faith. Secondly, I answere, that they haue corruptly translated the originall text, for he willeth vs not to feare concerning our sins forgiuen, but concerning the forgiuenesse of them before they are remitted, lest we should securely adde sinne vnto sinne, because forgiuenes is promised whensoeuer we repent, and so abuse the mercy and long suffering of God to our iust condemnation. So that hee forbiddeth not to beleeue certainly, that our sinnes are remitted whē God hath pardoned them, but hee forbiddeth vs to runne on in sinne securely presuming vpon forgiuenes, as plainly appeareth by the originall text and the whole drift and scope of the place. For in the Verse going before he vseth this speech: Say not I haue sinned, and what euill hath happened vnto me, for the Lord is long suffering, but yet he will not dismisse or acquite thee; and in this Verse hee biddeth vs not to bee without feare concerning the forgiuenesse of sin, adding sin vnto sin, that is, we must not goe on in sin presuming vpon forgiuenesse: and Verse 6. Doe not say that his mercie is great, he will forgiue my manifold sinnes: 7. For mercie and wrath are swift with him; but vpon sinners his indignation shall rest. 8. Doe not deferre to turne vnto the Lord, neither put it off from day to day; for suddenly the wrath of the Lord shall breake forth, & in thy securitie thou shalt be destroyed, and thou shalt perish in the time of vengeance. In all which words he doth not take away the assurance of the forgiuenesse of our sins after we haue truly repented of them, but carnall security and vaine presumption, whereby men deferre their repentance vpon hope of mercy and forgiuenesse whensoeuer they repent. Lastly, though this place were to be vnderstood concerning sins forgiuen, yet the scope thereof is not to hinder our assurance of forgiuenes when wee haue truly repented, but only that we doe not after wee haue obtained remission of our sins, take occasion thereby of falling into sin againe, and so abuse the mercy and goodnes of God, vsing it as an argument to moue vs to goe on in sin, because the Lord vpon our repentance is alwayes ready to receiue vs to mercie.

of

CHAP. XIV.

The reasons alleaged against the assurance of our saluation, answered.

AND so much concerning the testimonies of Scripture, which are alleaged against the certaintie of faith: Now let vs consider their reasons. First, they obiect that it is proud arrogancie and hereticall presumption for a miserable Sinner, without all doubting to assure himselfe that hee is elected and shall be saued. To which I answere, that if with the Pharisaicall Papists and proud Iusticiaries, wee did build our assurance vpon our owne merits and worthinesse, it were indeed intolerable arrogancie and proud presumption, not only certainly to beleeue, but euen to doubt whether wee are elected and shall be saued (for whereas doubting is, there is some hope also) whereas the Scriptures peremptorily conclude, that they who looke for righteousnesse and saluation by the Law, are vnder the curse, Galath. 3. 10. and that by the workes of the Law shall no flesh be iustified in Gods sight, Rom. 3. 20. and that wee are iustified not by our deserts in whole, or in part, but freely by Gods grace through the redemption which is in Christ Iesus, as it is, Verse 24. But seeing wee wholly disclaime our owne righteousnesse, and humbly acknowledging our misery and wretchednesse, doe wholly rely our selues vpon the gracious promises of God, and the merits of Christ Iesus; seeing we become nothing in our selues in the worke of our saluation that God may be all in all; seeing wee cast away all glory from our selues, that wee may wholly glory in the Lord; according to that Ierem. 9. 24. Let him that glorieth glory in this, that hee vnderstandeth and knoweth me: This is not proud arrogancy nor hereticall presumption, but Christian humility which giueth all glory vnto God, leauing nothing to our selues but the comfort which is wrought in our hearts, by the assurance wee haue of Gods promises. Nay, the more vndoubtedly wee trust in Gods promises, the greater is our humility; for the more wretched we are in our owne eyes, the more wee see our imperfections, yea our nothing in Gods sight; and hereby we are moued to go out of our selues, to seeke for saluation onely in Gods free grace and Christs merits, and to rest in them with full assurance, as being in themselues al-sufficient without our workes and worthinesse. On the other side the more wee doubt of our saluation, in respect of our vnworthinesse, the more is our pride and arrogancie. For we would not doubt in regard of our vnworthinesse, vnlesse we looked for saluation by our worthinesse, and therefore we come so farre short in faith and hope, as wee finde our selues short in merits. And whence can this proceed but from arrogancie and pride, which maketh men to looke for saluation in themselues, & to doubt of Gods mercie and Christs merits, vnlesse they find that they haue deserued them by their owne workes and worthinesse? Let vs therefore abhorre this proud humilitie of the Papists, which maketh them doubt of Gods mercifull promises, and consequently of his truth; for as it is, 1. Iohn 5. 10. He that beleeueth not God, hath made him a liar; and also of the sufficiencie and value of that inestimable price, which Christ Iesus hath giuen for our redemption, as though it were imperfect in it selfe, vnlesse it bee itched and parched vp with our owne merits and worthinesse: and though we are most abiect, wretched, and in a desperate case in respect of our selues, yet let vs haue assured trust and confident boldnes, yea a triumphant boasting and glorying in respect of our Sauiour Christ, as the Apostle speaketh, Ephes. 3. 12. Rom. 5. 2. Notable is the saying of Augustine to this purpose, Ideò præsume non de operatione tua, sed de Christi gratia, presume therefore (saith hee) not of thine owne working, but of Christs grace, for yee are saued by grace, saith the Apostle; therefore here is no arrogancy but faith, to shew what thou hast receiued; it is not pride but deuotion. So in another place, Hoc dixit Deus, hoc promisit, si parum est, hoc iurauit: The Lord hath said this, he hath promised it, and if this be not enough hee hath sworne it. Because therefore the promise is sure and confirmed, not according to our merits, but according to his mercie, let no man professe that with feare, of which hee cannot doubt. But they further vrge, that humble doubting is better then presumptuous assurance; I answere, first that their doubting is full pride, which maketh them looke for saluation in their owne worthinesse, rather then in Gods free mercie and Christs merits. Secondly, that our faith and certaine assurance is full of humilitie; for wee freely confesse our owne vnworthinesse, and dare not offer before the seate of Gods iustice that righteousnesse which is in vs, as desiring in whole or in part to be iustified thereby; nay, rather we pray with the Prophet, Psal. 143. 2. Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, for in thy sight shall none that liueth be iustified; and though wee know nothing by our selues, yet doe wee plainly affirme with the Apostle, that we are not hereby iustified, 1. Cor. 4. 4. But this humility doth not abate our faith and certaine assurance, yea rather it doth confirme and increase it, for it maketh vs to goe out of our selues, as finding no hope of saluation whereupon wee may rest, and mooueth vs to seeke for saluation in Christ, who is such a sure anchor-hold, that whosoeuer pitch the anchor of their hope on him, shall finde it sure and stedfast, and whosoeuer build their faith on this foundation & corner stone, the power of Hell shall neuer preuaile against them.

Q. Sect. 2. Our vnworthinesse no cause why we should doubt of our election

Secondly, they obiect that we are vnworthy of Gods loue, or to be elected, and therfore we cannot be assured thereof. I answere, this were true if Gods election depended vpon our worthinesse and deserts; but seeing the Lord respecteth not any thing in vs, but elected vs freely of his vndeserued grace and meere good will; our vnworthinesse in our selues may well stand with the assurance of our election. For those who are most vnworthy need not to doubt of Gods loue and their election and saluation, so that they wholly rely vpon Gods mercy and Christs merits by a true and liuely faith; for as much as they are not grounded vpon their worthinesse, and therefore cannot be ouerthrowne by their vnworthinesse. Notable is the saying of Augustine to this purpose. There are three things (saith hee) which so strengthen and confirme my heart, that no merits, no consideration of mine owne vilenesse, no estimation of the heauenly blessednesse, can deiect me from the height of my hope: vpon them my soule is surely settled. Wilt thou know what they are? I consider three things vpon which my hope wholly relieth, to wit, the loue of adoption, the truth of the promise, the abilitie of performance. Let now my fooliſh cogitation murmure as much as it will, saying, but who art thou, or how great is that glory, or with what merits doest thou hope to obtaine it? And I will boldly answere, I know whom I haue beleeued, and I am assured, because God hath adopted me in great loue, because hee is true in his promise, because he is powerfull in performance, for he may doe what he will.

Tria sunt quæ sic roborant & confirmant cor meum, vt nulla me penuria meritorum, &c. Aug. Manual, cap. 23.

Q. Sect. 3. Weaknesse of faith and certainty may well stand together.

Thirdly, they obiect that our faith is weak and feeble, and by reason thereof the faithfull (as appeareth by continuall experience) are assaulted with doubting, and grieuously shaken with Sathans tentations, so as there can be no such certaintie of faith as we speak of. To which I answere, that weaknesse of faith is not opposed as contrary to certainty, but to strongnesse and full perswasion, and therefore weaknesse and certainty may well stand together. Neither doe we imagine such a certainty of faith, which is neuer shaken with doubting, nor assaulted with tentations; yea, rather we teach that those whom God endueth with most faith, he most exerciseth in the conflict of tentations, like a wise Captaine who setteth that souldier which is best armed and strongest, to beare the brunt in the fore-front of the battell. And the Deuill is most readie to assault those who most resist him, and most violently to strike where he seeth the shield of faith held vp to defend; and therefore our Sauiour hath taught all his faithfull children to pray, lead vs not into tentation, but deliuer vs from euill. But withall wee affirme that though this weake faith be assaulted with Satans tentations, yet is it neuer ouercome; though it be opposed with doubting, yet it neuer falleth from assurance and certaine perswasion; though it be sometimes shadowed, and the shining light thereof dimmed, yea though it be for a time hid and couered, yet in it owne nature it remayneth firme and stedfast; like the Sun which alwayes shineth, though oftentimes by reason of the interposition of the clouds or the earth, we cannot discerne the beames thereof; or like vnto the fire which being hid vnder the ashes doth retaine his naturall heate, although we feele it not: So our faith retaineth in it selfe his certaintie and assurance, as it were his light and heate, when as it is shadowed with the clouds of doubting, and couered vnder the ashes of Sathans tentations.

But it may bee demanded how a weake faith assaulted with Sathans tentations, can continue certaine, seeing the strongest faith can doe no more but certainly perswade? I answere, that our certainty respecteth not our faith it selfe, but the obiect thereof, namely, Gods mercy and Christs merits. And therefore seeing a weake faith doth as well apply vnto vs the mercies of God and merits of Christ as a stronger, therefore also it certainly perswadeth vs as well and truly, though not so strongly and fully of our election and saluation, as a stronger doth. So that when we haue the least sparke of faith, it doth illuminate our mindes, so as wee can truly discerne the louing countenance of the Lord shining vpon vs though somewhat dimly, and as it were afarre off; euen as he that is pore-blind doth as certainly see the Sunne, as hee who is most sharp-sighted, though not so cleerly. And as he who is in a darke dungeon doth discerne the light as surely as a little hole, though he be compassed about with blacke darknesse, as he who is in the open fields; so when wee are as it were pore-blind, and compassed about with the darke mist of ignorance, yet by the dim sight sight of faith wee certainly discerne Gods loue and fauour shining vpon vs, though the more wee increase in knowledge and faith, the more cleerely wee perceiue it, till at last hauing attained vnto fulnesse of faith we see him neere at hand, and as it were face to face. True it is that our faith which is in it selfe weake and feeble, and compassed about with the darknesse of ignorance, is mixt and turmoiled with much feare & doubting, by reason of our naturall inclination vnto diffidence and incredulity, the manifold tentations of Satan, and the burthen of our sins lying heauy vpon our consciences: which maketh Gods deere children to grone and complaine, yea sometime to murmure and repine against God himselfe, as though hee were their enemy, because he suffereth them thus to be vexed; but still it riseth after it hath receiued a foile, and gathereth new strength against all new assaults, vntill in the end it obtaineth full victory, so as all the faithful may say with the Apostle, 2. Cor. 4. 8 We are afflicted on every side, yet are wee not in distresse; in powrtie but not ouercome of powrtie. 9. We are persecuted, but not forsaken, cast downe but wee perish not. For though their faith be weake, and their tentations vehement and violent, yet this bruised reed is not broken, this smoking flax is not quenched; but as the reed in a boysterous tempest is blowne downe euen to the ground, but when the tempest is past riseth vp againe to his former estate; so though the boysterous blasts of Satans tentations beate vs downe euen to the earth, yet by faith wee rise againe when the storme is ouer-blowne.

Sect. 5.

Secondly, it may be demanded how the faith of Gods children can be said to be certaine, seeing it is continually assaulted and often foiled with doubting, which is opposed to the certainty of faith. To which wee may easily answere, if wee know and remember that euery Christian is diuided into two parts, the flesh and the spirit, which continually fight and striue the one against the other. And as they themselues are thus opposed, so are their qualities and fruits, for in the spirit is faith, loue, hope, zeale, joy in the Holy Ghost, and such other sanctifying graces; in the flesh is doubting, and infidelitie, hatred of God, presumption and desperation, coldnesse, dulnesse, yea, deadnesse in religion, feare, horrour and such like corruptions, so as we may say with the Apostle, I know that in my flesh, that is, my vnregenerate part, dwelleth no good thing. Rom. 7. 18. Now as there is a continuall warre betweene the flesh & the spirit, so also betweene their qualities and fruits; for faith is continually assaulted with doubting and infidelity; loue of God with the hatred of God, hope with presumption and desperation; zeale with coldnesse and dulnesse in religion; the joy in the Holy Ghost with horrour and feare of Gods anger, the curse of the Law and condemnation; and sometimes the one, sometimes the other hath the vpper hand, both in the meane time retaining their nature and properties, although (as we say) remissis gradibus, not exercising them in that measure and degree, as they doe when they haue victory and giue the other the foile. For example, when in some grieuous affliction, the hatred of God doth assault the loue of God in our heart, and doth so foile and wound it, that we can scarse discerne that it breatheth or retaineth life, yet notwithstanding the loue of God euen at that instant is not turned into hatred, nor receiueth any properties thereof, but still retaineth his owne nature and properties, which againe cleerely appeare and shew themselues when the conflict is ended. The like may be said of our hope, zeale, joy in the Holy Ghost, and other graces, when they are most foiled by the corruption of the flesh, which fights against them, so as they cannot possibly exercise their owne actions and functions, yet doe they not receiue any carnall properties, nor lose any of their own, but retaine still their owne nature, which againe manifesteth it selfe when the assault is ended. Euen as fire couered ouer with ashes retaineth still his owne nature of light and heate, though then by reason of the ashes the light be not seene, nor the heat felt; but when the ashes are remoued and new matter added vnto it, then it shineth, and burneth, and heateth as much as it did before: so when the graces of Gods Spirit are couered (as it were) vnder the ashes of our corruption, they are not discerned by their properties and effects; but when the corruptions are remoued by vertue of Gods Spirit, and the graces nourished with hearing of the Word, Prayer, holy conferences, and such like spirituall exercises, as it were with new matter added vnto them, then doe they againe shine in their brightnesse, and exercise their wonted strength in all good duties to God and our Neighbour.

§. Sect. 6. Faith assaulted with doubting, retaineth his owne nature and properties.

And as it is with all other graces, so also with faith, which is often assaulted with doubting and infidelitie, and sometimes also so foiled that wee can hardly discerne any breath or life in it; but yet euen then it retaineth it owne nature and properties, and doth not receiue the nature & properties of doubting, but as the tree which is shaken with boysterous blasts of winde and is not ouerthrowne, doth in the middest of the tempest liue and sucke nourishment out of the earth, and still retaines his owne nature and properties; so when our faith is shaken with the boysterous blasts of Sathans tentations, and with our own naturall doubting and infidelitie, yet it still liueth and sucketh nourishment out of Gods gracious promises, and still still it retaineth his owne propertie of certaine perswasion, though then it doe not exercise it in action, so manifestly as before and after the conflict of tentations. And as the shaking of the tree is not of the nature thereof, for of it selfe it standeth firme and steady; but by outward accident, namely, the winde blowing vpon it: so is not vncertaine wauering and vnconstant doubting of the nature of faith, for of it selfe it is firme and certaine, but it commeth by outward accident from the boysterous blasts of infidelitie, and the tentations of Satan, which (as it were) violently blow vpon it, which being past, it remayneth like the tree firme and constant. And as the graces of Gods Spirit, and the flesh and the corruptions thereof doe still retaine in themselues their owne nature and properties, so also doe they most commonly shew themselues in their diuers fruits and effects, and that oftentimes in the conflict and time of tentation, so that the regenerate man may at the same time feele in himselfe contrary affections and actions; for the Spirit acknowledging Gods goodnesse, mercie and truth in his promises, is repleniſhed with joy, being in hope to enjoy them; on the other side the flesh feeling present misery, and the sharpnesse of afflictions, sorroweth and grieueth. The Spirit apprehending and applying vnto it the sweet promises of the Gospell, doth quietly rest vpon them; the flesh seeing it owne corruption, and the huge waight of sin that presseth it downe, feareth and doubteth. The Spirit being assured of euerlasting happinesse, triumpheth with joy, desiring nothing more then to be dissolued and to bee with Christ; the flesh finding it selfe guilty of sin, and in this respect subject to the anger of God and condemnation, feareth and trembleth to thinke vpon death. The Spirit conceiueth of God as of a mercifull Father in Christ, and in all necessities flieth vnto him by hearty prayer; the flesh conceiueth of him as of an angry and seuere Iudge, and therefore flieth from him, desiring rather to seeke for helpe any where else then of the Lord. So that the Christian by reason hereof, at the same time findeth in himselfe opposition betweene action and action, affection and affection. For at the same instant, while the flesh, hauing in it the conscience of sin and sense of guiltinesse, doth murmure, repine and complaine against God, as an enemy which is ready to destroy vs; the spirit doth flie vnto God by a liuely faith, and committeth it selfe to his prouidence, will and protection, expecting saluation from him only; which it could neuer doe, if it were not assured that wee were in his loue & fauour. And in this the Christian may not vnfitly be compared to a child, who hauing beene sharply corrected by his Father, doth auoid his presence as though he were his enemie; but if at the same time some sudden danger affright him, before all other he runneth to his Father for safegard and protection: so when our heauenly Father hath sharply corrected vs, either with some outward or inward afflictions, we flie from his presence as though he were our enemy; but when an imminent danger ouer-taketh vs, and we be in perill to bee supplanted with Satan and his assistants, who are our enemies indeed, then the son-like affection which is wrought in our hearts by Gods Spirit, doth moue vs to run vnto him before all other, desiring and crauing his aide and assistance. And thus it appeareth, that though the flesh and the spirit bee mixt together, yet they retaine their owne natures, properties and effects; and though faith which is a grace of the Spirit, be mingled with doubting, yet this doubting is not of the nature of faith, which in it selfe is certaine and assured, nay, it is not an infirmity of faith, as lamenesse is an infirmity of the joynts, and dimnesse of the sight, for it is not any way incident to the nature thereof. And therefore much lesse is it a commendable vertue of faith, as the Papists teach, but a fruit of vnbeliefe which is in the part vnregenerate, and opposed vnto faith, as appeareth, Rom. 4. 20. And consequently, though faith be assaulted with doubting, yet in it owne nature it may and doth remaine certaine and assured,

Rom. 4. 20.

Fourthly, they obiect that it is rash presumption, and proud boldnesse for any man to search into the mystery of Gods secret counsels, or to take vpon him peremptorily to determine that he is one whom God hath elected. For who hath knowne the minde of the Lord? as it is 1. Cor. 2. 16. I answere that it is true indeed, whosoeuer prieth into Gods hidden counsels and secret Decree of Predestination, is proud and presumptuous, & shal in the end receiue the punishment of both, being giuen ouer of God to fall into many errours and in the end vtter desperation. And therefore it is very dangerous, yea pernicious to our soules, if we labour after the assurance of our election by vsing these meanes, and iudge of Gods Decree, according to the conceit of our owne reason and doubtfull speculations. But yet though the will of God be in it selfe secret and not to be searched into; this must not hinder vs from looking into his will reuealed, though wee can gather no certainty of our election by searching into his secret Decree, yet this is no impediment why wee may not gather it out of his Word, where hee hath reuealed his Decree and the execution thereof: though wee can haue no assurance by our owne speculations, yet we may attaine vnto it by the testimony of Gods Spirit, which witnesseth to our spirits that we are the sonnes of God, which also searcheth all things, euen the deepe things of God,

1. Cor. 2. 16.

Rom. 8. 16.

God, and is giuen vnto vs that wee also might know the things which God hath giuen vs, as the Apostle teacheth vs, 1. Cor. 2. 10, 12. and therefore it is no pride or presumption to be certaine and assured of that which the Lord hath reuealed in his Word, to this end that we might be certainly assured thereof. But it may be demanded how this certainty can be gathered out of the Scriptures? I answere, that if wee would attaine vnto it, wee must not seeke it in the Law, where the promises of life and saluation are made vpon the condition of our owne works and worthinesse, which condition we can neuer performe, and therefore can neuer be assured of the promise: but out of the Gospell, which doth not only shew that some are predestinated to life, and some rejected, neither doth it only speake of our election, as it was ordained in Gods secret Decree in it selfe, or reuealed in his Word, but also it setteth out vnto vs the execution of the Decree, with the causes, meanes, signes and effects of our election, and how it is accomplished for the bringing vs to those ioyes to which God hath chosen vs. First, therefore it sheweth the Decree of God concerning our election. Secondly, Gods Decree concerning our redemption by the death and obedience of Christ our Mediatour. Thirdly, the Decree of God concerning the calling of his Church by the Ministery of the Word, that they may be ingrafted into the body of Christ, and so participate with him in all his benefits to their saluation. Fourthly, the Decree concerning the sending of his Spirit into the hearts of his chosen, by the inward operation whereof the Word is made effectuall for the begetting of faith and repentance. Fiftly and lastly, his Decree concerning the justifying and saning of those who repent truly of their sins, and apprehending and applying vnto themselues by a liuely faith, Christ and his merits and obedience, doe approch vnto the throne of grace to receiue mercy and forgiuenesse. And all these are so linked together that they can neuer possibly be seuered, so that he who is assured of one, may be assured of all; whosoeuer is certaine that hee hath faith and repentance, may be certaine also of his election, though hee neuer presumptuously search into Gods secret counsell.

Fiftly, they obiect that there is no certainty of faith which is not grounded vpon Gods Word: but there is no place of Gods Word which assureth vs of our particular election & saluation, & therfore we can haue no certainty of faith concerning our particular election & saluation. I answere, though the Lord giue vs no particular promise in his Word, yet hee giueth vs that which is equiualent and of like force, namely his generall promise without any limitation, exception or condition, but the condition of faith and repentance, with a commandement to apply the same. And because naturally we are vnable in our selues to performe this, therefore hee hath ordained the Ministery of the Word, and the vse of the Sacraments, which he maketh effectuall by the inward operation of his Spirit, for the begetting and confirming of our faith and stirring vs vp to repentance; which being wrought in vs, wee may as certainly bee perswaded that the generall promises belong vnto vs, as if they were made vnto vs particularly & by name.

Sect. 9. That our assurance of election dependeth not vpon the sufficiency of our faith & repentance.

Sixtly, they obiect that wee cannot be assured of the sufficiencie of our faith and repentance, and therefore we can haue no certaine assurance of our election and saluation. I answere; this reason were good if our election and saluation depended vpon the worthinesse or measure of our faith and repentance; but seeing they depend not thereupon, but vpon Gods free mercy, and the worthinesse and sufficiencie of Christs merits and obedience, therefore though our faith be neuer so weake, and our repentance but in small measure, yet so they be true and vnfained, not dissembled and hypocriticall, wee may certainly be assured of our election and saluation, for a weake faith doth apply Christ and all his benefits vnto vs as well as a strong, though not in so strong and perfect a manner, as shall appeare hereafter. But yet wee must not content our selues with a small and weake measure, but labour to grow vp from faith to faith, till wee become perfect men in Christ.

Sect. 10. The sight of our imperfections no cause why we should doubt of our election.

Seuenthly, they obiect that though there were no cause of doubting, so long as wee looke vpon Gods mercy and truth in his promises, and Christs obedience and merits, yet at least there is cause of doubting when we looke vpon our selues, and find our great indisposition to performe the condition of faith and repentance, which God requireth of all who shall be partakers of his promises, and our manifold imperfections & great vnworthinesse of the least of Gods mercies. And thus these Iugglers play fast and loose, making their faith like vnto the ignis fatuus, or going fire, which interchangeably sometimes shineth cleerely, and sometimes vanisheth and leaueth behinde it nothing but blacke darknesse. But let vs constantly oppose our selues against such inconstancie, and in no wise admit of such mutable varietie in our faith, which maketh it more changeable then the Moone, which one while shineth with full brightnesse, and in small distance of time cannot be discerned. And to this end let vs know, first, that though in our selues we be not worthy of the least of Gods mercies, yet our vnworthinesse maketh vs not vncapable of the greatest; for all Gods benefits are his free gifts, which hee promiseth and bestoweth without any respect of our worthinesse or deserts, of his meere grace & vndeserued loue. And therefore as when we are most worthy in our owne conceit, there is no reason why wee should presume the more; so when we find our selues vnworthy, there is no cause why wee should hope the lesse, or bee more weakly assured of Gods promises; for as they are not made vpon the condition of our worthinesse, so they are not disanulled and made void by our vnworthinesse, otherwise no man liuing could haue assurance of them, seeing all men liuing are vnworthy of them. But the Lord hath made all his promises vnto vs in Christ, who was sent to be our Mediatour, to the end that wee who were altogether vnworthy in our selues, might be made worthy in him of all Gods mercies and benefits. And therefore whosoeuer lay hold vpon Christ, with a true though a weake faith, and bring forth the fruits thereof in repentance, they may certainly be assured of their election and saluation, notwithstanding their vnworthinesse. Secondly, wee are to know that our faith doth not respect our selues in our selues, neither are we the object thereof, but Christ, his merits and obedience; whom our faith doth not behold standing aloofe off (as the Papists dreame) but as hee is vnited vnto vs, and become our head and wee his members; so as now wee cannot looke vpon our selues, but we must looke vpon Christ, because he is in vs and we in him. And therefore when we consider the greatnesse of our sinnes wee despaire not, because now we looke vpon them as they are translated from vs and laid vpon Christ, who hath fully satisfied his Fathers justice by his alone, and al-sufficient sacrifice vpon the Crosse; when wee behold our imperfections we doubt of Gods promises, because they are couered with his perfect righteousnesse; when wee thinke vpon our vnworthinesse wee are not discouraged, seeing by communicating of Christs worthinesse we are made worthy; when we consider that in our selues wee are subiect to the curse of the Law, the anger of God and eternall condemnation, wee are neuertheleſse assured of euerlasting life and saluation, because we are vnited to Christ our head, who hath taken away our curse and nailed it to his Crosse, borne his Fathers displeasure to reconcile vs vnto him, and was condemned and suffered death to free vs from death and condemnation, and to make vs heires of life and saluation. So that now we behold the huge debt of our sins, but as it is discharged and cancelled with his merits and full satisfaction; wee behold our imperfections, but as perfected by his perfections; wee looke vpon our vnworthinesse, but as it is ennobled with his worthines; and when wee set before vs the curse of the Law, the anger of God and sentence of condemnation, wee consider them as taken away and swallowed vp of Christs death and full obedience; because now wee are vnited vnto Christ, and hee is become ours, that we might become his; he hath taken vpon him our sinnes and vnworthinesse, that he might make vs partakers of his righteousnesse and worthinesse. And therefore those things which God hath wisely joyned together, let not our faith fondly separate; for if it be vnlawfull in carnall marriages, then much more in the spirituall marriage betweene Christ and his Church. But let vs looke vpon our selues, not in our selues, but as wee are vnited vnto Christ, and then our selfe worthinesse of Hell and destruction will not abate our assurance of life and saluation.

Eightly, they obiect that euery Heretick, Epicure and Worldling, continuing in their sins and wickednes, may faine to themselues such a perswasion of the certainty of election. But this is nothing to the purpose, for the question is not of Epicures and Worldlings, who haue no faith or a dead faith, but of true beleeuers, who bring forth the fruits of their faith, at least in an holy desire and endeuour of seruing the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse. For they that cannot bee assured that they haue faith, cannot haue any certainty of their election; but none can haue any assurance of faith, vnlesse they bring forth the fruits of their faith in dying to sin and rising againe to newnesse of life, for faith purifieth the heart and worketh by loue: and therefore such as liue in their sinnes without repentance hauing no faith, can haue no certaintie of their election, though they may deiude themselues with a fond perswasion which hath no other ground but carnall security and fond presumption. But hence it followeth not, that because a dead faith affoordeth no true certainty, therefore a liuely faith doth it not; because a prophane Epicure or carnall Worldling, deceiueth himselfe with a vaine opinion, therefore those that are truly conuerted, mortified vnto sin, and raised vp to newnesse of life, can haue no certainty of their election and saluation. For what similitude is there betweene light and darknesse, righteousnesse, and vnrighteousnesse, the children of God and the children of Belial, the repentant and vnrepentant, faith and no faith?

Lastly, they obiect that if they teach this doctrine of the certainty of election, men wil abuse it to nourish in them carnall securitie and presumption. To which I answere, that wicked men abuse the whole doctrine of the Gospell to their destruction; for when they are taught that God is most gracious and mercifull, that Christ hath died for vs, and giuen himselfe as a sufficient price to redeeme vs out of the power of sin, Satan, death and damnation, and maketh intercession for vs

to God his Father; that the Lord is slow to wrath and ready to forgiue, they take occasion hereby of continuing in their sins, and deferring their repentance, till God take them away and consume them in his heauy displeasure. But hence it followeth not that the Gospell must not be taught, because carnall men abuse it to their iust condemnation; for though to these it be the sauour of death vnto death, yet to those who are saued, it is the sauour of life vnto life, as it is, 2. Cor. 2. 16. Though it be fooliſhneſſe to thoſe that periſh, yet it is the power of God to those who are ordained to saluation, and God is no lesse glorified in the one by shewing his mercy, then in the other by shewing his iustice. Though worldly men abuse it to carnall securitie, yet the godly are the more incited thereby to serue the Lord in holines and newnes of life. For like louing children, the more they are assured of the loue of their heauenly Father, and secured of his mercie and bountifull benefits, the more they loue him againe, the more they loue him, the more zealous they are of his glory, and the greater their zeale is, the greater is their care in making the light of their godly and Christian liues to shine before men, that their heauenly Father may be glorified. So that it is not the fault of this precious seed, but the barrennesse of the ground which maketh it fruitlesse, or else for good wheate, sendeth tares, cockle and darnell; it is not any defect or ill disposition in this sweete smelling flower, but the venemous nature of these Spiders which turne honey into poyson: and therfore the seed must be cast vpon the earth, though there bee stones with the good ground which will neuer bring forth fruit; the flowers of sweet consolation must not be pulled vp by the rootes and cast away: for though the Spider gathereth poyson, yet the profitable Bee will gather honie out of them. Secondly, when we teach the certainty of election, we doe not teach that men must gather it out of Gods secret counsaile, but from their owne sanctification, by which they may be assured that they are iustified, called and elected: and therefore whosoeuer are not sanctified but continue in their sins without repentance, can haue no assurance by our doctrine that they are elected or shall be saued; yea contrariwise, wee teach out of Gods Words that whosoeuer liue in the flesh shall die, Rom. 8. 13. that they which performe the lusts thereof shall neuer inherit the kingdome of God, Gal. 5. 19, 20, 21. that none who continue in their vnrighteousnesse and vncleannesse shall enter into the heauenly Ierusalem, 1. Cor. 6. 9, 10. Reuel. 21. 27. but shall haue their portion in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; as it is Verse 8. Now what stronger bridle to curbe in our vnruly flesh, when it is ready to run into sin, then to be assured that if we liue in sin, and fulfill our carnall lusts, wee are in the state of condemnation? What sharper spurre to pricke vs forward when wee are ready to faint, or slack our pace in the Christian race of holines and righteousnes, then to consider that our sanctification and newnes of life, is the onely meanes whereby we may come to the assurance of our election and saluation?

v.2.16. v.1.18.

CHAP. XV.

Of our Redemption.

THe next cause of our saluation is our redemption by Iesus Christ: for as the Lord hath from all eternitie elected vs to saluation of his meere mercy without any respect of our workes or worthinesse; so he hath ordained in this his eternall Decree, our Sauiour Christ to be the Mediatour, who should worke the worke of our saluation, and as it were the conduit whereby he would conuey his grace, mercie and euerlasting saluation vnto vs; and hath set him apart to be our Sauiour and Redeemer, who should saue and deliuer vs out of the captiuitie and bondage of our spirituall enemies, and restore vs to the glorious libertie of the sonnes of God. This our redemption is an effect of Gods election, whereby our Sauiour Christ (being set apart of his Father for this purpose) hath freed and deliuered all Gods elect out of the captiuitie of their spirituall enemies, sin, death and the Deuill; by offering himselfe for the price of their redemption, and a sufficient sacrifice for sin, for the appeasing of his Fathers displeasure and satisfying of his iustice; to the end that being deliuered, they may glorifie him by seruing him in holines and righteousnes all the dayes of this life, and afterwards may inherit the Kingdome of glory, and the crowne of eternall happinesse which is purchased for them.

Q. Sect. 1. That whom God hath elected, vnto those also he giueth Christ to be their Redeemer.

Redemption what it is.

First, I say, that it is an effect of Gods election; for whom hee had chosen to euerlasting life in Christ, those by Christ hee hath saued and redeemed, and those onely as wee shall see afterwards.

The definition explained.

Secondly, I shew who is our Sauiour and Redeemer, namely Christ Iesus, who onely saueth vs from our sinnes, as it is Matth. 1. 21; Neither is there saluation in any other, as it is Acts 4. 12. For as there is but one God, so there is but one Mediatour betweene God and man, which is the man Iesus Christ, as it is, 1. Tim. 2. 5. And by him alone wee haue redemption through his blood, euen the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and that without respect of our worthinesse, but according to his rich grace, Ephes. 1. 7. Ephes. 1. 7. Luke 1. 18.

exclude God the Father, frō the work of our redemption, for he is the author & first cause, who hath so loued vs that hee sent his Sonne to saue and redeeme vs; nor the Holy Ghost who applieth vnto vs the merits and efficacie of Christs death, making them effectuall for our saluation; yet if wee speake properly, our Sauiour Christ only can bee called our Redeemer, and that in these respects: first, becausse hee alone was ordained and deputed to perfect the worke of our Redemption; secondly, becausse he onely was God and man, both which were necessarily required in our Mediatour and Redeemer, that hee might haue full right and abilitie to redeeme vs; thirdly, becausse he alone gaue himselfe to be the price of our redemption; and lastly, becausse in him onely there is perfect redemption as being our head, who not only hath saluation in himselfe, but also deriueth it to all the members of his body.

Thirdly, I set downe the captiuitie it selfe out of which wee were redeemed; namely, not the captiuitie of Egypt or Babylon, not out of the slauery of the Turke, Spaniard, or any other earthly Tyrant, whose thraldome might well be bitter but not long, becausse our liues are short and grieuous to the body, but extendeth not to the soules: but Christ hath deliuered vs out of the bondage of sin, Satan, Hell and Death, in which we should haue beene enthralled and fearefully tormented for euer and euer, not in body alone but in soule also.

Q. Sect. 2.
1. Pet. 1. 18. How Christ is said to haue bought vs with a price.

Fourthly, I shew the price which he hath giuen for our redemption, namely, not siluer and gold, or any corruptible thing, but himselfe; euen his body to be crucified and his bloud to be shed, that so his Fathers justice being satisfied and his wrath appeased, wee might be set free out of the thraldome of our spirituall enemies. But it may be demanded, how it can truly be said that Christ hath redeemed vs by paying the price of our redemption, seeing the Scriptures testifie that by his power hee hath forcibly deliuered vs out of the hands of our spirituall enemies. So Heb. 2. 14. it is said, that Christ destroyed him who had the power of death, that is the Deuill. And Col. 2. 15. the Apostle sheweth, that he hath spoiled principalities and powers, and hath led them openly and triumphed ouer them. And Luke 11. 22. he is compared to a valiant Champion who hath thrust the strōg man Satan out of his possession: by which it may appeare, that our Sauiour hath not redeemed vs by giuing a price after a legall manner, but by force, and as it were by conquest. I answere, that Christ hath both paid the price of our redemption, and also hath deliuered vs forcibly by his power; for hee paid the price vnto God to whom he offered the sacrifice of himselfe, that it might be a full satisfaction for sin, and a sufficient price to redeeme vs out of the captiuity of our spirituall enemies, and to purchase the fauour of God, and our heauenly inheritance in his Kingdome: and therefore in respect of God the Father, to whom our Sauiour offered himselfe, hee is said to haue redeemed vs by giuing a ransome for vs. But when Gods justice was fully satisfied, Christ dealt not with our spirituall enemies by intreatie, (much lesse offered hee this price of our redemption to Satan; for if no sacrifice might lawfully be offered vnto any saue God alone, much more vnlawfull was it that this sacrifice of Christs body, should be offered vnto the Deuill) but by his Almighty power hee ouercame the power of darknesse, vanquished Satan, subdued Death, and broke open the prison of the graue, and so by strong hand set all Gods elect at liberty. For after that the debt of our sins was discharged, our ransome paid, and the hand-writing of Ordinances cancelled and nailed vnto the Crosse, these our spirituall enemies had no just interest vnto vs, nor any thing to alleage why they should longer hold vs in their captiuitie; but yet the strong man who had taken possession would not willingly lose it, vnlesse hee were ouercome with a greater strength: & therefore our Sauiour Christ hauing bought vs of his Father, and so become our true owner, buckled with our spirituall enemies, ouercame these principalities and powers, triumphed gloriously ouer them, and freed vs out of their tyrannicall jurisdiction.

But if it may bee obiected that wee were captiues vnto Satan, and therefore the price of redemption was to bee paied vnto him, and not vnto God the Father who held vs not in his captiuitie. I answer, that though Satan held vs in his captiuitie, yet not in his owne right, for wee had not sinned against him to whom wee were not bound to performe obedience, nor were indebted vnto him; but wee had sinned against God, whose seruants wee were by right of creation, and had infintly runne into his debt, which wee were altogether vnable to pay. And therefore like a iust Iudge he condemned vs to the perpetuall prison of death, and committed vs to the custodie of Satan, as vnto a Iaylor, to bee kept in his bondage, till we had satisfied for our sinnes and discharged our debt, which being impossible to vs, our Sauiour Christ hauing assumed our nature and become our suretie and Mediatour paied that we owed, and suffered that which we had deserued, and so fully satisfying his fathers iustice, hath purchased our redemption; So as now Satan had no more authoritie to retaine vs in his captiuitie, then the Iaylor hath of holding him in prison who by the Iudge is released, or the executioner of hanging him who the Iudge hath acquitted or pardoned.

Q. Sect.
That the pa of redemp was not pa vnto Satan but vnto God

And

And therefore tyrannically exercising still his jurisdiction, our Sauiour by strong hand ouercame him and all the power of Hell, that so he might set vs at libertie whom his Fathers just sentence had acquitted and his mercie pardoned.

The last thing to be considered is the end of our redemption, namely, that we should no longer serue sin and Satan, out of whose bondage we are released; but become the seruants of Christ, who hath redeemed vs, serueing him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of our liues; that so glorifying him here on earth, he may glorifie vs in Heauen, and make vs partakers of those euerlasting joyes, which by his death and bloud-shed he hath purchased for vs.

CHAP. XVI.

Satans tentations concerning our redemption, wherewith he moueth the worldling to presumption, answered.

HAuing shewed what our redemption is; let vs now consider of those tentations of Satan which he suggesteth into the mindes of men, whereby he laboureth to depriue them of this great benefit, and to keepe them still in his captiuitie, or to pull them back againe when they are escaped. And these are of two sorts, the first leading to securitie and presumption, the other to doubting and desperation. For if hee haue to deale with worldly men; who were neuer truly conuerted vnto God, hee laboureth to perswade them that they are redeemed by Christ, and therefore though they liue in their sins, yet they shall be saued, for Christ came into the world to saue Sinners: but when he assaulteth the true Christian, who is indeed the redeemed of the Lord; then hee moueth him to doubt and despaire, either of the sufficiencie or of the efficacie of the worke of our redemption wrought by Iesus Christ. That he may continue the worldly man in his carnall securitie, and fond presumption, he vseth two principall reasons; the first, that the redemption wrought by Christ is vniuersall, and effectuall for the saluation of all the World; out of which he frameth this tentation. Christ hath shed his precious bloud, and suffered death for all the World, and hath redeemed all mankind which were lost in Adam, out of the bondage of Satan, Death and Hell; why therefore shouldest thou bee so strict in flying sin, with which thou art so much delighted? Why doest thou striue against the streame of thy corruptions? And wherefore shouldest thou take any great paines in the workes of holinesse and righteousnes, which are so bitter and vnpleasant to thy taste and appetite? For Christ came into the world to saue all men, and not those only who are so strict in their wayes; he came to redeeme the whole world, and gaue himself as a sufficient ransome for all men. And therefore doubtlesse he will not lose his labour, nor spill his bloud in vaine; he will not willingly let any perish, whom he hath purchased at so high a rate, and redeemed with so deare a price: hee is also so powerfull that nothing shall be able to pull them out of his hand, and so wise that he would not shed his bloud, for those whom hee would not saue. And who can imagine that God who is most just will impute those sins vnto thee for which Christ hath suffered, inflict death on thee for whom Christ died, and require that debt againe which is already discharged? Or who can imagine that God, who is immutable, should shew such inconstancie as to send his sonne into the World, to suffer death for the redemption of those whom he now will not saue; for if hee would, who could resist his will or withstand his power? And therefore if hee hath redeemed all, surely hee will saue all, and consequently thee amongst the rest, though thou liue as thou list and follow the lusts of thine owne heart? for thy sins and vnbeliefe cannot make his purpose void, nor annihilate the worke of thy redemption; yea the more thy sins abound, the more his grace will abound also.

John 10.28.

Q. Sect. 2. The answere to the former tentation.

For the answering of which tentation, we are to know, that vniuersall redemption which is the ground and foundation thereof, is an idle dreame of mans braine, which cannot bee justified by the Word of God the touchstone of all truth; neither hath our Sauiour Christ redeemed any other, then those whom hee effectually calleth vnto the sauing knowledge of their redemption, indueth with true faith and vnfained repentance, justifieth, sanctifieth, and lastly saueth, if we respect the purpose of God, and the will of our blessed Sauiour; although indeed the price hee gaue for our redemption, was of sufficient value for the sinnes of all the World, if it were applied by a liuely faith.

Testimonies of Scripture alleged against vniuersall redemption.

But because this doctrine hath many enemies, it is not sufficient to propound it vnlesse I proue it: and therefore I will shew first by testimonies of Scriptures and after by strong reasons, that our Sauiour Christ hath died for, and by his death redeemed those only whom hee indueth with true faith and vnfained repentance, and not for all the world, as they imagine. Matth. 20.28. it is said, that hee came into the world to giue his life a ransome for many. And 26.28. that his bloud was shed for many for the remission of sinnes. And Esay 53.11. that Christ should iustifie many by bearing their iniquities. So that hee hath not giuen his life a ransome,

Matth. 20.2. & 26.28.

and

and shed his bloud, and by bearing their iniquities justified all, but many, that is, part of all. Luke 2.34. Simeon saith, that Christ was appointed by Gods Decree for the fall and rising againe of many, that is, for the fall of many reprobates, and the rising againe of many who are elected, and therefore not for the redemption of all. So Christ saith that hee layeth downe his life for his sheepe, and therefore not for his wicked enemies; for vs, that is, for the company of the faithfull beleeuers, and therefore not for the Synagogue of Satan and wicked vnbeleeuers. So he is said to be the Sauiour of his people, and not of aliants and strangers; and to haue giuen himselfe for his Church, and not for those who haue no fellowship in the communion of Saints; that he should die for the Nation, that is, as Iohn saith for all Gods children Iewes and Gentiles, and therefore not for the wicked, and the children of Satan. So the Apostle saith, that the righteousnesse of God (that is, the righteousnesse of Iesus Christ imputed vnto vs by God, or the righteousnesse of Christ God and man) is manifested vpon all, and vnto all that beleeue; that God hath set forth Christ to be a reconciliation through faith in his bloud. And that he is the iustifier of him, which is of the faith of Iesus. Where the imputation of Christs righteousnesse, reconciliation with God, and justification, is restrained to the beleeuers only. And to the same purpose is that of the Apostle, Heb. 5.9. where Christ is said to be the author of eternall saluation vnto all that obey him, and therefore not vnto them who continue in their rebellion not obseruing his will, nor submitting themselues to bee ruled by the scepter of his Word. And as by these places it is apparant, that Christ and his benefits are restrained to the faithfull, so also in other places the vnbeleeuers and such as continue in their wickednesse, are flatly excluded from the participation of them, Iohn 3. 18. He that beleeueth in him shall not be condemned, but he that beleeueth not is condemned already. And Verse 36. He that beleeueth in the Sonne hath euerlasting life, and he that obeyeth not the Sonne shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. So Rom. 8.9. If any man haue not the Spirit of Christ, the same is not his; and consequently it followeth that if hee bee not Christs, then Christ and his benefits belong not vnto him. And the Apostle 1. Iohn 3.8. plainly affirmeth, that hee who committeth sinne (that is, hee who liueth in sin without repentance) is of the Deuill, and that he who is borne of God (that is, regenerate by his Spirit) sinneth not, that is, liueth not in his sinnes, neither committeth them with full consent of will. And Paul willeth Timothy to instruct his hearers, that they might come to amendment out of the snare of the Deuill: whereby it is manifest that those in whom sin raigneth, are not of Christ but of Satan, and that notwithstanding Christs death they are still in the snare of the Deuill till they come to amendment of life; because the bloud of Christ is not effectuall to free any out of their spirituall bondage, till it be applied vnto them by a liuely faith.

Luke 2.34. — John 10.15. & 15.13. — Rom.8.32,33. — Matth.1.21. — Ephes.5.25. — Iohn 11.52. — Rom.3.22,23, 25,26. — Heb.5.9. — Iohn 3.18. — Verse 36. — Rom.8.9. — 1.Iohn 3.8. — 2.Tim.2.26.

And thus it appeareth by plaine testimonies, that the redemption wrought by Christ belongeth onely to the faithfull; which also by vertue of Christs death and bloudshed, haue their sins and corruptions in some measure mortified; and not vnto the wicked, who liue and die in their sins without repentance.

Now I will also confirme this truth by strong reasons: First, those who were neuer knowne of Christ (that is, acknowledged for his) were neuer redeemed by his precious bloud-shed; neither is it probable that the Father would giue his welbeloued Sonne, & that the Sonne would giue himselfe for the redemption of those, whom in his eternall counsell he had decreed to reject, or (as all confesse) whom hee foresaw should perish: but our Sauiour will professe to the workers of iniquitie that he neuer knew them, Mat. 7. 23. and therefore he neuer gaue himselfe for their redemption.

Secondly, our Sauiour Christ gaue himselfe for none but those whom his Father eternally loued, and out of this loue elected to life eternall, for these are the first and principall causes of saluation vpon which all the other depend as subordinate vnto them, and the effect cannot extend it selfe further then the cause which produceth it. Christ therefore gaue himselfe for none, but those alone whom God his Father loued, and out of this loue gaue vnto him to be saued by that all-sufficient Sacrifice which he should offer for the satisfying of his justice; and these were those only that should beleeue in him; according to that of our Sauiour; So God loued the World that he gaue his only begotten Son, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him, should not perish but haue euerlasting life. And they who are thus giuen vnto Christ by his Father, and for whom hee gaue himselfe are saued by him and cannot perish. For being redeemed by him they become his, and he being stronger then all, none is able to pull them out of his hand, who by right of redemption belong vnto him. Now God loueth none but whom hee electeth, nor electeth any whom he doth not also saue; and on the other side hee first rejecteth whom hee afterwards condemneth, and hateth those whom he rejecteth; according to that, Iacob haue I loued, but Esau haue I hated. And therefore seeing God out of this loue hath chosen the least part of the World to eternall life; it followeth that Christ hath giuen himselfe as a price of redemption for the least number.

For

For how absurde is it to thinke, that Christ would so loue those whom his Father hateth, as to giue himselfe for them vnto the death? or that he would be so vnwisely prodigall of his precious blood, as to powre it out in vain for the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, and to whom is reserued the blacknesse of darknesse for euer? as it is, Iude Verse 4.13.

Thirdly, for whomsoeuer Christ hath offered a sacrifice vnto his Father, for them also hee maketh intercession and is become their Aduocate; neither is it probable that Christ would die for those, for whom hee will not intreate, and that hee would offer the sacrifice of his body for those, for whom he would not offer the sacrifice of his lips. Besides, it was the office of the same High Priest, to offer Sacrifice, and to pray for the people, and consequently of our Sauiour Christ, as appeareth, 1. Iohn 2.1,2. where he is said as well to be our Aduocate, as the propitiatory sacrifice of our sinnes; and the Apostle Paul saith, that as Christ died for vs, so he maketh intercession for vs. But our Sauiour Christ flatly excludeth, from all participation of the fruit of his intercession, all those who are of the World, that is, all meere Worldlings. Iohn 17.9. I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast giuen me; and the Apostle saith, that as he perfectly saueth, so also hee maketh intercession for those who come vnto God by him, that is, true beleeuers only: and therefore for them alone hee hath offered himselfe a sacrifice vnto his Father.

Fourthly, Christ hath died for those alone, in whom he hath attained vnto the end of his death; for whatsoeuer attaineth not his end is done in vaine, which argueth want of wisdome, or power, in the agent and efficient, neither of which without blasphemy can be ascribed vnto Christ, who is in both infinite: but the end of Christs death (that is, the eternall saluation of those for whom hee died) is attained vnto only in the elect and faithfull; for as it is Mark. 16.16. He that shall beleeue, shall be saued; but hee that will not beleeue, shall be damned. And Iohn 3.36. He that beleeueth in the Sonne hath euerlasting life, and he that obeyeth not the Sonne shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him: And therefore, Christ hath died for those alone, who beleeue & bring forth the fruits of their faith in obedience, and not for the vnbeleeuers and disobedient.

Fiftly, if all were redeemed by the death of Christ, then should they also bee saued: for what should hinder them from saluation, who are redeemed, seeing they haue receiued the pardon and remission of their sinnes, as appeareth, Ephes. 1.7. In whom wee haue redemption through his blood, euen the remission of our sinnes: Col. 1.14. And consequently whosoeuer are redeemed are iustified, and also heires of eternall blessednesse; for blessed are those whose iniquity is forgiuen, and whose sinne is couered, as it is Psal. 32.1. Seeing also Christ who hath redeemed vs is stronger then Satan and all the power of Hell, and therefore all their spirituall enemies conioyned together, cannot plucke those whom he hath redeemed out of his hand violently and against his will, neither can wee with any probable shew of reason imagine that he would willingly lose those whom he hath redeemed with the inestimable price of himselfe, neither will it stand with the iustice of God to impute the sinnes of any to their condemnation for which Christ hath fully satisfied: nor to exact that debt againe which hee hath paid: and therefore if Christ had died for all, God in his iustice could not chuse but saue all: and Christ might well say to his Father, To what purpose haue I died, if thou destroyest those whom I haue saued? What profit is in my bloud, if thou condemnest those whom I haue redeemed?

Lastly, if he died and by his death redeemed all; then also he died for and redeemed the Pagans, Turks, Atheists and Epicures, who were out of the Church and Couenant of grace; and so iustification, redemption and saluation should bee out of the Church, and be extended to those whom God neuer receiued into his Couenant; which is quite contrary to the whole course of the Scriptures, where it is said, that all who are saued are also added vnto the Church, Acts 2.47: and that Christ hath giuen himself only for his Church. Ephes. 5.25. Yea, if Christ died for all, and by his death redeemed them, then it must necessarily follow that hee had redeemed euen those damned soules, who were in Hell before his comming, which is most absurd to be imagined; for if they were redeemed, how did they againe fall into condemnation, seeing they being once become Christs can neuer perish, neither is any able to pull them out of his hands, as it is Iohn 10.28.

But against this it is obiected, that in the Scriptures Christ is said to haue died, and to haue giuen himselfe a ransome for all men, 1. Tim. 2.6. Who gaue himselfe a ransome for all men. And Heb. 2.9. he is said to haue tasted death for all men; and 1. Iohn 2.2. hee is said to be a reconciliation for the sinnes of the whole world. To which I answere, first, that these speeches are not to be vnderstood of all and singular men, but of all the faithfull which are gathered out of the whole world; for the drift of the Apostle is to shew, that our Sauiour Christ died not onely for the beleeuing Iewes, but for the Gentiles also, of what Country, Nation or condition soeuer they were. And so these generall speeches are ex-

Q. Sect. 4. In what sense Christ is said to haue died for all men.

Iohn 11.52. expounded, Iohn 11.52. where our Sauiour Christ is said to haue died, not onely for the Iewish Nation, but that also he might gather together in one, the children of God which were scattered. So also he is said, Reuel. 5.9. Reuel. 5.9. to haue redeemed vs (that is, all the faithfull) vnto God by his blood, out of euery kinred, tongue, people and Nation: and Galath. 3.26. Gal. 3.26,28. that all are the sonnes of God by faith in Christ Iesus; and Verse 28. That there is neither Iew nor Grecian, bond nor free, male nor female, but all are one in Christ Iesus. So that these places are not to bee vnderstood of all and singular men, but of all beleeuers, of what Nation or condition soeuer they bee. For all the promises and benefits promised in the Gospell, which is the Couenant of grace, are to be restrained to the condition of the Couenant, be they neuer so generall and vniuersall; and this condition is sometimes expressed, and sometimes vnderstood, but neuer excluded. So Iohn 3.16. Iohn 3.16. So God loued the world, that he hath giuen his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him should not perish, but haue life euerlasting. Rom. 3.22. And the Apostle saith, that the righteousnes of God by faith in Iesus Christ, is giuen to all that beleeue. Gal. 3.22. And that the Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should bee giuen to them that beleeue. So also Acts 10.43. Acts 10.43. It is said that through his Name whosoeuer beleeueth in him shall haue remission of sinnes. Secondly, I answere, that Christ in some sense may bee truely said to haue died for all the world, namely, in respect of the sufficiency of his death, though not in respect of the efficacie; for by his death he payed a sufficient price for the sins of all the world, and a full ransome for all mankind, if all would or could apply his merits and obedience vnto themselues by a liuely faith: but in respect of Gods counsell, Christs will, and the euent, his death was not effectuall for the redemption of all, but the faithfull onely. And as a soueraigne salue, may haue sufficient vertue in it selfe to cure innumerable wounds & sores, but yet it is effectuall for the healing of those onely to which it is applyed; so the precious balme of Christs bloud, is of sufficient vertue to heale the wounds of all sinners whatsoeuer, but notwithstanding it is effectuall to those onely, to whom it is applyed by a true and liuely faith. Yea, but the Apostle Iohn saith indefinitely of all men, that if any whatsoeuer sinne, we haue an Aduocate with the Father Iesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. 1. Iohn 2.1,2. To this I answere, that he writeth not this to all men indefinitely, but to the faithfull and the true members of the Church alone vnto whom his Epistle is directed and no other; neither doth hee cast these holy things vnto Dogges, or these precious pearles of Christian consolation before Swine, who would trample them vnder their filthy feet, but vnto those beleeuers who laboured vnder the heauy burthen of their sins, and desired ease. For he restraineth those indefinite words, if any man sinne, only to the faithfull in that which followeth, we haue an Aduocate, and he is the propitiation for our sinnes, joyning himselfe with all other beleeuers. Neither can they be extended to the wicked and reprobate, seeing Christ is not an Aduocate to plead for them, nor is a propitiatory Sacrifice vnto God his Father for their sinnes. For he is heard for all for whom he pleadeth, and God is propitious, reconciled vnto, and well pleased with them for whom he offereth this sacrifice to this end, or else it should be offered as vaine, as not attaining the end for which it is offered. But (say they) the Apostle extendeth this propitiation by Christ generally to all, for hee saith not for ours only, that is, for all the faithfull, but also for the sinnes of the whole world. I answere, that the Apostle by ours, vnderstandeth the faithfull to whom hee writeth, and by the whole world all other beleeuers that either then liued or should afterwards liue in all ages and in all places throughout the world, of what language or kinred, country or condition soeuer they were, as it is expounded in the song of the foure and twenty Elders. Apocalyp. 5.9. Apoc. 5.9.

But it is further vrged that it is plainely said in the Scriptures, that hee died for all without exception. I answere, that it is an vsuall thing in Gods Word, to put this word (all) for many, or for all those which are of one kind. So it is said that all the country of Iudea, and they of Ierusalem, went out vnto Iohn the Baptist, and were baptised of him; that is, not euery man without exception, but great multitudes. That our Sauiour Christ healed euery disease and sickenesse amongst the people, that is, many that were diseased, or diseases of all kinds. And that Christ healed all that were oppressed by the Deuill, that is, very many, for otherwise great numbers oppressed of the Deuill neuer came into our Sauiours presence. Thus also it is said that there was in the sheet which Peter saw in his Vision (πάντα τὰ τετράποδα) all forefooted beasts, that is, beasts of all kinds. And thus sometimes, by (all) wee are to vnderstand all the elect and them onely, and sometimes all the reprobate and them alone. In the first sense are these places to be vnderstood. Iohn 12.32. Iohn 12.32. our Sauiour saith, that after hee is crucified, he will draw all men vnto him, that is, all the faithfull and elect, for they only are conuerted vnto God, and drawne vnto Christ. So it is said, Esay 54.13. that all shall be taught of God. And Ier. 31.34. that all shall know him from the least to the greatest. And Ioel 2. Esay 54.13. Ier. 31.34. Ioel 2.28.

Apoc. 5.9.

Q. Sect. The former obiection ged & ans red.

Mark 1.5.

Matth. 4.23.

Acts 10.38.

Verse 12.

Iohn 12.32.

28. the Lord saith, that in the latter times he will powre out his spirit vpon all flesh, which places cannot bee vnderstood of the reprobates and wicked, but of all Gods elect and faithfull. Sometimes also wee are hereby to vnderstand all the reprobate and wicked. So Phil.2.21. the Apostle saith, that all seeke their own, and not that which is Iesus Christs, that is all worldlings and wicked men. And Iohn 3.32. the Baptist saith, that no man hath receiued Christs testimony, that is, none of the wicked and reprobate, for all the faithfull and elect receiue it and beleeue. By all which places it is euident that this word (all) sometime signifieth many, and sometime all of one kinde; and therefore in those places where it is said, that Christ hath died for all men, wee may vnderstand it of many, as it is expounded Matth. 26. 28. or of all the faithfull, as in many places it is restrained.

Secondly, It is objected, that Christ died euen for the wicked and damned; for it is said, that some shall deny the Lord who hath bought them, 2. *Pet.*2.1. that some who are purged afterwards become blind and forgetfull, 2. *Pet.*1.9. that he may be destroyed for whom Christ died, *Rom.*14.15. that they who are sanctified may count the blood of the Testament an vnholy thing, and tread it vnder their feet, *Heb.*10.29. To which I answere, that these and such like places are to be vnderstood of men, not as they are in truth, and in Gods sight, but as they are in outward shew, profession, and in the estimation of men, who according to the rule of charitie judge the best, when they see not euident reason to the contrary: or it may be vnderstood of hypocrites as they are in their owne opinion, or according to their vaine boasting; and so those that are in shew, or in their owne opinion redeemed by Christs death, may be reprobates & condemned, but not any who are redeemed in truth. Secondly, those Hypocrites that are in the outward visible Church are said bee redeemed, in respect that they are numbred for a time amongst the faithfull, till they bewray their hypocrisie, and depart from the communion and fellowship which they haue outwardly with the Saints, though they are not in truth redeemed, vnlesse they be of the Church, and members of Christs Bodie.

Lastly, it is objected, that as in Adam all die, euen so in Christ shall all be made aliue, as the Apostle speaketh, 1. *Cor.*15.22. but all died in Adam, and therefore all are made aliue in Christ. I answere, that the Apostle here vnderstandeth all the faithfull, of whose resurrection hee here disputeth; and it is as much as if hee had said, as all the faithfull died in Adam, so all shall be made aliue in Christ; or though it be vnderstood of all, that they died in Adam, yet it proueth not that all are redeemed by Christ, for then the sense is thus much; as Adam deriued death vnto all his, by naturall propagation, so Christ hath deriued life to al his by grace. And this appeareth in the Verse following, where he saith, that first Christ rose, and afterwards they that are of Christ shall rise at his comming: now they onely are Christs who are led by his Spirit; and therefore they who haue not their part in the first resurrection, whereby being sanctified they rise againe from the death of sinne to newnesse of life, shall not haue their part of the second resurrection, whereby they rise to inherit those ioyes which Christ hath purchased for them.

But it may be further vrged, that if all doe not liue in Christ who died in Adam, Adams sin shall be of more force then Christs death and satisfaction, and Adam shall be more strong to destroy, then Christ to saue. I answere, that their power and strength is not to be measured by the number of those who are destroyed and saued; but according to the manner whereby they were destroyed and saued, or according to the vertue and force required to sauing and destroying: for it is farre more easie to hurt many, then to helpe a few, to kill a multitude, then to restore one to life; for euen bruit beasts can kill and destroy, but neither man, Angell, nor other creature can giue life saue God alone. And so it was no hard matter for Adam to plunge all mankind into the gulfe of perdition, but to saue and deliuer vs out of this wretched estate, neither hee nor any other could performe saue Christ alone. And therefore though our Sauiour had freed and restored to life but only one, and Adam by his sinne destroyed all the rest, yet Christs death was stronger, and of more vertue in sauing, then Adams sinne in destroying. Secondly, I answere, that Christs death is as sufficient for the redemption of all the world, as Adams sinne for their condemnation, in respect of the infinite value and price thereof; if, as Adams sinne was deriued vnto all by naturall propagation, so Christs death and merits were applyed vnto them by faith. For there is no want of vertue in this precious salue to heale, but the cause why it healeth not, is because it is rejected and cast away through incredulitie. Thirdly, Christs death is of farre more vertue and force then Adams sinne, in that it bringeth vnto vs farre better things then we lost in Adam; for wee lost by Adam but earthly benefits, but we haue deriued vnto vs by Christ heauenly glory, and euerlasting happinesse. Adam cast vs out of the possession of the earthly Paradise, but Christ giues vs possession of the heauenly Ierusalem. Adam made vs of the seruants of God, the bond-slaues of Satan, but Christ made vs of the bond-slaues of Sathan the sonnes of God, and heires of his Kingdome.

CHAP. XVII.

That all who are redeemed are also sanctified.

Q. Sect. 1. Satans tentation to perswade men to all licentiousnesse.

AND thus I haue taken away the ground of Satans first tentations, whereby he mooueth carnall men securely to continue in their sins, because Christ hath redeemed, and will saue the wicked as well as the godly, by proouing that Christ hath redeemed the faithfull only. The second tentation which hee vseth to the same purpose, he thus frameth; Christ hath redeemed all, at least who beleeue in him, be their sinnes neuer so many and grieuous: and therefore thou mayst continue in thy sinnes with pleasure and delight, and satisfie the lusts of thine owne flesh; only beleeue and thou shalt be saued, for Christ requireth no other condition. Neither is there any other end of Christs comming, but that hee should by his suffering take away thy sins; and therefore why shouldest thou vexe and torment thy selfe, in imbracing bitter mortification and newnesse of life, and in shunning thy sweet and pleasing sinnes, seeing Christ redeemeth the greatest sinners as well as the least.

The answere. To this wee are to answere, that there are no sinnes so innumerable in multitude, and so hainous in their qualitie and nature, which will exclude vs from the benefit of our redemption wrought by Christ, so we applie his death and merits vnto vs, by a true and liuely faith. But yet notwithstanding, this can be no incouragement for any to continue in their sinnes, for first, we are to know, that none haue part in this redemption wrought by Christ, but those only who are made partakers thereof by a true and liuely faith; which is neuer separated from the fruits thereof, true repentance and holinesse of life, neither is it possible that any should bee assured of Gods loue, but this assurance will make them to loue God againe, and this loue will worke in their hearts a zeale of his glorie, and a care to glorifie his name, by causing the light of their godly liues to shine before men. It is not possible that any who truely beleeue that they are redeemed with the precious bloud of Christ, should not highly esteeme and bee exceedingly thankfull to Christ for this inestimable benefit, which none can doe who tread the blood of Christ vnder their feet, and voluntarily cast themselues into the bondage of sinne, out of which we are redeemed with so precious a price, and so scorne this benefit, and despite our Sauiour who hath bestowed it. It cannot be that any should be so foolish to sell their soules vnto sinne for euery vaine pleasure and trifling commoditie, if they be assured that Christ redeemed them with the price of his precious blood which was of more value then many worlds; and therefore whosoeuer make no conscience of sinne haue no true faith, and consequently the worke of our redemption wrought by Christ, doth not appertaine vnto them.

Q. Sect. 2. That whom Christ redeemeth those he sanctifieth.

Secondly, whomsoeuer Christ redeemeth with his blood, those he sanctifieth with his spirit; and in whomsoeuer his death is effectuall for the taking away of the guilt and punishment of sin, in them it is effectuall for the mortifying of their corruptions and the sin it selfe, for, being the members of Christ, we are grafted with him into the similitude of his death and resurrection, and our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sinne might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serue sinne, as it is Rom. 6. 5.6. And as our Sauiour Christ is our wisedome, righteousnes and redemption, so he is our sanctification also as it is 1. Cor. 1. 30. So that whomsoeuer he redeemeth and iustifieth, those also hee sanctifieth, as it may further appeare by many & euident testimonies. Tit. 2. 14. he is said to haue giuen himselfe for vs, that hee might redeeme vs from all iniquitie, and purge vs to be a peculiar people vnto himselfe zealous of good workes. Luk. 1. 74. 75. the Lord bindeth it with an oath, that whomsoeuer hee redeemeth out of the hands of their spirituall enemies, they shall worship him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of of their life. 1. Pet. 2. 24. the Apostle saith, that our Sauiour bare our sinnes in his bodie on the tree, that we being deliuered from sinne should liue in righteousnesse. And Paul sheweth Rom. 6. 18. that assoone as wee are freed from the bondage of sinne, we are made the seruants of righteousnesse. So Heb. 9. 14. it is said that the bloud of Christ doth purge our consciences from dead workes, that wee may serue the liuing God; neither are wee only iustified, but also sanctified by the offering of the body of Christ once made, as it is Chap. 10. Verse 10. 14. And as hee is appointed of God to be a Prince and Sauiour to giue remission of sinnes, so also to giue repentance, as appeareth, Acts 5. 31. So the Apostle saith, that Christ gaue himselfe for his Church, not that it might continue still in pollution and the filthinesse of sinne, but that he might sanctifie it and cleanse it by the washing of water through the word, Ephes. 5. 25, 26. If therefore we walke in the light as he is in the light, then his bloud purgeth vs from all our sinnes, 1. Iohn 1. 7. If we are sprinkled in our hearts from an euill conscience, then we may draw neere with a true heart in assurance of faith, Heb. 10. 22. But if we continue in our sinnes without repentance tance and commit them with delight and greedinesse, then let vs brag as much as we will that we are redeemed by Christ, yet we are still in the bondage of the Deuill; for Christ appeared, not onely to free vs out of his captiuitie, but also that he might loose the workes of the Deuill, as appeareth 1. Iohn 3. 8. He hath redeemed vs out of the thraldome of Satan, that wee might become his owne seruants, whom he will rule and gouerne by his Word and Spirit. And therefore if wee haue not this spirit to lead vs, we are none of his, as it is Rom. 8. 9. if wee will not submit our selues to the scepter of his Word, we are none of his subjects, but continue still the seruants of sinne and Satan. Seeing then it is manifest by Gods Word, that whosoeuer are redeemed are also sanctified, and whomsoeuer Christ hath washed with his bloud, from the guilt and punishment of sinne, hee doth also purge and cleanse them by vertue of the same bloud, from the sinnes and corruptions themselues; and seeing hee hath redeemed vs out of the hands of our spirituall enemies, to the end wee should become his seruants, worshipping him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of our life: let vs neuer bee perswaded by Sathans tentations, foolishly to imagine that wee may the more securely liue in our sinnes, because Christ Iesus hath paid a sufficient price for our redemption. For first, what horrible ingratitude is this vnto God, to take occasion by this inestimable benefit the more to offend him? What a blasphemous imagination is this against Iesus Christ, to thinke that hee came into the World, to be a bolster whereupon wee may more securely sleepe in sinne; and that hee shed his precious bloud to purchase libertie for vs, that wee may liue in all wickednesse; that he reconciled vs vnto his Father by his death, that we might the more freely offend him; that hee hath redeemed vs out of the bondage of Satan, that wee may more diligently serue him; that he hath with his bloud washed vs from the filth of sinne, that wee may more securely wallow in this stinking puddle againe? For, what were this but to make Christ another Sisiphus, who assoone as hee hath ended his labour is new to begin againe? What is it but euery day to crucifie the Lord of life afresh, and to tread his precious bloud vnder our feet as an vnholy thing? What is it but to contemne & basely to esteeme of the inestimable price of our redemption, if wee will not sticke to sell againe our soules vnto sinne, for euery beastly pleasure and base commoditie, which Christ hath purchased at so high a rate? Secondly, as hereby we shall shew horrible ingratitude against God and our Sauiour Christ, so also shall wee be most injurious to our owne soules, seeing we can neuer attaine vnto any true assurance of our redemption, till wee find our selues freed in some measure from the power of sinne, and sanctified by Gods Spirit: for the Lord who is truth it selfe hath said it, and if this be not enough he hath solemnely sworne it, that all those whom hee hath redeemed out of the hands of their spirituall enemies, shall worship and serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of their life. And therefore as well may God speake, nay, sweare an vntruth, as those may bee redeemed who liue in their sinnes, destitute of all holinesse towards God, and righteousnesse towardes their Neighbour. Luke 1. 74, 75.

Thirdly, we are to consider that the Lord hath redeemed vs to a twofold end: the first and principall is his owne glory, the second which is subordinate vnto the other, is our saluation, and euerlasting happinesse: both which concurre in all those, to whom the redemption of Christ is made effectuall. Now God is not glorified by redeeming such as continue in their rebellion towards him, and will not by any meanes leaue the seruice of sinne and Sathan, but rather in shewing his justice and power, in punishing their sinnes which they commit with greedinesse: but he is glorified when hee mercifully deliuereth repentant sinners, out of the bondage of sinne and Satan, who are weary of their captiuitie, and desire nothing more then freedome, that they may in the rest of their liues serue him their Redeemer in the duties of holinesse and righteousnesse. And therefore they who liue in their sinnes without repentance, continuing still Traytors to God, and seruants of Sathan, can haue no assurance of their redemption; for the Lord hath therefore bought vs with a price, that wee should glorifie him both in our bodies and soules. And therefore those who in stead of letting their lights of holinesse and righteousnesse shine clearely before men, that their heauenly Father may be glorified, doe nothing else but dishonour him by their sinnes and wicked conuersation, shew plainly that the redemption wrought by Christ doth not as yet appertaine vnto them. 1. Cor. 6. 20.

Fourthly, we are to know that the worke of our redemption wrought by Christ, consisteth of three parts or degrees; for first Christ redeemed vs by paying the price of our redemption, and thus hee is said in the Scripeures to haue redeemed vs with his bloud. Secondly, hee redeemeth vs when as hee applyeth this benefit of our redemption vnto vs in particular, and doth thereby free and deliuer vs from the Deuill, Sinne and Death, so as wee are no longer in their bondage, subject to their power & gouernment, although wee bee continually assaulted and often foiled by them. Thirdly, he redeemeth vs when as he perfectly freeth vs, not only from the power and gouernment, but also

Q. Sect. 3. A two fold end of our redemption, Gods glory and our happinesse.

Q. Sect. 4. Three degrees of our redemption which alwayes concurre.

from the assaults and molestations of our spirituall enemies, and giueth vs eternall peace in his kingdom. The first was wrought immediatly by himselfe, when as hee paid a sufficient price for our redemption, and thereby fully satisfied his Fathers justice. The second he worketh by his owne Spirit, whereby he doth dispell out of our minds & hearts the darke mists of ignorance and infidelitie, and by the glorious light thereof doth illuminate our vnderstandings, with the beames of true knowledge and a liuely faith, so that wee know, acknowledge and beleeue that Christ is our Sauiour and Redeemer, and are assured that hee hath freed vs from the bondage of our spirituall enemies after which assurance hee begetteth in vs an earnest desire of being more and more freed from them actually, and an holy endeauour of withstanding all their assaults and tentations, whereby they labour againe to bring vs into their captiuity, and withall enableth vs with some measure of strength, to withstand and ouercome them; and reneweth and confirmeth this strength receiued, when in the conflict of tentation we are weakned, and haue receiued the foile, that we may rise vp againe and afresh maintaine the fight. Lastly, our Sauiour Christ redeemeth vs, when as he perfectly freeth and deliuereth vs from our spirituall enemies at his second comming, when as we shall not onely not be ouercome nor foiled of them, but also not so much as once assaulted. And of this redemption our Sauiour speaketh, Luke 21.28. When (saith hee) these things begin to come to passe, then looke vp and lift vp your heads; for your redemption draweth neere. And these are the three degrees of our redemption, which alwayes follow one another, for, for whomsoeuer Christ hath giuen himself as the price of their redemption, to those also hee giueth his holy Spirit, which doth illuminate the eyes of their vnderstanding blinded with ignorance, and sanctifieth their will and affections, working in them a desire and holy endeuour of seruing the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse, and of withstanding the tentations of the flesh, the World and the Deuill. And whomsoeuer hee thus redeemeth out of the power and gouernment of their spirituall enemies, those hee will perfectly redeeme and deliuer from all their malicious attempts, and giue them the eternall peace of his kingdome. But those who haue not their part in the second degree, that is, those who continue in their blind ignorance, and in the naturall pollution of their will and affections, willingly subjecting themselues to the seruice of sinne and Satan, and stubbornely withdrawing their stiffe neckes out of the yoke of holy obedience vnto Gods Commandements; they can neuer haue any assurance that Christ hath redeemed them by paying the price of his bloud, nor will deliuer them at his second comming out of the bondage of Satan, in which they haue liued all their life time, with pleasure and delight. For, whomsoeuer hee ransometh with the price of his bloud, those he freeth out of the gouernment of their spirituall enemies, Sin, Death, and the Deuill; and therefore they that still liue in sinne with pleasure and delight, are still the seruants of sinne, as our Sauiour saith, Iohn 8.34. yea the seruants of Satan also, as the Apostle teacheth, 1. Iohn 3.8. For their seruants we are to whom we obey, whether it be of sinne vnto death, or of obedience vnto righteousnesse, as it is Rom. 6.16. and those who still remayne in the seruice and slauery of sinne and Satan, haue no part in the first redemption, wrought by the shedding of his bloud, nor shall haue any part in the last redemption, at his second comming to judgement.

Lastly, wee are to know that Christ hath redeemed the whole man, bodie and soule, and hath freed and deliuered euery part and facultie of them, out of the bondage of our spirituall enemies, that all and euery of them may performe seruice vnto God. For example, our vnderstandings were captiued in the darke prison of ignorance and blindnesse, as appeareth, Ephes. 4.17,18. but our Sauiour Christ hath redeemed vs, and hath dispelled these mists of darknesse with the preaching of the Gospell, which like a glorious sunshine hath appeared vnto vs, and by the operation of his holy Spirit, he hath caused the scales of ignorance to fall from the eyes of our vnderstanding, so that wee can see the mystery of our redemption, and worke of our saluation wrought by him, as it is Luke 1.77,78,79. Our wils which were so inthralled that we could not so much as desire any thing pleasing and acceptable vnto God, as appeareth Phil. 2.13. hath our Sauiour redeemed and freed out of this spirituall bondage, and by the good motions of his holy Spirit doth so rule and encline them, that to will is present with vs, and we are delighted in the Law of God concerning the inner man, as the Apostle speaketh of himselfe, Rom. 7.18.22. And though the law of our members and corruptions of the flesh, doe rebell against the law of our minde, leading vs captiue to the law of sinne; yet doe we abhorre this sin, and earnestly desire to be freed from it, and to serue the Lord in holines and righteousnesse; endeuouring and striuing to mortifie the flesh and the corruptions thereof, and to rise againe to newnesse of life. Our affections also were wholly corrupted and disordered, so that we hated God, and loued the World, feared man, and not the Lord, trusted vpon the inferiour meanes, never regarding the fountaine of all goodnesse, in a word we were giuen ouer to our owne hearts

lusts, and vnto vile affections, as it is Rom. 1. 24.26. but by the redemption wrought by Christ becomming his, and being quickned and strengthned by his holy Spirit, we haue crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts thereof, as the Apostle speaketh, Galath. 5. 24. Lastly, the members of our body were seruants to vncleanesse, and iniquity, to commit iniquitie. Rom. 6.19. our eyes full of adultery, our tongues forges of lies, our feet swift to shed bloud: but our Sauiour Christ redeeming vs hath deliuered our bodies also from the thraldome of sinne and Satan, so as though sinne dwell, yet it shall no longer raigne in our mortal bodies, that we should obey the lusts thereof, as appeareth Rom. 6.12. In a word, both body and soule were in miserable captiuity to our spirituall enemies: but our Sauiour hath bought vs with a price, to the end we may glorifie God in our bodies and in our spirits, for they are Gods, as it is, 1. Cor. 6.20. And hath redeemed vs not with corruptible things, as siluer and gold from our vaine conuersation, but with his owne most precious bloud, as Peter teacheth vs, 1. Pet. 1.18,19. If therefore we are redeemed by Christ, then our blind vnderstandings are inlightned by the preaching of the Gospell, and we freed from our former ignorance: our wils which were rebellious are inclined to obedience, so as wee earnestly desire to leaue our sinnes, and to serue the Lord in the duties of sanctification, and haue an endeuour of mortifying our sins, and rising againe to newnesse of life; our affections also are purged from their corruptions, so that we loue, feare, trust in, hope, and expect all good from him, who is the fountaine of all goodnesse; our bodies which were giuen as seruants vnto sinne, are now become the seruants of righteousnesse vnto holinesse; In a word, both in body and soule we are freed from sinne, and made seruants vnto God. But if our vnderstandings are still blind and ignorant, our wils backward to imbrace any goodnesse, and most prone vnto all euill, our affections as corrupt as euer they were, and our bodies the ready instruments to act all sinne and wickednesse, then haue wee as yet no fruit of the redemption wrought by Christ. For it is not a titulary but a powerfull redemption, which indeed and truth deliuereth vs euen in this life, from our spirituall enemies: so that though they may assault, and grieuously vexe vs, yet they shall neuer gouerne and raigne ouer vs. And therefore whosoeuer feel not the redemption wrought by Christ, powerfull in this life to free them in some measure, from the rule and iurisdiction of Sinne, Satan, the World and the Flesh, shall neuer find it fruitfull and effectuall to free and deliuer them, from condemnation, Hell and destruction in the life to come.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of those tentations which Sathan vseth against the faithfull concerning their redemption.

HAue spoken concerning those tentations which Sathan suggesteth into mens minds to nourish in them carnall securitie: Now wee are to consider of those which hee vseth to mooue men to doubting and desperation. First, therefore he obiecteth that it is a thing vnreasonable and vtterly repugnant to Gods iustice, that Christ who was innocent should be punished for vs who are guilty; that wee should deserue the blame, and hee suffer the stripes; that the righteous should bee condemned, and the wicked acquitted; that wee who like Barrabas were cruell murtherers & wicked Sinners should be let loose, & the immaculate Lambe of God in whom there was no fault should be deliuered vp to be crucified. For what were this but to make the iust God like vnjust Pilate? what were this, but to denie his owne Word, hauing said that the righteous should liue in his righteousnes, and the Sinner die in his iniquitie? To which I answere, first, that it would not indeed haue stood with Gods iustice, to haue punished Christ as he was innocent and righteous, nor to haue acquitted and absolued vs who were vnrighteous and wicked, but hee punished Christ in respect that he had taken vpon him the sins of all the faithfull, and absolueth vs as wee are freed from our sins, and clothed with his righteousnesse and obedience. Hee punished Christ, not as he was most just and free from sinne, but as he was our suretie who had taken vpon him to discharge our debt, and to satisfie for our sins. And thus the Creditor may justly require his debt of the suretie, though in respect of himselfe hee owed him nothing; and thus hee may, yea ought to release the principall, when the suretie hath already discharged the debt. Secondly, I answere that it had beene injustice in God, if hee had forced our Sauiour Christ, who was just and innocent, to vndergoe the punishments which were due vnto vs, who were Malefactors & offenders; for this were to condemne the righteous, and to justifie the wicked: but our Sauiour Christ of his owne free accord, did voluntarily offer himselfe to stand in our place, and to discharge that debt which we owed, and to make satisfaction to his Father; by suffering that punishment which we had deserued. And this appeareth, Iohn 10.18. where our Sauiour saith, that no man toake his life from him, but that hee layed it downe of himselfe. And the Apostle telleth vs that hee humbled himselfe, and became obedient vnto death, Phil. 2.8. In which respect, his death is called a sacrifice or free oblation, which he voluntarily offered vnto

Q. Sect. 1. That it is not repugnant to Gods iustice to punish Christ for vs.

Iohn 10.18.

Phil. 2.8.

his Father, *Heb.*9.14. And therefore the Lord might iustly take that which Christ freely gaue, yea, it had beene cruelty and injustice if hee should haue refused the payment of such a sufficient surety, when he voluntarily offered it for our discharge, chusing rather still to haue kept vs in prison, bound in the chaines of euerlasting death. Lastly, there might haue beene some shew of rigour and injustice, if Christ the innocent had bin ouer-whelmed, in suffering the punishments which were due vnto vs, who were the offenders; but being not only man which suffered but God also, and therefore of infinite power and majestie, hee was able to pay our great debt, and yet is neuer the poorer; to suffer death and ouercome it by suffering, and by yeelding a while to the malice of our spirituall enemies, he finally vanquished and gloriously triumphed ouer them all. And therefore it was not injustice in God to suffer our Sauiour Christ, to vndergoe that which hee was sure to ouercome; but vnspeakable mercy towards vs, in sending his Sonne to pay that debt which wee could neuer haue discharged, and to suffer punishments for a time, which otherwise wee should haue endured for euer. By this then it appeareth, that God might iustly receiue the price of our redemption, which Christ freely offered. But seeing by the lawes of redemption there is required, not onely that the Redeemer pay a price or ransome, but also that hee haue right to that which he doth redeeme, it may be demanded what right our Sauiour had ouer vs, that hee should pay this price for vs? I answere, that as our Sauiour Christ consisteth of two natures, so also hee had a twofold right vnto vs; for as he was God, he had the right of propriety, and was our true owner, hee was our Lord, and therefore had right to redeeme his owne seruants; hee was our King, and therefore had right to redeeme vs who were his subiects; yea, hee was our Creatour, and therefore hee had more right then any Lord or King to redeeme vs who were his creatures; as he was a man he was our kinsman, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone; yea hee was our brother, as it is *Heb.*2.11,12. and Iohn 20.17. and therefore had also the right of propinquitie, which was required by the Law of Redemption, *Leuit.*25.25.

Heb 9.14.

*Heb.*2.11,12. Iohn 20.17.

*Leuit.*25.25.

Q. Sect. 2. That Christ hath offered a sufficient price for our redemption. Acts 20.28.

Secondly, Satan may obiect that the death of Christ is not a sufficient price for our Redemption; for how could the death of one, be a sufficient satisfaction for the sinne of all the faithfull, seeing euery one by their innumerable sinnes, had deserued innumerable deaths. And how could the temporary and short punishment which Christ indured, free vs all that believe frō the euerlasting punishments of Hell fire, seeing the justice of God requireth that there should bee some proportion, betweene the punishment which wee deserued, and the satisfaction which Christ made and offered? I answere, that Christ who suffered for vs, was not man only but God also; in which respect it is said, that God purchased his Church with his bloud; not that God hath bloud, but because he that shed his bloud, was not only man but also God; and therefore his short sufferings were of more worth, vertue and value, then the euerlasting sufferings of all the World; for they should euer haue suffered, but could thereby neuer haue satisfied, because our sins deserued infinite punishments, in that wee had by them offended the infinite justice and Majestie of God; which because finite creatures could not beare, Gods justice required that they should be infinite in time and euerlasting, seeing they could not be infinite in measure. But the sufferings of Christ, though short in time, yet were they infinite in value, worth and merit, because hee was not man alone, but God also; and therefore at once he put away sin by the sacrifice of himselfe, and by his owne oblation hee tooke away the sinnes of many, as it is *Heb.*9.26,28. As therefore Adams sinne, which in it selfe was finite, as proceeding from a finite creature, notwithstanding deserued infinite punishment, because God whom by his sin he offended was infinite; so contrariwise Christs sufferings were but of short continuance in respect of time, but yet of infinite merit and worth, because hee that suffered was not man alone, but also God, and therefore infinite. Neither did Gods justice primarily require eternitie in our sufferings but ful payment of our debt; which because we were vnable to doe in any time our debt being infinite, therefore in the second place it exacted that because they could not bee equiualent in quantitie; they should be in time. But our Sauiour paid our whole debt at once, as the Apostle sheweth, and thereby more fully satisfied Gods justice than all the World could haue done though they should haue suffered euerlasting punishment, seeing the debt would haue beene euer in paying, but neuer fully satisfied. Euen as an able suretie should better satisfie a Creditour, who would at once wholy pay the debt, of a 1000. pound, then the debter that should be euer in paying of it in his whole life, but bee neuer able wholly to discharge it.

Acts 20.28.

*Heb.*9.26.

Lastly, the tempter will obiect that Christs death and merits, though they be in themselues a sufficient price for our redemption, yet they doe not belong vnto vs, neither will be effectuall for our saluation. Let it be granted (will hee say) that the death and merits of Christ are sufficient for the saluation of all: yet what comfort canst thou receiue hereby, seeing thou canst haue no assurance that they belong vnto thee, or will be effectuall for thy thy redemption. For either he hath redeemed all, or but some only; if all, then some who are redeemed may perish notwithstanding, seeing the Scriptures shew that the greater part of the world are the children of destruction, and it is not vnlikely but that thou art in the greatest number. But if he haue redeemed some only, how canst thou conclude that thou art one of these whom hee hath redeemed, seeing out of meere particular propositions thou canst not inferre any sound consequence? For example, if thou doest thus conclude, some men are redeemed by Christ, but I am a man, therefore I am redeemed: thou mightest as well reason thus. Some men are Kings, but I am a man, therefore I am a King. To this we must answere, that though Christ hath only redeemed some, yet we may after a more sound manner conclude that we are in this number, not vsing the helpe of Sathans absurd fallations; but inferring our conclusion out of generall propositions grounded vpon Gods Word after this manner; Whosoeuer beleeue in Christ, those he hath redeemed and will saue; for this is the voice and promise of Christ in the Gospell: but I (may euery faithfull man say) doe truly beleeue in Christ; and therefore I am redeemed and shall eternally bee saued.

Q. Sect. That Christ death and merits belong euery particular beleeuer.

Q. Sect. 4. Vrgeth temptations against the particular application of Christs merits answered. Ephes. 1.5,27.

But against this particular application of Christ and his merits vnto vs, the tempter vrgeth diuers objections; first, that Christ only saueth and redeemeth his own body which is his Church, and that this his Church is glorious without spot or wrinkle, holy and vnblameable, as it is Ephes.5.25,27. and therefore (will he say) what hope of redemption or saluation canst thou haue, who art defiled not only with originall corruption, but also with innumerable actuall transgressions? To this wee must answere that the Apostle saith not, that the Church which Christ redeemeth and saueth, is now alreadie without spot or wrinkle; but that he hath by giuing himselfe for it, redeemed it, that hereby he might wash & cleanse it from all spots, and might make it holy and without blame; either by his merits and righteousnesse imputed vnto it, which is done in this life; or by freeing it altogether from corruptions, and the filthy spots of sin, wherewith naturally it is defiled, which is begun in this life, but shall not be perfected vntill the life to come.

Our falling into sinne, no occasion to perswade that we are not redeemed. Gal.4.4.

Secondly, he obiecteth, that if Christ had redeemed vs out of the thraldome of sinne, then wee should not still be ouercome thereby, nor so often, will we nill we, transgresse Gods Commandements. To which wee are to answere, that our Sauiour Christ hath deliuered vs from our sins; first in regard that for his merits and satisfaction sake, the Lord hath pardoned and remitted them, so as they shall neuer be imputed vnto vs, nor arise vp in iudgement to our condemnation, neither in this world nor in the world to come. Secondly, he doth deliuer vs from our sinnes, whilest he doth giue vnto vs his holy Spirit, whereby our sinnes are in some measure mortified, and the strength of them abated, so that they doe not raigne and rule in vs as in former times, although we cannot wholly expell them from dwelling in vs, according to that Rom.6.12. Sinne shall not raigne in your mortall body that you should obey it in the lusts thereof. And though we cannot vtterly subdue this Cananitish brood of our corruptions, but that still whilest wee continue in this life, they are as thornes in our sides, alwayes vexing and grieuing vs: yet by the helpe of Gods Spirit assisting vs, we weaken their force, abate their courage, and make them become tributaries. And if at any time they rebell, we curbe them in, and giue them the ouerthrow; yea, though sometimes they gaine ground, and giue vs the foile, yet wee rise againe by vnfained repentance, and recouer our selues, being assisted with the fresh supply of Gods Spirit, till at last by death we obtaine a finall victorie.

Rom 6.12.

Q. Sect. 5. That our obedience to the Law, proueth not that wee are not redeemed. Gal.3.13.

Thirdly, he obiecteth that we are still vnder the Law, and tied to the obedience thereof, and therfore Christ hath not freed vs from it. I answere, that though Christ hath not freed vs from the obedience of the Law, yet hee hath freed vs from the curse and malediction, as it is Gal.3.13. so as although wee doe not perfome it in that exact manner and measure which God requireth, yet our transgression shall not be imputed vnto vs; for he hath perfectly fulfilled the Law for vs, that his righteousnesse might become our righteousnesse, and he hath suffered death, that by his bloud hee might wash away our sins. And thus when the Law was impossible to be performed, by reason of the weakenes and corruptions of our flesh, the Lord sent his Sonne in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and for sinne condemned sinne in the flesh, that the righteousnesse of the Law might be fulfilled in vs, as it is Rom.8.3,4. Moreouer, we are not now tied to performe obedience to the Law, to the end that thereby we may be justified, nor yet shall we for the imperfections of this our obedience be in danger of condemnation, but now onely it is a meanes before our conuersion to bring vs to Christ, by shewing vnto vs our sinnes and insufficiencie in our selues, and after our conuersion it serueth for a rule or square, according to which wee are to frame our liues in holinesse and righteousnesse, that so wee may shew our thankfulnes vnto our heauenly Father for his inestimable benefits, by glorifying his Name in a godly life. And because this also is bitter and vnpleasant to flesh and bloud, therefore the Lord hath also granted and giuen vnto vs his holy Spirit, which mortifieth our corrupti-

9. Sect. 6. That God is not angry with the faithfull, though he seemeth to frowne vpon them.

Fourthly, the tempter may obiect to the weak conscience which laboureth vnder the burthen of sin, that our Sauiour Christ hath not redeemed vs from the anger of God due for sin, seeing we still see his frowning countenance, and apprehend the scorching heat of his wrath inflamed against vs: but let all know, that if they truly beleeue in Christ, and only rely themselues vpon this their Mediatour, if their sins past grieue them, and they purpose for the time to come, to labour that they may forsake them; then they are reconciled vnto God by Christ, and in him hee is become their louing and gracious Father, as the Apostle telleth vs, Col. 1.20,21. Let not such therefore be discouraged, if God seeme to frowne vpon them for a time, for he will not frowne for euer, nor alwayes retaine his anger, as the Psalmist speaketh, Psal. 103.9. Yea in truth hee is not angry with vs at all as a Iudge to punish, but as a Father to correct and amend vs: and if wee will speake properly, he alwayes loueth and delighteth in vs. For as hee is well pleased with Christ our head, so is hee alwayes well pleased with vs in him, as being members of his body: notwithstanding as a tender Father when his Sonne offendeth, maketh semblance as though his Wrath were kindled, to the end that hee may bee carefull in the time to come, to auoide the like fault, and to amend: so the Lord who is our gracious Father, seemeth oftentimes to bee grieuously displeased with his children when they haue sinned against him, hiding from them his amiable louing countenance, and shewing nothing but signes of wrath, not that he hath in truth cast them out of his loue and fauour; (for hee neuer falleth out with those whom Christ hath reconciled vnto him, neither can hee cease to loue the members of Christ, nor Christs members cease to be his members after they are once ingrafted into his bodie by his holy Spirit and a liuely faith) only like a wise Father he frowneth vpon them, and seemeth angry, to make them in the time to come forsake their sinnes, whereby they haue incurred his displeasure.

10. Sect. 7. That though Satan tempt vs, yet we may be assured that Fifthly, the tempter will obiect that we are not freed and deliuered out of his power and iurisdiction, seeing he doth often assault and ouercome vs with his temptations, and leadeth vs captiue fast bound in the fetters of sin. To which wee must answere, that our Sauiour Christ by his death hath destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the Deuill; that he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death were all their life time subiect to bondage, as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 2.14, 15. That God hath deliuered vs from the power of darknesse, and hath translated vs into the kingdome of his deare Sonne, as it is Col. 1.13. That our Redeemer Iesus Christ hath spoyled the principalities and powers, and hath made a shew of them openly, and hath triumphed ouer them vpon his Crosse, and that not only for himselfe, but for all his members, Col. 2.15. That hee hath now broken the Serpents head, so that well may hee hisse against vs, but yet hee cannot sting vs. And whereas heretofore he was the Prince of the World, who did rule and gouerne vs at his pleasure, and according to his will, now hee is cast out by the Prince of Princes, as it is Iohn 12.31. and our Sauiour Christ hath established his Kingdome in vs, ruling and gouerning vs with the scepter of his Word and holy Spirit. Whereas hee was the strong man who quietly kept his possession in vs, our Sauiour Christ who is stronger then hee, hath spoiled him of his armour wherein hee trusted, and hath thrust him out of his possession. Whereas he was a cruell Tyrant who held vs fast bound in his captiuitie, our Sauiour Christ hath redeemed vs out of his thraldome, so as now hee cannot hurt vs though hee neuer ceaseth to assault vs. And though hee goeth like a roring Lion seeking whom he may deuoure, yet now we are enabled by Gods Spirit to resist him stedfastly in the faith, and so armed with the coat-armour of Gods spirituall graces, that though he may with the violence of his assaults foile vs, yet shall he neuer be able to ouercome vs. God doth indeed suffer this wicked enemy to make warre against euen his deerest children, and that sometimes after a strange and extraordinary manner, not that he will giue them euer againe vnto his thraldome, out of which he hath purchased them with so deare a price, but partly to driue them hereby to flie vnto him by earnest and effectual prayer, imploring his aide against Satans crueltie, and that hauing receiued it, they may ascribe the whole glory of the victory to him alone, by whose strength they haue ouercome; and partly to shew vnto thē their own weaknes, that they may not relie nor rest vpon it. Somtimes hee suffereth them to be thus assaulted, that his power may bee magnified in their weaknesse; and sometimes that the graces which hee hath bestowed vpon them, may shine gloriously to all the World. Sometimes for the confirmation of others who shall hereafter be tried with the like temptations, when they haue in their brethren often experience perience of Gods loue & power and fatherly assistance; and sometimes that they may the more strengthen themselues in his spirituall graces, and confirme them more fully in the assurance of his loue and their saluation. For as a Citie which hath once beene besieged and not sacked, will euer after be more strong to hold out if it be assaulted by the like danger, because the Citizens will carefully fortifie their walls and increase their bulwarks; and as he who hath beene once robbed by theeues, will euer after ride better prouided to make resistance, that he doe not againe fall into their hands; so those who are besieged and assaulted by their spirituall enemies, will euer after more carefully arme themselues against them with the graces of Gods Spirit, that they may not be ouercome nor foiled by them. Wee know that whilest men quietly enjoy their possessions and inheritance they rest secure, keeping their writings in a boxe without euer looking on them from yeere to yeere, but when their title and right is called into question, & some man labours to thrust them ont of their possession, then they peruse their Writings and Deeds with all diligence: and not satisfied with their owne judgement they resort to skilfull Lawyers, craving their counsell how they may maintaine their right, and answere the plea which their aduersarie makes against them. Whereby oftentimes it commeth to passe that they make their title not only much more strong in it selfe, but also more cleere and euident vnto all others, so that afterwards none dare once aduenture to trouble them againe, or call their right into question: so whilest we neuer doubt of our heauenly inheritance we rest secure, and let the Booke of God which is our best Deed and Euidence, lie vnder our cupboords till it mould for want of vse; but when Satan by his tentations doth call our title into question, and pleads that wee haue no right to Gods Kingdome, then doe wee most carefully and diligently peruse the Booke of God, then doe wee goe vnto Gods Ministers, desiring their counsell how wee may answere Satans plea and cleere our title, then doe wee most carefully vse all good meanes to increase our knowledge, that thereby wee may throughly informe our selues of our right, and confirme our assurance against all cauils and objections. And hereby it commeth to passe, that those who before had very weake titles to their heauenly inheritance, whilest they remained wretchlesse & secure, and had but slender assurance euer to enjoy it; now, by their care, paines and diligence, haue so confirmed it vnto themselues, and so cleered it to all the World, that Sathan dare neuer after call it into question, vnlesse he do it (like many contentious men in these daies) rather that hee may trouble and vexe them with a tedious suit, then for any hope of preuailing in the end. And thus you see that Christ hath redeemed all the faithfull out of Satans thraldome, notwithstanding that he still assaulteth them with his tentations, neither doth hee hereby ouercome them and againe inthrall them in his captiuitie, but rather by Gods blessing they serue to strengthen them in the spirituall graces of Gods Spirit, and to confirme them in the full assurance of their saluation.

Sixtly, the tempter will obiect that wee still die, and therefore are not redeemed and deliuered out of the bondage of death. To which we may answere, that Gods just sentence once denounced could not be reuoked, Ge.3.19. Dust thou art & into dust thou shalt returne; & therfore the Apostle saith, Heb.9.27. It is appointed vnto all men that they shall once die. But as Ahashuerus though hee could not reuoke the sentence of death against the Iewes after it was once pronounced, because it was a Decree of the Medes & Persians which might not be altered; yet at Hesters suit sent out another Decree, whereby hee armed and strengthened the Iewes against their enemies, to the end they might resist, ouercome and destroy them: so the Lord hauing pronounced the sentence of death against all the sonnes of Adam, could not reuoke his Decree and Sentence, as being farre more vnchangeable then the Decree of the Medes and Persians, yet at the suit of our Sauiour Christ hee made another Decree, whereby we might be armed against our enemy Death, and ouercome him. So that now though we die, yet are wee not subject vnto death, neither shall we be held vnder the dominion thereof; though we are not wholly exempted from death, yet now the nature thereof is quite altered. For heretofore it was vnconquerable, but now easily ouercome; heretofore it was a curse for sinne, but now turned into an exceeding blessing, as deriuing vnto vs many benefits. For first it freeth vs from all our afflictions, with which in this life wee are so much molested; it deliuereth vs from the irksome company of prophane wicked men, who grieue the very soules of the righteous, and make them to cry out with Dauid, Woe is me that I remaine in Meshech, and dwell in the tents of Kedar; it wholly freeth vs from sinne, and purgeth away those corruptions which in this life cleaue so fast vnto vs. So that though heretofore there was great amitie betweene sinne and death, (for sinne was the only cause which inlarged deaths dominions, and made all the World to become his tributaries,) yet now they are at oddes, and death now is the meanes to free vs out of sins thraldome and vtterly to destroy it. And thus hath the viper sinne, bred a young one which eateth out it owne belly; for sinne brought forth death, and death destroyed sinne: had it not beene

9. Sect. 8. That though we die, yet we are redeemed from death.

Sixtly, the tempter will obiect that wee still die, and therefore are not redeemed and deliuered out of the bondage of death. To which we may answere, that Gods iust sentence once denounced could not be reuoked, Ge. 3. 19. Dust thou art & into dust thou shalt returne; & therfore the Apostle saith, Heb. 9. 27. It is appointed vnto all men that they shall once die. But as Ahashuerus though hee could not reuoke the sentence of death against the Iewes after it was once pronounced, because it was a Decree of the Medes & Persians which might not be altered; yet at Hesters suit sent out another Decree, whereby hee armed and strengthened the Iewes against their enemies, to the end they might resist, ouercome and destroy them: so the Lord hauing pronounced the sentence of death against all the sonnes of Adam, could not reuoke his Decree and Sentence, as being farre more vnchangeable then the Decree of the Medes and Persians, yea at the suit of our Sauiour Christ hee made another Decree, whereby we might be armed against our enemy Death, and ouercome him. for for sinne, death had neuer entred into the world, and were it not for death, sin would neuer goe out of the World. Moreouer, by death we obtaine a full and perfect victorie ouer the Flesh, the World, and the Deuill; for whereas in this life we are in a continuall fight, and sometimes Ameleck, sometime Israel hath the vpper hand: death puts an end to this battell, and giueth vs full victory ouer the Flesh, the World, and the Deuill; so as they shall neuer afterwards not onely not preuaile, but not so much as assault or trouble vs. And thus doth euery Christian, with Dauid cut off Goliahs head with his owne sword, for Death was the weapon which Satan vsed to destroy vs, and with this weapon wee giue Satan a finall ouerthrow. Lastly, Death which heretofore was the high way to Hell and destruction, is now become the ready entrance into Gods Kingdome, and like a foule gate whereby wee enter into a faire Palace; heretofore it was a fiery Serpent which by stinging killed and destroyed vs, but now our Sauiour hauing pulled out the sting, it is become so harmelesse that wee may safely put it into our bosome, without receiuing any hurt. And in this respect it may not vnfitly bee compared to the brazen Serpent, which looked like other Serpents, but in stead of wounding it presently cured, in stead of killing it preserued life; so though death retaine his former shape, so that wee are afraid and ready to flee from it, yet it is but in outward appearance; for in stead of an euer liuing death, it giueth vs possession of a neuer dying life and endlesse happines. Heretofore it was the Deuils Sergeant to arrest and carry vs without baile, into the perpetuall prison of vtter darknesse; but now it is the Lords Gentleman vsher to conduct and place vs in the Kingdome of Heauen. Heretofore it was like the Deuils cart wherein we were carried to execution; but now it is like Elias fiery Chariot whereby wee mount vp into Heauen. And this Paul sheweth. 2. Corinth. 5. 1. Wee know (saith hee) that if the earthly house of this tabernacle be destroyed, we haue a building giuen vs of God, a house not made with hands, but eternall in the Heauens. Why therefore should we feare, yea, why should we not desire death, seeing now it is vnto vs aduantage? Why should we not desire to be dissolued and to be with Christ, seeing that is best of all? For now wee may say, not that we die, but that wee depart and goe to our Father, as our Sauiour speaketh, Iohn 8. 21. But yet we must take heed that wee doe not imagine, that death in it owne nature worketh and procureth for vs these great benefits; for in it selfe this temporary death is but a step to euerlasting death, and as it were a fearefull Prologue to a more fearefull Tragedie. But our Sauiour Christ it is alone who hath gathered wholesome Honey out of this pernitious poyson, and by mingling the flesh of this venemous Serpent with his owne most precious bloud, he hath made thereof a holesome Triacle.

Verse 23.

Iohn 8. 21.

And thus haue I proued, notwithstanding Satans tentations and objections, that Christ hath perfectly redeemed vs, out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies; now in the last place Satan suggesteth, that though Christ hath once redeemed vs, yet we may come into their bondage againe; and then there is no hope of a second redemption. But we are to know that our Redeemer is God Omnipotent, whose power all the power of Hell cannot withstand; & therefore nothing is able to pluck vs out of his hand, as himselfe speaketh. Iohn 10. 28. neither are we to thinke, that he wil easily & willingly lose them, which he so intirely loues that he spared not his precious bloud, but freely gaue it as a price of their redemption. And therefore, as he is able, perfectly to saue all those who come vnto God by him; because he euer liueth to make intercession for them, as it is Heb. 7. 25. so we need not doubt of his will, seeing hee hath redeemed vs with so deare a price: For if he would not lose vs when wee were his enemies, much lesse will he suffer vs to perish when wee are become his subjects, yea his Spouse, nay, members of his owne body. And therefore we may assure our selues that if our Sauiour, our Spouse and Head hath once redeemed vs, then he hath also obtained eternall redemption for vs, as the Apostle affirmeth, Heb. 9. 12. So that though the Deuill rage like a roaring Lion, and the flesh betray vs and harbour whole legions of vnlawfull lusts which fight against our soules, and the world sometime frowne, and sometime fawne, and all of them by all meanes labour to destroy vs; yet our Omnipotent Redeemer, our louing and carefull Spouse and Head, will not suffer vs to be lost whom hee hath so dearely bought, but will giue vs the possession and fruition of that heauenly inheritance, and those vnspeakable joyes which he with his own most precious bloud hath purchased for vs.

CHAP. XIX.

Of our Vocation.

AND thus much concerning our Redemption; the next cause of our saluation is our vocation: for, whomsoeuer the Lord hath elected vnto euerlasting life, those also hee hath redeemed out of the hands of their spirituall enemies; and whom he hath redeemed, those in his good time he effectually calleth, and applyeth this great benefit of their Redemption vnto them, by separating them from the World, and ingrafting them into the body of

of Christ, whereby they become his, and he with all his benefits becommeth theirs. In speaking hereof, I will shew first what this calling is, and afterwards answere Satans tentations, whereby hee laboureth to make it frustrate and vnprofitable vnto vs. For the first, our vocation or calling is an effect of Gods election, whereby our Sauiour Christ, God and Man, doth by his Kingly authority call and inuite vs whilest wee liue here, vnto the participation and imbracing of the inestimable benefit of our Redemption, that thereby we may attain vnto euerlasting life. And thus we are called sometimes sooner, & sometimes later, when it seemeth good vnto the Lord: as appeareth in the Parable of the Housholder, who hired labourers into his Vineyard, some at the dawning of the day, others at the third, sixth, and ninth houre, others at the eleuenth houre, not long before Sun-setting, as it is, *Matth.*20. Moreouer, this our calling, is either common and generall, or else speciall and effectuall. The generall calling is, whereby all indifferently, good and bad, elect and reprobate, are outwardly inuited by the Ministery of the Gospel, to imbrace the benefit of our redemption wrought by Christ: which outward calling is vneffectuall to the wicked and reprobates, because being inuited to the supper of the King they refuse to come, that is, they either altogether neglect the hearing of the heauenly ambassage of the Gospell, or else contemne those inestimable benefits which are therein offered, preferring before them Honours, Riches and Pleasures of this life; whereby it commeth to passe, that the Word of God findeth no place in their hearts, but vanisheth away, leauing nothing behind it but the sauour of death, to their more deepe condemnation.

The speciall and effectuall calling is, that which is proper to Gods elect, when as with the outward Ministerie of the Word, wherein grace and saluation is offered to all beleeuers, our Sauiour Christ joyneth the inward operation of his holy Spirit; which openeth our deafe eares, enlighteneth our blind vnderstandings, and softneth and sanctifieth our hard and corrupt hearts, so as we attentiuely heare, truly vnderstand, and by a liuely faith apply, the doctrine of grace and saluation which is preached vnto vs: whereby also wee are separated from the World, giuen to Christ and he to vs, whereupon followeth that neere vnion, whereby we being ingrafted into his body, mystically doe become his members, and he our Head. That this effectuall calling is proper to those that are elected and shall be saued, it appeareth by the Parable of the Supper, where many, outwardly inuited to the great Supper of the King, refuse to come, and therefore are excluded from the Marriage. *Matth.*22. 3,8. And *Rom.*8.30. the Apostle saith, that whom he did predestinate, them also he called, and those also he iustifieth. So Acts 13.48 it is said, that as many as were ordained to euerlasting life, beleeued at the preaching of Paul and Barnabas, and therefore these only were effectually called. And Iohn 6.45. our Sauiour saith, that euery one who hath heard and hath learned of the Father, commeth vnto him. So that, outward hearing is not sufficient to bring vs to Christ, vnlesse the Father also inwardly instruct vs with his holy Spirit, opening our deafe eares, enlightning our blind vnderstandings, enclining our wils, & sanctifying our affections, that wee may attentiuely heare, truly vnderstand, and heartily imbrace the Gospell preached vnto vs. And this appeareth in the example of Lydia, Acts 16.14. whose heart the Lord is said to haue opened, that shee might attend vnto the things which Paul spake, and be conuerted: by which speech the Holy Ghost implyeth thus much, that her heart was (as it were) close shut, and fast locked vp, so as she could not receiue the Word preached, till the Lord had opened it by the inward operation of his holy Spirit. Which matter needs not seeme strange vnto vs, seeing it is continually confirmed by our owne experience: for how comes it to passe that many amongst vs, heare the Word preached from day to day, and yeare to yeare, and yet are neuer the neerer, but still remaine as ignorant in their minds, as peruerse in their wils, as corrupt in their affections, as prophane in their liues as euer they were? On the other side, how happeneth it that some attentiuely heare Gods Word, treasure it vp in their memories, and thereby haue their minds inlightned with the knowledge of God, their wils inclined to holines and righteousnesse, their affections sanctified, their liues reformed? Surely because the Lord doth joyne in these, the inward operation of his Spirit, with the outward Ministery of his Word, making it effectuall for their true conuersion; whereas hee leaueth the other to their owne corrupt affections and hardnesse of heart.

Rom 8.30.

Acts 13.48.

Iohn 6.45.

Acts 16.14.

And thus it appeareth that the elect onely are effectually called: as for the wicked and reprobate, though they heare the outward preaching of the Word, by which they are inuited vnto Christ; yet they stubbornly refuse to come vnto him, and reject all the gracious promises of the Gospell, to their eternall perdition; because the Lord leaueth them to their owne lusts and corruptions, not opening their hard hearts, nor inclining their peruerse wils, nor sanctifying their corrupt affections.

In the next place let vs consider, the parts of out effectuall calling; the first is our separation from the World, of which in former time we were Citizens & true members, that from first, of our separation from the world.

from henceforth wee should bee of Gods houshold and family: for naturally wee are meere worldlings, dead in our sins, and to euery good worke reprobate, liuing without God and seruing Satan, the world, and the corrupt lusts of our flesh, vntill it please the Lord to make choice of vs among many other, calling and separating vs from this corrupt masse of mankind, that hee may make vs subiects first of his Kingdome of grace, and afterwards of his Kingdome of glory. Iohn 15 19. Of this our Sauiour speaketh, Iohn 15.19. If you were of the world, the world would loue his owne; but because you are not of the world, but I haue chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. And the Apostle saith, that after our calling and conuersion, we are no more strangers and forresners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God. Now the Lord maketh his choice of vs before others, not for any respect of worthinesse or excellencie in vs more then in them, but of his meere mercie, vndeserued grace, and free good will; neither doth hee therefore intertaine vs into his Church and Family, because wee are alreadie, or because hee knoweth wee will be hereafter holy and righteous, but hauing freely called vs without any our deserts, he doth also of his owne vndeserued loue giue vs his holy Spirit, whereby wee are purged from our corruptions, sanctified, and raised vp from the death of sinne to newnesse of life; so that our holines is not a cause of our calling, but Gods election and calling is a cause of our holinesse. And this appeareth both by testimonies of Scripture and examples. For the first, the Lord professeth, Esay 65.1. that he offered himselfe to those that asked not after him, and was found of them that sought him not, &c. The Apostle, affirmeth that euen those who are the Church and people of God, were before their calling and conuersion, not like onely, but euen dead in their sinnes, in which they walked according to the course of the world; that they were by nature the children of wrath as well as others, and that they were without Christ, alients from the Common-wealth of Israel, strangers from the couenant of promise, and had no hope, and were without God in the world. So 1. Cor. 6.11. hee saith, that those who were now sanctified and iustified, were in time past fornicators, idolaters, adulterers, wantons, buggerers, &c. The Apostle Peter likewise writing to the Church of Christ, saith both of himselfe and them also, that they had spent the time past before their conuersion, after the lust of the Gentiles, walking in wantonnesse, lust, drunkennesse, gluttonie, and in abominable idolatries, 1. Pet. 4.3. And the Prophet Esay saith, that we all were wandring sheepe, vntill the Lord gathered vs into his sheepfold. So that it was so farre off, that wee should deserue any grace or mercie at Gods hand that in his iustice he might rather haue consumed vs as his enemies, then called vs to be his Church and people. This also is plaine in the examples specified in the Booke of God: for, what excellencie or worthinesse was in Abraham who before his calling was an idolater? or in Rahab who had spent her time in lust and filthines? or in Manasses who was a cruell idolater, a murtherer, a sorcerer? or in Matthew who was a Publican? or in Paul who was a bloudie persecutor? or in the thiefe, who had spent his life in all outrage and wickednesse? what excellencie or desert was in any of vs, who haue not so much as a thought, or inclination to any good thing, or any power to performe it? And therefore we must conclude with the Apostle, that wee are called with an holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his owne purpose of grace, &c. 2. Tim. 1.9.

That the Lord calleth vs, not for any respect of our owne worthinesse.

Esay 65.1.

Ephes. 2.19.

1 Cor. 6.11.

1 Pet. 4.3.

Esay 53.6.

The second part of effectuall calling, is that reciprocall donation whereby God the Father giueth Christ Iesus his onely begotten Sonne, truly and effectually to all his elect, to be their Head, Redeemer, and Sauiour; & also whereby he giueth his elect vnto Christ to become his members, that so they may be saued and redeemed by him. Whereupon all Gods elect may truly say, that this Christ Iesus, God and Man, is mine Head, my Sauiour and Redeemer; and all his merits, obedience and benefits, purchased by both, are become mine by this right, as being a member of his bodie; and our Sauiour also, may as truly say of Gods elect, that they are his whom he hath right to redeeme and saue, because he is their Head, and they his members. Of this mutuall donation and gift, the Scriptures speake euidently; and first that Christ is giuen vnto vs; Esay 9.6. Vnto vs a child is borne, and vnto vs a Sonne is giuen. Iohn 3.16. So God loued the world, that hee gaue his onely begotten Sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him should not perish, but haue euerlasting life. Rom. 8.32. Secondly, that wee are giuen vnto Christ, it is manifest, Iohn 17.6. I haue declared thy name vnto the men which thou gauest mee out of the world, thine they were and thou gauest them me, &c. So, Iohn 10.29. My Father which gaue them me is greater then all, and none is able to take them out of my Fathers hand. By which places it plainly appeareth, that Christ is giuen vnto vs by God his Father, and wee vnto Christ. But in what manner is this mutuall donation made? Surely not grosly and corporally; but spiritually and after a celestiall manner: for the meanes whereby it is brought to passe on Gods part, is his diuine and holy Spirit, and on our part a true and liuely faith.

Esay 9.6.

Iohn 3.16.

Rom. 8.32.

Iohn 17.6.

Iohn 10.29.

The third part of effectuall calling, is the vnion vnion and communion which is betwixt Christ and Gods elect: which followeth vpon the donation before spoken of, whereby Christ Iesus and they are mystically coupled together into one body, he becomming their Head, and they becomming his members. Of this the Apostle speaketh, Ephes. 4.15,16. where he exhorteth the faithfull, to grow vp into him which is the head, that is Christ, by whom all the body being coupled together by euery ioynt, &c. receiueth increase. And Chap. 5.30. We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. And of this our Sauiour Christ speaketh in the parable of the Vine, Iohn 15.1. where he compareth himselfe to the stocke and root, and all the faithfull to the branches. And the Apostle expresseth it by a metaphoricall speech taken from a building, comparing Christ to the foundation, and the Church to the rest of the building, Ephes. 2.20,21,22. Now we must not conceiue of this vnion, that it is either naturall, as the three persons in Trinitie are vnited in the same diuine nature; or personall as the body and soule being vnited make one man, or corporall as the parts of a building are coupled one with another: but this conjunction and vnion is made by the Spirit of God, which dwelling in the manhood of Christ aboue measure, filling it with the graces thereof, is from it deriued vnto all the faithfull and true members of Christs Body, filling them with the like graces in measure; and on our part by a true and liuely faith, whereby we do apply vnto vs Christ Iesus and all his benefits. And this appeareth Ephes. 2.22. where the Apostle saith, that we are the habitation of God by the spirit. And 1. Iohn 4.13. Hereby wee know that wee dwell in him and he in vs, because he hath giuen vs of his Spirit. So that by the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, we are made one with Christ and Christ with vs. Now the manner whereby this vnion is made is this; the faithfull man, body and soule is vnited vnto whole Christ God and man; but first and immediatly to the humane nature, and mediatly thereby to the diuine nature. Both which are most necessary; for life and saluation is wrought for vs by vertue and power of the Deitie, but it is deriued and communicated vnto vs by the humane nature of Christ. According to that Iohn 6.54. Whosoeuer eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternall life, and I will raise him vp at the last day. And this is the vnion which is betweene Christ our Head and vs his members by vertue whereof wee haue sure interest and just title, both to Christ and all his benefits, his obedience, death and merits, by which wee are justified, sanctified and saued.

And so much concerning the parts of our effectuall calling; the meanes whereby the Lord thus calleth vs, are first on Gods part the preaching of the Word, which is made effectual by the inward operation of his Spirit; first to mollifie our hard hearts, and truly to humble vs, by setting before vs our sins and corruptions, and this is done by the preaching of the Law: and after we see our inabilitie and insufficiencie of working our owne saluation, we are thereby brought out of our selues, to seeke for saluation in Christ Iesus, applying him and his merits vnto vs by a true and a liuely faith, and this is done by the preaching of the Gospell. The meanes on our part is the sauing hearing of the Word, whereby our hard hearts are mollified, and wee truely humbled, and brought out of our selues to seeke for saluation in Christ, whereby also true faith is begot in vs, wherewith we apply Christ vnto vs, and rely vpon him alone for our saluation. And thus haue I shewed what our vocation is, and the meanes thereof. Now let vs consider of those tentations, which Satan suggesteth into mens minds in respect of their vocation, to the end he may hinder them from the participation and fruition of Christ and his benefits, whereunto in the preaching of the Word they are called and inuited. And these are of two sorts, first, those wherewith he assaulted them who are not called: secondly, those wherewith hee assaulteth them who are truly called and conuerted.

CHAP. XX.

Satans tentations whereby hee seeketh to make our calling vneffectuall, answered.

Sect. 1. Of the necessitie of our effectuall calling.

THose who are not called hee tempteth diuers wayes, that hee may hinder their effectuall calling; & first hee laboureth to perswade them, to neglect this their calling, as a thing not necessary, and to contemne the Ministery of the Word, which is the meanes whereby we are effectually called. But wee are to withstand these tentations: and to this end we are first to know, that before our effectuall calling wee are not true members of the Church, though wee may outwardly thrust our selues into this societie; for what else is the Church but that company or congregation which is truly called and selected out of the World? and from hence it hath it name, for it is called Ecclesia ἀπὸ τῆς κλήσεως, from the calling thereof: vnlesse therefore wee be called wee are not members of the Church, and if wee be out of the Church there is no saluation; for our Sauiour gaue himselfe for his Church alone, and hee is the Sauiour of his owne body, as it is Ephes. 5.23,25. and hee addeth daily vnto the Church such as shalbe saued, as it is Acts 2.47. Moreouer, vnlesse

Ephes. 5 23,25.

Acts 2.47.

wee be truly called, wee shall neuer be truely iustified, and if we be not iustified, we cannot be sanctified; and without sanctification there is no glorification: for this is the golden chaine of our saluation, as appeareth, *Rom.*8.30. Lastly, wee can neuer come vnto Christ, nor communicate with him in any of his benefits, nor receiue any sanctifying and

*Rom.*8.30. sauing grace of Gods Spirit, till by the grace of God we are made partakers of this holy calling; for naturally wee are meere worldlings, destitute of all grace and goodnesse, & so wee remayne till by this holy calling wee are separated from the World, and ingrafted into the body of Christ, by whose Spirit we are quickned who were dead in our sinnes, and haue sanctifying graces begotten, nourished, and increased in vs. Seeing therefore this our effectuall calling is so necessary, let

*Matth.*22. Luke 14. not Satan perswade vs to neglect it, neither let vs when the Lord inuiteth vs to this royall Feast pretend excuses, one that he must go see his Farme, another that hee must goe trie his Oxen, a third that he must goe about his Merchandize, and a fourth that he is hindred by a carnall marriage: for if wee will not come when the Lord inuiteth vs, like vnworthy guests we shal be shut out of the doores, and not suffered to be partakers of this banquet of eternall blessednesse. Whilest to day

*Psal.*95.7,8. wee heare his voyce let vs not harden our hearts; for hee hath not promised that hee will call againe to morrow; whilest now he standeth at the doore and knocketh and calleth for entrance, let vs hearing his voice open the doore of our hearts, that hee may

*Reuel.*3.20. come in and sup with vs and wee with him; for if vnkindly we deny him entertainment, wee can haue no assurance that hee will returne againe to such churlish and vngratefull Hoasts. In a word, seeing the Lord passing by many other in the world maketh choice of vs, calling and inuiting vs to the participation and fruition of eternall blessednesse and happinesse, let no worldly businesse, though it seeme as necessary as the burying of our deare Father, hinder vs from hearkening and obeying this heauenly call; let no transitorie trifle stay vs from comming to *Matth.*8.21. God, when he offereth to make vs good assurance of his Royall Kingdome: for though many things be conuenient, yet one thing is necessary, and thrice happy are they which make choice of the better part.

*9. Sect.*2. Satans tentations whereby he moueth vs to neglect the meanes of our effectuall calling.

But it is impossible that euer we should be truely called, vnlesse wee carefully vse the meanes when the Lord offereth them vnto vs, and attentiuely listen vnto the Lords voice when he inuiteth vs to come vnto him: and therefore Satan labourcth, not so much to perswade vs that our vocation is a thing vnnecessary to saluation, seeing this is manifestly repugnant to plaine testimonies of Scriptures, as to moouc vs to neglect the meanes whereby wee are called, namely the Ministery of Gods Word: partly working vpon our inbred corruption, which not conceiuing the things of God condemneth them of foolishnesse, and not being delighted with those things which it vnderstandeth not, they seeme irksome and tedious; and partly inticing vs with the commodities and pleasures of the World, which are more pleasant to carnall men then their meate and drinke, hee causeth vs to spend that time in our earthly businesses or vaine delights, which we should bestow in the hearing of Gods Word, whereby we should be effectually called, that is, separated from the World, and ingrafted as liuely members into the body of Christ Iesus.

*9. Sect.*3. Motiues to perswade to the diligent hearing of Gods Word. The first Motiue.

Let vs therefore strongly arme our selues against this tentation, as being most pernicious vnto our soules: and to this end let vs briefly consider of some reasons, whereby we may be stirred vp diligently to frequent Gods holy assemblies, to be made partakers of this heauenly ambassage. First, therefore we are to know, that the Ministery of the Word is Gods owne Ordinance, which hee hath instituted and ordained for the gathering together of the Saints, and building the bodie of his Church, as appeareth, *Ephes.*4. 11,12. Neither doth he vse ordinarily any other meanes (especially where this is to bee had) for the true conuersion of his children, and for the working of the sanctifying graces of his Spirit in them. And therefore though hee could by extraordinary meanes, haue sufficiently instructed the Eunuch in the wayes of saluation, yet he would not, but rather vseth his owne Ordinance, and sendeth Philip to preach vnto him. Though he could haue illuminated the eies and vnderstanding of Paul, by the immediate worke of his spirit, yet he chose rather to send him to Ananias. Though hee could by the Ministery of his Angell, haue sufficiently informed Cornelius in things necessary to saluation, yet hee would not offer so great disparagement to his owne Ordinance, but rather causeth him to send for the Apostle Peter. And therefore if wee would haue any assurance of our effectuall calling and true conuersion vnto God, let vs with all care and diligence heare the Word of God preached vnto vs.

*Ephes.*4.11,12. Acts 8.6,8. Acts 10.5,6.

9. Sect. The second Motiue.

Secondly, let vs consider that it is euen God himselfe, who speaketh by the mouthes of his Ambassadours, and that they come not in their owne names but in Christs stead, to intreat vs that wee would bee reconciled vnto God. That though they be but earthen vessels, yet they bring from God a heauenly treasure which heretofore hath bin hid from the World, and is yet hid to those that perish. And hence it is that the Prophets, being to pronounce their prophecies, still begin with, The Word of the Lord, and, Thus saith the Lord; and God himselfe sending

*2. Cor.*4.6.

*2. Cor.*4.3.

Iere-

Ieremy to preach, saith, that hee had put his words into his mouth. Whosoeuer therefore refuse to heare the Word of God preached, refuse to heare the Lord himselfe, as our Sauiour plainly affirmeth, Luke 10.16. Hee that heareth you heareth mee, and hee that despiseth you despiseth me; and what hope can they haue of comming vnto God, who cānot indure to hear his voice calling thē vnto him?

Thirdly, the titles which are giuen vnto the Word in the Scriptures, may serue as strong arguments to moue vs carefully to heare the same; for it is called the Ministery of reconciliation, whereby wee are reconciled vnto God, 2. Cor. 5.18. and therefore without it, there being no other ordinary meanes of reconciliation, we remayne still Gods enemies. It is called the Gospell of peace, without which wee haue neither peace with God, nor the peace of Conscience; It is called the Word of Grace, because it is the meanes whereby the Lord deriueth vnto vs his grace and mercie, and all the spirituall graces of his sanctifying Spirit; It is called the Word of life, and the Word of saluation, because it is the meanes whereby wee are saued out of the hands of spirituall enemies, and are certainly assured of euerlasting life and happinesse. It is called the Kingdome of God, because thereby wee are brought, first into the Kingdome of Grace, and afterwards into the Kingdome of Glory. It is that heauenly seed whereby we are begotten vnto God, in which respect the Ministers thereof are called spirituall Fathers; and therefore without it wee can neuer be regenerated and borne vnto God; It is the food of our soules, euen milke for babes, and strong meate for men of ripe yeares, whereby wee are nourished vnto euerlasting life; and therefore let vs not refuse this heauenly food like wayward children when our heauenly Father offereth it vnto vs, for so our soules being hunger-starued, nothing can follow but eternall death and destruction. It is the Physicke of our soules, whereby being sicke in sinne they are cured and restored: for as Christ is our heauenly Physition, so is his Word the potion which hee giueth to purge vs from our corruptions, and the preseruatiue which confirmeth vs in health, and preserueth vs from the leprous infection of sinne, yea, this Physick is so soueraigne, that though with Lazarus wee haue lien dead in our graues foure dayes, that is, continued long in our naturall corruptions, yet being applied it will raise vs vp to newnesse of life; and therefore those who neglect this diuine Physicke, are subject to all infection of sin, and being infected can neuer attaine to their health againe. It is the square and rule of our liues, from which wee must not decline either on the right hand nor on the left. And therefore without it our workes must needes be crooked in Gods sight. It is a lampe to our feet, and a light vnto our paths, whereby we are guided in the wayes of holinesse and righteousnesse which lead vs to euerlasting happinesse, which being taken away wee shall walke in darknesse, and be euery step readie to fall into sin and eternall destruction. It is the Sword of the Spirit, wherewith we defend our selues and offend our spirituall enemies, which being neglected, or not skilfully vsed, wee shall lie open to all thrusts and blowes, and be easily ouercome. In a word, it is profitable for all vses, as being the only ordinary meanes ordained to conuey vnto vs all good, and to preserue vs from all euill; and therefore great folly it is for any man to contemne it, or to prefer before it vaine pleasures, or trifling cōmodities, which also are momentanie and vncertaine.

Psal. 119.105.

Ephes. 6.17.

Fourthly, the manifold benefits which by the Word of God are deriued vnto vs, may serue as a strong argument to stirre vs vp to the diligent and carefull hearing thereof; for first thereby we become true members of the Church, out of which there is no saluation, and being ingrafted into the body of Christ, are made partakers of all his benefits. And this appeareth, Ephes. 4.11,12. where the Apostle sheweth that the end of the Ministerie is for the gathering together of the Saints, and for the edification of the body of Christ. A notable example whereof wee haue Acts 2.41. where, by one Sermon three thousand soules were added to the Church. Secondly, hereby we are regenerated and begotten vnto God, and therefore in this respect Paul professeth himselfe, the Father of the Corinthians, 1. Cor. 4.15. and without this regeneration and new birth, none shall euer enter into the Kingdome of God, as our Sauiour sheweth vs, Iohn 3.5. Thirdly, vnlesse the blind eyes of our vnderstandings be illuminated, wee shall fall into a labyrinth of errours, and neuer finde the hard way which leadeth to Gods Kingdome; but the Word of God is that heauenly Light, which shineth vnto vs who sit in darknesse, and in the shadow of death, guiding our feet into the way of peace, as it is Luke 1.79. and in this respect, Gods Ministers are called the light of the world, because, as Lights, they guide and direct men in the wayes of saluation, and reueale vnto them the great Light, euen the Sunne of righteousnesse, Christ Iesus. Fourthly, through faith wee are saued, Ephes. 2.8. Neither is it possible, that without faith wee should euer attaine vnto saluation, for this is the condition of all the promises of the Gospell, without which we cannot haue any assurance of them, Iohn 1.12. and 3.16,18. Moreouer, whatsoeuer is not done of faith is sinne, Rom. 14.23. And without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11.6. But the preaching of the Word is the ordinary meanes of begetting faith in vs, as appeareth Rom. 10. 17. Faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. And therefore whosoeuer contemne or neglect the hearing of Gods Word, they refuse the meanes of faith; and being without faith, all they doe is sinne and cannot please God, neither can they euer haue any assurance of Gods promises, or their owne saluation. Lastly, by the hearing of Gods Word we are saued, and therefore Gods Ministers in this respect are called Sauers of the people, 1. Tim. 4. 16. Take heed vnto thy selfe and vnto learning; continue therein, for in so doing thou shalt both saue thy selfe and them that heare thee; because they are the Ministers of God, whom hee vseth as meanes and instruments in working the saluation of the elect. And therefore seeing by the preaching of the Word, we are made members of the body of Christ, regenerated and enlightned; seeing thereby wee attaine vnto faith, and euerlasting saluation, let vs as we loue our owne soules, diligently heare the Word, and not suffer our selues to be hindered from frequenting the holy assemblies of Gods Saints, with euery vaine pleasure and base commoditie.

Q. Sect. 6. The fourth Motiue.

Rom. 10 17.

1. Tim. 4. 16.

Q. Sect. 7. Satans tentations, whereby he withdraweth men from the diligent hearing of Gods Word, answered.

But here the tempter will be ready to obiect, that though the Word preached be thus necessary and profitable at some times when wee are at leasure, yet this should be no reason to moue vs to neglect our businesse, or abandon our pleasures; for when once by the hearing thereof wee are conuerted, enlightned with the knowledge of Gods true Religion, and endued with faith, it is sufficient if wee but seldome heare it; for what in substance can we learne, which we haue not alreadie learned, or what can the Preacher teach vs, which wee doe not know as well as he? Against which tentation, which is so common and pernicious, it behoueth euery Christian most carefully to arme himselfe. And to this end let vs know, first, that this neglect of Gods Word is a manifest signe, that such are not as yet truly conuerted, nor indued with any measure of sauing knowledge and true faith; for whosoeuer are of God heare his Word, Iohn 8. 47. and all Christs sheepe heare his voice and follow him, as it is Iohn 10. 3, 4. 27. Whosoeuer haue attained vnto knowledge, faith and the rest of the graces of Gods sanctifying Spirit, they will bee so rauished with the excellencie of them, that it is not possible for them to content themselues with a small measure, but still they will labour to grow from knowledge to knowledge, from faith to faith, from one grace to another, till they become perfect men in Christ. And as those who haue but once tasted of some delicious meate, are not satisfied therewith, but againe and againe feed vpon it if easily they may come by it, because their taste is exceedingly delighted therewith, so if euer wee did but truly taste of this heauenly Manna, and spirituall food of our soules, the Word of God, wee would not rest so contented, but when opportunity is offered, we would often feed vpon it, vntill our soules were fully satisfied, and nourished vnto perfect strength. And for as much as so long as wee continue heere, our knowledge is but in part and our faith weake, and Gods graces but in small measure, therefore we would continually feed on this heauenly nourishmene, to the end of our liues, that thereby our knowledge may bee increased, our faith strengthened, and all other graces confirmed and multiplied in vs. But if on the other side we loathe this heauenly Manna, it is a manifest signe, wee neuer tasted thereof in truth, or that our soules are exceeding sicke in sinne, which maketh them that they cannot relish this daintie and delicious food, and that wee haue not knowledge, faith, or any grace begotten in vs, neither that our selues are begotten vnto God. For as the childe being begotten and conceiued, doth presently draw nourishment from the mother; and the bigger it waxeth, the more it desireth, till it come vnto perfect age and strength: so as soone as the graces of Gods Spirit are begotten in vs by the preaching of the Word, they draw nourishment from their spirituall mother, the Church; and the stronger they waxe in grace, the more earnestly they desire a greater pittance till they become perfect men in Christ. And therefore where there is no desire of this food, there is no Regeneration nor new birth.

Iohn 8. 47. & 10 27.

Moreouer, the Word of God is the food of our soules, whereby wee are nourished, and the graces of Gods Spirit confirmed and increased in vs; and therefore it is not sufficient to eate of this food once or twice, but continually, euen as often as the Lord calleth vs to this spirituall Banquet. For as the body will waxe faint, and quickly perish, vnlesse that which wasteth away bee continually supplyed by nourishment: so will the soule languish and waxe faint in spirituall graces, vnlesse it bee often nourished with this heauenly Manna. Let not therefore Satan perswade vs, that seldome hearing of Gods Word is sufficient, where this Banquet is often prouided, for though in the time of scarcitie by the extraordinarie blessing of God, we may go with Elias forty daies in the strength of one meale, yet if we feed no oftner when the Lord granteth vnto vs plentifull prouision of this spirituall food, our soules will be hunger-starued. Neither let our often receiuing of this heauenly nourishment, cause vs with the vnthankfull Israelites to loathe it, or like wayward children, or impatient sicke patients, spit it out of our mouthes againe; for if our appetites be thus cloyed cloyed through a surfet of satietie, surely we are to feare, lest the Lord who is a cunning Physition, will prescribe vs a long fast, till wee haue recouered our stomackes, as hee threatneth, Amos 8.11. I will send a famine in the Land, not a famine of bread; nor a thirst of water, but of hearing the Word of the Lord. And then wee shall wander from Sea to Sea, and from the North, euen to the East shall we run to and fro to seeke the Word of the Lord and shall not find it.

Lastly, though it should bee granted that wee had attained vnto such a measure of knowledge, that wee should need no more, yet are there many reasons why wee should need no more, yet are there many reasons why wee should continually heare Gods Word with as great diligence as euer we did. For the end of our hearing is not onely to know, but also to practice; not only to informe our judgements, but also to reforme our affections; not only to beget the graces of Gods Spirit in vs, but also to nourish and increase them; not only to teach vs what we should doe, but also to stir vs vp to the doing thereof; and the Word of God is not onely a light for our feet to shew vs the way, but also a pricke in our sides to make vs goe, in the way, and a bridle in our mouthes to keepe vs from wandring; it is not only profitable to teach, but to improue, to correct and instruct in righteousnesse, That the man of God may be absolute, being made perfect vnto all good workes, as it is, 2. Tim. 3.16. it is not only profitable for doctrine, but for edification, exhortation and consolation, as appeareth, 1. Cor. 14.3. And therefore it is not sufficient to come once or twice to the assemblies of Gods Saints, but we must aboue all things desire with the Prophet Dauid, that we may dwell in the house of the Lord all the dayes of our life, to behold the beautie of the Lord, and to visit his Temple, Psal. 27.4. For though our knowledge be neuer so great, yet so long as we haue any sin hanging on, or any grace imperfect in vs, we had need to be continuall hearers of Gods Word, for the suppressing of the one and perfecting of the other.

CHAP. XXI.

Satans tentation, whereby he perswadeth men that the Scriptures are not Gods Word, answered.

THe second tentation which Sathan suggesteth into mens minds, to the end hee may moue them to neglect the hearing of Gods Word, or though they doe heare it, to reiect it through vnbeliefe, hee thus frameth. What folly is it to take such paines in hearing the scripture, and what indeede is it, so stedfastly to beleeue it, seeing thou knowest not whether it be Gods Word, or the subtill deuice of mans braine, to keepe the people in awe, and to restraine them from such secret faults, as other humane Lawes ratified and confirmed with temporall and outward punishments and rewards cannot keepe them from; because the Lawes of Princes cannot (no more then the Law-giuers themselues) either fore-see, preuent or punish any faults and offences, which are not open and manifest? Why shouldest thou thereby be moued to forsake thy delightfull sinnes, and to imbrace vnpleasant godlinesse, to abandon thy pleasures, and to vndertake an austere and strict course of life, seeing thou knowest not whether the Scriptures be true or false, the Word of the euerlasting God or the inuention of mortall man? Against which tentation it behoueth euery man most carefully to arme himself, as vndermining the very foundation of all true Religion; for take away the authoritie of the Scriptures, and you shall open a wide doore to all carnall worldlinesse, beastly Epicurisme, and Deuillish Atheisme; they being the only true rule of vertue, whereby wee are directed to chuse the good and refuse the euill; the Scepter of God whereby he ruleth all the subjects of his Kingdome, which being rejected we giue ouer our selues to be ruled by the Deuill, and the lusts of our owne flesh; the light of our eyes, without which we are blind and walke in darknesse; the food of our soules, which being taken away, they languish in all spirituall graces, and fall into miserable death and destruction; and the Sword of the Spirit whereby we defend our selues, and beate backe our spirituall enemies, which being plucked out of our hand, we are easily vanquished and led captiue vnto all sin and wickednesse.

The answere: that all Religion dependeth vpon the authoritie of the Scriptures.

And that wee may bee the better prouided against this tentation, let vs propound some reasons whereby gain-sayers may bee conuinced, and Gods children perswaded of the truth and authority of the Scriptures. The first argument to prooue the Scriptures to be written by the motion and reuelation of Gods Spirit, is the antiquitie thereof; for whatsoeuer Religion is most ancient, that proceedeth from God: but the Religion contained in the Scriptures, is of all other most ancient: and therefore God was the authour thereof. The first part of this reason is cleere and manifest; for seeing man was created for Gods glory, to the end hee should worship and serue him, and could not performe acceptable worship and seruice vnto God, vnlesse he reuealed his will vnto him; therefore that man might attaine vnto the end of his Creation, it was necessary that the Lord should from the beginning reueale vnto him his true Religion, whereby he might know how to worship and serue him, according to his will. And consequently, the first and most ancient Religion is the true Religion, which proceeded from God; and all other are false and counterfeit, which are disagreeing and repugnant hereunto seeing Gods will is one and the same, constant and immutable. The second part of this reason, namely, that the Religion deliuered in the Scriptures is of all others most ancient, is of vndoubted truth; for it is within a few dayes as ancient as the World it selfe, taking it beginning from mans Creation, and so continuing in a constant and vnchangeable course vnto this day. Now all other Religions are but new and vpstart in comparison hereof, taking their beginnings diuers thousands yeeres since the Creation; yea, euen the Gods themselues worshipped by them (which in truth were men like themselues) had their beginning for the most part, long since the time of Abraham, as their owne Histories manifestly declare. Neither did any other Religion of the Heathen continue one and the same; for that which one receiued another rejected, that which one confirmed another changed, and time hath worne them all out, leauing scarce any small remnants or reliques of them. And therefore all other Religions, saue that which is deliuered in the Scripture, are false and counterfeit; and this only the Truth of God.

Sect. 2. Reasons to proue that the Scripture was indited by Gods Spirit. 1. The antiquitie of the Scriptures.

2. Sect. 3. 2. Reasons taken from the puritie & perfection of the Scriptures.

Secondly, the puritie and perfection of the Scriptures doe euidently shew that they are the Word of God, indited by his holy Spirit; for they manifest vnto vs the only true God, and propound him alone vnto vs, to be worshipped, expressing also the manner and meanes of his seruice, from which wee must not decline on the right hand, or on the left: but all other Religions teach vs either to worship many Gods, which is a thing absurde in reason, and contrary to the light of nature, as diuers of the wisest Philosophers well discerned; or to worship the true God not according to his reuealed will, but according to their false imaginations, and erroneous superstitions. Now, nature, reason and experience it selfe teach vs, that there is no wise King but will set downe Rules and Lawes, according to which he will be serued and obeyed, and not leaue it to euery ones fantasie and vaine imagination; and shall wee thinke God lesse wise then man, that hee should not haue a perfect Law for the gouernment of his people, but suffer euery man to follow his owne blind conceit and ignorant Superstition?

3. Sect. 4. 3. Reasons taken from the sincerite of the Writers of the Scriptures.

Thirdly, the sincerite and vprightnesse of the Writers of the holy Scriptures, is a manifest argument that they were guided and directed by Gods Spirit; for they deliuer nothing in their owne name, but in the name of the Lord, not arrogating any prayse vnto themselues, but ascribing all glory vnto God; neither did they in their preachings or writings seeke themselues, or aime at any worldly benefit; yea rather they were content to be contemptible, subject to scoffes and taunts, yea to offer themselues to death and depriuation of all worldly felicitie, for the truth of God which they had deliuered. And whereas diuers of them might haue liued in all pompe, if they would haue followed the times, winked at the sinnes of Rulers, and suppressed the Word of the Lord, which they had receiued of him; they chose rather to suffer persecution, yea death it selfe, then they would keepe backe any of the counsell of God, as appeareth in the example of Esay, Ieremy, Ezechiel, Micheas, Zacharias, Amos, and many others of the Prophets, and Apostles. Neither doe they in their writings abstaine onely from seeking their owne glory and prayse, but also set downe those things which might tend to their discredit, to the end God might be glorified in their infirmities, the truth confessed and preserued, and the Church of God benefited, when by seeing the weaknesse of the most strong, they are kept from presuming on their owne strength and from despairing in Gods mercie. And thus Moses concealeth not the fall of our grand parents, the drunkennesse of Noah, the incest of Lot, the lie of Isaak, the whoredome of Iuda; yea, which more neerely concerned him, he plainly reuealeth the horrible and bloudy sin of his grandfather Leui, and Simeon, in murthering the Sichemites and the curse of their father Iacob pronounced against them for this their outrage. Which could not in humane reason but be dishonourable to his stock and progeny, and offensiue to all who were of that tribe. Furthermore hee displayeth the corruptions, imperfections, and often rebellions of that people, whose saluation he preferred before his owne soule; he spareth not to set downe the Idolatry of his owne brother Aaron, nor the sinne of his sister Miriam in murmuring against him, nor of Aarons sonnes in offering with strange fire. Nay, hee leaueth the remembrance of his owne sinne of impatiencie and vnbeliefe, for which hee was debarred from entring into the Land of promise, vnto all posterities, as a perpetuall note of his owne weaknesse and infirmitie. Neither sought hee at all his owne glory, and the aduancement of his posteritie, but the glory of God and the good of the Church, as may hereby appeare in that when the gouernment was established in his hand, he doth not make his own sonnes his successors, but Iosua his seruant, because God had so appointed it. The like may be said of Ieremie, who hath in his prophecie left record of his murmuring and impatiencie. Of Ionas, who who hath set downe his owne rebellion, punishment, and repining against God; Of the Apostle Paul, who hath not spared to call himselfe a cruell persecutor and chiefe of all Sinners. Now we know that naturally, we desire to conceale the faults of our friends & kindred, and we count him an euill bird that defileth his owne nest; naturally wee seeke our owne prayse and the aduancement of our children, and can brooke nothing lesse then that our faults should bee divulged and become table talke: and therefore this detection of their owne and their friends falls and faults could not proceed from nature, or any worldly policie, but from the direction of Gods Spirit which ouer-ruled their affections and tooke away all partialitie.

Sect. 5. The fourth reason, taken from the consent of the diuers Writers of the Scriptures, Fourthly, the wonderfull consent which is amongst the diuers Writers of the Scriptures, doth euidently shew that they were guided and directed by one and the same Spirit of God: for whereas it is truly said of other men, Quot homines tot sententiæ, Looke how many men there bee, and so many minds there be, whereof it commeth to passe that euery writer almost varieth from another, gain-saying & confuting that which another hath deliuered, that so out of the ashes of their credit and reputation they may build a monument of their owne fame: the quite contrary is to be obserued in the Writers of the Scriptures, who successiuely writing one after another the space of diuers thousand yeeres, doe notwithstanding consent together in the same truth, the latter ratifying and confirming that which the former had deliuered without any alteration, opposition or emulation, as though they were diuers hands set on worke by the same soule; which could not possibly come to passe vnlesse they were ouer-ruled by Gods Spirit.

Sect. 6. The fift reason, taken from the wonderfull preseruation of the Scriptures against all oppositions.

Fiftly, the mightie oppositions which haue beene made by the Deuill and his wicked Impes against this doctrine of the Scriptures, and yet all in vaine, doe euidently shew that they are Gods Word and Truth, the patronage and protection whereof hee hath himselfe vndertaken, aboue all humane reason and power. For hath not the Deuill in former times, and doth hee not still at this day oppose himselfe against the Word of God? And doe not his cursed instruments, vngodly men, the more they exceed in wickednesse, the more bend their whole power maliciously to oppugne this truth, persecuting the children of God, for this onely; because they are professours and practisers of Gods true Religion? And whence proceedeth this malicious opposition but from this, that the Scriptures are the Word of God? and therefore as they hate and oppose themselues against God himself, so also against his Word, and because they know that by this light their workes of darknesse are discouered, therefore they labour to put it cleane out, that their wickednesse may not be descried; because it is pure and holy they cannot endure it, they themselues being corrupt and wicked; because it is the rule of iustice which sheweth the crookednesse of their wayes, they would (if they were able) burne it or cut it in peeces; because it is the word by which they are condemned, therefore they loathe as much to heare it, as the prisoner doth abhorre to heare the sentence of the iust Iudge. And hence proceedeth their opposition and oppugning of the holy Scriptures with all their force and might; but all in vaine, for the more the Deuill and wicked men rage against the Word of God, the more by the Almightie power of God supporting it, the glory thereof appeareth and spreadeth it selfe ouer the face of the earth; the more they labour to keepe it downe, the more it flourisheth. And as they who goe about to stop the current of a mighty Riuer, doe but make it to swell the higher and ouerflow all the Country, whereas before it was contained within the compasse of his owne bankes: so when Sathan and his wicked Impes, do seeke to stay this heauenly streame which floweth from Gods Sanctuary, and labour might and mayne to hinder the passage and propagation of Gods Truth; the more it spreadeth it selfe, maugre their malice, and ouer-floweth the whole earth. And whence can the defeating and the frustrating of this powerfull violence proceed, but from a greater power, euen the power of God? for though all men should combine themselues together, they are vnable to resist Satans rage, or protect the Word of God from vtter ruine: onely the Lord whose power is Omnipotent could thus vphold it, and make it preuaile against all the power of Hell. And as the Lord by preseruing and defending the Scriptures, from the beginning vnto this day, doth euidently shew that they are his owne Word and reuealed Will: so also by punishing, euen in this life, with vtter ruine and destruction, all those who haue most violently and malitiously opposed themselues against it, and persecuted the Saints of God for the profession hereof; as may appeare notably in the examples of Antiochus Epiphanes, Herod, Nero, Domitian, Diocletian, Iulian the Apostata, and many others; who by their shamefull and horrible deaths testified and prooued the Scriptures to bee the truth of God, which they had oppugned and persecuted in the whole course of their wicked liues.

9. Sect. 7. The sixt reason taken from miracles,

Sixtly, the Lord hath approued the Scriptures to be his truth by wonderfull miracles, which Satan himselfe cannot so much as imitate; as by giuing the blind their sight, raising the dead to life, turning backe the course of the the Sunne in the firmament, diuiding the Sea in two parts, and such like; which miracles were wrought by the Almightie power of God, to this end that the faithfull might bee confirmed in the assurance of Gods Truth, and the wicked conuinced. But against this, Satan will be ready to suggest, that there were neuer any such miracles as are recorded in the Scriptures. To which I answere, that these miracles were not done in a corner, or in hugger mugger, but in the presence of great multitudes; otherwise the Prophets & Apostles who were but meane and simple, should haue laboured in vaine to haue perswaded men, to haue imbraced their doctrine and religion (especially being so contrary to humane wisdome, and our naturall disposition and affections) if they had onely themselues reported, or brought some few witnesses of their miracles wrought, and not publikely shewed them to all the people. Moreouer, seeing this doctrine hath had so many enemies from the beginning, it is not probable but that they would haue exclaimed, and written against the writings of the Prophets and Apostles, as soone as they were published, for writing such things as were neuer done: but amongst all those who haue opposed themselues against the Scriptures, there is no man so impudent as to deny that such miracles were done, of which so many were eye-witnesses. Yea contrariwise the Heathen themselues, who neither knew God nor his true Religion, haue made mention of them in their writings; and the Turkes and Iewes who to this day withstand the worke of Redemption wrought by Christ, doe notwithstanding confesse that such miracles were wrought by Christ and his Apostles; neither in truth are they able to gainsay them, seeing they haue receiued this truth by tradition from their fathers, and therefore they are driuen to confesse, that Christ was a great Prophet though not the promised Messias.

¶. Sect. 8. The seuenth reason, taken from the testimony of Martyrs.

Seuenthly, the constant testimony of innumerable Martyrs, who haue sealed this truth with their deerest bloud, is a notable argument to assure vs that it is indeed the Word of God: for it is not likely that so many would so constantly and cheerefully haue suffered for their profession, the most exquisite torments that wit and malice could inuent, if the Spirit of God had not certainly assured them that it was the Truth of God, and if it had not supported them in suffering these torments aboue all humane power and strength. And whereas it may be obiected, that wicked men haue suffered also for their Sects, Opinions and Heresies, wee are to know that there is great difference betweene them; first, because the number hath beene few who haue suffered for their seuerall Sects and Heresies, but the Martyrs almost innumerable who haue suffered for the same truth. Secondly, the same cheerefulnesse, constancie and rejoycing in their sufferings hath not beene in them who haue suffered for their errours, which hath alwayes beene obserued in Gods Saints. And lastly, these Heretickes haue beene confuted and conuinced of their errours and heresies before their sufferings, whereas Gods Saints directed by his holy Spirit, haue stopped the mouthes of their aduersaries with the wisdome of Gods Word, which Satan himselfe cannot resist, and through violent rage being vnconuicted haue beene ledde to the slaughter.

CHAP. XXII.

Other reasons to proue that the Scriptures were indited by Gods Spirit, taken from the Scriptures themselues.

¶. Sect. 1. The eight reason taken from the argument which they handle.

THe eight reason to prooue that the Scriptures are the Word of God is the argument which they handle, and the end whereunto they tend. For the subiect whereof they intreate are the great workes of the euer-liuing God, how hee exerciseth his mercie towardes his children in sustaining, defending, and sauing them from all their enemies: and his iustice towardes the wicked in turning their counsailes to foolishnesse, in ouerthrowing their designes and purposes, curbing in their rage and violence, and in punishing & destroying them. Now if you consider and peruse all other writings in the World besides, you shall find no such matter contained in them. For some labour in polishing humane Arts; some set out large Histories of the actions, counsailes, successe, policies, enterprises and perturbations of men like themselues: so that at the first sight we may know that they are indited by the spirit of man, seeing they are wholly spent in humane affaires, neuer intermedling with any spirituall matter appertaining vnto God. Moreouer, the Scriptures attribute the gouerning and wise disposing of all things to Gods all-ruling prouidence, that hee may haue the whole prayse of his owne workes; as when they speake of some famous victory, they doe aseribe it neither to the wisdome of the Captaine, nor to the valour of the common Souldier, but vnto the Lord of hosts alone; neither doe they make Poems in the prayse of Moses, Iosua, Dauid, Ezechias, or any other of the Kings and Leaders, but in the prayse of the Lord, who by his owne strong arme hath giuen his children victory ouer their enemies. Now whence can this proceed but from the Spirit of God inditing them, who contrary to the nature of man which desireth rather all prayse himselfe, doth moue him to refuse all glory attributed to himselfe, that all the prayse may be ascribed vnto God? So when they speake of any be-benefit receiued by the Church, they doe not attribute it to wordly friends, their good fortune, or their owne industry and labour, but to the blessing of God proceeding of his meere mercie and goodnesse towards them. And contrariwise, when they set downe the destruction of the wicked, they doe not ascribe it to any want of their owne care and prouidence, nor to the malice or power of their enemies, nor to blind chance, or other outward accident, but to the hand of God exercising his judgements vpon them, and punishing them for their sinnes. Now if you peruse all other writings, you shall find that they ayme at nothing lesse then Gods glory; for some write to shew their eloquence, others to extoll their wits and deepe learning, others to aduance the prayse of mortall men aboue the cloudes, some for one end, and some for another, all ayming at their owne prayse, pleasure or profit, neuer so much as once respecting Gods glory in their least thought. And hence it is that setting downe any victory they ascribe it to the weaknes or want of wit, prouidence, or courage of the aduerse part, or to the fortitude of the Captaines, the resolutenesse of the souldiers, the aduantages of the place, Sunne, Wind, and such like circumstances, in the meane time excluding the God of battailes, as though he had no stroke in this businesse. So likewise when they speake of any other affaires or accidents which fall out in the gouernment of the world, they ascribe all to outward circumstances, inferiour meanes and subordinate causes, as though God had giuen ouer the gouernment of the earth, and had committed the ruling of the sterne to blinde Fortune. Now whence can this exceeding difference proceed, that they should altogether ayme at the glory of God, and these wholly at the prayse, pleasure, and profit of man? that they should alwayes ascribe the gouernment and disposing of all things to the wise prouidence of God, and these to outward accidents, naturall causes and inferiour meanes? Surely because they were indited by the Spirit of God, and therefore themselues are diuine, sauouring wholly of the authour of them: and these by the spirit of man, and therefore all contained in them is meerly humane, carnall and naturall.

Sect. 2. The ninth reason, taken from the stile of the Scriptures.

The ninth reason may bee taken from the stile and manner of penning the Scriptures, in which they much differ from all other writings whatsoeuer: for whereas men in their writings affect the prayse of flowing eloquence and loftinesse of phrase, the holy Ghost in penning the Scriptures hath vsed great simplicitie and wonderfull plainnesse, applying himselfe to the capacitie of the most vnlearned. In which low and humble manner of speech, hee doth notwithstanding set forth the deepe wisdome of God, and the profound mysteries of Religion, the bottome whereof the most wise and learned in the world cannot search into: and vnder the vaile of simple and plaine speech, there shineth such diuine wisdome and glorious majestie, that all the humane writings in the world, though neuer so adorned with the flowers of eloquence, and sharpe conceits of wit and learning, cannot so deeply pierce the heart of man, nor so forcibly worke vpon his affections, nor so powerfully incline his will either to the imbracing of that which is good, or auoyding of that which is euill, as the Word of God: and whence can this proceed but from the vertue, power and wisdome of the Spirit of God who is the author of them? Moreouer, we may obserue in the stile of the Scriptures, a majesticall authority aboue all other writings, which only beseemeth the glorious King & Soueraigne Commander of Heauen & Earth: for they speake in the same manner, and injoyne the like obedience, to Prince and people, rich and poore, learned and vnlearned, without any difference or respect of person; not vsing any arguments, reasons, or perswasions, but absolutely commanding that dutie which is to be done, and forbidding that sinne which should be left vndone, and that vnder the promise of euerlasting life and blessednesse, and the paine not of the Gallowes, Racke, or Wheele, but of eternall death and damnation. And whom beseemeth it to promise euerlasting life, or to threaten euerlasting death, but him onely who is himselfe eternall and euerlasting? and who hath this absolute authoritie of commanding all without any difference, but hee who is Lord, Creatour and Gouernour of the Prince as well as the people? Lastly, this Word of God doth not only extend it selfe to the outward actions & conuersation, requiring alone the externall obedience in fact and outward behauiour, which is the vttermost that humane Lawes respect, because the Law-giuers can see no further; but the Law of God requireth especially the obedience of the heart, and forbiddeth not only consent to any euill, but euen concupiscence and lust? now who can make Lawes for the heart and conscience, or though hee should be so fond to make them, who could either reward the obedient, or punish the disobedient, but God alone who searcheth the heart and reines? The stile therefore of the Scriptures being peculiar vnto themselues, shewing majesty in lowlinesse and meannesse, an ouer-ruling power in perswading, without rendring reason or bringing any argument besides absolute authority, and an vniuersall jurisdiction ouer all without difference or respect, and that as well in regard of the secret thoughts as the outward actions, doth manifestly shew that they are not the inuention of man, but the

Word

Word of God indited by his holy Spirit.

Why the Scriptures were penned in a simple, lowly & plaine stile.

But it may bee obiected, that if the Lord who is infinite in wisdome were the authour of the Scriptures, they would haue excelled all humane writings in conceit of wit, and excellencie of phrase and stile, as far as God excelleth man, whereas wee see that they are penned after a most simple, plaine and vnpolished manner. To which I answere, that it doth not become a Prince to play the Orator when he setteth out an Edict, nor to vse Rhetoricall figures and alluring perswasions when he hath to deale with his subiects, but rather peremptory Commandements, and plaine phrases, full of grauitie and authoritie without all affectation; and how much lesse should the chiefe Commander of King and Subiect, vse such a stile as sauoured any whit of humane eloquence, seeing it better beseemeth his Maiestie plainly to command, then to perswade or allure with inticing speeches? Secondly, the Scriptures were penned by the Holy Ghost, not only for the wise and learned, but also for the simple and ignorant, and therefore howsoeuer the Lord in the profunditie of his wisdome, could haue written in such a lofty stile as would haue filled euen the most learned with admiration, yet hee vseth a simple easie stile fit for the capacitie of all, because it was for the vse of all, and necessary to saluation to be vnderstood of all sorts and conditions. As therefore hee frameth himselfe to our shallow capacitie in the penning of the Scriptures, and speaketh not according to his vnsearchable wisdome, but after the manner of men, or else no man, no not the most wise and learned could vnderstand him: so he thought it fit to speake aswell to the capacitie of the simple as the wise, because the knowledge of his word was no lesse necessary for saluation to these than to the other; and in his mercy & goodnesse hee vouchsafed as well milke to the babe, as strong meate to those who were come to more ripe yeeres in knowledge and spirituall wisdome. At which the wise and learned haue no reason to be offended, seeing the saluation of one is as deare to God as of another, and they may with greater facility vnderstand the Sriptures being plaine and easie, which could not be vnderstood of the simple, if they were penned in a loftie eloquent phrase. And yet if they examine the Scriptures in the balance of a true iudgement, they may find food therein contained fit for their owne pallat and taste; for vnder this humilitie they shall discerne more majestie, vnder this simplicitie more deepe wisdome, vnder this vnpolished plainnesse more powerfull perswasions to worke vpon and incline the affections, then in all humane writings whatsoeuer. Thirdly, humane eloquence and witty sharpe conceits, are not only vnfitting the graue majestie of our heauenly King, but also needlesse in respect of the Scriptures themselues; for what are they but Gods Truth, and what is more agreeable and beseeming truth, then plainnesse and simplicitie? For what needs beautie the helpe of painting, or a precious Diamond much art to polish it, seeing they are glorious in their owne nature? And what needes the truth of God, which in it selfe shineth cleerly like the Sunne in his chiefest brightnesse, the goodly ornaments of humane eloquence which would but darken the beames thereof? Or what needs that which is heauenly and diuine, any helpe from that which is earthly and carnall to commend it to mans iudgement? No, no, the flowers of Rhetorick and helpe of wittie Sophistry, is more fit for Tullies Orations, whereby oft times a good cause is made bad, and a bad one good, right wrong, and wrong right, then for Gods diuine Truth, which like the Sun shineth most gloriously when it is bare and naked. Lastly, it is to bee obserued that the Lord in his wisdom doth manifest his power in weaknesse, his majestie in basenesse, and his wisdome in foolishnesse, to the end that weaknesse, baseneſse, and folly, may serue as foiles to make his power, majesty, & wisdome appeare to vs more glorious, though in truth in themselues they are infinite, and nothing can be added to their excellency. But because we lie grouelingon the earth, and are ready to ascribe all to the inferiour meanes, and nothing vnto God: therefore the Lord chuseth weake and simple meanes, that his owne power and wisdome may bee in them more manifest. For example, if the Lord had penned the Scriptures in such an eloquent stile as would haue rauished the Readers with delight, wee would like fooles haue stood admiring at the curious worke of the Cabinet, & neuer opened it to looke vpon the precious iewell therein contained; and haue beene so much affected with the words, that in the meane time wee would haue neglected the matter, but when this treasure is brought vnto vs but in an earthen vessell, when this beautifull feature is clothed in meane attire, and the diuine wisdome of God set forth in an humble and simple stile, wee leaue shadowes and behold the substance, neither doe we rest in the outward letter, but search after the inward truth. So also if the Lord had in the penning of the Scriptures vsed inticing eloquence, or affected humane learning, men would haue beene ready to haue said, that by the force thereof so many were drawne or inticed to imbrace Religion & to spend their liues in Gods seruice; but when as in outward shew there is nothing but vnpolished plainnesse and simple rudenesse, by which neuertheleſse the hearers vnderstanding is more inlightned, his will more powerfully inclined, his affections more strongly ruled, then

by

by all the eloquent perſwaſions which wit and learning can inuent, they are driuen to confeſſe that the wiſdome of God is hidden vnder this ſimplicitie, his power vnder this outward weakneſſe, and that the Scriptures haue their vertue and force not from the inticing ſpeech of mans wiſdome and excellencie of words, but from the power and plaine euidence of Gods Spirit, who was the author and inditer of them.

Sect. 4. The tenth reason, taken from the Contents of the Scriptures, which are many things aboue the reach of humane reason.

The tenth reaſon, to proue that the Scriptures are not the inuention of man, but the Word of God indited by his Spirit, is, that many things contained therein are aboue the reach of humane vnderſtanding, and ſo deep that mans wiſdome and reaſon cannot conceiue them, nor ſearch them to the bottome. For example, though all men know by the light of nature that there is a God, ſeeing this truth is written in large Characters in the faire volume of the creatures, ſo as none can behold them but hee muſt needs know and acknowledge it; yet that this God being one in nature ſhould bee diſtinguiſhed into three perſons, the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt, without any diuiſion of ſubſtance or confuſion of perſons, mans reaſon cannot conceiue, though the Lord hath reuealed it, and much leſſe could inuent it ſeeing now it cannot comprehend it. So that the World and the creatures therein contained were created, the light of nature ſufficiently teacheth vs, ſeeing they haue an end and therefore had a beginning, a time of corruption and therefore a time of generation alſo, and as is the nature of euery ſeuerall part, ſo is the nature of the whole Vniuerſe; ſeeing alſo euery effect brings vs to his cauſe, and that to another, vntill wee come to the higheſt and ſupreame cauſe which is God, who hauing his being of himſelfe giueth being to all things: but that all this goodly order ſhould be brought out of confuſion, this light out of darkneſſe, that all theſe excellent creatures ſhould be created of nothing, by the alone Word of their Omnipotent Creatour, it paſſeth the conceit of humane reaſon and therefore his inuention alſo. So that we are wretched and full of miſery, not onely our reaſon but euen our ſenſes can teach vs; but how we ſhould be freed out of this miſery and attaine vnto euerlaſting happineſſe, is a thing aboue the reach of mans wiſdome. And that wee are vnable to performe thoſe duties wee ought, and leaue thoſe ſinnes vndone which we ſhould omit, and by both offend God, the Law of Nature written in our hearts, and the checkes and feares which euery one feele in their owne conſciences doe ſufficiently teach vs, but the meanes whereby we ſhould be reconciled vnto God whom wee haue offended, as they are ſet downe in his Word, namely, that the ſecond perſon in Trinitie ſhould take vpon him mans nature and bee borne of a pure Virgin, that in this nature he ſhould for vs performe perfect obedience to Gods Law, and ſuffer affliction, miſery, yea death it ſelfe to reconcile vs to his Father and procure his loue, to free vs from euerlaſting death and damnation, and to purchaſe for vs euerlaſting life and happineſſe, and that his obedience and merits ſhould become ours by reaſon of that vnion whereby he becommeth our head and wee his members, which vnion is made principally by his Spirit, and inſtrumentally by faith, doe all ſeeme ſtrange, yea abſurd to humane reaſon; and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that the naturall man perceiueth not the things which are of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſſe vnto him, neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned; as it is 1. Cor. 2. 14. And if he cannot know and conceiue them when in the preaching of the Goſpell they are reuealed vnto him; how much leſſe could hee inuent them hauing neuer heard of them? or who can imagine that in policy he would haue deuiſed ſuch a Religion to keepe the World in awe and obedience, as to euery worldly man ſeemeth fooliſh and abſurd, yea contrary to his nature? For what can bee more againſt the haire, thē to deny our ſelues and to take vp our croſſe and follow Chriſt? than to reject our owne workes and worthineſſe, and to ſeeke for juſtification in Chriſts death and obedience alone? then to imagine that manifold afflictions and great miſery, is the high way that leadeth to glory and endleſſe felicitie? and that pleaſures, honours, and riches, make vs vnfit to enter into Gods Kingdom? And therefore ſeeing the doctrine of the Scriptures are not only aboue the reach of humane reaſon, but alſo flat contrary to natural wiſdome, it plainly proueth that they are not the inuention of mortall man (for then the effect would be like the cauſe) but the Word of the euer-liuing God, which ſauoureth of his hidden and ſpiritual wiſdome.

1. Cor. 2. 14.

6. Sect. 5. The eleuenth reason, taken from the prophecies of holy Scriptures.

The eleuenth argument, to proue that the Scriptures were indited not by man but by Gods Spirit, are the prophecies therein contained, which were fulfilled in their due time; as that there ſhould bee enmitie betweene the ſeed of the Woman and the ſeed of the Serpent, and that the promiſed ſeed Chriſt Ieſus ſhould vanquiſh the Deuill; that the poſteritie of Cham ſhould bee accurſed; that Abraham ſhould haue a ſonne by his wife Sarah, when they were both old, and ſhee paſt the time of child-bearing; that his poſteritie ſhould bee bond-men in Egypt foure hundred yeeres, foretold before he had Iſaac of whom they came, that Iudahs poſteritie who was but the fourth ſonne, ſhould haue ſoueraignty & dominion ouer the reſt; that the ſcepter ſhould not bee taken from him till the Meſſias ſhould come; that the Tribe of Ephraim ſhould excell the Tribe of of Manasses; that hee who should re-edifie Iericho after it was destroyed, should be punished with the death of his sonnes, which was fiue hundred yeere after fulfilled in Hiel the Bethelite; that Iosias by name should destroy Idolatrie and Idolaters, and restore the true Religion, foretold almost three hundred yeeres before hee was borne; that the people of Israel should bee led captiue into Babylon, and beset free by Cyrus by name, propheried of aboue a hundred yeeres before Cyrus was borne. And to these we may adde the prophecies of our Sauiour Christ, describing in most liuely manner his person and natures, his Conception, Birth, Life and Death, with all the circumstances of them; so as none but such as are malitiously blinded can chuse but see and acknowledge that hee is the promised Messias and Sauiour of the World. Also the prophecies of Ieremy, concerning the taking of Ierusalem & their captiuity into Babylon, and the time of seuenty yeares limited for their abiding there; the prophecies of Daniel concerning the foure Monarchies, which are so cleere and perspicuous as if hee had seene them in his time; the prophecie of Christ concerning the destruction of Ierusalem; the prophecies contained in the Reuelation of Saint Iohn many of which wee see fulfilled in our time, especially that concerning the Antichrist of Rome, his manner of comming, his increasing, his workes, seate and place of residence, all which are so manifestly and plainly described, as if the Apostle had written an History and not a propheeie. Which plainly proueth that the Scriptures were not deuised by man, but penned by the inspiration of Gods Spirit, who by his prouident wisdome foreseeth all things, and by his wise prouidence ruleth all things.

9. Sect.6. That the Scriptures were penned by the holy men of God which are in them mentioned, & not forged in their names by some Polytecn.

But here Sathan will be ready to obiect, that we are not able to proue that these propheeies were written by any such Prophets and holy men as are mentioned in the Scriptures, so long before the things contained in them were done, and that for ought we know they might be forged and foisted in by some cunning fellow after the things were come to passe. The like objections also he maketh against the rest of the Scriptures, as that either there was not any such Moses, or if there were, then hee was but some cunning fellow who writ of miracles and wonders neuer done to gaine credit to his Law which he had published; or if hee wrote nothing but truth in his time, yet we know not whether these bookes which goe vnder his name are perfect as he left them, or depraued and corrupted, hauing many things altred, added, and detracted, according to the pleasure of those who haue had the keeping of them. And so also hee objecteth against the other parts of holy Scriptures. To this I answere, that as it were great absurditie to call in question the writings of Cicero, Seneca, Plutarch and other heathen men whether they were penned by any such men or no, because the next age receiued them from the authors themselues, and deliuered them to the next insuing, and so by tradition from hand to hand they are come vnto vs; so it is no lesse absurditie to call into question whether the Scriptures were written by the Prophets and Apostles who liued in their seuerall times, seeing the Church hath receiued them from time to time, and deliuered them to their successors to this day. Moreouer the Law published by Moses was not in secret or in a corner before some few witnesses, but in the presence of six hundred thousand men, besides women and children, and the strange miracles and workes of God full of wonder, which he wrought for the better confirmation of his Law giuen; were done and performed in the presence of many thousands, who made relation of them to their posteritie, and they to theirs to this day. Neither was it easie to be corrupted, altred or changed, seeing the Law-giuer did straightly charge all men that they should not adde, detract, or alter any thing vpon paine of present death in this World, and euerlasting death in the life to come; And who would incurre the danger of such fearefull punishment for the satisfying of his fruitlesse phantasie? Moreouer, this booke of the Law was safely kept in the Tabernacle, and after in the Temple in the Arke which was placed in the holy of holiest, and diuers authenticall Copies written out of it for euery one of the twelue Tribes, which were euery Sabbath day read and expounded in their Synagogues; yea so familiar were these writings with the Iewes, that they were written in their houses, and vpon their garments, so as it was not possible for any man to falsifie them, but it would presently bee espied. Yea (will the tempter say) but though they could not bee depraued or corrupted, yet they might at first bee inuented by some more subtill then the rest, and so thrust vpon men vnder the authority of God himselfe, as being the writings of his Prophets and Apostles. To which I answere, that there is no probabilitie of truth in this objection; for I would faine know in what age this man should write. In the time of Moses? how then could hee write the History of the Iudges who succeeded him? In the time of the Iudges? How then could he write the History of the Kings? What then? could he write these things in the time of the Kings, and so faine a relation of such things as went before? Why then it is necessary that hee should haue liued in the time of the last Kings, or else hee could not haue penned their History also: but before this time, there were many Copies abroad of the Scriptures in diuers Nations, by reason that the Iewes were scattered abroad through their captiuitie, where they as constantly professed their Religion as in their owne Country. Besides, if these writings had beene fained, in what age could they come to light but men diligently inquiring into them, as being matters importing no lesse then their eternall saluation or condemnation, would haue found them counterfeit? For if they had beene penned in the same age wherein the things were done, who would haue beleeued them, if they did not assuredly know that they contained nothing but certaine truth? If in an after age, who would haue straight subscribed vnto them, vnlesse they had by tradition from their Ancestors been assured that such things were done in former times? Furthermore, it is not probable but that the Iewes would haue made mention of such an authour if they had knowne him; or if they had by some accident found them written in this forme, it is not likely that they would haue beene so simple as to haue built their faith so firmely vpon them, that they would rather chuse to suffer all torments then bee brought to deny any one part of them.

, Sect. 7. at the ks of holy ipture pe- ed not in time of tiochus.

Lastly, it is objected that in the time of Antiochus, the bookes of the Scriptures were by his tyranny and extreme crueltie wholly abolished, and these which we haue, afterwardes inuented by the Iewes to grace their Religion. To which I answere, that this objection is so sottishly foolish, that it sauoureth not of common sense, much lesse of of any force of reason; for seeing now there were extant almost innumerable copies of the Scriptures, what meanes could be inuented by wit and rage vtterly to suppresse them, especially seeing the Iewes made farre more precious account of them then of their liues, so that for the profession of this truth they were content to suffer euen in this Tyrants time cruell deaths? Besides, if they had beene all destroyed and abolished in his time, how came it to passe that presently after his death they were againe (as it were) pulled out of the ashes and reuiued? Or how could others be put in their place, seeing innumerable men liued before and after his persecution, who had the sight and perusing of the same books before they were suppressed, and afterwards againe when they came to light? Lastly, though it should bee granted that all the bookes of holy Scriptures had beene vtterly defaced in all the Dominions of Antiochus, yet this were nothing for the tempters purpose: for the Iewes were now scattered farre and wide, and had their Synagogues and Schooles in sundry Nations where he had no authoritie; and therefore though he had destroyed all the Copies of the Scriptures in all places of his Kingdome, yet there were many in other places where hee bare no sway. Neither were they now in the Hebrew tongue alone, but also translated into the Greeke by the seuenty Interpreters, at the request of Ptolomey Philadelphus, and the translation carefully kept in his Library long before the time of this Antiochus. By all which it is more then manifest, that the Scriptures are the same which were penned by the Prophets and holy men of God, inspired with his diuine Spirit, confirmed with so many and wonderfull miracles, and sealed with the bloud of innumerable Martyrs. To this which hath beene said, I might adde the testimony of Heathen Writers, who in their seuerall times haue in their writings made mention of the most principall things which are contained in the story of the Bible: but as wee need not the helpe of a Candle to see the Sunne, which more sufficiently sheweth it selfe by his owne light: so this glorious light of Gods Truth is in it selfe so cleere and manifest, that it needeth not the testimonie of Infidels to confirme it, vnlesse it bee to those who farre exceed them in infidelitie. And that Noble, Learned and Religious Gentleman, Philip Mornay in his bookes of the Trueuesse of Christian Religion, hath eased mee of this labour, from whose neuer wasting Candle I haue borrowed the chiefest part of my light in the handling of this question.

CHAP. XXIII.

That the testimony of Gods Spirit, doth onely perswade vs, that the Scriptures are the Word of God.

AND these are the arguments whereby all gain-sayers may be conuinced, who deny the Scriptures to be the Word of God, and his infallible Truth: but though they are sufficient for the conuiction of all opposers, and for stopping the mouthes of all Atheists, Epicures and meere Naturals; yet notwithstanding, not any of these, nor all these are in themselues sufficient to beget faith in the heart of any, or to perswade him with full assurance, to beleeue that the Scriptures are the Word of God, vnlesse there be adjoyned vnto them the testimony of Gods Spirit, which doth not only conuince, but also throughly perswade vs of this truth. And this alone in it selfe is al-sufficient, though we neuer heard any other of the former reasons, for the working of faith in vs, and a full perswasion of this truth. That all other arguments are insufficient without the testimony of Gods Spirit, hereby it is manifest, in that not many wise, nor many learned in the World doe beleeue the Scriptures, which is the cause why they do not submit themselues

Sect. 1. That Gods Spirit only perswades vs of the former truth; and that all other arguments without this are insufficient.

to the obedience thereof; whereas if faith might bee wrought in men by force of arguments or naturall reason, they who best conceiue them would most easily bee perswaded by them: but contrariwise, wee see that these thinges are hid from the wise and prudent, and are reuealed vnto babes, not by meanes of naturall reason, but by the testimony of Gods Spirit. For naturally wee are all blinde in spirituall things, neither can the naturall man discerne the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned, as it is 1. Cor. 2. 14. And therefore, though the Scriptures be the glorious Light of Gods Truth, shining as bright as the Sun in the firmament, to those, whose eyes are inlightened with Gods Spirit; yet to those who continue in their naturall blindnesse, and were neuer anointed with the precious eye-salue of Gods Spirit, this glorious light appeareth not, no more then the Sun-shine to those who want their sight, and hence it is that they grope at noone dayes. And as the poore woman, of whom Seneca speaketh, being suddenly in the night stricken with blindnesse, desired the next day to vndraw the curtaines and open the windowes that she might see, whereas the cause of her not seeing was not want of light, but want of sight: so these men who are stricken with naturall blindnesse, complaine that they cannot see the glorious Light of Gods Truth shining in his Word, and therefore desire to haue it cleered by taking away the clouds of objections which seeme to shadow it, and by adding vnto it the light of humane reason; but the truth is, the fault is not in his glorious light, which alwayes shineth, but in their blindnesse who cannot discerne it. And yet such is the pride, selfe-loue, and vaine opinion which euery one hath of his own gifts, that they will sooner imagine that the Sunne wanteth light, then they eyes to looke vpon it.

Matth. 11. 25.

1. Cor. 2. 14.

Q. Sect. 2. Other arguments conuince but not perswade.

True it is, that by the former reasons they may bee conuinced, so that they haue nothing to obiect; and perhappes they may bee brought to haue a good opinion of the Scriptures, and to a doubtfull conceit that they are the Word of God indeed: they may with the two Disciples which trauelled to Emaus, when they heare the Scriptures interpreted, haue their hearts burne and throb within them, imagining that which they heare, to be more then the word of mortall man; and as the blind man in the Gospell, when his eyes were a little illuminated by our Sauiour, discerned men, not as men, but as mouing trees; so they may in some confused manner know & acknowledge the Scriptures to be the Word of God; but before Christ hath fully opened their eyes, and by the precious eye-salue of his Spirit hath dispelled their naturall blindnesse, they will neuer certainly bee perswaded, nor assuredly beleeue, that the Scriptures are, not the word of man, but the infallible truth of God. For it is not in mans power to beget faith in any, neither is it grounded vpon any naturall reasons or perswasions; but it is the supernaturall gift of Gods Spirit, who illuminates our vnderstanding, and inclines our will, so that we see, and stedfastly beleeue that truth which it deliuereth, as appeareth, Ephes. 2. 8. 2. Thess. 1. 11.

And when wee haue this testimony of Gods Spirit in our hearts, it will certainly perswade vs of this truth, though we had no other reason: as appeareth by testimonies of Scripture, and by our owne experience. For the first it is said, 1. Cor. 2. 15. That the spirituall man, that is, he who is endued with Gods Spirit, iudgeth all things, and yet himselfe is iudged of no man. So 1. Iohn 2. 27. But the anointing which yee receiued of him, dwelleth in you, and yee need not that any man teach you, but as the anointing teacheth you all things. And Verse 20. But yee haue an ointment from him that is holy, and yee haue knowne all things. Wherby he vnderstandeth the Spirit of God, which searcheth all things, euen the deepe things of God, which Spirit is giuen vnto vs that wee might know the things which are giuen vnto vs of God: as it is 1. Cor. 2. 10, 12. So our Sauiour promiseth to send a Comforter vnto vs, euen the Spirit of truth, who shall lead vs in all truth, as it is Iohn 16. 7, 13. And indeed who is more fit then the Spirit of God to confirme vs in the assurance of that truth, which hee himselfe hath indited and inspired? or who can better judge of the things of God then the Spirit of God? Who can better informe vs in this truth then he who is the Spirit of Truth? And therefore if wee haue the testimony of Gods Spirit in vs, we shall need no other witnesse, nor any reasons inuented by mans wit, to confirme vs in this truth, that the Scriptures are the word of the euer-liuing God.

For whosoeuer are indued with Gods Spirit, doe also in their owne experience sensibly feele by the effects & operation of the Scriptures in themselues, that they are not the word or inuention of mortall man, but the Word of the Almighty and most wise God. For when they perceiue that the eyes of their vnderstanding are illuminated, which before were blind and full of darknesse; that their will is inclined to the obedience of Gods Commandements, which before was stubborne and rebellious; that their heart is become soft and tender, so as like the heart of Iosias it melteth at the preaching of the Law, which before was obdurate and more hard then the Adamant; that their conscience which was dead and seared, is now readie to checke and controll them when they commit any sinne, and to allow and approue all good actions, that their affections are cast in a new mould, so that whereas heretofore they loued nothing but the world & worldly things, now their loue is fixed on the Lord and those things that are aboue; and whereas nothing was more odious in former times then vertue and godlinesse, nothing more pleasing then sin and the delights thereof, now contrariwise, nothing is more loathsome then sinne, nothing more sweet and delightfull, then obedience to Gods Commandements; and when they further consider, that this great alteration is made in them onely by the hearing of Gods Word preached; they need no further perswasions, nor other instructour to teach them, that the Scriptures were penned by the diuine operation of Gods Spirit, seeing the word of mortal man could neuer make such a change in them, nor any thing else but the Word of the euer-liuing God; which at the first was alone sufficient for their creation and generation, and now only is of power sufficient for their regeneration, and new birth. As therefore the blind man reasoned with the Pharisies, not with any far-fetcht reason, but from his own experience, to proue that our Sauiour was not a notorious sinner, as the Pharisies accused him, but some great Prophet sent from God; saying, Doubtlesse this is a maruellous thing that yee know not whence hee is, and yet hee hath opened mine eyes; and, if this man were not of God hee could haue done nothing: so may wee reason with those who affirme that it cannot bee knowne whence the Scriptures came, from God or man; vsing this argument taken from our owne experience, saying, Doubtlesse this is a maruellous thing that yee doe not know whence the Scriptures are, seeing they haue opened mine eyes which were blind from my birth; inclined my will to obedience, which before was rebellious; softned my heart and sanctified and quite changed mine affections, so that I now loue that good which before I hated, and hate that euill which before I loued; and am delighted with those holy exercises which heretofore did most displease mee; and am displeased with those vaine pleasures and filthy sins, which in times past did most delight me; and therefore if it were not of God it could haue done no such thing, if it were not inspired and indited by his holy Spirit, and made effectuall by the vertue and power thereof, it could neuer haue wrought in me such strange alterations.

CHAP. XXIV.

Satans tentations suggested against the translations of holy Scriptures answered.

AND so much for answering Satans second tentation, whereby he laboureth to make men neglect the hearing of Gods Word, that so they may neuer be effectually called. Now thirdly, if he cannot perswade men that the Scriptures are not the Word of God, that so he may take away all the authoritie thereof, then hee will take exceptions against the translation; suggesting into their minds, that though the Scriptures be the Word of God, as they were penned in their owne proper languages, by men inspired by his Spirit, yet for ought they know, being vnlearned, the Scriptures may be corruptly translated, altered from their first originall, and things added and detracted at the Translators pleasure. To this I answere, that not onely professors of Religion, but also Pagans, Infidels, Epicures and Atheists, who are euen the very limbs of the Deuill, haue beene skilfull and learned in these languages; and therefore if the translations were not neere the originall, who could stop their mouthes from inueighing against such falshood? Who could restraine them from declaiming against such corruption, seeing they so hate and abhorre this truth, as that they wish the vtter extirpation thereof, and with extreme malice oppose themselues against it, persecuting and murdering to their vttermost power, whosoeuer imbrace and professe it? Moreouer, we know that the Iewes who more maliciously maligne Christians and Christianitie then the Turkes and Pagans, do notwithstanding agree with vs in the translation of the Olde Testament, & can take no exception against the New. Thirdly, there hath beene euer since Christs comming many Sectaries and Heretickes, who for the maintenance of their opinions haue but sought to corrupt some few places of the Scriptures, but still God hath raised vp some godly learned in the originall tongues, who haue confuted them and cleered the text; how therefore in such diuision and vehement discord should such a thing be concealed? How should any corrupt the whole Scriptures, or any principall places; seeing there is such Controuersies from time to time about euery letter and syllable? Lastly, this truth of the Scriptures hath beene sealed and confirmed with the bloud of many Martyrs, who haue beene excellently learned in the originall tongues: and who can imagine that they would haue beene so foolish, as to haue giuen their liues for the maintaining that truth which is contained in the Scriptures as wee haue them translated, if they thought them corrupted and falsified in the translation?

§. Sect. 2. Of the difference of translations.

But the tempter will obiect that the translations exceedingly differ one from another, and therefore some of them must needes bee false, and who would ground his faith vpon any, vntill hee know which is the best and truest? I answere, that though there bee diuers translations, and one better then another; yet euen that which is most corrupt & imperfect, is sufficient to instruct vs in the knowledge of God, and in the principles of Christian Religion; neither is there amongst them all, many errours which concerne the Articles of our faith, or come neere the substance of the doctrine which wee are bound to beleeue; for all the Translatours haue laboured to conforme their translations according to the analogie of faith; and though they haue not in all places deliuered the proper sense, yet they haue endeauoured to come as neere it as they can; and where they haue failed, it is rather in circumstances then in substance, in the proper and speciall truth, then in the common and generall; and though in one place they doe not so cleere the truth as they should, yet they doe it in many other. And therefore let not Satan perswade vs to neglect the Scriptures, because there are wants and imperfections in the translations; for if we studie and meditate euen in the meanest, and conforme and frame our liues according to that truth which we learne out of them, we shall attaine vnto euerlasting life and happinesse. Men do not vse to neglect their businesse, because by reason of some Cloud the Sun doth not shine vpon them in his full brightnesse; for that light which they enjoy is sufficient, though not so gloriously bright as when it shineth in his full cleerenesse, so wee must not neglect the conforming of our selues to the Scriptures, because wee cannot see them shine in their owne glorious brightnesse, as they were penned by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost in the originall language, (for as well may a Painter expresse in his Table with artificiall colours the glory of the Sun, as any man liuing can expresse that perfect beauty and diuine glory which shineth in the naturall phrase of holy Scriptures in a translation) but rather wee are to enjoy the benefit of this glorious shining Sun of Gods Word, though the brightnesse bee as it were vailed and somewhat shadowed with the cloud of another language; for notwithstanding, through it they shine and affoord vs such light, as may be sufficient to guide and direct vs in the wayes of holinesse and righteousnesse, which will bring vs in the end to eternall glory and endlesse felicitie.

CHAP. XXV.

Satans tentations taken from the euill liues of the Ministers answered.

AND so much concerning the obiections which Sathan maketh against the Scriptures themselues, to the end he may make men neglect to heare and read them. But if this will not preuaile, then hee leaueth to disgrace the Word it selfe, and seeketh by discrediting the Ministers thereof, to make them to contemne their Ministery; and to this end he vseth all his skill to draw them into some grosse and scandalous sinne, and to neglect that doctrine themselues which they teach vnto others, shewing in their liues and conuersations, neither zeale of Gods glory, nor desire of their neighbours good: and when hee hath attained vnto his purpose in some, hee thinketh it a sufficient ground for the slander of all, and a notable foundation whereupon he may build a most pernitious tentation. Art thou so foolish (will hee say) as to thinke all Gospell which the Ministers teach, that all truth commeth from their mouthes, and that there is not a more easie way of attaining to euerlasting life, then that which they shew vnto thee? Why, doe but looke vpon themselues, and thou shalt find their liues far dissonant from their words, that whilest they exhort thee to strictnesse, they take their libertie, whilest they dissuade thee from taking thy pleasure, affecting honours, setting thy heart vpon riches, themselues in the mean time are as voluptuous, ambitious, and couetous as any other; and whilest they endeauour to make sinne to appeare vnto thee as blacke as Hell, themselues embrace it with pleasure and delight, as though it were the joy of Heauen. Who therefore can imagine that they thinke as they speake, or that they are perswaded that Heauen gate is so straite, and the way so troublesome and hard to find, as they goe about to perswade thee, seeing themselues take the least paines in walking in this way which they prescribe vnto others? Or if it be the truth which they teach, then surely they are not worth the hearing, who in their liues deny this truth which in their words they professe; for what hope canst thou haue that it will be powerfull to worke grace in thee, seeing it hath no power to worke it in themselues? or that they can perswade thee to that holinesse, to which themselues are not perswaded?

§. Sect. The answ... the forme... tentation.

And thus doth Sathan seeke to keepe men from hearing of Gods Word, that so being weakned and hunger-starued, for want of this heauenly Manna, hee may vanquish them at the first on-set, and lead them captiue vnto all sin; and being still hood-winkt with with the thicke vaile of ignorance, hee may lead them the direct way to Hell and vtter destruction; and therefore it behoueth euery one to arme themselues, that so they may beate backe the violence of this tentation. First therefore, whereas he saith that the Ministers speake not as they thinke, because they doe not as they speake; wee are to know for the answering of this tentation, that Ministers are subject to the same corruptions & infirmities which are incident vnto other men, & though they are called in the Scriptures Angels, in respect that they are Gods Messengers to bring and publish the glad tidings of the Gospell, yet are they not Angels in respect of their puritie and perfection: but as they are flesh and bloud, subject to all humane frailty; as they are borne in sin and defiled with originall corruption, so are they as prone as others to fall into all actuall transgressions, if the Lord restraine them not. Neither must we imagine that learning and knowledge doe indue men with sanctification and the sauing graces of Gods Spirit, for then wee might attaine vnto them by our study, labour and industry; whereas the Scriptures teach vs that they are Gods free gifts which hee bestoweth on whom he will, then it would follow that hee who is indued with most knowledge and learning, should also haue most grace and sanctification, whereas our owne experience teacheth vs, that many of the greatest Doctours of the World spend their liues in all voluptuous pleasures and licentiousnesse. What then? do these then teach one thing and beleeue another? Surely it may be the case of many, for faith commeth not by variety of knowledge, neither is it tied to learning; but it is the free gift of God bestowed as well, yea and as often also, vpon the simple fisherman as vpon the learned Pharisie; and therefore though they haue such great learning and knowledge, that they are able to instruct others & defend the truth against all opposers, yet may they be as hard-hearted and full of infidelity, as the most ignorant and sottish in the World. Shall then their hardnesse of heart and infidelitie moue vs to call the truth of God which they deliuer into question, as though it were a matter doubtfull whether it is the Word of God or no? God forbid. Yea, let God be true and euery man a liar. For their owne consciences are conuinced of this truth though not perswaded, and the Lord hath giuen them eyes to see it, though not hearts to beleeue it; to the end that the praise of our saluation may wholly bee ascribed to his owne free grace, who calleth and iustifieth, sanctifieth and saueth whom he will; and not vnto humane learning or knowledge, which may be attained vnto by mans industry and labour.

Sect. 3. It may bee also that these who teach one thing and practise the cleane contrary, doe notwithstanding beleeue, that is, know and giue their assent to that which they deliuer; but this generall faith is incident as well to the Deuils themselues as vnto men, and therefore those who haue it may neuertheless bee as worldly, carnall, and prophane as euer they were. For before we attaine vnto a true iustifying faith, and be sanctified by Gods Spirit, our knowledge and learning will not free vs from our corruption of nature, wherein we are conceiued, borne and bred; so that though we see the truth, yea know & acknowledge it to bee the Word of God, which shall one day either iustifie or condemne vs, yet if the Lord doe not ioyne with this knowledge the inward operation of his Spirit, making it effectuall for our sanctification, and for the purging of vs from our corruptions, we are as readie to fall into all sin, being inticed and carried away with the riches, honours and pleasures of the World, as if we were still most sottishly ignorant. A notable example hereof wee haue in Salomon, who though hee had receiued such a measure of wisdome and diuine knowledge, as neuer meere man attained vnto the like, yea though hee were a pen-man of an excellent portion of holy Scriptures, yet (the Lord leauing him to the corruption of his owne heart) hee fell most grieuously into all abominable wickednesse: and yet who will dare to say, that Salomon did not write as he thought, and not rather that he was carried away through the violence of his corruptions, to commit that sin which his conscience condemned, and to neglect obedience to Gods vndoubted truth? So Dauid who was indued with notable knowledge, and no lesse grace, fell notwithstanding most fearefully into adultery and murther; but shall wee therefore thinke that hee was not perswaded that these were horrible sins, or that when he commended mercy, innocency and chastitie, he spake not as he thought? And Peter likewise denied and forswore his Master, whom before hee had acknowledged to be the Sonne of God; but shall wee hence conclude that Peter dissembled when hee made that notable confession, because when hee came to the triall hee vtterly disclaimed it? Nay, rather wee may certainly bee perswaded, that Dauid was carried away with his lust and concupiscence, and Peter ouercome with feare and frailtie, and both drawne, through their corruption, to commit those sins which their consciences condemned. But leauing such farre fetcht instances, let euerie man, yea euen hee who hath attained vnto the greatest measure of faith and sanctification, enter into a strict and due consideration with himselfe, and examine his owne conscience before Gods tribunall seate; and then let him tell me whether hee performe obedience to all that truth which hee knoweth and beleeueth, or whether hee may not iustly complaine, that our corruption takes occasion by the knowledge of Gods commandement, to worke in vs all manner of concupiscence; that hee doth those things which he alloweth not, yea which hee hateth and abhorreth; that though hee doe not onely know the law of God, but also is delighted therewith in the inner man, yet that there is another law in his members which warreth against the law of his minde, and leadeth him captiue vnto the law of sinne, as it is *Rom.*7.8.15.23. And if this bee the case of Salomon, Dauid, Peter, and of all Gods children, who haue attained to the greatest measure of knowledge and sanctification; let not Satan perswade vs that wee may safely neglect the ministerie of the word, because the Ministers thereof seeme not perswaded that the doctrine which they deliuer is true, in that they doe not practise it in their owne liues: for many knowing and beleeuing that truth which they deliuer, are notwithstanding destitute of the sanctifying graces of Gods spirit, and therefore wholly carried away into all licentious wickednesse; and many also who are sanctified, being not wholly purged from their naturall corruptions, are readie to shew their frailtie and infirmities to all the world, though they know, acknowledge, beleeue, and from their hearts embrace that truth which they teach and professe.

Q. Sect. 4. The second tentation taken from the euill liues of Ministers, answered.

But if Satan cannot thus preuaile, nor cause vs to doubt of Gods truth, because the Ministers liue not according to that doctrine which they teach; then hee will perswade them at least to refuse to heare such whose liues are scandalous, as being vnworthie to take the word into their mouthes, and vnable to conuert or amend others, seeing the word is not powerfull which they deliuer for the conuerting and reforming of there owne liues. Which tentation of Satan is most dangerous and pernicious vnto many; for what greater discouragement can their bee to a sicke patient, then to take physicke of such a Physition who cannot cure himselfe of the same disease? Or who willingly eate of that food, which hee who giueth it vnto him so loatheth and abhorreth, that hee will not so much as taste of it? Or who taketh delight in hearing him discourse of mercie, chastitie, and liberalitie whom hee knoweth wholly possessed of crueltie, lust, and couetousnesse? And therefore it were to bee wished that Gods Ministers should be Physitions to themselues, before they take vpon them the cure of others; that they should not stand like Images by the high way sides, directing others in their iournies, themselues neuer moouing foote, but that they should like guides goe before them, and instruct them not onely by their word, but also moue them to receiue their instruction by their example. But yet let vs take heed, that Satan doe not take occasion vpon the neglect of their dutie to make vs neglect ours; and that hee doe not rob vs of the ineſtimable treasure of Gods word, and depriue vs of this heauenly Manna and food of our soules, wherby all the graces of Gods spirit are begotten, nourished and increased in vs, because the Minister who offereth it vnto vs doth not feed vpon it himselfe. And to this end we are to know that the ministerie of the word is Gods ordinance, which dependeth not vpon the worthinesse of him who deliuereth it neither is it made voide and vneffectual by his vnworthines, but it hath its vertue, force and power from the blessing of God, and from the inward operation of his spirit, who appplieth it to the hearts and consciences of men, and thereby illuminates their vnderstandings, and begetteth faith in them and all sanctifying and sauing graces. And hence it is, that the Minister himselfe, findeth not the word which hee deliuereth, effectuall for the begetting of faith or any grace in him, which notwithstanding is powerful in many of the hearers for these purposes, because the Lord vouchsafeth not the assistance and inward co-operation of his holy Spirit with the outward Ministerie of the Word vnto him, which notwithstanding hee mercifully granteth vnto others. Seeing then the Ministerie of the Word is Gods owne Ordinance, which he maketh effectuall to whom he will by the inward operation of his holy Spirit, by whomsoeuer it is deliuered; and seeing those Ministers which are most holy and vertuous cannot at their pleasure infuse grace into their hearers; for Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but God giueth the increase; so that neither the one nor the other are any thing in themselues without Gods blessing; seeing also those who are loose and vicious, if they truely preach the truth it selfe, cannot by their badnesse hinder Gods Ordinance, but that comming from their mouthes it will bee effectuall for the conuersion of men vnto God, and the eternall saluation of those that beleeue; for though vnto himselfe it bee but a dead letter, yet the Spirit of God may giue life vnto it in those who receiue it; and though he preacheth for glory or gaine, or for enuie and strife, yet wee must with the Apostle reioyce that Christ is preached any manner of way, and reape the fruit thereof to our eternall comfort; Lastly, seeing the wisdome of God thinketh it good to send Ambassadours of both sorts, sanctified and vnsanctified, and oftentimes maketh the word in the mouth of a faithfull and godly Minister the sauour of death vnto death, and the same word in the mouth of one who is void of grace and sanctification the sauour of life vnto life, to the end that wee should not depend vpon man, but wholly rest and rely our selues vpon Gods owne Ordinance, giuing and ascribing vnto him the whole glory and prayse of our conuersion and saluation; let not Satan perswade vs to thinke worse of the pure Word of God, because of his corruption who deliuereth it. For what were this but to refuse a comfortable ambassage from a gracious Prince, because we dislike the qualities of the Ambassadors? what were this but to scorn to receiue a kind letter from a louing Father, because the carrier doth displease vs? What is this but to refuse a rich treasure, because it is brought vnto vs in an earthen vessell which is fraile and brittle? What is it but like proud beggers to refuse the bountifull almes of a mercifull Prince, because it is deliuered vnto vs by an Almner who is couetous and hard-hearted? Yea, what is it but to crosse our Sauiour Christs expresse Commandement, who commanded all to heare euen the Scribes and Pharisies who sate in Moses Chaire, and to doe after their words, though not after their workes? In a word, what is it else then to pinne Gods Ordinance vpon mans sleeue, & to make the preaching of the Gospell, which is the power of God to saluation vnto euery one who beleeueth, to depend vpon the weake strength of fraile flesh, either to bee made effectuall by his worthinesse, or to be made vaine and vnprofitable by his vnworthinesse?

Sathans tentations taken from sundry Opinions, Sects and Religions, answered.

AND thus Satan may be answered, when he taketh occasion of discrediting the Gospell and hindering the course thereof by obiecting the wickednesse and worldly prophanesse, or the infirmities and fraile weaknesse of the Ministers thereof. But if he cannot thus preuaile, hee leaueth their liues and commeth to their doctrine. Dost thou not see (will hee say) that there are innumerable Sects and contrary Factions amongst those who professe Christianitie? Some Papists, some Protestants, some Arrians, some Anabaptists, some Pelagians, some Libertines, some Familists, some Donatists, and many other who all cite and alleage Scriptures for the defending of their contrary opinions, and confidently affirme, that they only haue the truth amongst them? How therefore canst thou know which is truth and which is falshood; who interpret the Scriptures aright, & who wrest and misconstrue them? or if thou wert disposed to be religious, what Religion wilt thou professe in this great confusion? to what Church wilt thou adioyne thy selfe, seeing one is contrary to another, and thou knowest not which is in the truth? If thou best wise therefore keep thy seife quiet & let all alone, hearken not to any of them, or if thou dost, beleeue them not ouer hastily, be of that Religion which will best stand with thine aduantage; or if thou wilt needs serue God, follow thine owne conscience, haue a good intention in that thou dost, & it is enough; but professe not one Religion more then another, til thou seest those who are learned agree amongst themselues, for vntill then thou canst haue no assurance that thou professest the truth.

Q. Sect. 2. The answere to the former tentation.

For the answering of which tentation we are to know, that the Scriptures haue foretold vnto vs that there should be sects, dissensions, heresies, and false teachers, euen vnto the end of the world; as appeareth 1. Cor. 11. 19. 1. Tim. 4. 1. 2. Pet. 2. 1. And the experience of all times both vnder the Law, and vnder the Gospell, may sufficiently teach vs, that whersoeuer the truth of God is published and preached, there it is opposed by innumerable Sectaries and Heretickes, which by the malice and subtiltie of Satan, are stirred vp to impugne and discredit the true Religion: and therefore if Satan can still keepe vs blind-folded in ignorance, and restraine vs from the confession and profession of our faith, till there be a generall vnitie and agreement in the true Religion, without all opposition or gain-saying, then hee hath attained his desire; for so shall wee neuer ioyne our selues in the communion of Saints, nor be true members of the Church, professing and practising the Religion of Iesus Christ, seeing the Deuill will not cease to stirre vp his wicked instruments, false Prophets, Sectaries and Heretickes, to the end they may oppugne and contradict the truth when it is sincerely preached, and make it fruitlesse in the hearts of vnbeleeuers; seeing also our Sauiour hath taught vs that his Church is but a little flocke, which is assaulted and grieuously vexed, not only with Lions, Tigres and open enemies, but also with Foxes, and Wolues in sheeps clothing, and secret enemies, who vnder the shew and profession of Religion, seeke to vndermine and bring it to ruine. And the Apostle also hath forewarned vs, that there must be heresies among vs, that they who are approoued might bee knowne. Though therefore there bee many Sects and Heresies, many false Religions, & but one Truth, this must not make vs to neglect all, till there bean vniuersall agreement, for as well may we reconcile light and darknesse, the children of God with the children of the Deuill, grace and naturall corruption, truth and errour, as the true Religion with those which are false, or the professors of the one with the professors of the other. Those who haue important businesses abroad, doe not stay at home and refuse to trauell because some goe out of the way; but therefore they are more carefull to informe themselues of euery turning in their journey, because they would not erre with others: those that haue a desire to liue, doe not refuse all meate, because some surfet and die, by eating that which is vnwholesome; but rather hereby they are made more warie in making good choice of such diet as is fit for the preseruation of their health: those also who are sicke, doe not neglect all physicke, because there are many coozening Impostors and vnlearned Empiricks who kill in stead of curing; but this maketh them with more circumspection to find out a skilfull and learned Physition. Let vs therefore follow the like practice in these spirituall things: and seeing there is but one direct way which leadeth vnto Heauen, and many by-wayes which leade to destruction, let not this keepe vs from trauelling this heauenly journey, but rather mooue vs with more diligence to inquire the right and perfect way: seeing also there are many which offer vs poyson in stead of the wholesome food and physicke of our soules, let vs learne with more care to make choice, & to put a difference betweene the one and the other.

Q. Sect. 3. How the vnlearned may discerne the true Religion from that which is false.

But here it will bee demanded how those who are simple & ignorant can judge which is the true Religion, and which is the false, who teacheth the truth, and who falshood? To which I answere, that euery one must labour to informe himselfe of the truth, by studying and meditating in Gods Word: this must be his light to guide him, his counsellor to informe him, his touchstone whereby he may discerne the Copper and Brasse of mens inuentions, from the pure Gold of Gods true Religion. Neither are wee to receiue all doctrines hand ouer head, but as the Apostle exhorteth vs, we must trie the spirits whether they be of God or no: and with the men of Berea, wee must search the Scriptures, to see if those things be so as they are deliuered, and accordingly either receiue them if they are consonant with Gods word, or reject them if they be dissonant thereunto. Yea (will some say) this were a direct course if those only who haue the truth on their side had Scripture to alleage, but seeing euery Hereticke is as ready to quote Scripture, for the vpholding and defending of his Heresie, as the professors of Gods Truth for the maintenance thereof; all the question is, whose interpretation is to bee receiued as good, and whose to bee rejected as false and erroneous? To this I answere, that though there bee some places in the Scripture hard and somewhat doubtfull, and therefore the more easie to be wrested vnto a wrong sense,

1. Iohn 4.1. Acts 17.

yet are there others cleer and euident, for the confuting of all Sects, Heresies and errours whatsoeuer: and therefore we must expound those places which are darke and ambiguous by those which are perspicuous and manifest. For example, if wee would know whether Popery be the true Religion or no, wee must examine the doctrines thereof by Gods Word, not making choice of those places which seeme any way hard and doubtfull, but of those which are cleere and manifest; and so wee shall find that their doctrines are as contrary to Gods truth, as light to darkenesse. For whereas they teach that wee are able to fulfill the Law, and to merit Heauen, the Scriptures affirme the cleane contrary, namely, that in many things wee sinne all, Iames 3.2. and whosoeuer shall keepe the whole Law, and yet faileth in one point, is guiltie of all, Iam. 2.10. that there is no man who sinneth not, 1. Kings 8.46. that in Gods sight none that liueth can be iustified, Psal. 143.2. that when wee haue done all those things that are commanded vs, we are vnprofitable seruants, and haue done but our dutie, and therefore merit nothing, Luke 17.10. So whereas they teach that wee must pray to Saints and Angels, because they make intercession for vs, the Apostle flatly excludeth all other from this office, but Christ alone. 1. Tim. 2.5. there is one Mediatour betweene God and man. Whereas they teach that marriage is vnlawful for some men at all times, and some meats vnlawfull for all men at sometimes, the Holy Ghost telleth vs plainly that this is erroneous and a doctrine of Deuils; and that euery creature of God is good, and nothing ought to be refused, if it be receiued with thanksgiuing, 1. Tim. 4.1,3,4. And that marriage is honourable for all men, and the bed vndefiled Heb. 13.4. That to auoid fornication, euery man must haue his wife, and euery woman her owne husband, 1. Cor. 7,2. And that better it is to marry then to burne, Vers. 9. Whereas they teach that our Sauiour Christ is carnally and corporally present in the Sacrament, the Scriptures teach vs the contrary, namely, that hee is ascended into Heauen, and therefore not vpon the earth. Matth. 28.6. That when he was taken into Heauen he was taken from vs Acts 1.11. That the Heauens must containe him vntill the time that all things be restored, Acts 3.21. Whereas they teach that they must make and worship Images, both are expresly forbidden in the second Commandement, and in many other places of Scripture. Whereas they teach that the Scriptures should be kept from the common people, in an vnknowne language; the Apostle plainly affirmeth that, he had rather in the Church speake fiue words with his vnderstanding, that hee might also instruct others, then ten thousand words in a strange tongue; and flatly enjoyneth that the Prophets phets should keepe silence in the Church, rather then speake strange languages, where there is no interpreter, 1. Cor. 14. 19, 27, 28. Whereas they hold that the cup in the administration of the Lords Supper, is to be withheld from the common people, and giuen only to the Priests, the quite contrary is to be obserued in the institution, whereas our Sauiour saith, Drinke yee all of it, because it is his bloud of the New Testament that is shed for many, for the remission of sins: plainly thereby inferring, that this Signe and Sacrament of his bloud belongeth to as many as were redeemed by it, Matth. 26. 28. And wheras they say, that here the Disciples were onely, and that to them alone this speech was directed, the Apostle plainly taketh away this cauill: for setting downe the words of institution for the vse of the whole Church of Corinth, he willeth euery one indefinitely to examine himselfe, and so to eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup, 1. Cor. 11. 28. And thus if we studie and meditate in Gods Word, wee shall find most cleere and manifest places for the confirmation of the truth, and confutation of all Sects, Errours and Heresies. But what if this meanes be taken away from vs, of reading and studying the Scriptures, either because they are only to be had in an vnknowne language, as in the time of Popery, or because we cannot read, and haue no body to teach vs? What if both reading and studying them, wee finde many doubts and difficulties, and diuers places which seeme to fauour and maintaine diuers opposite opinions and Religions? How then must we quit our selues out of this labyrinth of ambiguitie and doubtfulnesse, seeing it is prejudiciall to appeale to the judgement of either faction? I answere, that in these dayes the meanes of knowledge are not so scant, but that they may enjoy them that labour for them; for either they may obtaine the vse of the Scriptures in their owne language where they dwell, or else in some other place by remouing their habitation; and though they cannot reade, yet it is no hard matter to learne, to those who will vse paines and diligence, or at least to get the helpe of others to supply their want and defect in this behalfe. But let it be granted that wee were abandoned of all these meanes, or that vsing them, there were some doubt remayning of which we cannot be resolued; are we therefore destitute of helpe, and forsaken of all meanes, whereby we might attaine vnto the knowledge of the truth? No surely. For, if when all other meanes faile vs, we haue our recourse vnto God by earnest and effectuall prayer, instantly craving his holy Spirit to guide and direct vs, we haue a mercifull promise that he will heare our request and grant vnto vs his holy Spirit; and that thereby he will illuminate the blind eyes of our vnderstanding, inlighten our mindes with the knowledge of the truth, and take away from vs all prejudice of opinion and fore-stalled judgement, so as we shall discerne truth from falshood, and Gods true Religion, from errors and lies, Sects and Heresies. For this spirit of truth will leade vs into all truth, as it is Iohn 16. 13. Hee searcheth all things, euen the deepe things of God; and to this end wee receiue him, that wee may know the things which are giuen vnto vs of God, as it is 1. Cor. 2. 10, 12. Hee is that precious eye-salue, wherewith being anointed wee see, who before were blind, Reuel. 3. 18. And if once we haue receiued this anointing, we need not that any man should teach vs, for this anointing teacheth vs all things, as it is 1. Iohn 2. 27. Though therefore wee were abandoned of all other meanes, yet let not Sathan perswade vs to neglect all Religion, because wee cannot discerne the true Religion from that which is false: for if wee earnestly and sincerely labour after the knowledge of the truth, and with good Cornelius continually implore the assistance and direction of Gods Spirit, wee shall be sure to obtaine our desire, for the Lord hath promised it, and he will vndoubtedly be as good as his word.

CHAP. XXVII.

Satans tentations taken from our vnworthinesse and vnfitnesse to heare, answered.

ANd so much concerning the tentations of Sathan, which hee draweth from the Ministers, to discredit the Gospell, and to dissuade men from the hearing thereof; but if he cannot thus preuaile, he will leaue the Ministers, and come to the parties themselues, suggesting into their minds that they are vnworthy, in respect of the innumerable number of their sins, to be hearers of the Gospell, which is pure and excellent; and that their corruptions are so great, their vnderstandings so blind, their memories so slippery, their wils so peruerse, their heart and affections so wicked and prophane, that it is to be feared in regard of this their vnfitnesse to heare, that the Word of God, which in it selfe is the sauour of life vnto life, will become vnto them the sauour of death to their more deepe condemnation. For the answering of which tentation, wee are to know, first, that our sins and vnworthinesse should be so farre from hindering vs from the hearing of Gods Word, that they should rather serue as forcible arguments to moue vs more attentiuely and diligently to heare it: because it is the meanes ordained of God to pull vs out of our sins, to purge vs from our cor-corruptions, to worke in vs true sanctification, and to make vs of the sonnes of wrath the children of God. Moreouer, though we want faith, and all other sanctifying graces, yet wee are to heare the Word of God: for therefore the Lord hath ordained the Ministerie of the Word, not onely to increase grace where it is begun, but also to beget and begin it where it is wanting; so that wee must not only heare because wee are fit, but also that wee may bee made fit, who before were vnfit. Neither are wee to imagine that faith and other graces goe before hearing, but follow after as fruits and effects thereof; as the Apostle plainly sheweth, Rom. 10. 14. But how shall they call on him in whom they haue not beleeued? And how shall they beleeue in him of whom they haue not heard? And how shall they heare without a Preacher? And Verse 17. Faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. If then there be no faith without hearing, and no grace without faith, it must needs follow, that before we heare, we are destitute of faith and all saving grace, and that by hearing they are wrought in vs, God preuenting vs with his grace, and calling vs vnto himselfe, not only when wee had no deserts to merit his mercy, but also not so much as any grace to desire it. And hence it is that the Apostle saith, That God hath called vs with an holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was giuen vnto vs through Christ Iesus before the world was. The truth hereof may appeare in all the examples of Gods Saints, who before their calling were so farre from deseruing any grace at Gods hand, that rather they deserued confusion and vtter destruction. For example, what worthines was in Abraham before his conuersion who liued in grosse Idolatrie? what worthinesse in Rahab the Harlot? in Manasses a cruell Tyrant, a wicked Sorcerer, an horrible Idolater? what worthinesse in Mary Magdalene possessed by seuen Deuils? or in Matthew and Zacchæus the Publicans? or in Paul who persecuted the Church of God? In a word, what worthinesse is in any of Gods Saints, before the Lord by the preaching of his Word, made effectuall by the inward operation of his Spirit, hath called and conuerted, and pulled them out of their sinnes and corruptions in which they wallowed, and indued them with some measure of his sanctifying and saving graces?

Rom. 10. 14, 17.

2. Tim. 1. 9.

2. Sect. 2. That our vnfitnesse to heare, should not make vs neglect hearing.

Secondly, whereas he obiecteth our vnfitnesse to heare, because our eares are dull, our eyes blind, our hearts hard, and our wils, affections, and all the powers and faculties of our bodies and soules wholly corrupted and disordered; this must not moue vs to neglect the hearing of Gods Word, but to become hearers thereof with more care and diligence. For it is the two-edged sword of the Spirit, which will pierce and make way for it selfe to enter, and will build a lodging for it selfe to dwell in. It is not onely a light to guide those that see, but a precious eye-salue to giue sight vnto those who were born blinde. It is not onely the heauenly dew which maketh Gods graces to spring in vs, but also that diuine seed which giueth them being and rooting in our hearts. It is not onely the food of our soules to preserue and increase that strength which we already haue, but also that immortall seed by which wee are first begotten vnto God & borne againe, who before were dead in our sinnes, and that excellent physicke of our soules by which they are purged from their corruptions and restored vnto health, which before were deadly sicke in sin; it maketh vs first to will that which is good, and then further to desire it; it giueth vs life who before were dead in our sins, and then preserues this life; it begets and begins faith and sanctification and all other graces in vs, and being begotten and begun it strengtheneth and increaseth them. And therefore let not Satan diswade vs from the hearing of Gods Word, because of our sins, vnworthinesse and vnfitnesse; for as it is a notable meanes ordained of God for the increasing of grace where it already is, so is it no lesse effectual for the begetting of grace where it neuer was. There is no wiseman that will neglect his trade and liue idly because he is poor, but rather this will moue him to bee more painfull therein, as being the meanes whereby hee may become rich; neither doe men refuse all nourishment, because they haue empty and hungry stomackes, but doe more earnestly desire meat that they may be filled and satisfied; yea euen those whose stomackes are weake doe not altogether refuse their food, but eat something to sharpen their appetite, and so by little and little in vsing their stomackes they get stomackes. Let vs follow the like practice, and when we perceiue our beggerlinesse in Gods graces, let vs more earnestly labour after this heauenly treasure and precious pearle, that wee may be made rich; when wee feele our emptinesse of all vertue and goodnesse, let vs more eagerly hunger after this spirituall Manna that wee may bee filled and satisfied; when wee finde our appetite weake and our stomackes indisposed to eate of this heauenly food, let vs a little force our selues against the appetite, or vse all good meanes to quicken and sharpen it, and so we shall find that the oftner we eate, the oftner we shall desire, the more wee shall desire to heare, and the greater benefit wee shall receiue by it. Whereas neglect of hearing will make vs euery day more vnfit to heare, euen as long abstinence doth quite spoile the stomake.

But here afflicted consciences will further

2. Sect. 3. obiect,

obiect, that they find so many corruptions in their hearing of Gods Word, and performe these duties of Gods seruice with so manifold and grosse imperfections hauing their minds wholly distracted with wandring and wicked thoughts, yea sometimes with impious imaginations, and rebellious blasphemies; and when they are at the best, receiuing these glad tidings with such drowsie dulnesse and spirituall deadnesse, such hardnesse of heart, and loathing wearines; that they are so farre from profiting by these holy exercises, as that they are fully perswaded all they do is turned into sin. And therefore it were much better for them vtterly to neglect and omit these religious duties, then by performing them to increase the number of their sinnes, and the fearefull measure of their just condemnation. To which I answer, that the sight of our imperfections, corruptions, and grieuous sins in the performance of these holy duties, must by no meanes cause vs to neglect them, but to practise them with greater diligence, labouring against our corruptions, and endeauouring and striuing to performe them with more perfection. And if yet notwithstanding wee cannot bee freed from our wonted sins and imperfections, we must bewaile them with bitter sorrow, and by feruent and daily prayer, begge the assistance of Gods holy Spirit, for the mortifying and subduing of these corruptions. But in any case let vs not entertaine a quarrell vpon any tearmes against the meanes of our saluation, nor bee discouraged in the performance of these religious duties of Gods seruice, not doing them at all, because wee cannot doe them in that perfection which we would.

To which purpose let vs know, that to heare the Word of God is not a thing arbitrary and indifferent, but a part of that seruice which God necessarily requireth to bee performed of vs. And therefore though we grieuously sinne in the doing of it, yet must we doe it still, seeing we cannot so hainously sin in the hearing of the word, if we endeuour to heare it as reuerently and profitably as we can, as we shal if we neglect it altogether. For is is a lesse sin to faile in sin in the manner of doing, then to omit the maine dutie it selfe: to sin of infirmitie because we can doe no better, then of wilfulnesse and negligence by not doing that wee can. For what Father would not take it much better at his childes hand, if he performe the dutie which he hath enjoyned, though it bee neuer so ill and imperfectly done, if he know that he hath vsed his best endeauour, then that he should vtterly neglect it, and excuse his negligence by his inabilitie to doe it in such perfection as his father required? Againe, let vs know that if we should entertaine Satans temptations, perswading vs to neglect all Religious duties wherein we shew sin, corruption and imperfection, then surely we should doe none at all; for euen the best of Gods seruants vpon the earth haue their most commendable duties stained and blemished with their imperfections and corruptions; but yet because they doe the euill they would not, and haue an heartie desire, and earnest endeauour to performe seruice vnto God in that perfection which he requireth, the Lord in mercy respecting them according to that which they haue, and not according to that which they haue not, doth graciously accept the will for the deed, couering their imperfections with the rich Robe of Christs perfect righteousnesse, and washing away their sins and corruptions with his precious bloud. Furthermore if this were a sufficient reason to discourage a man from hearing the word, because he sinneth in the hearing of it, then should none vnconuerted and vnregenerate presume to heare it, because being destitute of a liuely faith, all they doe is sin. Whereas contrariwise wee know that God hath appointed the Ministery of the Word as his owne Ordinance, to giue light vnto them that sit in darknesse, to conuert and regenerate those who are dead in sinne, and to endue them with faith who are yet in the state of infidelitie, that so thereby they may be inabled for the time to come to performe such acceptable seruice as hee commandeth.

Q. Sect.5.
The former point illustrated by similitudes.

We know that the cunning Scribe requireth that his Schollar should exercise his hand, though for the present he doe but blot paper and spoile pens; because this small losse is recompenced with a greater gaine, and by practice he is brought from bungling to perfect skill: and so the Lord will haue his young Nouices to exercise themselues in the art of hearing, though at the first, their losse seemes to exceed their gaines, because in time it will turne to their greater aduantage, as being the meanes to bring them to more perfection, and is content that they should by shewing their infirmities and corruptions displease him for a while, that they may learne the way to please him for euer. The sicke man who hath lost his appetite, and loatheth the sight of meate, if he eat thereof is made more sicke and weake in his present sense and feeling, but yet afterwards he findeth by experience, that it was the meanes whereby he recouered his health & strength: And so being sicke in sin, wee haue no desire to feed on this spirituall food, but through the hardnesse of our hearts loath this heauenly Manna, and if we tast therof (iudging according to our present sense and feeling) we are ready to crie out that our sicknesse of sinne and grosse corruptions are rather increased then abated; and yet this is the food whereby presently we liue, and for the time to come, waxe healthie and strong in vertue and godlinesse. For it is the Ordinance of God whereby hee beginneth his graces where they are wanting, and whereby hee nourisheth and increaseth them where they are begun.

to

9. Sect. 6. That our imperfection in performing argueth greater perfection in desiring.

Lastly, let vs consider that when in the performing of Religious duties, as hearing the Word and Prayer, there is greatest imperfection of obedience in respect of abilitie and power, there is shewed greatest perfection in respect of the will and desire, if notwithstanding these great infirmities wee doe not slacken our pace, but constantly persist in these holy duties. For it is no great matter, if those willingly performe seruice vnto God, who can performe it in that manner and measure which themselues desire, seeing their obedience is accompanied with much peace, cõfort & spiritual joy, which sufficiently rewarding their paines in the very doing, are incouragement enough to make them dutifull and diligent: but if those whose seruice is mixed with many corruptions, and who are continually disheartened by their sinnes and imperfections, doe constantly persist in these holy duties, notwithstanding they are depriued of all comfort and incouragement, as thinking that hereby they bring vpon themselues more euill then good, and a curse rather then a blessing, onely in obedience to Gods Commandement; and hauing no other inducement, but a simple desire of conforming themselues to his will; they shew a kind of perfection in their imperfection, and the lesse abilities they haue in performance, the more willingnes they shew to performe, and in not obeying in the act and deed, they approoue their obedience more absolute in respect of their desire; the which is acceptable to God though power be wanting, as before I haue shewed. If a souldier being strong and valiant doe in all encounters goe away with victory and triumph, it is no great wonder, if at his captaines command he hazard the combat, because his successe whetteth his courage, and harteneth him to any attempt; but if another who being weake and feeble, hath continually in euery fight receiued wounds and foiles, doth willingly, as often as his Commander doth appoint him, enter the field, and stand to it in all encounters, hauing no confidence in his owne strength, nor hope of good successe, onely in obedience to his Captaines command; surely such an one is no lesse to be admired for his loue and dutie in attempting, then to bee pitied for his weaknesse and inabilitie in performing; and exceeding the other as much in submissiue obedience, as hee is exceeded by him in strength and power, his weake endeuours must needs please his Commander: And so it is no great wonder if those who are strong in Gods graces doe willingly performe vnto him that seruice which he requireth, and resist Sathan after they haue often put him to flight; but if one who is by reason of his weaknesse continually foiled and ouercome of sin in all seruices wherein he is imployed, be notwithstanding still ready at Gods command to attempt the performance of any dutie, and (as it were) wounded and maymed, doth endure the conflict, onely in loue and obedience to the Lord of Hosts; surely this seruice must needes bee acceptable to God, and in the end he will so rescue him with the power of his Spirit that he shall obtaine the victory, and make him as commendable in the time to come for his strength and abilities, as he was before for his obedience and dutie. And therefore let vs not be discouraged from the performance of the duties of Gods Seruice by our many foyles & falls; neither let Satan perswade vs to cast away this Sword of the Spirit, because through our ignorance or weaknes in vsing it aright, it doth (as it were) a little hurt our hand, seeing if we be thus disarmed, Satan will easily wound vs with his tentations at the very heart, and giue vnto vs an vtter ouerthrow; whereas if wee keepe this spirituall weapon still in our hand, desiring our great Commander that hee will giue vs strength, and teach our hands to warre and our fingers to fight, he will surely inable vs with his might, and so instruct vs in this spirituall warfare, that we shall be sure in the end to obtaine the victory.

CHAP. XXVIII.

How we must arme our selues against Satans tentations, whereby hee laboureth to make the Word of God fruitlesse.

Lib. 1. Chap. 23.

9. Sect. 1. That Satan tempteth vnto carelesnesse and negligence in hearing.

HAue shewed what are the tentations which Sathan vseth to disswade vs from hearing the word; but if we breake these snares and cannot be with-held from frequenting Gods holy Assemblies, then he will endeuour by all meanes to make the Word of God which we heare, fruitlesse and vneffectuall for our conuersion and saluation. And to this end he will labour to worke in vs a negligent carelesnesse in harkening to those things which are deliuered, and this is vsually accompanied with dulnesse of spirit, drowsinesse and sleepinesse; or if wee set our selues to heare the Word, with any care and conscience to profit thereby, then he will seeke to distract our mindes with wandring thoughts, either by offering and suggesting to our consideration and memory the world, and the vanities thereof, as our affaires and businesse, and those pleasures wherewith wee are most delighted; or if this will not preuaile, by casting sting into our minds things in their owne nature good and religious, if they were thought vpon in time conuenient, to the end that wee may bee distracted, and bee made vnfit to heare the Word with profit. Which tentations we are to withstand as being most dangerous and pernicious: and to this purpose there is something required at our hands to be performed before our comming to Gods Assemblies, and something afterwards. Before wee come to the hearing of the Word, there is required due preparation, whereby our minds are made fit vessels to receiue the spirituall treasure and food of our soules. For if wee come into the Congregation of the faithfull, without any premeditation, reuerence, or regard of the action which we are to take in hand; if we present our selues rashly and vnaduisedly, as if we went to a play, or to dispatch some worldly businesse; wee shall hardly keepe our minds from negligent wandring and worldly distractions, which will make the Word of God fruitlesse and vnprofitable.

Now this preparation doth principally consist, first, in the purging of our corrupt affections, to which duty the Wise man exhorteth vs; Eccles.5.1. Take heed to thy feet when thou entrest into the house of God, that is, bee carefull to purge thine affections which are the feet of thy soule. And this was typically signified by the outward washing of the Israelites before the promulgation of the Law, Exod.19.10. where by the washing of their clothes and bodies, the purging of the secret corruptions of the heart was signified and represented. Which duty is necessarily to bee performed of all those who will heare the Word with profit: for as the most pure liquor is defiled and made vnprofitable for vse, if it be put into a polluted and stinking vessell; so the pure liquor of Gods Word is defiled and made fruitlesse, vnto all those who receiue it into a heart polluted with vncleane affections. As therefore Moses was enjoyned by God to put off his shoes from his feet, before he might tread on that ground made holy by Gods presence, or receiue the Lords ambassage to his people; so he requireth of vs that we put off the shooes, that is, the corruption of our affections, before wee tread vpon the holy ground of his Church, there to heare the glad tidings of the Gospell, concerning our euerlasting deliuery out of the bondage of our spirituall enemies. What these affections are the Apostle Iames partly sheweth, Iam.1.19; namely wrath, filthinesse, malitiousnesse, to which Peter addeth dissimulation and hypocrisie, enuie and euill speaking, 1.Pet.2.1. And to these also we may adde all other like vnto them.

Secondly, wee must banish out of our minds all prejudice, fore-stalled opinions, and sinister conceits of the Minister of Gods Word whom wee are to heare; whereby men are either carried away with a vaine admiration of his gifts, and in the meane time make no conscience of feeding vpon that food which is offered; like vnto them, who in stead of drinking of the Wine, stand wondring at the curious workmanship of the Cup; or else with a prejudicate opinion of his insufficiencie in gifts, or imperfections of life, whereby they are so forestalled, that they thinke nothing which hee can deliuer will be worth the hearing.

fore-stalled opinions of the Ministor.

Thirdly, we must expell out of our cogitations the remembrance of all worldly businesses, pleasures and delights, lest they distract our minds in the hearing of the word, and so choaking this heauenly seed make it fruitlesse; for as the vessell which is already full, will receiue no more, and whatsoeuer is powred into it, spilleth vpon the ground: so the minde that is full of worldly meditations, is not fit to receiue the Word of God, but as soone as it offereth to enter, it is kept backe and so perisheth; for God and Mammon, the holy Word of God and the cares and vanities of the world, can neuer dwell at the same time together, but as soone as one entreth it expelleth the other. As therefore men purposing to write a Sermon, doe make cleane their writing tables, by blotting out that which was written in them before, for otherwise there would be such a mixture and confusion, that nothing would bee legible; so when we purpose to carry away a Sermon faire written in the tables of our memories, wee must first blot out all worldly affaires and businesses, otherwise there will bee nothing but confusion, and wee shall not be able to recall any thing to our remembrance.

3.Sect.4. We must expel all worldly cogitations.

Fourthly, before the hearing of the word, we must search and examine our hearts both concerning our sins and corruptions, as also concerning our wants and imperfections. For the first, wee must consider to what sins we are most addicted, and with what tentations we are most easily subdued, to the end we may bring our sins to be slaughtered and mortified with the Sword of Gods Spirit, being otherwise vnable to ouercome them our selues; and that we may also thereby so strongly arme all parts, both of our bodies and soules, as that they shall not in time to come, bring vs againe vnder their dominion. And as Citizens being besieged with their enemies doe learne by their assaulting, which part of the Citie is most weake, and so with more care and labour fortifie it, with men and munition, trenches and bulwarkes; so when wee who are continually besieged by our spirituall enemies, doe learne by their assaulting of vs where we are weakest, and the enemy most like to enter, then wee must goe into Gods armory, and prouide sufficient weapons and munition, whereby wee may be enabled to hold out and make resistance. So also we are to consider of our wants and imperfections, that so we may be stirred vp with an earnest desire, to haue them supplied, and hereby may be moued with more care to apply vnto our selues such food as shall bee most fit to supply these our wants, & amend our imperfections. For as men who hunger earnestly desire to bee satisfied with wholesome food, neither will they willingly without any difference eate of all meates, especially if they haue weake stomackes, but of that which is most fit and best agreeth with them: so those who find their spirituall wants earnestly desire to bee satisfied, and to haue their defects supplied: and for as much as all food contained in Gods Word, is not fit for this purpose, nor agreeable to their stomackes, to the end that Gods graces may be nourished in them, therefore they will wisely make choice of that which best agreeth to their present state, and apply it vnto themselues accordingly. For example, hee who findeth his heart hard and secure, must feed vpon the threatnings of the Law, to the end he may be humbled, and his heart mollified, and dissolued into teares of vnfained repentance; he that is of a broken heart and contrite spirit, must feed vpon the sweet and gracious promises of the Gospell; hee that is ignorant, must hunger after milke, and desire to be instructed in the principles of Religion; hee that hath a good measure of knowledge may desire stronger meate, that is, attend vnto the more deepe points of Diuinity. In a word, euery man is to examine his particular state, and to search out his greatest wants, that so comming to heare the word, he may more diligently apply such doctrines instructions, and exhortations as shall bee most fit for his vse & benefit; for that which is food to one, is poyson to another, and that salue which is fit to heale one sore, doth make another to fester and ranckle. And one part of the Word of God being applied to men of diuers estates, doth worke diuers effects; one it feedeth, another it poysoneth; one it healeth, another it woundeth; to one it is the sauour of life vnto life, and to another it is the sauour of death vnto death: and therefore, before wee come to the hearing thereof, wee are to examine our states that we may apply and make profitable vse to our selues of that which is most fit to nourish and strengthen vs in Gods graces.

3.Sect.5. Wee must examine our sins and wants.

§. Sect. 6. Weeare to vse earnest praier. Psal. 119.18.

Lastly, and most especially, wee are to vse earnest and hearty prayer vnto the Lord, that he will open our blind eyes, that so we may see the wonderfull things of his Law; that he will take away our stony hearts, and giue vs fleshy hearts, in which his word may more easily be imprinted; that hee will with the oyle of his grace bow our stubborne wils, and make them flexible and inclinable to performe obedience to his will, reuealed in his word; that he will sanctifie our affections, and purge them from their naturall corruptions; that hee will distill the heauenly dew of his holy Spirit into our mindes and barren hearts, that so the seed of his word being watered thereby, may yeeld a plentifull harueſt in grace and godlinesse.

§. Sect. Of the which we perform hearing, to set our selues in G presence.

And these are the duties which wee must performe in the time of our preparation. Now after wee are thus prepared, and haue presented our selues into Gods holy assemblies, there are also other duties to bee performed, to the end that Sathan may not distract our mindes, and so make the word which wee heare fruitlesse. First, wee are to set our selues in the presence of God who looketh vpon vs, and beholdeth all our behauiour in this action, according to the example of good Cornelius: Acts 10.33. Here (saith hee) wee are all present before God to heare all things that are commanded thee of God. And if we thus doe, we shall not carelesly and negligently heare the word of the Lord, but with feare and trembling as in his presence, before whom the earth trembleth, and the foundations of the mountaines mone and shake, as it is Psal. 18.7.

Acts 10.

Psal. 18.

Secondly, we are to heare the word preached, not as the word of a mortall man, but as it is in truth the Word of the Euer-liuing God, according to the example of the Thessalonians: 1. Thes. 2.13. When (saith the Apostle) yee receiued the Word of God which yee heard of vs, yee receiued it not as the word of men, but as it is indeed the Word of God. For the Minister is not his owne spokesman, but the Ambassadour of the Lord, it is not his owne message which he bringeth, but the Lords embassage. And hence it is that the Prophets & Apostles prefixe before their writings, these and such like speeches, The Word of the Lord, The burthen of the Lord, Thus saith the Lord. So also the Apostle professeth in his owne Name, and in the behalfe of all Gods true Ministers, that they are the Lords Ambassadours, who in Christs stead beseech their hearers that they will be reconciled vnto God, 2. Cor. 5.20. Wee must not therefore looke vpon the man, but on God who sendeth him; nor on the earthen vessell, but on the heauenly treasure which it bringeth; nor on the simplenesse of the Cabinet, but on the precious pearle which is contained in it; nor vpon the meanenesse of the Ambassadour, but vpon the glorious royaltie of the Prince who sent him; and on his ambassage, which is the glad tidings of the Gospell, the word of saluation and life, which is able to saue our soules; and then his feet will seeme beautifull, and none shall be better welcome; then shall we not contemne or neglect his Ministerie, but receiue joyfully, reue-reuerently, and attentiuely the word preached by him, remembring what our Sauiour Christ hath said, Luke 10.16. He that heareth you, heareth mee, and hee that despiseth you despiseth mee, and he that despiseth mee, despiseth him that sent mee.

Thirdly, let vs stirre vp our selues to reuerent attention by the consideration of those inestimable benefites which are deriued vnto vs by the hearing of the word; as that it is the liuely seed whereby we are begotten vnto God; the food of our soules whereby wee are nourished vnto euerlasting life; that spirituall phylick whereby we are purged from our corruptions; that light which guideth vs in the wayes of holinesse and righteousnesse; in a word, that it is the chiefe meanes to worke in vs all Gods graces in this life, and to assure vs of euerlasting happinesse in the life to come. And if these and such like meditations come to our remembrance, they will serue to stirre vs vp from our drowsie dulnesse, and moove vs to heare Gods word with alacritie and cheerefulnesse, fastening our eyes on Gods Ministers, according to the example of Christs hearers, Luke 4. 20. and euen hanging vpon them (like the child on the mothers breast) to suck from their lips our soules nourishment, as the people hanged on our Sauiour, Luke 19. 48.

Fourthly, wee must heare the word, as if we were neuer more to heare it: for who can tell whether hee shall liue till the next Sabbath? or though hee doe, yet how knoweth he whether hee shall haue his senses, vnderstanding, and memory, seeing hee will not vse them to Gods glory, and his owne good? or though he haue, yet may the word of God be taken from him, and such a famine be of this heauenly food, that hee may wander from Sea to Sea, and from North to East seeking it and shall not find it. And therefore whilest the Lord speaketh vnto vs to day, let vs harken and not harden our hearts, for hee hath not promised vs to morrow that we shall heare it: whilest we enjoy this heauenly light let vs looke vpon it, and be directed by it to doe the workes of holinesse: for it may be it will shortly set and neuer rise againe vnto vs, and then what will follow but eternall darknesse?

Lastly, let vs be stirred vp to attention by the consideration of Gods judgments which hee inflicteth on the contemners and neglectors of his word, which he may iustly euery minute powre vpon vs whilest our minds are wandring, not regarding that which hee saith vnto vs, he may suddenly strike vs with frenzie and madnesse, or with death it selfe, and then how fearefull and lamentable were our state if such a judgement should seize vpon vs. Let vs remember what happened to drowsie Eutychus, and consider with our selues, that that which befalleth vnto one may happen vnto another.

9. Sect. 12. How we are to behaue our selues after we haue heard the Word.

And thus are wee to stirre vp our selues to the diligent and attentiue hearing of Gods word, that so it may be fruitfull in our hearts, and effectuall for our conuersion and calling vnto God. But when wee haue gone thus farre we must not heere rest, for if our enemy Sathan cannot hinder the seed of Gods word from falling into our hearts, then hee will labour to steale it away as soone as it is sowed, that it may neuer take root nor bring forth any fruit, as appeareth by lamentable experience. For how many are there who receiue the Word of God with their approbation, and are somewhat affected with that which is spoken, and yet soone after it vanisheth away, and nothing remayneth but their old corruptions: and whence doth this proceed but from the malice of Satan, who he findeth the seed of the word not receiued into the ground of the heart, and therein couered, like a rauenous bird deuoureth it; or if it haue a little rooting, yet he choaketh it with the thornie cares of the world, so as it neuer springeth vp, no not so much as into a blade of profession; or if it be so far growne vp, yet he indeuoureth to keepe it from euer thriuing further, by causing the hot Sun of persecution to arise, and with the heat thereof to make it wither and perish, though for a time it haue made a flourishing shew: as our Sauiour Christ hath taught vs in the Parable of the Sower, Matth. 13. And therefore it behoueth euery one of vs to take no lesse paines after the hearing of the word to keepe it from deuouring, and to preserue & nourish it, that it may take deepe roote and bring forth much fruit; then we did in the time of preparation, and in the time when we receiued it. For the carefull husbandman taketh great pains in stirring vp his fallow ground, and preparing it for the seed, as also in the seed time in sowing it in the ground thus prepared, and yet all this were to no purpose if hee did not afterward harrow it and couer it in the ground: so though we take great paines in breaking vp and preparing the fallow grounds of our hearts, and also in receiuing the seed of Gods Word, yet if wee be not as carefull after all this to couer and hide this seed in the furrowes of our hearts that it may take deepe rooting, it will neuer bring forth any fruit of true godlinesse. Now the meanes to preserue and nourish this heauenly seed of Gods word is first serious meditation; whereby wee call to minde that which wee haue heard, in which it is very requisite that wee examine the doctrines which were deliuered according to the touchstone of Gods Word, and turne ouer the Bible to those proofes which we remember alleaged as most principall for the confirmation of the doctrines which were deliuered. A notable example

Matth. 13.

Acts 17.10,11. whereof we haue in the men of Berea, Acts 17.10,11. Who though with great readineſſe they receiued that doctrine which Paul had deliuered, yet when they came home they ſearched the Scriptures, to ſee if thoſe things which they heard were conſonant & agreeable with them or no. Secondly, wee muſt vſe holy and Chriſtian conference one with another, about thoſe matters which we haue heard, for hereby it will come to paſſe that what one did not obſerue or hath forgotten, the other remembreth and repeateth; and ſo likewiſe the other helpeth out in another point where his neighbour faileth, till at laſt they recall all the materiall points to their remembrance. Euen as many meeting together at a Feaſt, doe euery one caſt in his ſhot till the reckoning be made; ſo many ioyning their heads together for the recalling of a Sermon to minde, one repeateth a little, and another as much more, till at laſt all bee repeated. And ſecondly, this benefit redoundeth hereof, that all which euery one remembreth by this repetition is more ſurely imprinted in his memory, and is not afterwards eaſily forgotten. Laſtly, the beſt and ſureſt way to imprint things in our memorie neuer after to bee blotted out, is vpon all occaſions to practiſe it in our liues and converſation: for as we only truly know that in Chriſtianitie which we practiſe, ſo likewiſe that is onely well remembred which is well practiſed.

CHAP. XXIX.

Satans tentations whereby hee perſwadeth men to deley their repentance anſwered.

§. Sect. 1. The tentation alluring to deferre repentance.

AND ſo much concerning the ſubtill tentations of Satan, whereby hee laboureth to make the Word of God fruitleſſe and vneffectuall for our converſion; wherewith if hee cannot preuaile being repelled by the meanes before ſpoken of, and if men by their hearing of the word haue learned thus much knowledge, that their converſion and turning to God is neceſſary to ſaluation; then hee will in the next place labour to perſwade them to deferre their repentance for a time, till they haue better opportunitie and are more fit for this purpoſe. Let it bee granted (will he ſay) that it is neceſſary that thou ſhouldeſt repent and turne vnto God; yet thou mayeſt deferre thy repentance vntill thine old age, or at leaſt till the time of ſickneſſe, for then thou wilt be more fit to performe this duty, then in the flouriſhing prime of thy youth, when as the exerciſes of Religion are ſo tedious and vnpleaſant, and the pleaſures of the world ſo ſweete and delightfull; neither needeſt thou to feare any inconuenience which will come hereby, for God is ſo gracious, that whenſoeuer thou returneſt vnto him he will receiue thee to mercy, for he hath promiſed in his Word, that whenſoeuer a ſinner repenteth him of his ſins, hee will blot all his wickedneſſe out of his remembrance: And therefore thou mayeſt enjoy both the pleaſures of this life, and the life to come, thou mayeſt repent time enough hereafter and liue a ſtrict and Religious life, when the heate of youth is paſt and old age drawes on, which is far more fit for theſe exerciſes: for what folly is it ſo to doate vpon the heauenly ioyes to come, as that thou ſhouldeſt deprriue thy ſelfe of thoſe worldly pleaſures which are preſent, ſeeing thou mayſt enjoy both? Againſt which tentation it behoueth euery man moſt carefully to arme himſelfe as being in it ſelfe moſt dangerous and pernicious to great multitudes, as may appeare by too too lamentable experience. For when as Sathan can no longer hood-winke their eyes with the vaile of ignorance but that they plainly ſee, that it concerneth their eternall ſaluation to hearken vnto the Lord calling them to repentance, then notwithſtanding thus far hee preuaileth with them that they are content to delay their converſion and turning vnto God, either vntill the time of ſickneſſe, or till their old age. And therefore it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſet downe briefly ſome waighty arguments, whereby euery Chriſtian may bee moued to ſpeedie repentance, and not to defer their converſion from day to day, but to turne vnto the Lord when hee firſt calleth them.

§. Sect. 2. Motiues to perſwade to haſten repentance.

The firſt motiue to perſwade vs to the haſtening of our converſion is Gods Commandement, whereby hee enjoyneth vs ſpeedily to turne vnto him, that we may doe him ſeruice all the dayes of our life, to which end he hath created and redeemed vs and doth continually preſerue vs, Pſal. 95.7,8, To day if you ſhall heare his voice harden not your hearts: ſo as he chargeth vs not to reſiſt his calling, no not till to morrow, for if to day we will not hearken vnto him, hee hath not promiſed to call vs againe vnleſſe in bee to iudgement. So Eccleſ. 12.1. Remember now thy Creatour in the dayes of thy youth, whileſt the euill dayes come not, nor the yeares approach, wherein thou ſhalt ſay, I haue no pleaſure in them: that is, old age, as afterwards he expounded it. And Eſay 55.6. Seeke yee the Lord whileſt hee may be found, call yee vpon him whileſt he is neere. Matth. 3.2. Repent, for the Kingdome of Heauen is at hand. Acts 3.19. And our Sauiour Chriſt doth enjoyne vs, firſt to ſeeke the Kingdome of God and his righteouſneſſe, Matth. 6.33. If therefore we will not wittingly and wilfully breake Gods Commandement, let vs offer Eccleſ. 12.1. Eſay 55.6. Matth. 3.2. Acts 3.19. Matth. 6.33.

vnto him the seruice of our youth, as well as the seruice of our old age, for hee requireth this as well as the other, yea before the other. And this was signified vnder the types of the old Law, where the Lord requireth that they should offer vnto him the principall of the flocke, and such beasts as were whole and sound, young and without blemish. So Leuit. 3.1. the Lord requireth that the Sacrifice which they offered, should bee without blemish, and Verse 22.20. Ye shall not offer any thing that hath a blemish, for that shall not be acceptable for you. And Deut. 15.21. If there bee any blemish therein, as if it be lame or blind, or haue any euill fault, thou shalt not offer it vnto the Lord thy God. And for transgressing this law the Lord reprehendeth the people by his Prophet, Mal. 1.8. And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not euill? and if ye offer the lame and sicke, is it not euill? offer it now to thy Prince, will he be content with thee or accept thy person, saith the Lord of hosts? And Verse 14. Cursed be the deceiuer which hath in his flocke a male, and voweth and sacrificeth to the Lord a corrupt thing. Now did the Lord regard the beasts, and hath he made so many Lawes that he might haue the best of them? Surely this is not Gods mayne end, but hee would thereby teach vs to offer and dedicate vnto his Seruice euen our best things as the prime of our youth and our flourishing age. For was the Lord grossly offended when as men reserued the best of the flocke to themselues and offered the old, blinde and lame vnto him; and will hee be well pleased that wee dedicate our youth and the strength of body and soule vnto Satan, and our owne lusts, and reserue for him onely our olde, decrepit, lame and without age, when as our bodies are full of diseases and our minds of infirmities? Will any Prince accept of vs if wee spend the whole time of our youth and strength in the seruice of his enemies, and when we are sicke, old, lame and blind, offer him our seruice? and will the Prince of Princes thinke he can be well pleased if hee bee thus vsed? If Sathan and the World haue all the part with, will he be contented with the dregs and refuse? if they haue the ripe fruit, will God be content with that which is sower and putrified? if they haue our health, will he haue our sickenesse? surely it is not likely; for the Lord who hath created vs, redeemed vs and preserueth vs, doth looke to be serued with our youth, health and strength which he hath bestowed on vs.

The second argument to moue vs to hasten our repentance, is, ... vnto God is taken ... obstacle and impediment ... our liues. In respect of the shortnesse, our liues are compared to a pilgrimage, to the flower and grasse of the field, to the wind, a sigh, smoke, vapour, to a dreame, a tale told, a soan, a shadow, and the passage of the weauers shuttle, yea vanitie it selfe. And therefore seeing our liues are so short, surely they are all too little though they were wholly spent in Gods Seruice. But seeing we haue spent a great part of this short time, euen our whole life before our conuersion, after the lusts of the Gentiles, let vs thinke that enough, yea far too much to bee so ill bestowed, and from hence forward let vs liue (as much time as remaineth in the flesh) not after the lusts of men but after the will of God, as the Apostle admoniseth vs, 1. Pet. 4.2,3. But though our life were short, yet if this short time were certaine, there were some more shew of reason why wee should defer our conuersion; but as it is short so is it most vncertaine, for wee haue not assurance that wee shall liue one houre; we are tenants at will in these earthly tabernacles, neither doe we know how soone our gracious Lord-lord will turne vs out of them; wee are the Lords Stewards heere on earth, and wee know not how soone our Lord and Master will call vs to a reckoning, and therefore it behoueth vs to haue our accounts alwayes perfect, and the bookes of our consciences made vp in readinesse. Wee are vncertaine when death will arrest vs and carrie vs to iudgement, and therefore we should be prepared for it at all times; when we goe to bed we are so to lay vs downe as though we were neuer to rise till wee rise to receiue our last sentence; when wee rise vp in the morning we are so to spend that day as though it were the last of our liues, for how many haue gone well to bed who haue beene dead before morning? how many haue risen (as they thought in perfect health) and yet haue beene attached by death before the euening? and therefore it behoueth euery one who hath any regard of the eternall saluation of his soule to turne speedily vnto God, and while to day they heare his voice not to harden their hearts. Men vsually delay matters of least weight, and in the first place dispatch businesse of greatest importance, and therefore vnlesse we thinke the preseruation of our bodies and soules from the eternall torments of Hell fire, and the assurance of euerlasting happinesse and blessednesse in Gods Kingdome to be matters of little importance, then the obtaining of some vaine pleasures, inconstant honours or base commodities let vs turne vnto the Lord betimes by vnfained repentance, and according to our Sauiours aduise, Matth. 6.33. But first seeke the kingdome of God and his righteousnesse, and these worldly things shall be cast vnto you as a thing of nought. If we see a house on fire wee should haste out to preserue those things which are most deare and precious vnto vs, good houshold stuffe before lumber, Iewels before trash, and children before Iewels; but our liues are daily in a consumption, & dum incessimus, vita decrescit, whilest we grow and increase, our liues decrease, and therefore in the first place let vs seeke to preserue our soule, which is our chiefe Iewell, and not suffer it to perish through impenitencie, whilest we gaine some earthly vanities. But very lamentable is the practice of most men, who liue as though they were neuer to die, or as though they had taken of God a long lease of their liues which is to expire at a certaine appointed time; and this makes them defer their repentance and to put the euill day far from them, till at last death attacheth them and carrieth them to iudgement. And this appeareth by the Scriptures and continuall experience, Iob speaking of carnall secure men saith, they take the Tabret and Harpe and reioyce at the sound of the Organs, they spend their dayes in wealth and suddenly they goe downe to the graue. Iob 21. 12. So Eccles. 9. 12. Man Iob 21. 12, 13. Eccles. 9. 12. knoweth not his time, but as the fishes which are taken in an euill net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare, so are the children of men snared in the euill time when it falleth vpon them suddenly. When the euill seruant shall say in his heart, my Master deferreth his comming, and shall beginne to smite his fellowes, and to eate and drinke and to be drunken; the Seruants Master will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an houre that he is not aware of, and will cut him off and giue him his portion with the vnbelieuers, Matth. 24. Seruous habeamus ait, Luben pauc. ab. And we know what happened to the rich man who said vnto his soule, Soule thou hast much goods laid vp for many yeares, take thine ease, eate, drinke and make thy merrie. Luke 12. 45. Verse 19, 20. This same night God said vnto him, O foole this night will they fetch thy soule from thee, and then whose shall those things be which thou hast prouided? Luke 12. 19, 20.

§. Sect. 4. That many purposing to repent in olde age, are cut off in the meane time by Gods iudgement.

Moreouer how many haue we obserued in our owne experience, who haue deferred their repentance from day to day thinking to repent either in their olde age, or in the time of their sickneſſe, and haue been not preuented and cut off by Gods iudgements? Doe we not see that many haue been taken away with sudden and violent deaths, some depriued of the vse of their senses, memory and vnderstanding, in the time of their sickneſſe, and to haue died mad, frantick, and senselesse; many who come to their olde age, and yet are further from repentance then in the time of their youth? And this commeth to passe by the iust iudgement of God for what can be more righteous, then that the Lord should confound them at the houre of death, who haue contemned him all their whole life? that they should lose their memory and vnderstanding in the time of sickneſſe, who haue continually abused them to the dishonour of God in the time of their health; that they should die impenitent, who haue liued in impenitencie, that they should forget God when they are ready to goe out of the world, who would neuer remember him whilest they were in the world; that God should withdraw his grace when they are sicke, which being often offered they despised when they were in health? And this the Lord threatneth, Prou. 1. 24. Because I haue called and you haue refused, I haue stretched out my hand, and no man would regard. Verse 25. But you haue despised all my counsell, and would none of my correction. Verse 26. I will also laugh at your destruction, and mocke when your feare commeth. Verse 27. When your feare commeth like suddain desolation, and your destruction shall come like a whirlewinde &c. and Verse 28. Then shall they call vpon me, but I will not answer, they shall seeke me early, but they shall not find me. Verse 29. Because they hated knowledge, and did not chuse the feare of the Lord. So Zach. 7. 11, 12, 13. the Prophet saith, that because the people refused to attend him, pulled backe their shoulders, and stopped their eares, that they should not heare, but made their hearts as an Adamant stone, lest they should heare the word of the Lord, and the spirit by the Ministery of the former Prophets, therefore came a great wrath from the Lord of hosts, wherefore it came to passe that as he cried and they would not heare, so they cried and the Lord would not heare them. And therefore when the Lord threatneth destruction, Lord let me heare of the Lords comming from day to day; but seeke the Lord while he may be found, and call vpon him while he is neere: let the wicked (saith he) forsake his wayes, and the vnrighteous his thoughts, and turne vnto the Lord, and he will haue mercie vpon him, and to our God, for he is ready to forgiue, &c. Isay 55. 6, 7. But if, notwithstanding the Ministerie of the Word, and all these meanes vsed and vrged, we still continue hardned against the manner of our conuersion, and quench the good motions of his spirit when he pricks the inward mind, saying, it will be time enough, that as we neglect the Lord and he will neglect vs, and though he call vpon vs, yet he will not call again, to morrow, but will let vs die in our sins without repentance. Let vs remember the fearefull example of Esau, who contemning the blessing and birthright, afterwards when he would haue inherited the blessing was reiected, for he found no place of repentance though he sought it carefully with teares. Heb. 12. 17. Like vnto the foolish Virgins, who neglecting the opportune time of preuenting oyle for their Lamps, afterwards went many times, but too late, for the Bridegroome passed by, and they Prou. 1. 24, 25, 26.

Zach. 7. 11, 12.

Isay 55. 6, 7.

Heb. 12. 17.

they were shut out of doores. Call to minde the fearefull example of Pharaoh, who still hardening his heart against Gods Word sent vnto him, and confirmed by many miracles and wonders, at last was destroyed with his whole traine. So Herod hauing heard Iohn Baptist willingly, and performed obedience to some things which he had learned, because he did not turne to the Lord with his whole heart, nor repented of his incest, was neuer after called againe but left of God to his own hardnesse of heart. The like may be said of Felix, Agrippa, Festus, Iudas, Demas, Iulian the Apostata, who hauing not hearkened to the Lords call, but quenched the good motions of his Spirit, afterwards were giuen ouer of God to a reprobate sense to their euerlasting ruine and destruction. So likewise when as the Lord gaue her time to repent, shee repented not, he threatneth his heauie iudgements against her. In a word, this is manifest in the examples of carnall secure men in these dayes, who hauing abused Gods mercy and long suffering, and deferred their conuersion from day to day, at last are taken away in Gods heauy displeasure, and as they liued like beasts, so commonly they die like beasts. And therefore if we loue the saluation of our soules, let vs hearken when the Lord calleth, and not harden our hearts against the good motions of his Spirit; for if we be like those wretched vessels of perdition, there is no hope we should be reckoned among the children of God.

Thirdly, we must consider that our conuersion and turning vnto God, by vnfained, and true repentance, is a gift of God from whom euery good and perfect gift descendeth, as Iames saith: and therefore we are to accept of this grace when he offereth it vnto vs. For God doth not promise his gifts and graces, with condition that we may procrastinate them when we list, but when he offereth them, Psal. 95. 7. To day if you will heare his voice, harden not your hearts, as they did in the wilderness. Behold, now God calleth and inuiteth vs to come vnto him, now he knocketh at the doore of our hearts, desiring to enter that he may dwell in vs by his holy Spirit; and if we neglect to let him in, how know we whether he will euer knocke againe? If he doe not, what gaine we thereby, but the pleasures of sinne for a season, and in the end eternall death; and what is there in this world, or in the whole world, to be compared with the euerlasting life and the eternall weight of glory in the kingdome of heauen? Wherefore Christ knocketh at the doore of our hearts, and if we will open vnto him, he will be our guest and sup with vs, bringing his graces with him, euen as he vseth to harbour in all his spirituall graces; but if we make fast the doores against him, what hope can we haue that he will come againe when he findeth such rude and vnciuill entertainment? And then what will follow, but that either we shall neuer see him more, and thus our case will be most miserable, or with his Spouse in the Canticles we shall long seeke him but not find him without great difficultie, yea, perhaps we may seeke him as Esau sought his blessing with teares and neuer find him?

CHAP. XXX.

Of the fourth motiue, taken from difficultie of repenting, caused by delayes.

THe fourth motiue to perswade vs to speedy repentance and turning vnto God, is, that the longer wee defer it, the harder wee shall find it, for the difficultie thereof will bee much encreased by delay, and our seldecalo, who are vnfit to day will be more vnfit to morrow. The reasons hereof are many: first, because by continuall sinning we get a custome and habit of sinning, and if a custome which is but affected bee hardly left, what shall we say of a custome which is confirmed by nature, or what is nature strengthened by custome? who knoweth not that the Drunkard is more easily reclaimed from his drunkennesse when hee first falleth into the vice, then when he hath long vsed it? And that the sweater the longer he vseth and inureth his tongue to swearing, the more hardly can he forbeare it? and the couetous man is hee increaseth in yeares, increaseth also in couetousnesse, and the like may be said of all other vices. Neither need this to be any wonder vnto vs, seeing this is a thing apparant in reason and in experience, for the longer the disease hath possessed the body the more hardly is it cured, & therefore the counsell is good, Vnde non ouerrumpis, preuent the disease before it hath seized on thee, or presently after it hath taken place remoue it? The longer the sore is neglected the more inflamed it is and the greater difficultie there is to heale it; the longer the tree groweth the deeper roote it taketh, and the more hard it is to pull it vp; the enemy is more easily kept from taking the walles, then being entered is often times driuen like the Inuaders of the Citie: so is it with sinne and Satan, they are more easily kept from entrance, then beaten out. As therefore you would condemne him of extreme folly who would not regard his sicknesse, till it had gotten head, and then thinke to cure it; or who would neglect to apply any salue to a grieuous wound till it were festred, and then thinke it his part to heale it, or that it were easy to pull vp young plant, and being vnable should defer it till it were growne to a greene tree, thinking then more easily to plucke it vp by the roots; or that would let the enemy quietly enter into the Citie with a purpose then to expell him with more facility and lesse losse: so alike, nay much more fooliſh is he, who finding it now a hard matter to turne vnto God and to forsake his sins, deferreth it for many yeares together, till the corruption of nature haue receiued double strength by long custome, imagining that then hee can very easily attaine vnto his purpose. Let vs therefore breake off our sins by vnfained repentance, and take heed of confirming our naturall corruptions by long custome: for as one saith, Dum consuetudini non resistitur fit necessitas, whilest custome is not broken it becommeth necessitie. And as another, Sicut non potest aliquis dedisce re quod diu didicerit, sic vix longum peccati consuetudinem, as a man cannot easily forget his mother tongue, so neither can he leaue customable sin. So it is said, Iob 20. 11. That the wicked mans bones are full of the sins of his youth, and that they shall lie downe with him in the dust; whereby it is implied, that as diseases after they are entred into the marrow and bones are incurable, in so much as they goe with men to their graues; so sinnes and vices, which are the sicknesses of the soule hauing seized and taken fast hold of a man by long and continuall customs from his youth, will most hardly leaue him in his age, but will hang fast on till the day of his death. And hence it is that the Lord by his Prophet doth note it to bee a thing impossible in respect of humane power, to leaue those sins which are customably committed, Ier. 13. 23. Can the Blackmoore change his skin, or the Leopard his spots? then may yee also doe good that are accustomed to doe euill. And therefore if euer we meane to leaue our sins and to turne vnto God, it is best to begin before the corruptions of nature be confirmed by custome.

1. Because sin will grow customable.

q. Sect. 3. a. Because Satan will more hardly be cast out of his possession when he hath long held it.

Secondly, while we lie in our sinnes we continue in Satans thraldome, and hee hath full possession of vs; which possession the longer he holdeth the more hardly will hee be cast out: for as those who haue a long time quietly enioyed their houses and lands, though their title be but weake, yet are more hardly dispossessed, then if at their first entrance their right had beene called into question, both because long custome hath in it the nature of a law, and the parties themselues will be more earnest in vsing all meanes to retaine their possessions which they haue long held, time hauing wrought out all doubting of their right: so Satan is more hardly thrust out of his possession when hee hath long kept it, because his long holding of vs in his thraldome maketh him imagine that he hath right to hold vs still; and hee is most earnest in vsing all his strength and policie, to hold that which hee hath already gotten and long kept in his possession. Wee know that when a Souldier in fight hath taken another captiue, at first hee vseth all meanes to breake from him, as hauing better opportunitie when they are still in the field, then he can hope for after when he is carried away and clapt vp in prison: and as hee hath lesse meanes, so also hee hath lesse desire to escape; after that by continuance of time, his captiuity is made more familiar vnto him; and wee commonly see that a bird as soone as she is taken, flutters eth and striueth to get away; but after she hath beene a while in the cage, she is content to stay there still, though the doore be open: and so it is in our spirituall thraldome, at the first we haue best meanes to escape and most desire also, for after we are inured to Satans captiuitie we are content to remaine his bond-slaues still. And if we desire to escape, he will more disdaine that wee should striue and oppose our selues against him, after hee hath long time had vs at command, and ruled vs at his becke, then when at the first we fell into this cruell slauery.

q. Sect. 4. 3. By continuance the strength of sin increaseth.

Thirdly, the longer that sinne hath dominion ouer vs, the more it increaseth in strength, and the more hardly it is subdued: for it is the nature of sinne, as soone as it is entertained to make way and roome for more, and those worse then it selfe, as we may see in the example of Dauid, for when he was ouercome of idlenesse, it made way for adultery, and adultery for murder. So Herod entertained incest, and that opened a doore in his heart to let in murder, and both these made open way for all Hellish impiety. So Iudas retayning still his couetousnes was moued thereby to betray his Master; and this sin brought him first to desperation, and then to hang himselfe. Yea the Apostle Peter after that hee ioyned himselfe in company with the wicked seruants of the more wicked high Priest, at first was moued hereby to deny his Master, and when hee had gone thus far, then hee denieth him againe with an oath, and when he had thus far proceeded in the course of sinne, hee maketh no conscience of redoubling his oathes, cursing himselfe if he knew the man. So that the longer we let sin haue dominion in vs, the more it will increase in selfe in strength and number, till our hearts be full of sinne and wickednesse. As therefore those Citizens were to bee accounted most fooliſh, who when they saw an hundred enemies entred into the City, should defer the beating of them out or killing of them, till they had opened the gate to let in ten thousand more better armed and more strongly prouided, thinking then to haue better opportunitie, and more abilitie to giue them the repulse; so alike foolish are those who finding it hard and difficult to subdue some few sinnes, to which they are now giuen, doe defer it till the time to come, when as they are increased in huge multitudes, imagining then to doe it with more ease. Sin, it is the poyson of the soule, as therefore poysons being drunke are presently to bee cast vp againe, otherwise they disperse themselues in the veines, and so going to the heart cause death; so this poyson of sin, if it be long kept in vs, will disperse it selfe ouer the whole body and soule, and seizing vpon the heart, will plunge vs into euerlasting death and destruction. Sinne is an heauy burthen, and vpon whomsoeuer it lieth, it will presse them downe vnto Hell; as therefore the way to ease a man of his burthen is not to adde more vnto it, but to cast it off; so the way to ease vs of the heauy burthen of sin, is not to increase the waight by adding still more and more vnto it, but by casting it off speedily, for when by this continuall addition our sinnes are growne to an vnsupportable waight they will sooner presse vs downe then we shall cast them off.

Fourthly, the longer we liue in sinne, the more vnpleasant will vertue and godlinesse be vnto vs; and the more we are delighted in fulfilling the lusts of the flesh, the more bitter it will be to mortifie them, and to imbrace any strict course of sanctification, seeing these are contrary the one to the other. Hee that hath long continued in darknesse cannot endure the light of the Sun; hee that neuer tasted any thing but sweet and pleasant meats, cannot abide to feed vpon those which are sowre and bitter; he that was borne and bred in hot Countries, is not able to brooke those which are cold: and so those who haue accustomed themselues to sin will hardly be euer brought to imbrace vertue and godlinesse, these being as contrary one to another, as light and darknesse, sweet and sowre, hot and cold, especially considering that sin is as delightfull to the taste of a naturall man, as drinke when hee is extreamely thirsty, or meate when he is ready to pine for hunger.

Fifthly, the longer wee liue in our sins and defer our conuersion vnto God, the more are our vnderstandings darkned, our wils peruerted, our affections corrupted, our hearts hardned, and our consciences seared, and all the powers and faculties of our bodies and soules are more and more disabled. For as the longer that sickenesse hath continued, the more it weakeneth the body and maketh it vnfit for any worke or action: so the longer sin, which is the sickenesse of the soule, hath seized on vs, the more vnable we are to shake it off, and the weaker it maketh vs to performe any good actions. When men at first fall into vnusuall sinnes, their consciences checke them, and they feare lest the Lord wil powre vpon them his heauy iudgements; but when they haue committed the same sins againe and againe, and yet are not punished, then like as theeues, who hauing escaped after one robbery committed, are ready to commit another: so they hauing not tasted of Gods iudgements threatned, thinke that they shall neuer bee inflicted on them; and therefore are ready to sinne againe; vntill by long custome in sinning their harts are hardned, and their consciences seared, as it were, with a hot Iron, so as now without any checke or remorse, yea, with all pleasure and delight they can commit those sins, which in former times they would haue trembled to haue entertained into their secret thoughts. A notable place to this purpose wee haue, Eccles. 8.11. Because sentence against an euill worke is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sonnes of men is fully set in them to doe euill: So the Lord telleth the Israelites, that because he in his patience and long suffering forbare to visit them for their sins, therefore their hearts were destitute of his feare, Esay 57.11. Is it not because I held my peace, and that of long time, therefore thou fearest not me?

Sixtly, the longer wee deferre our repentance, the more vneffectuall will the meanes be of our conuersion; for the Word of God will either soften our hearts like waxe, or harden them like clay, either it will bee the sauour of life vnto life, or the sauour of death to our deeper condemnation, as it is, 2. Cor. 2.16. If it onte goe out of Gods mouth, it shall not returne vnto him void, but it shall accomplish that which hee will, and it shall prosper in the thing wherein hee sendeth it, (whether it be for the conuersion or hardening of those who heare it) as it is Esay 55.11. Wee know if a salue be applied vnto a wound, either it healeth it, or else the sore ouer-comming the vertue thereof, doth more fester and rankle: and so this spirituall salue being applied vnto our soules wounded with sin, doth either cure them, or else becomming vneffectuall, they waxe worse and worse. When men sleepe, and are suddenly wakened with some strange and vnusuall sound, they presently start vp and are amased, but after they haue beene a long time acquainted with the noise, they can sleepe securely and not be much disquieted; so when men sleeping in carnall securitie are awaked with the threatnings of the Law preached vnto them, which (like Canon shot) thunder in their eares, they are at first somewhat rouzed vp and begin to looke about them, but giuing themselues to sleep againe in their sinnes, after they haue beene many times awakened, at last this fearfull sound nothing moues nor disquiets them, neither will any thing waken them out of this spirituall Lethargie, but the voice of the Archangell com-commanding them to arise and to come vnto iudgement.

Q. Sect. 8. 7. Because old age is more vnfit for repentance, then youth.

Seuenthly, if we defer our conuersion vntill our old age, it will then be more hard and difficult then in the time of youth, because olde men are more indocible and vnfit to learne, then they were in their youthfull dayes, and therefore whosoeuer meane to attaine vnto learning of any Science, Trade or Occupation, they doe not defer it to their old dayes, but giue themselues vnto it in the time of their youth, when as their wits are most fresh, and their capacitie most quicke to receiue instruction. Seeing then there is much knowledge necessarily required to the making of a true Christian (for without knowledge we can haue no faith, and without faith there is no saluation) therefore for the attaining hereunto it is very needful that we begin betimes, and set our selues to learne Gods true Religion in the time of our youth, when as we are most fit for this purpose. And this counsell the Wiseman giues vs, Prou. 22. 6. Teach a childe in the trade of his way, and when he is old he shall not depart from it. Secondly, as old men are more vnfit to learn, so they are more forgetfull to remember that which is taught them, and therefore if they doe not set their whole minds vpon Gods Word, and continually call to mind that which hath beene deliuered vnto them in the preaching thereof, meditating therein with the Prophet Dauid day and night, all they haue learned will easily slip out of their weake and decayed memories. Which thing is most hard for them to performe by reason of manifold distractions, which that age is subiect vnto, as the infirmities of the bodie, sicknes, aches, and innumerable griefes, and also the manifold troubles & cares of minde, not only in respect of their owne state, but also in the behalfe of their children, young Nephewes and neere friends, whose welfare is as deare vnto them as their owne. Now if a single man hath cares enow to distract him from Gods Seruice, how many are their distractions, whose cares are doubled and redoubled? and therefore if we would make choice of the fittest time for our conuersion, we must not deferre it till our old age, but turne vnto God in our youth, when as our wits are most fit to receiue, and our memories to retaine instruction.

Prou. 22. 6.

Q. Sect. 9. 8. Because the houre of death is the most vnfit time for repentance.

Lastly, if wee defer our conuersion vnto God till our old age, or till wee lie on our death bed, we shall find it more difficult, in that our enemy Sathan, who alwayes goeth about like a roring Lion, seeking to deuoure vs, doth then redouble his malicious diligence in working our destruction, when as hee seeth the time draw neere wherein hee must attaine his purpose, or else for euer faile of his desire; what therefore will now our malicious, powerfull and most subtill enemy leaue vnattempted? What violence will hee not now offer? What policie will hee not assay to draw vs from God to his Kingdome of darknesse? We know that when enemies besieging a Citie doe heare that their siege is shortly to be raised by the approching of mighty succours; or within a while will become vaine and bootlesse, by reason that the Citie will be more strongly manned and better victualled, how they will bend all their Ordinance against the wall to make a breach, how furiously they will giue the assault, and how desperately they will fight, that they may not bee disappointed of their hope and lose all their former labour; and shall wee thinke that Satan who hath long besieged vs, desiring nothing more then to sack our soules, and to spoile them of all Gods graces, and to leade them captiue to Hell and destruction, will vse lesse politique fury in assaulting vs with all his engines of battery, when hee seeth the time approach when as now or neuer he is to accomplish his desire? But let vs consider moreouer how able wee are to endure his assaults if wee doe not prepare our selues before the time of sickenesse, arming our selues with the whole armour of God; surely we are naked and lie open to all his violence, being destitute of the girdle of Verity, the knowledge of Gods Truth, neither armed with the breast-plate of Righteousnesse, nor hauing our feet shod with the preparation of the Gospell of Peace, whereby wee might bee enabled cheerefully to march in the afflicted way which is full of the thornes and briars of tribulation and afflictions, wherein wee must trauell if wee will goe to Gods kingdome; neither yet hauing the shield of faith whereby we might quench the fierie darts of the wicked one, nor the helmet of saluation, nor yet any skill to vse the sword of the Spirit, the word of God, either for the defending of our selues, or the offending of our enemie. And whereas we may hope that God will at that time supplie all our wants, and giue vnto vs all his spirituall armour, whereby we may bee defended and Satan repulsed, wee are to know that God vseth not to giue his heauenly and spirituall graces at the houre of death to those, who haue contemned them all their life; or if he doe bestow them vpon any, it is ordinarily by the meanes which he hath ordained for this purpose, as the hearing of the word, heartie prayer, holy conferences, and such like spirituall exercises: now let it bee granted that wee may haue at such times of our mortall sicknesses, Gods Ministers, and all other outward helpes to further vs, in performing of these duties (which yet notwithstanding no man can promise to himself) yet how vnfit is any man in this case for the effectuall doing of these holy exercises, when as his body is full of paine, & his mind full of anguish, anguiſh, partly fearing Gods iudgements & eternall damnation, partly being grieued with the loſſe of all his delights, and becauſe he is to part with his friends; partly being troubled and diſtracted with diſpoſing of his worldly eſtate, and ſetting all things in order; and when to all theſe incumbrances there is added Satans dangerous tentations, who then moſt violently aſſaulteth, and moſt ſubtilly vnderminеth vs that hee may worke our finall deſtruction. And therefore ſeeing our conuerſion in the time of our ſickneſſe is ſo hard and difficult, (I had almoſt ſaid deſperate) let vs whileſt the Lord giueth vs the outward meanes of our conuerſion, and withall the vſe of our ſenſes, vnderſtandings, and memories, (all which when we are grieuouſly ſicke, are alwayes exceedingly weakned, and ſometime quite ouerthrowne) let vs (I ſay) vnfainedly turne vnto the Lord by vnfained repentance in the time of our health and ſtrength, and not by our delayes, hazard and deſperately indanger the eternall ſaluation of our ſoules for the enioying of the tranſitory triſles and vaine delights of this miſerable World.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of diuers other motiues which may haſten our repentance.

Sect. 1. The firſt argument to perſwade vs to ſpeedy repentance and turning vnto God, is, that by our delay either wee prepare more matter for our owne ſorrow and griefe, or elſe treaſure vp for our ſelues a more fearefull meaſure of wrath againſt the day of wrath. For if the beſt happen that wee can hope for, or imagine, it is that we truly repent vs of our ſins, without which there is no forgiueneſſe: and what is this repentance, but an heartie ſorrow, and bitter griefe, for our ſins paſt, and an earneſt deſire and endeauour of forſaking them in time to come. And therefore ſeeing whatſoeuer pleaſure we haue taken in ſinning, we muſt after loſe it in ſorrowing for ſin, ſeeing our laughing muſt end in weeping, and our hony be turned into gall and Wormewood; let vs breake off our ſins betimes, by vnfained repentance, and not heape vp matter of more griefe. Let not our minds ſo much dote to taſte of the hony which ſinne bringeth in the mouth, as that wee forget the poyſon which it carrieth in the taile; let vs not be ſo eager in drinking of this poyſon of ſinne, though it be ſweet and pleaſant to the taſte, remembring that it is deadly in operation; if it be not (as it were) caſt vp againe by vnfained repentance. Let not our gluttonous appetites cauſe vs to ſurfet on the pleaſures of ſin, ſeeing the preſent delight will not countervaile the future paine, when as being ſick in ſin, and tormented in conſcience, we ſhall vomit that with griefe, which we haue eaten with pleaſure, finding more bitterneſſe in the caſting vp, then ſweetneſſe when wee ſwallowed it downe. But this is the beſt which can befall vs, for if wee doe not thus heartily ſorrow for our ſinnes, but ſtill liue in them with pleaſure and delight, then doe wee nothing elſe but heape vp iudgement, and puniſhments, which ſhall one day be powred vpon vs in full meaſure, and fill vp the vials of Gods wrath, till being filled vp to the brim, hee will powre them out vpon our owne heads. And this the Apoſtle plainly ſheweth, Rom. 2. Verſe 5. But thou (ſaith he) after thine hardneſſe and heart that cannot repent, heapeſt vnto thy ſelfe wrath againſt the day of wrath, and of the declaration of the iuſt iudgement of God. 6. Who will reward euery man according to his workes, &c. And this is all the treaſure which Sinners, by deferring their repentance, heape vp vnto themſelues for the laſt dayes; as Iames ſpeaketh, Iames 5.3. The longer therefore we deferre our repentance the more we increaſe the bils of accounts, of which we ſhall neuer be able to giue a reckoning at the great and generall Audit; the more we heape vp our ſinnes, the more we heape vp Gods wrath, and increaſe the meaſure of our condemnation, and helliſh torments, euery day as it were piling vp wood, in which wee ſhall eternally bee burned.

Rom. 2.5.

Iames 5.3.

Sect. 2. The ſixt motiue to perſwade vs to haſten our conuerſion vnto God with all ſpeed, is the conſideration of the dangerouſnes of our eſtate before our conuerſion; for we are dead in our ſins, the children of wrath, and enemies vnto God, who euery minute lie open to his iudgements and puniſhments. And this the Lord implieth in his ſpeech to Cain, Gen. 4.7. If thou doeſt not well (ſaith he) ſin lieth at the doore, that is, the puniſhment due to thy ſinne, like a cruell wilde beaſt ſtill watcheth and waiteth for thee, ſo as thou canſt not ſtir any way but it is ready to ſeize vpon and deſtroy thee. Now in what a fearefull ſtate are thoſe who euery minute liue in this danger, of which if they bee ſurprized what can remayne vnto them but euerlaſting death and deſtruction? For as the tree falleth, ſo ſhall it lie, as it is Eccleſ. 11.3. that is, as the day of death leaueth vs, ſo ſhall the day of iudgement find vs. And therefore if wee bee taken away in our impenitencie whileſt wee are dead in our ſins, children of wrath, and enemies vnto God, ſuch ſhall we bee preſented before the tribunall ſeate of iudgement in the preſence of the great Iudge of Heauen and Earth.

Gen. 4.7.

Eccleſ. 11.3.

Sect. 3. The ſeuenth motiue taken

The ſeuenth motiue may be drawne from the manifold benefits which will accompany our ſpeedy conuerſion. For firſt vertue and good-from the benefits which accompany our conuersion.

goodnesse being sowne in vs in the time of youth, will take more deepe roote in vs, so as it cannot easily bee left or lost. For as the vessell doth longest retaine the smell and tast of that liquor which was put into it whilest it was new and vnseasoned, so they will longest retaine vertue and goodnesse who haue it planted in them in their youth, according to that Pron. 22.6. Teach a child in the trade of his way, and when hee is old he will not depart from it. Secondly, if we turne to God betimes, the exercises of Religion and works of sanctification, will be far more pleasant and easie then if we deferre them till our old age; for often vse will bring vs to a custome, and long custome will worke in vs an habit of vertue, which will be easie and familiar. If children from their youth bee brought vp in Trades and Occupations which are very hard and difficult, they doe attaine to the skill and practice of them with exceeding dexterity and quicknesse; but if the learning of them be deferred till old age, they can neuer attaine vnto them, or at least performe them slowly and with great difficulty; and so if from our childhood wee accustome our selues to the learning and practise of the workes of holinesse and righteousnesse, they will grow exceeding easie and pleasant, whereas being deferred they will be difficult and tedious. If the Oxe whilest he is young be accustomed to the yoke, he draweth in it quietly and with no great paine; but if hee run long in the pasture vnbroken and vntamed, when hee is brought to the yoke hee strugleth and striueth, and therewith galling his necke draweth with exceeding paine and irksomnesse; and so if in our youth wee accustome our selues to beare the yoke of obedience, it will be easie and pleasant, but if we vse delayes wee shall grow stubborne and stiffe-necked like vntamed Oxen, and the bearing of Christs yoke through our impatiencie, and therebellion of our nature will gall and vexe vs. Thirdly, the sooner wee turne vnto God, the more joy, peace and comfort shall wee haue in the whole course of our liues; for what joy may be compared with the joy in the Holy Ghost, what peace is like peace with God and the peace of conscience, when as wee are sure that wee are now friends, who before were enemies; and the children of God, and heires of his euerlasting Kingdome of glory, who in time past were children of wrath, and fire-brands of Hell? What comfort in the World can bee imagined like vnto the consolation of Gods Spirit, which is able to make all afflictions light, and euen death it selfe sweet and pleasant vnto vs? but this joy, peace, and comfort doe accompany our true conuersion vnto God, and therefore who would deferre it for one day, seeing it bringeth such inestimable benefits & such surpassing pleasures, as none sufficiently vnderstand them, but they who feele and enjoy them? Whereas on the other side, if we delay our conuersion, in the meane while we are continually subject to the checkes and terrours of an euill conscience, in feare of Gods judgements, and eternall damnation: and though in outward shew we may be exceeding merry and pleasant, yet our mirth is full of sorrow, and our joy of bitternesse, and of such laughter wee may say, thou art mad, and of this ioy, what is that which thou doest? as the Wise man speaketh, Eccles. 2.2. for it is but Sardonicus risus, laughter from the teeth outward, which is straight controlled with some inward pang or checke of conscience. Fourthly, the sooner we turne vnto the Lord, the longer time we shall spend in his seruice, which in truth is perfect libertie: now what can be more delightfull vnto any Christian heart, then to serue our Creatour from the dayes of our youth, and to shew our thankfulnesse to God our Redeemer for all the inestimable benefits which hee hath bestowed vpon vs, by causing our lights to shine before men; and by glorifying his Name in our godly and Christian liues? What can bee more pleasing to a thankfull minde, then to take all occasions of expressing thankfulnesse to him, vnto whom we are so much bounden? Lastly, as by our speedy conuersion vnto God wee liue in sweete comfort and joyfull peace, so also we securely expect death, and giue it entertainment when it commeth with chearefull countenance. For being conuerted vnto God, wee are at peace with him and in his loue and fauour, we are assured that the curse of the Law is nailed to Christs Crosse, that hee was condemned, that wee might be justified, and put to death, that wee might liue eternally; that he is gone before vs into Heauen to prepare vs a place there, and now sitteth at the right hand of his Father to giue vs joyfull entertainment when we come vnto him; that he hath taken away the sting of death, which is sinne, and hath made a soueraigne medicine against this poyson with his precious bloud; and therefore being conuerted vnto God wee need not feare death, yea, rather wee may wish with the Apostle to be speedily dissolued that we may be with Christ, seeing that is best of all. As it is Phil. 1.23. neither need wee to feare the destruction of this earthly tabernacle, seeing we are assured that we haue a building giuen vs of God, a house not made with hands, but eternall in the Heauens, as it is 2. Cor. 5.1. Moreouer, wee shall not need to feare either sudden death, or an euill death, for it cannot be sudden to them who are alwayes prepared, Nec potest male mori qui bene vixit, neither can he die ill who hath liued well. On the other side, those who deferre their repentance and turning vnto God, when death approacheth are filled with horrour and feare, when as they ſee that they are ſtill ſubiect to the curſe of the Law, and euery minute in danger of Gods fearefull iudgements; when as the waight of ſin preſſeth them, Satan and their owne conſcience accuſeth them, and death waiteth on them, to bring them to euerlaſting death, hell and deſtruction. And therefore ſeeing ſo many benefits accompany our ſpeedy conuerſion both in life and death, and ſo many euils follow our delayes: let vs not be moued by Satans tentations, the ſweetnes of ſin, nor with the alluring vanities of this deceitfull world, to deferre our repentance from day to day, but let vs now hearken whileſt God yet calleth vs, and take the good and acceptable time when hee offereth it vnto vs.

The eighth motiue to perſwade vs to ſpeedie conuerſion, is, that our turning vnto God being deferred to our old age, or till the time wee lie ſicke on our death-beds, is not ſo excellent in it owne nature, nor ſo acceptable vnto God, as if it were performed in the time of our youth. For what great matter is it if we leaue our ſinnes, when they are readie to leaue vs, to renounce the world with the riches, honours, and pleaſures thereof, when they are readie to abandon vs; to imbrace mortification, when as our bodies are mortified with ſickneſſe, and brought to the gates of death; to giue to the poore, when wee can keepe our goods no longer; to forgiue our enemies, when as we cannot offer them any further wrong or violence; to commend our wiues and children into the hands of God, when as wee our ſelues can no longer defend and prouide for them; to ceaſe to ſweare and blaſpheme Gods name, when as ſoon after we ſhal ceaſe to ſpeake? Moreouer, how can wee thinke that this will be acceptable vnto God, when as wee doe not come vnto him before all the world forſakes vs? nor craue his helpe, till we are abandoned of all other ſuccour, nor offer to come into his ſeruice, before we are ready to goe out of the world, and that rather for feare of puniſhment, and hope of reward, then for any loue wee beare to our Lord and Maſter? But let it be granted (as in truth it cannot be denied) that whenſoeuer we truly repent vs of our ſins, and turne vnto God, he will receiue vs to mercy; ſhould we take occaſion hereof to deferre our conuerſion, and to continue in our ſins? ſhould his loue and mercy towards vs, moue vs to rebellion, and impietie towards him, and becauſe he is gracious and long ſuffering, ſhall we therefore the more offend him, and (as it were) whet the edge of his wrath againſt vs? be it farre from vs. Yea rather if God be gracious and mercifull, let vs be aſhamed to offend ſo gracious and mercifull a God; and though we ſhould be ſo hard hearted, as not to feare his iuſtice, and fearefull iudgements, yet euen in common humanitie let vs bluſh for ſhame to offend him in conſideration of his infinite loue and mercy. If we haue a friend, who by reaſon of the loue hee beareth vs, would hardly be diſpleaſed, or mooued to anger againſt vs, would wee make this vſe of his loue and patience, ſtill to prouoke him with new injuries? Nay, if there bee any good nature and ciuilitie in vs, would not his loue towards vs, mooue vs to loue him againe, and would not this loue worke in vs a care and feare not to diſpleaſe him? Yea aſſuredly. O let not then the Lords loue, patience, and long-ſuffering, who is our friend of friends, make vs to take occaſion of offending and diſpleaſing him; but rather let the conſideration therof be a forcible and ſtrong motiue to mooue vs to repentance.

Laſtly, though the Lord bee ſo gracious and mercifull, that he is ready to receiue vs into his loue and fauour, whenſoeuer we vnfainedly repent, and truly turne vnto him; yet foraſmuch as hee extendeth his mercy to thoſe onely who are truly penitent, and ſeeing the repentance of the moſt is fained and hypocriticall, which then only beginneth when death or ſome extreame danger approacheth, this ſhould be a ſtrong motiue to perſwade vs to repent and turne vnto the Lord when wee are in our perfect health, ſtrength and proſperitie, that ſo we may haue aſſurance that our conuerſion is ſincere and vnfained, and not forced or diſſembled. Wee know that Pharaoh himſelfe when hee was vexed with Gods fearefull plagues, could ſay, I haue ſinned, and promiſe amendment. And Saul, when God threatned to cut him off, and to take the Kingdome from him, could acknowledge his wickednes, and pretend a deſire to worſhip the Lord. And Ieroboam could ſhew more contrition for the loſſe of his hand, then hee euer ſhewed for the loſſe of his ſoule. And wicked Achab when hee heard heauy iudgements denounced againſt him, could outwardly humble himſelfe, put on ſack-cloth, faſt, and goe demurely. And who may not obſerue in his owne experience, how many there are, who in the time of their ſickneſſe make goodly ſhewes of repentance, promiſing golden mountaines, and vowing, if they recouer, that they will lead a new life, forſaking their ſins, and endeauouring to ſerue the Lord in the duties of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, and yet the ſame men being reſtored to their health, with the Dogge returne to their vomit, and with the Sow to wallow againe in the filthy puddle of ſin, becomming as prophane, wicked, irreligious, and negligent in all duties of Chriſtianitie, as euer they were? which is a moſt vndoubted ſigne that their repentance was but fained and diſſembled, and that they were mooued thereunto, not for any loue of God, or hatred of sin, but for feare of Gods iudgements, and eternall condemnation, and therefore assoone as the cause of their feare is a little remoued, their repentance also ceaseth. Moreouer, we know that true repentance is the gift of God, and that wee haue it not at our owne becke and call, but when hee offereth and vouchsafeth it vnto vs, and therefore it is no maruell if they who haue scorned this gracious gift all the whole course of their liues, should bee denied it at the time of death, and left so to the hardnesse of their hearts, that though they seeke repentance, yet they shall neuer find it; And though with the fiue foolish Virgins they desire to buy Oile for their Lamps, yet the time of grace being past they shall be shut out of doores and excluded from the marriage. Neither doth the Lord ordinarily beget faith, repentance, and other sanctifying graces in any man, but by the vse of the meanes which hee hath ordained for this purpose: now the meanes ordained of God are not sickenesse, or the infirmities of old age, but the Ministery of his Word, made effectuall by the inward operation of his Spirit for our conuersion and sanctification; and therefore if the Lord hath oftentimes granted vs this meanes, and they haue not beene effectuall for our conuersion; if hee haue often called vs in the preaching of the Word and wee haue refused to come, what hope can we haue, that we should turne vnto God, without this meanes in the time of sickenesse, who by the continuall hearing of the Word, haue not beene conuerted in the time of our health, seeing not any come vnto Christ, but whom the Father draweth, and the meanes whereby hee draweth vs vnto him, is not sickenesse or the approaching of death ordinarily, but the Ministery of his Word? For when the sheepe heare Christs voice, and thereby know him to be the true Shepheard; then (and not before) they follow him, as it is Iohn 10.27. So that though wee were sicke, and certainly assured wee should die to morrow, yet for all this, wee are neuer the neerer our conuersion, faith and repentance then wee were before, as appeareth in the example of the Epicures, 1. Cor. 15.32. Let vs eate and drinke (say they) for to morrow we shall die. A man would thinke they should rather haue said, let vs fast and pray, for to morrow wee shall die; but this plainly sheweth that we are neuer the neerer our conuersion vnto God, and true repentance though we are certaine that death approacheth; it is onely the worke of Gods Spirit, which ordinarily worketh not by the meanes of sickenesse or feare of death, but by the Ministery of the Word, which is Gods owne Ordinance instituted of God for the gathering together of the Saints, and for the edification of the body of Christ. And therefore whilest the Lord calleth vs in the preaching of the Word, let vs hearken vnto his voice, and turne vnto him by vnfained repentance: for if Gods owne Ordinance is not effectuall for our conuersion, assuredly there is no hope that euer we will be conuerted by sickenesse or any other extraordinary meanes whatsoeuer. It is an admirable miracle wrought by the infinite wisdome and almighty power of God, that a poore Sinner should bee conuerted vnto him by the preaching of the Word, for hereby we who were dead in sin, are raised vp to newnesse of life, we who were borne blinde, are indued with sight; our hearts more hard then the Adamant, are made flexible, and soft as waxe to receiue any impression, which the Lord will imprint in them, and we are mooued to deny our selues, and to cast away our owne righteousnesse, and to rest and relie vpon Christ Iesus alone for our iustification and saluation, which is quite contrary to our naturall disposition: but it were a miracle of miracles, that all these things should bee wrought in vs by sickenesse, which the Lord hath not ordained for this purpose, when as the meanes appointed by God himselfe the Ministery of his Word, which is Gods owne Ordinance could neuer worke them in vs. It may be indeed that Gods hand lying heauy vpon vs in the time of sickenesse, and fearing worse iudgements in the life to come, we may be mooued hereby to make a goodly shew, and to vow great reformation if wee might be restored to our health: It may be that with Pharaoh, wee may make a fained confession of our sins, and promise to amend, if this iudgement may bee remooued, or that wee may with Achab outwardly humble our selues before God, to the end we may escape those fearfull punishments which are threatned in his Word; but it is a thousand to one if we then truly repent, who haue liued our whole time in impenitency; or then turne vnto God if we were not before that time effectually called and conuerted. For as we liue, so we commonly die; neither is it likely that hauing led our liues like wicked Balaam, we should die the death of the righteous; that hauing alwayes hitherto beene thornes and thistles, wee should now bring forth sweete figs and pleasant grapes, when we are ready to be cut downe and to be cast into the fire; that hauing all our life sowed the seedes of wickednesse wee should at our death reape the fruit of godlinesse; And therefore (as the Apostle exhorteth) let vs not bee deceiued, God is not mocked; for whatsoeuer a man soweth that shall hee also reape; for hee that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption, but hee that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life euerlasting, as it is Gal. 6.7,8. Let vs now turne vnto God, while hee calleth vs and granteth vs the meanes meanes of our conuersion the Ministery of his Word; now is the acceptable time, now is the day of our saluation; and if wee will now turne vnto God and truly repent whilst wee might continue in our sinne, wee may be assured our repentance is true and vnfained, and not pressed out of vs with sense of present paine, nor forced with fear of future punishment; and that turning to God, wee shall be receiued to grace and mercie, seeing wee then offer seruice him, when wee might haue serued Satan, the world and our owne corrupt flesh.

CHAP. XXXII.

Two let, which hinder worldlings from speedy repentance, removed.

AND so much concerning these Motiues, whereby we may be perswaded to speedy repentance; all which the worldly secure man regardeth and beareth off with a double fence, so as they can neuer beate him downe with true humilitie nor pierce his heart with vnfained sorrow for sinne; the one is by alleadging Gods mercy manifestly declared vnto vs in the sweet promises of the Gospell; the other by obiecting the example of the conuerted thiefe, who though hee had spent his whole life in sin and wickednesse, yet at the last houre was receiued to mercy. For the first, hath not the Lord (will they say) protested in his Word, that hee desireth not the death of a Sinner, but that he turne from his way and liue? Hath not our Sauiour told vs, that he came not to call the righteous, but Sinners to repentance; and doth he not inuite such vnto him as labour vnder the heauy burthen of sinne, promising that he will ease them? And hath not the Apostle Paul taught vs, that Gods will is, that all men should be saued, and come to the knowledge of the truth? Seeing therefore God is so mercifull, why should we doubt of our saluation? Why should wee feare to deferre our repentance, and follow our pleasures and delights for a time, seeing the Lord will receiue vs to mercie whensoeuer we turne vnto him?

I answer first, that though all this were certaine true, and not to be doubted of, yet it is a most vnthankfull part and horrible ingratitude against our gracious God and louing Father to take occasion of his mercy, the more to offend him, as before I haue shewed. Secondly I answer, that as God hath shewed his mercy in the gracious promises of the Gospell, so also he hath as plainly declared his iustice in the seuere threatnings of the Law, and hee is as true in the one, as in the other. And therefore all the question is, who shall taste of his mercy, and who of his iustice, seeing that is promised to some, and this threatned against others; or rather in truth it is without all question, for the Lord hath plainly shewed in his Word that hee will extend his mercy to all repentant Sinners and to them onely, and that he will declare his iustice in powring out his iust iudgements vpon the wicked who liue in their sinnes, and especially vpon those who take occasion of Gods mercy to continue in in their vnrepentantie, despising the riches of his bountifulnesse, his patience and long-suffering; for hereby they heape vnto themselues wrath against the day of wrath, and the declaration of the iust iudgement of God; as the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 2.4,5. Though then there be neuer so many sweete promises in the Gospell, yet they who continue in their sinnes without repentance can reape no true comfort by them, because they are not made to them but to repentant Sinners; and on the other side, though there be neuer so many terrible threatnings denounced in the Law, yet the penitent Sinner needs not to feare them, seeing they are threatned onely against those who continue in their impenitencie. Though God be of infinite mercy, let not the wicked man who liueth in his sins presume, seeing it is sufficiently declared in pardoning the sins of repentant Sinners: neither let him who is truly penitent despaire because God is of infinite iustice, seeing it is sufficiently manifested in punishing the sins of those who continue in their vnrepentancy. Let not him who is turned vnto God from his wicked wayes feare Gods iustice, for it is fully satisfied in Christ, and therefore it shall neuer attach him; neither let him who continueth in his sinnes without repentance, hope in Gods mercy, for it doth not belong vnto him; nor yet in the sweete promises of the Gospell, which though they bee neuer so generall, yet are they alwayes to be restrained to the condition of the couenant of grace, faith, and repentance. And this is manifest in the places before alleaged, which worldly men so much abuse to nourish in them carnall securitie, for whereas the Lord saith, Ezech. 33.11. That hee will not the death of a Sinner, hee addeth in the next words, but that hee turne from his way and liue: so that the Lord speaketh not of all Sinners but of those who turne vnto him from their wicked wayes. So our Sauiour Christ saith, that he came not to call the righteous, that is, those who are iust & righteous in their owne conceits, but Sinners to repentance: so that whosoeuer are called vnto Christ that in him they may haue saluation are called also to repentance. Neither doth our Sauiour call all Sinners vnto him without difference, but those onely who are weary and heauy laden, that is, who find their sinnes irksome and grieuous vnto them, and desire nothing more then to be freed of this vnsupportable burthen. And the Apostle Paul likewise doubtles say simply that God would haue all men to be saued, but that they would also haue them come to the knowledge of the truth, that is to the knowing, acknowledging, and beleeuing of the principles of Christian Religion concerning God, themselues, and the worke of redemption wrought by Christ. Let therefore no carnall secure man take occasion to presume vpon Gods mercy in regard of the sweet and gracious promises of the Gospell, for vnlesse they turne vnto God from their euill wayes and truly repent them of their sinnes, vnlesse they are weary and heauy laden, desiring nothing more then to be eased of their heauy burthen, vnlesse they come out of their blindnes, ignorance and zeale to the knowledge of the truth, the gratious promises of the Gospell doe not appertaine vnto them.

Rom. 2.4,5.

Ezech. 33.11.

Matth. 9.13. & 11.28.

1 Tim. 4.

2. Sect. 3. The second let is presumption vpon the example of the conuerted Thiefe.

Secondly, whereas they alleage the example of the Thiefe conuerted at the houre of death we are to know that this is but one particular act of Gods mercy, and therefore we can make thereof no generall rule, especially seeing to this one we may oppose many thousands of those who hauing deferred their repentance to the last houre, haue beene taken away in their sinne and impenitency. It is true indeed, that if with this Thiefe we truly turne vnto the Lord by vnfained repentance, and shew our faith by the like liuely fruits, he will pardon our sins, and receiue vs to mercy, according to his gracious promises: but this faith and repentance are not in our owne power, but the free gifts of God, which hee very seldome bestoweth on those at the houre of death, who haue neglected and contemned them their whole liues. Sometimes indeed hee calleth and conuerteth some at the last houre, to shew the infinite riches of his mercy; but most commonly he leaueth those who haue deferred their repentance to die in their impenitency, that they may be examples of his iustice. And to this purpose, Augustine speaketh well, There is (saith he) mention made in the Scriptures of one whom the Lord received to mercie, that none might despaire, and but of one, that none might presume. It is the manner of Princes to send their gracious pardon sometimes to those who are led out to execution; but if any will wilfully offend in hope hereof, or hauing offended will deferre to sue for his pardon to the last houre, surely he is well worthy to be hanged, both for his offence, and also for his presumption: so the Lord mercifully pardoneth some few, when death is ready to seize vpon them, and to transport them into the eternall torments of hell fire, to shew the riches of his grace; but if any shall take occasion hereby the more to offend against his Maiesty; or hauing offended, deferreth to sue for pardon by powring out the teares of vnfained repentance vntill his last houre, he is vndoubtedly vnworthy of any grace and mercy, and in all likelihood he shall be deliuered vp to suffer eternall tormentes. Moreouer, as this act of mercy in receiuing this Thiefe to grace, was very extraordinary, so was it reserued as being most fit for the time of Christs Passion; for as great Princes at the time of their Coronation pardon such notorious offences, the like whereof they will hardly euer after remit, to the end, that their clemencie and mercy may appeare to all: so our Sauiour Christ, the glorious King of Heauen and Earth, being ready to lay downe the forme of a seruant, and to take vpon him the Crowne of endles glory and maiesty, gaue his gracious pardon to this grieuous offender, to manifest his infinite mercy and goodnes vnto all men, that so they might breake off their sins by vnfained repentance, and by a liuely faith come vnto him, looking and expecting for life and saluation only in this their Sauiour and Redeemer. And as cunning Surgeons hauing made a soueraigne salue, doe vpon the next occasion make experiment thereof by curing some grieuous and desperate wound, that so they may commend it to all who shall haue need to vse it; so the Lord hauing made a precious plaister and soueraigne salue to cure all soules, who being wounded with sinne, will apply it vnto them by a liuely faith, presently tooke occasion of curing therewith this poore Thiefe grieuously wounded with sin, that all others in his state, seeing the vertue thereof might more earnestly desire it, and more carefully seeke after, and apply it to their wounded soules. And therefore seeing the occasion of this cure was altogether extraordinary, the action is not like to be ordinary, the occasion being removed, and the mercy of God, and vertue of Christs death and bloudshed being sufficiently manifested to all the World. Thirdly, wee are to know that the estate of these men, is farre vnlike, and much more desperate, then the state of the conuerted Thiefe: for he was in all likelihood neuer before this time called, and presently he hearkneth vnto the voice of Christ, and willingly entertaineth the good motions of his Spirit; but these men being often called, haue refused to come, and haue quenched the good motions of Gods Spirit. He persisted in his sin ignorantly, hauing not heard the doctrine of the Gospell, whereby he might be inuited to come vnto Christ by a liuely faith, and might turne vnto God by vnfained repentance; these haue often heard these glad tidings and haue neglected and contemned them. He continued in his sins through ignorance, neither did he vngratefully resolue to serue the Deuill his whole life, reseruing the time of his olde age and sickſickneſſe for the ſeruice of God, only for his owne aduantage; but theſe men hauing been often inſtructed in the Law of God & wayes of godlines, notwithſtanding wittingly and wilfully perſiſt in their ſins, preſuming vpon repentance and hope of mercy at the laſt houre, intending then to turne vnto God, not for any loue they beare him, but for feare of Hell torments, and eternall damnation. Laſtly, his repentance was moſt vnfained, and exceeding earneſt, and his faith brightly ſhined preſently after his conuerſion in ſingular fruits thereof. For he made a notable confeſſion of his Sauiour and Redeemer, euen when all his Diſciples for feare forſooke him. Hee juſtifieth Chriſt, when all men condemned him, & euen his Apoſtles doubted of him. He prayeth feruently vnto him, when the multitude mocked and reuiled him. Hee humbly confeſſeth his owne ſins, and louingly admoniſheth his fellow of his wickednes, deſiring earneſtly that as they had beene fellowes and copartners in ſin, ſo they might be partakers in pardon, and in the benefit of redemption wrought by Chriſt; Whereas moſt commonly their repentance is forced and diſſembled for feare of puniſhment, rather then for hatred of ſin, or loue of God: as they vſually make it manifeſt if they recouer of their ſickneſſe. And therefore ſeeing there is ſuch great diſſimilitude and difference in their purpoſes, liues and courſes, it is not probable that they will euer be like in their conuerſion, death and ſaluation.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Sathans tentations moouing men to reſt in a counterfeit repentance, anſwered.

Sect. 1. the pro- of the ell as e only to e who re- ſtinally.

AND ſo much for the anſwering of thoſe tentations, whereby Satan laboureth to make vs delay and deferre our repentance from day to day: with which, if he cannot preuaile, both becauſe wee ſee the neceſſity of repentance vnto ſaluation, and alſo plainly perceiue by the former reaſons that delayes are moſt dangerous, then hee will labour in the next place to perſwade vs to content our ſelues with a ſmall meaſure of repentance, or rather in truth with a counterfeit mock-repentance, which is onely in outward ſhew and neuer pierceth the heart; making vs beleeue, that if when we ſee our ſins, hauing our conſciences conuinced out of Gods Word, we doe in ſome generall termes confeſſe that we are all Sinners, and deſire God after a formall manner to haue mercy vpon vs, if wee can ſometime ſtraine from vs a broken ſigh, and bee content to leaue ſome of our leaſt pleaſing ſins, our repentance will be very acceptable to God, and ſufficient for our ſaluation.

And with this tentation Satan deludeth and deſtroyeth innumerable men in theſe our dayes, and therefore it behoueth euery man to prepare himſelfe for this encounter. And to this end we are to know, that the mercy of God, and merits of Chriſt, doe not belong vnto thoſe who thus ſlubber ouer their repentance; neither doth Chriſt Ieſus call vnto him ſuch as ſlightly ſorrow for their ſins, and thinke the burthen of them light and eaſie to be borne, but ſuch as labour and are heauy loden, as appeareth, Matth. 11. 28. Come vnto me all yee who are weary and heauy loaden, and I will eaſe you. In which words our Sauiour Chriſt plainly ſheweth, whom he calleth to the participation of the worke of redemption wrought by him, and what meaſure of repentance he requireth of them: for the firſt word κοπιῶντες, ſignifieth ſuch as labour vntill they be weary, and the other word πεφορτισμένοι, ſignifieth ſuch as are heauy laden with a burthen vnſupportable, and therefore being grieuouſly preſſed therewith, they deſire nothing more then to bee eaſed of it: for φορτος, from which this word is deriued, properly ſignifieth the burthen of a ſhip, and is taken metaphorically for any thing which is very troubleſome and grieuous. So that by joyning theſe two together, our Sauiour euidently declareth whom hee calleth and inuiteth vnto him: namely, thoſe only who know, acknowledge, and feele, that their ſins are an intolerable heauy burthen, and being exceedingly vexed with them, moſt earneſtly deſire to be eaſed and releaſed of them, and to this purpoſe flee vnto Chriſt by a true and liuely faith, finding themſelues deſtitute of all meanes whereby they may otherwiſe be eaſed and relieued.

Q. Sect. 2. What things are required in thoſe who truly repent.

If then we would haue any aſſurance that we are in the number of thoſe whom Chriſt calleth and inuiteth vnto him, we muſt haue firſt a ſight and ſenſe of our ſins, and a true and feeling knowledge of our miſerable and wretched eſtate, in which wee are, by reaſon of them, and the puniſhment due vnto them. Secondly, we muſt be weary in bearing this heauy burthen, as being moſt irkſome and grieuous vnto vs. Thirdly, we muſt haue an earneſt deſire to bee eaſed and freed from it. Laſtly, we muſt come vnto Chriſt by a true and liuely faith, to the end that hee may eaſe and releaſe vs. For the firſt we muſt come to the knowledge of our ſinnes, before wee can truly repent of them: for wee cannot ſorrow for them, vntill wee ſee them, neither is it ſufficient that we ſee and know that wee are grieuous and hainous Sinners, vnleſſe we alſo feele the waight of this intolerable burthen, preſſing vs downe, vexing, and grie-

1. Knowledge and ſight of their ſins.

uing vs, euen to the very heart: for wicked and prophane men may see their sinnes, for what can hide them from their eyes being so innumerable in multitude, and so grieuous and hainous in respect of their quantitie and qualitie? but yet they feele not their waight, neither are troubled with them: yea, it is a pastime to a foole to doe wickedly, as it is Prou. 10.23. and the abhominable filthy Sinner drinketh iniquitie like water, as it is Iob 15.16. and there are soules so delighted with vngodlinesse, and all lewde prophanenesse, that they euen draw vnto them iniquitie with the cords of vanitie, and sinne as with cart-ropes, as the Prophet speaketh, Esay 5.18. and though they be laden with their sinnes, as it were with an intolerable burthen, yet they feele them not, neither are they any thing vexed with their waight: and though the iniquitie of Sinners be so heauy that the earth cannot beare it, but reeleth too and fro like a drunken man, and is remoued like a tent, as it is Esay 24.20. though it make all the creatures groane and trauaile in paine together, as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 8.22. yea, though it euen wearieth God himselfe in suffering, and bearing with it, as it is Esay 43.24. yet doe they walke bolt vp right, and with stretched out neckes, neuer so much as stooping vnder this vnsupportable burthen, till at last it grow so heauy, that it ouerwhelmeth them, and presseth them downe to the bottome of Hell. The reason hereof is, because they are wholy plunged, yea drowned and dead in their sins: and therefore as those who being diued to the bottome of some deep water, doe not feele the waight of that which is aboue them, whereas if they were pulled out of the waters, they would bee ouerwhelmed with the burthen of one tunne: so those who are deeply plunged into the gulph of sinne and wickednesse, doe not feele the waight of this intolerable burthen, but if once they come out of their sins by vnfained repentance, the waight of some few of them would presse them downe vnto the gates of Hell, if they be not supported and freed from this burthen by our Sauiour Iesus Christ. But such as these are not called by our Sauiour, neither will he ease them, though their burthen be neuer so intolerable; but he inuiteth those onely who are heauy laden, and finding their burthen irkesome, are weary of it and desire to be eased; hee hearkneth only vnto those who from their hearts cry out with Dauid, Psal. 38.4. Mine iniquities are gone ouer my head, and as a waightie burthen they are too heauie for mee: 6. I am bowed and crooked very sore, I goe mourning all the day. Hee respecteth only those who are of a broken heart and contrite spirit, for these only performe the condition of the couenant, and consequently, to them alone the promises contained in the Couenant doe appertaine.

The condition of the couenant of grace is faith and repentance, neither of which doth he performe who doth not see, nor feele the burthen of his Sins. For wee will neuer rest vpon Christ for our saluation, vnlesse we see that wee haue no meanes of our owne to escape condemnation: wee will neuer seeke vnto Christ to be our Redeemer, vnlesse wee perceiue that wee are the bond-slaues of Sin and Satan: wee will neuer labour to obtaine the riches of his righteousnesse, vnlesse wee discerne our owne nakednesse and beggerie: wee will neuer come vnto Christ to bee washed and purged from the pollution of our sins and corruptions with his bloud, vnlesse we see our naturall filthinesse: we will neuer desire to be eased of the heauy burthen of our Sinnes, vnlesse wee feele the waight of them: we will neuer intreat Christ to be our Physician, vnlesse we find that our soules are sicke in Sinne: wee will neuer goe vnto him who is the author of life, vnlesse we see that we are dead in our Sins: in a word, we will neuer intreat Gods mercy, vntill we feele our owne misery. If therefore without this sense of Sin we will neuer come vnto Christ, then consequently without it wee shall neuer be eased; for hee freeth those onely from condemnation who rely themselues wholy vpon him for their saluation. He came to be their Redeemer alone, who feele their miserable captiuity, and earnestly desire to bee released; hee will not inrich any but those who perceiue their owne beggery, and craue releefe; he will not wash any with his precious bloud, but those who see their pollution and filthines, and come vnto him intreating him to purge & cleanse them; he will not ease any but those who finding their Sins to bee a heauy burthen, are weary, and come vnto him to be freed from them. He came into the world to be a Physician, not to those who feele no infirmitie, but to those who are sicke and diseased; hee came to giue life to those alone who are dead in their Sins and trespasses; neither will the Lord shew mercy vnto any, but vnto those alone who perceiue their estate to bee most wretched and miserable. For who can imagine that the Lord who is most infinite in wisdome, should vnaduisedly bestow his benefits vpon such; as finding no want of them, doe not desire them, when they are without them; nor esteeme them though they had them, and consequently will neuer be truly thankfull for that which they neither want, desire, nor esteeme? who can in reason conceiue that he will offer himselfe to be a Sauiour to such as doe not thinke themselues lost and condemned? or to bee their Redeemer who will not acknowledge that they are in captiuitie? or that hee will bestow the riches of his righteousnesse vpon such proud beggers, as find no need thereof, being righteous enough themselues in their owne owne conceits? that he will vainly spend his precious bloud in washing of those who thinke themselues cleane already, and need no such purging? that he will in compassion ease those of the burthen of their Sins who were neuer troubled with bearing of them? that hee will offer them any Physicke who will not acknowledge themselues sicke? or to giue life to those who will not confesse that they are dead in Sin? and who can imagine that the Lord wil euer shew to those his mercy, who will neuer shew the Lord their wretched misery? Whosoeuer therefore haue not a true sense and feeling of the heauy burthen of their Sins; they will neuer come vnto Christ; neither can they euer haue any assurance that hee will ease them, and consequently they are destitute of a true faith which is the chiefe condition of the Couenant of grace. But as they want faith, so also they can neuer attaine vnto true repentance: For so long as they haue not the sense of their Sins, they are not grieued with them, neither doe they desire to leaue and forsake them. And as those who bearing a burthen and are not vexed with the waight, they are not weary of bearing it, nor desirous to leaue it; so those who being loaded with the vnsupportable burthen of their Sinnes, and haue no sense of the waight, they are not grieued with wearinesse nor desirous to be freed from it, and consequently they are destitute of true repentance, which is nothing else but an hearty griefe and a true sorrow for our Sins past, and an earnest desire and endeauour to leaue and forsake them in the time to come.

So that whosoeuer haue not a true sense and feeling of the vnsupportable waight of Sin, they are destitute of true faith and repentance; and therefore the promises of the Gospell being made onely to the faithfull and repentant Sinners, doe not appertaine vnto them. Which may more euidently appeare if we consider some of the particulars; Esay 61.1. It is said that our Sauiour Christ was sent to preach glad tidings vnto the poore, to binde vp the broken hearted, to preach liberty to the captiues, and to them that are bound, the opening of the prison. 2. To comfort all that mourne, and to giue vnto them beauty for ashes, the oile of ioy for mourning, and the garment of gladnesse for the spirit of heauinesse. Matth. 9.13. our Sauiour saith that, he came not to call the righteous, but Sinners to repentance: and the Apostle witnesseth of him, that hee came into the world to saue Sinners, 1. Tim. 1.15. If therefore we be not poore in spirit and broken-hearted, if wee be not miserable captiues, heauy mourners, and wretched Sinners, our Sauiour Christ was not sent to preach the glad tidings of the Gospell vnto vs, he will not giue vs libertie nor afford vs any comfort, hee came not to call vs, neither will hee saue vs.

So our Sauiour professeth, Matth. 18.11. that he came to saue that which was lost, and to fetch home the wandring sheepe. If therefore we be not lost in our selues we shall neuer be found of Christ; if wee doe not confesse with the Prophet Esay, that wee haue gone astray like wandring sheepe, he will neuer seek vs nor carry vs on his blessed shoulders to the fold of eternall happinesse. In a word, as without the sense of sinne, we can neuer attaine vnto faith and repentance, so without faith and repentance, we can neuer haue any assurance of any of the promises of the Gospell.

Matth. 18.11.

Esay 53.6.

And therefore it behoueth vs as wee tender our saluation, that wee labour after the sight and sense of our Sins, that with good Iosias our hearts melt within vs, and euen resolue themselues into the teares of vnfained repentance; that we rent our hearts with true compunction, as the Prophet exhorteth, Ioel 2.13. and that with the Iewes we haue our hearts prick within vs, when we come to the sight of our Sins; and all this not so much in regard of the punishment wee haue deserued, as that by our Sins wee haue displeased our good God and gracious Father, and haue caused our Sauiour Christ who is the Lord of life, to be put to a shamefull and painfull death. And that we may attaine vnto this sense and feeling of our Sins, there are diuers meanes to bee vsed effectuall for this purpose; as first wee are to haue our recourse vnto God by earnest & feruent Prayer, desiring and intreating that hee will anoint the blinde eyes of our vnderstandings, with the precious eye-salue of his holy Spirit, that we may see our owne wretchednesse, misery, pouerty, blindnes and nakednes, and that he will soften our hard hearts, with the oile of his grace, and so beate these stony Rocks, that out of them may flow plentifull streames of vnfained repentance. Secondly, we are oftentimes to set the Law as a glasse before vs, that so we may see our deformities, and to examine our liues thereby, as it were by a rule or square, that so wee may know both how often we haue erred and transgressed it in the time past, and how vnable wee are to performe it for the time to come in that exact manner which God requireth. For as the deformities and spots in the face though they be great and many, cannot be discerned of those who haue them, vnlesse they looke themselues in a glasse, & though euery one else doth plainly see them, yet the party himself doth least of all perceiue them so though our spirituall deformities and filthy spots of Sin, appeare most vgly and odious in the eyes of God and men, so that euery one seemeth to point at them, yet we our selues will neuer discerne them, vnlesse wee set the looking glasse of the Law before vs. Thirdly, wee are often and earnestly to meditate ditate vpon the iuſtice and truth of God, in whoſe preſence the Heauens are not cleane, and the Angels themſelues are vnable to abide the rigour of his iuſtice; and how much more is man abominable and filthy, who drinketh iniquitie likewater? In whoſe ſight our beſt righteouſneſſe is like a polluted cloth; and how much more filthy then are our Sins and wickedneſſe? Moreouer, as he is moſt iuſt, ſo as he cannot let Sin goe vnpuniſhed, ſo alſo he is moſt true, yea truth it ſelfe: neither can any of thoſe threatnings fall to the ground vnexecuted, which he hath denounced againſt thoſe who liue in their Sins; and therefore there is no meanes to eſcape his fearefull iudgements, vnleſſe we turne from our Sins, and meet the Lord by vnfained repentance. Fourthly, let vs continually remember that wee muſt once appeare before Gods Tribunall Seat of iudgement, there to render an account not onely of our words and works, but euen of our ſecret thoughts, when as the Lord himſelf who ſearcheth the hearts and reines ſhall be our Iudge, who will not acquit the guilty, nor reſpect the perſon of man, neither will hee be ſatisfied with faire pretences and ſmooth excuſes, nor corrupted with bribes and gifts. And therefore let vs iudge our ſelues that we may not be iudged of the Lord; and in bitterneſſe of ſoule and remorſe of conſcience let vs condemne our ſelues to bee miſerable Sinners, that the Lord may acquite vs and make vs taſte of his mercy. Laſtly, let vs ſeriouſly meditate on thoſe fearefull puniſhments, which are prepared for thoſe who liue and die in their Sins; for they ſhall for euer beſeparated from the preſence of God, the ioyes of Heauen, and the ſweet company of the Saints and Angels; and be caſt into eternall darkneſſe, where they ſhall for euer and euer be tormented in flames vnquenchable. All which horrible puniſhmens are due vnto all, who continue not in all which is written in the booke of the Law to doe them; and therefore how ſhall we eſcape, who in ſtead of continuing in obedience to all Gods Commandements, haue continually broken them all, and done the cleane contrary, if we doe not in the ſenſe of the heauy burthen of our Sins, humble our ſelues before God by vnfained repentance, and come vnto Chriſt by a true and liuely faith, that we may be eaſed of this intolerable waight, & adorned with his righteouſneſſe and obedience.

9. Sect. 6. The ſecond thing required is: that our ſins be irkeſome and grieuous vnto vs. 1. Pet. 4.3.

And ſo much concerning the firſt ſigne, whereby thoſe may bee diſcerned whom Chriſt calleth, namely, the ſight and ſenſe of their Sinnes. But it is not ſufficient that wee feele our Sins like a heauy burthen, preſſing vs downe, if wee be content to beare it ſtill, but it muſt ſeeme irkſome and grieuous vnto vs, and make vs exceeding weary of bearing it; wee muſt with the Apoſtle Peter, thinke it ſufficient that wee haue ſpent the time paſt of our liues, after the luſt of the Gentiles in abominable ſins: and for the time come, wee are to liue after the will of God, dedicating our ſelues wholy to his worſhip and ſeruice. Otherwiſe, though wee haue neuer ſo exquiſite a ſight and ſenſe of our Sins, yet if they ſeeme vnto vs a ſweet burthen which we are content ſtil to beare without any great wearineſſe, yea with pleaſure and delight; if we be like the rich Miſer, who though his backe ſhould bee almoſt broken with the waight of his owne gold, yet would not think it any trouble, nay, would eſteeme it for his chiefe felicity, becauſe his burthen pleaſeth him: ſo if wee feeling that our Sins are an huge & maſſie burden, are neuertheles not troubled, nor weary of bearing them, but rather take our chiefe delight in being ſo loded, becauſe the burthen is exceeding ſweet and delightfull to vs; wee may aſſure our ſelues that we are not in the number of thoſe whom Chriſt calleth; for hee inuiteth them only vnto him, who being heauy laden with the waight of their Sins, are weary of their burthen, and ſorrow and grieue that they cannot ſhake it off, nor bee freed from it: crying out with the Apoſtle Paul, Rom. 7. 24. O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliuer me from the body of this death! Rom. 7.24.

9. Sect. 7. The third thing is a earneſt deſire to be freed from Sin.

The third Signe, whereby we may know thoſe whom Chriſt calleth, is, that being vexed with the heauy burthen of Sin, they earneſtly deſire to be eaſed and releaſed of it; for as thoſe who are ouer-preſſed with a heauy burthen, deſire aboue all things to bee freed from it; ſo thoſe who feele the waight of Sin preſſing them downe, and are weary and tired in bearing of it, they moſt earneſtly deſire to be eaſed of this intolerable burthen, and will neuer be at reſt till their deſire be accompliſhed. This deſire in the Scriptures is reſembled to hunger and thirſt; in which theſe two things concurre; firſt a ſenſe of our want, and ſecondly an appetite or earneſt deſire to bee ſatisfied, and to haue our want ſupplied; and ſo in theſe ſpirituall things, firſt we feele the want of Gods graces and Chriſts righteouſneſſe; and then wee earneſtly deſire that we may be filled and ſatisfied with them. So that to hunger & thirſt after the grace of God, and the righteouſnes of Chriſt, and to be weary and heauy laden, are much alike, and both are bleſſed of the Lord. For as thoſe who hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſſe, are bleſſed becauſe they ſhall be ſatisfied, as it is, Matth. 5.6. So they are bleſſed who are weary and heauy laden with the burthen of their Sinnes; for ſuch Chriſt calleth vnto him, & hath promiſed to eaſe them, that is, to giue vnto them the remiſſion of their ſins, & to releaſe them of this burthen, by taking it vpon his owne ſhoulders. And as our Sauiour calleth and inuiteth Matth. 11.28.

This deſire reſembled to hunger and thirſt.

teth vnto him such as are weary and heauy laden, Matth. 11.28. So in diuers other places, he inuiteth and calleth those who hunger and thirst after his righteousnesse. So Esay 55.1. Ho, euery one that thirsteth come ye to the waters, and ye that haue no siluer come buy, and eat, come I say, buy wine, and milke, without money. And Iohn 7.37. Iesus cryed saying: If any man thirst, let him come vnto me & drink, Apoc. 22.6. I will giue to him who is a thirst, of the well of the water of life freely. And 22.17. Let him that is a thirst come, and let whosoeuer will, take of the well of the water of life freely. A notable example of this thirsting we haue in Dauid; Psal. 63.2. O God thou art my God, early will I seeke thee, my soule thirsteth for thee: and 42.1. As the Hart breaketh for the riuers of water, so panteth my soule after thee, O God 2. My soule thirsteth for God, euen for the liuing God. And Psal. 143.6. My soule thirsteth after thee, as the thirstie land. Which thirst whosoeuer feeleth, hee may boldly assure himselfe, that he is in the number of those whom Christ calleth, and that hee will satisfie him. Whosoeuer therefore hungreth and thirsteth after the grace of God, and righteousnesse of Christ; whosoeuer is weary and heauy laden, that is, who so hath a true sense and feeling of his Sins, and is vexed and grieued with the burthen thereof, and with all his heart desireth to be eased of his loade, though he thinke himselfe in a most miserable estate, yet if he come vnto Christ, and with blinde Bartimeus cry out, O sonne of Dauid haue mercy on mee, I may fitly say vnto him, as it was said vnto this blind man: Be of good comfort, for Christ calleth thee.

The last thing required in those whom Christ calleth, is, that they come vnto him. For to whom should we come for ease, but vnto Christ himselfe? seeing there is neither Saint nor Angell, that can ease vs, for the waight of one Sinne would presse them downe into Hell; whereas our Sauiour Christ is able to beare the burthen of our Sins, yea he hath already borne them, that wee might be deliuered from them; as it is, 1. Pet. 2.24. neither is it likely, that either Saint or Angel would so willingly helpe vs as our Sauiour Christ, who so tenderly loued vs that he came into the World, to lay downe his own most precious life as a price for our redemption; and though they were willing, yet they haue not the like ability vnto him, who hath all power in Heauen and Earth committed vnto him, for working the worke of our redemption. And therefore, seeing he wanteth neither loue, nor power, let vs goe vnto him, and him only. Otherwise we shall commit a double folly, that is, we shall leaue Christ, who is the fountaine of liuing water, and dig vnto our selues broken Cisternes, which will hold no water. For there is not saluation in any other, neither is there among men any other name giuen vnder Heauen, whereby we must be saued, as it is Acts 4.12. Hee is the way which leadeth vnto euerlasting happinesse; he is the truth, to instruct vs in all the counsels of God; he is the life to reuiue vs, who were dead in our Sins, yea the life of euerlasting life, and the perfection of our heauenly happinesse, Iohn 14.6. He hath taken vpon him our infirmities, and borne our paines, he was wounded for our offences, and smitten for our iniquities, the paine of our punishment was laid vpon him, and with his stripes wee are healed, Esay 53.4.5.6. To whom therefore should we goe in our sicknesse, but to this our heauenly Physician? whose helpe should we seeke for the curing of our wounds, but the helpe of this our blessed Surgeon, who will easily cure them all, with the precious balme of his bloud? whither should wee returne after our long wandring, but vnto the shepheard of our soules? To whom should we seeke to be preserued from death and damnation, but to him, who is the Lord of life and saluation? And therefore leauing all other means of our owne deuising, let vs repaire vnto him, and him alone, for he calleth and inuiteth vs, promising that he will ease vs.

But how should we come vnto Christ, and what is meant hereby? Surely we are not to vnderstand a corporall or locall comming vnto him, for he is in Heauen, & we are vpon the Earth; but our comming is spirituall, not of the body, but of the soule. And this is twofold, the comming of repentance, and the comming of faith: the comming of repentance, is properly to God the Father: the comming of faith, is to Christ Iesus; both which are mentioned, Acts 20.21. Witnessing repentance towards God, and faith towards Iesus Christ. For repentance is nothing, but a turning from our Sins, and a returning to God: and faith causeth vs to goe out of our selues vnto Christ, seeking saluation in him alone. So that our comming to Christ, is to beleeue in him; for thus Christ himselfe expoundeth it, Iohn 6.35. He that commeth vnto mee shall not hunger, and hee that beleeueth in mee, shall neuer thirst. So Chap. 7.37,38. If any man thirst, let him come vnto me and drinke: He that beleeueth in mee (as saith the Scripture) out of his belly shall flow Riuers of the water of life. This then doth Christ onely require of all penitent Sinners, who are weary and heauy laden with the burthen of their Sins, that they beleeue in him, that is, that by a liuely faith, they doe apply vnto themselues Christ Iesus, and all his benefits; and assure themselues, that whatsoeuer hee hath done in the worke of mediation and redemption, hee did it for their sakes; namely, that he left the bosome of his Father, and taking vpon him our flesh, became the sonne of man, that hee might make vs the sonnes of God, and heires of his euerlasting Kingdome; that he was conceiued by the Holy Ghost, to sanctifie our conception; that he here suffered hunger, cold, wearines, and other miseries of this life, that he might make vs partakers of all happinesse in the life to come; that hee performed perfect obedience to the Law, that hee might decke and adorne vs with the rich robe of his righteousnesse: that notwithstanding, hee was most just and innocent, yet he was condemned to death, before an earthly Iudge, that we who were wicked and vniust, might be acquitted and absolued, before the iudgement seate of God: that hee died vpon the Crosse, to preserue vs from euerlasting death of Hell; that he indured his Fathers anger, that we might be reconciled vnto him; that he bore the curse of the Law, that he might cancell the hand-writing of Ordinances which made against vs; that he rose againe, and ascended into Heauen, that he might be the first fruits of them that slept, and by his entrance into Heauen, might make way for vs also; that hee sitteth at the right hand of God, to make intercession for vs, and to protect and defend vs against all our enemies; that he shall come to iudge both the quicke and the dead, to the end hee may giue vnto vs, perfect redemption, and crowne vs with euerlasting glory. And if we thus beleeue in Christ, and apply him with all his benefits vnto vs, wee may assure our selues, that hee will ease vs of the heauy burthen of our Sins; clothe vs with the glorious aray of his righteousnesse; and giue vnto vs the eternall possession of those euerlasting joyes, which by his death and bloud-shed hee hath dearely purchased for vs.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Of Satans tentations which he vseth against those which are called, to bring them to despaire.

§. Sect. 1. How Satan tempteth those which are called, to despaire.

AND so much concerning those tentations of Satan, wherewith hee assaulteth them who are not yet effectually called, to the end that he may keepe them from turning vnto God by vnfained repentance, and comming vnto Christ by a true and liuely faith. Now wee are to speake of those tentations which hee vseth against them who are called. And first, when as he perceiueth that he can no longer blind them with ignorance, nor keepe them still in carnall worldlinesse, and presumptuous securitie; when as he seeth that they are resolued no longer to defer their repentance, and comming vnto Christ by a true faith, neither can hee perswaded to content themselues with such faith and repentance, as are false and counterfeit; then and not before he appeareth in his owne likenesse, and sheweth himselfe a Deuill indeed; for then he accuseth them of their manifold and outragious Sins, wherein they haue long continued; then hee telleth them of their Sinnes past and present corruptions, whereby they are ready to fall into the like againe; then hee reuealeth vnto them their Sins of ignorance, and calleth to their remembrance, those Sins which they haue committed against their knowledge & conscience; then will he aggrauate their Sins, which in themselues are but too too hainous, and set before them the justice of God, the fearefull threatnings and terrible curse of the Law, the wrath of God, and the intolerable and eternall torments of Hell fire, which by their Sins they haue justly deserued. All which terrible sights being in one view represented to their already timorous thoughts, hee taketh occasion of them all, to moue them to distrust of Gods mercies, and Christs merits, & so to plunge them into vtter desperation. Wouldest thou now vile wretch (will he say) turne vnto God, hoping to be receiued to grace and mercy? Why assure thy selfe it is too late, for are not thy Sins in number numberles, and in their qualitie and nature most hainous and outragious? And hast thou not continued in this thy rebellion against God a long time, refusing to come vnto him, though he hath often called; & carelesly neglecting all the meanes of thy saluation, when thy God hath graciously offered them vnto thee? Now therefore the acceptable time and day of saluation is past neuer againe to be recalled; and though with Esau thou seekest repentance with teares yet shalt thou neuer find it. Moreouer to the consideration of thy horrible rebellion, adde the remembrance of Gods justice, which can in no wise suffer Sinne to goe vnpunished; the terrible curse of the Law denounced by God who is truth itselfe, against those who continue not in all that is written in the booke of the Law to doe it; the fearefull torments of Hell prepared for Sinners, amongst which number thou art one of the chiefe. And therefore doe not flatter thy selfe with hope of mercy, but rather expect those fearefull judgements, and endlesse torments which are due vnto thee for thy rebellious wickednesse. And thus doth Satan labour to bring the poore Christian to deepe desperation, and to fill his conscience with horrour and feare; which if he can accomplish, hee resteth not there, but like a cruell Coward who can neuer bee at quiet till hee see the death of his enemy; so our malicious enemy is neuer satisfied till hee see our death and vtter destruction. And therefore when he hath grieuously vexed the Christian conscience with fearefull horrour and and tormented him euen with the flashings of hell fire, in the next place, he will perswade him to seek some ease of his present torments by imbruing his hands in his owne bloud, and putting himselfe to some violent death: which is nothing else but (as the Prouerbe is) to leap out of the frying pan into the fire, and in seeking to ease his terours of conscience, to plunge himselfe into the torments of Hell.

Against which tentations, whosoeuer would be strengthened and enabled to withstand their force and violence, they must not rest in themselues, desiring in whole, or in part to be justified by their legall righteousnesse; neither must they measure out vnto themselues Gods mercies according to their owne merits and worthinesse. They must not looke only vpon Gods justice, and vpon that exact obedience which the Law requireth of them, nor yet vpon those fearefull punishments which by their sins they haue justly deserued, for then Satan will easily attaine vnto his purpose, and speedily bring them to desperation, and vtter destruction: But they must goe out of themselues, and reiecting their owne righteousnesse, as altogether imperfect and insufficient, they are to rest and rely themselues vpon the alone righteousnesse and obedience of Christ Iesus, as being in it selfe al-sufficient both for our justification and saluation. And as they haue one eye on Gods justice to keep thē from secure presumption, so they must haue the other firmely fixt on his infinite mercy to preserue them from falling into desperation: as they haue one eie on the law to humble them & to bring them out of thēselues to Christ, so they must haue the other eye on the sweet and comfortable promises of the Gospell to comfort and raise them vp. Finally, as on the one side they behold the curse of the Law, & the eternall torments prepared for the wicked: so on the other side, they must stedfastly looke vpon the righteousnesse, death, and obedience of Christ; and also vpon those euerlasting joyes which by his precious bloud-shed he hath purchased for them. And if thus being truely humbled, and brought to vnfained repentance, they goe out of themselues, and reiect their owne righteousnesse, resting and relying vpon the alone righteousnesse of Christ for their justification and saluation, they may most certainly assure themselues that they haue in Christ satisfied Gods iustice, and are by his death reconciled vnto him, that they are freed from the curse of the Law, and from the wrath of God; that their scarlet sins are made as white as woolle, and all their imperfections perfected by Christs righteousnesse and obedience; that they are acquitted from the sentence of condemnation, and deliuered from the fearefull torments of Hell.

But forasmuch as those who labour vnder the burden of their Sins, and are continually vexed and mooued to desperation, by Satans most subtill and violent tentations, are not so easily perswaded that their Sins are forgiuen them, and they reconciled vnto God in Christ; therefore I will set downe some arguments, whereby all those who truly repent, (that is, sorrow for their Sins past, and desire, and indeauour to forsake them in the time to come) and withall, going out of themselues, do earnestly hunger after Christ and his righteousnes, and rest and rely vpon him for their saluation, may haue full assurance, that their Sins are forgiuen them, and that they are in Christ reconciled vnto God, and receiued into his loue and fauour.

Reasons to perswade the weake Christian of the forgiuenesse of his sins.

The first argument, to assure all of the pardon and forgiuenesse of their Sins, who will come vnto God by repentance, and apply Christ and his merits vnto them by a liuely faith, may be drawne from his mercy, which is one of his properties and attributes, so often attributed vnto him in the Scriptures. Exod. 34. 6, 7. God thus describeth himselfe: The Lord, the Lord, strong, mercifull and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in goodnesse and truth. 7. Reserving mercy for thousands; forgiuing iniquitie, transgression and sinne. Out of which place that famous and godly learned man H. Zanchius hath obserued matter fit for our purpose, and therefore it shall not bee amisse to set downe his owne words: For besides (saith he) that the essence of God is only one, and that eternall, most simple, most perfect, liuing, immortall, inuisible, incorruptible, infinite, omnipotent, most wise; he is also wholy most good, in whom nothing is wanting; a louer of men; most meeke, most gentle, slow to anger, most ready to forgiue iniuries, most patient, most true, most righteous, most iust, & faithfull in performing his promises; finally, he is nothing else then the fountaine of goodnes, and the chiefe clemencie, as he hath described, and liuely decipher'd himselfe, Exod. 34. and elsewhere. And therefore we must note, although anger bee attributed vnto God, yet notwithstanding, it is in God nothing else but the chiefe goodnesse and iustice, whereby hee abhorreth euill, & according to his iust iudgment doth at length punish it, if it be not amended by his long-suffering and patience. Thus here-hence manifestly appeareth, because speaking of reuenge, or taking punishment, which is an effect of anger, hee doth not say that he doth presently inflict punishment, or that he is so ready to inflict it, as to shew mercy, but he saith, that he is slow to anger. Signifying by this manner of speech, that it is of his owne nature alwayes most ready to shew mercy, to grant pardō, to be beneficial, but not so ready to take punishment, but is forc'd thereunto (as of himselfe vnwilling) through our impenitencie. Hereunto also appertaineth that anci-

ancient forme of prayer; O Lord, whose propertie is alwayes to haue mercy and forgiue. Here-hence also we reade in Esay 28.21. The Lord shall stand as in Mount Perazim, hee shall be angry, as in the valley Gibeon. That he may doe his worke, his strange worke, that he may effect his act, his strange act, that is, he shall inflict the like punishments in his iust anger vpon his rebellious people, which he exercised vpon his wicked enemies the Philistines in Mount Perazim, when as hee ouerthrew them, by his seruant Dauid, and vpon the Amorites in the valley of Gibeon, when as he stroue them with stones from Heauen. Where the Prophet maketh a twofold kind of Gods workes, his proper and strange workes. The proper worke of God is to shew mercy, and to spare or forgiue; his strange worke is to be angry, and to punish. And therefore whereas hee calleth that the proper worke of God, and this his strange worke; hee plainly teacheth that mercy, goodnesse and long-suffering, are according to the nature of the deitie, but that to be angry is diuers from Gods nature. Too which is more, he maketh it not his worke; that is to say, he is angry, that afterwards he may bring his worke to passe, that is, that he may haue mercy and preserue; for whilest (saith the Apostle) we are iudged of the Lord, we are chastened, that we should not be condemned with the World, 1. Cor. 11.32. And what doe these things teach vs, but that the nature of God is nothing else then goodnesse, mercy, loue (especially of men) patience, benignitie, and most farre and remote from all vniust soueritie, crueltie, tyrannie and pride? The which may minister vnto euery penitent Sinner most sweet consolation; for when they see that God is angry, by reason of their sins, and that hee doth grieuously afflict them, and euen bring them (as it were) to the gates of Hell, this must not make them to cast off all hope, and to fall into vtter desperation, but they must remember, that these are not the Lords proper works, but strange vnto him, which he doth to this end, that he may bring to passe his owne proper workes which are agreeable to his nature, that is, that he may againe shew vnto vs the glorious beames of his louing countenance in more full brightnesse, and bring vs from death to life, from affliction to ioy, from the gates of Hell, to the Kingdome of Heauen. According to that, 1. Sam. 2.6. The Lord killeth and maketh aliue, hee bringeth downe vnto Hell, and bringeth vp againe. As therefore when we see Carpenters pulling downe a ruinous building, our minds doe not rest there, because wee know that this they doe, is not their proper worke, but we goe further in our cogitation, thinking of a new house which they will build in the place of the old, for as much as wee know that it is not their proper worke to race downe, but to build, or to race downe, that they may build: so when we see the Lord angry, and inflicting corrections, let vs not rest here, but with the like fore-sight of mind, let vs consider that hee doth these his strange and improper works, that afterwards hee may doe those which are proper and naturall, that is, that he afflicteth that he may bring the more true comfort; that he bringeth vs to the gates of Hell, to the end hee may raise vs vp to be partakers of the ioyes of Heauen. But let vs consider of some more testimonies of Gods infinite mercies. The Prophet Dauid likewise saith Psal. 103.8. That the Lord is full of compassion and mercie, slow to anger, and of great kindnesse. And Psalme 86.5. Thou Lord art good and mercifull, and of great kindnesse vnto all them that call vpon thee. So the Prophet Ioel 2.13. testifieth of the Lord, that he is gracious and mercifull, slow to anger, and of great kindnesse. And the Apostle saith, that he is rich in mercie, Ephes. 2.4. and 2. Cor. 1.3. he calleth him, the Father of mercies, and God of all comfort.

Seeing then, mercie is one of Gods Attributes, therefore it is also of his essence and being: for there are not in Gods most perfect nature, any qualities or accidents, but whatsoeuer is in God, is God, so that God is mercie it selfe; and consequently, to shew and exercise his mercie, is to shew and exercise his owne nature. Now wee know that naturall actions are not troublesome, nor irkesome, neither is the Sunne troubled with giuing light, nor the fire with giuing heate, nor the tree with yeelding fruit, nor the beast with nourishing his young, nor man with receiuing nourishment and sleepe, because it is their nature to be exercised in these actions. And therefore seeing mercy is of Gods essence, it is not painfull & troublesome to exercise it towards al repentant sinners, be their sins neuer so many & hainous, no more then it is troublesome to exercise his iustice, in punishing of those who are obstinate & rebellious. Yea, it is not only not troublesome and painfull, but also pleasant and delightfull for God to shew mercy vnto all those who truly turne vnto him; and contrariwise it should be troublesome and irkesome, (if I may so speake,) for God not to shew and exercise his nature, and mercy, towards repentant Sinners; for as the eye is delighted with seeing, and to be restrained therefrom is grieuous vnto it; as the eare is delighted with hearing, and is much molested, if it be stopped; and as euery part and faculty of the bodie and soule are delighted in exercising their seuerall actions and functions, and are much vexed and cumbred, if by any meanes they should bee hindred; so is the Lord delighted, and well pleased, in shewing and exercising his owne nature, and attributes; as his power and prouidence, in gouerning the

9. Sect. That God delighteth in exercising mercie.

the World; his iustice, in punishing wicked, obstinate, and rebellious Sinners; and his mercie, in pardoning and remitting the Sins of those, who are of a humble spirit, and broken heart, and are weary of this intolerable burthen, desiring nothing more, then to be eased and freed from it. And not thus to exercise his nature and attributes, would rather (that I may speake after the manner of men) be vnto the Lord tedious and troublesome. Of this pleasure and delight, which the Lord taketh in pardoning repentant Sinners, the Prophet Micha speaketh, Chap. 7. 18. Who (saith hee) is a God like vnto thee, that taketh away iniquitie, and passeth by transgression of the remnant of his heritage? hee retaineth not his wrath for euer, because mercy pleaseth him. So the Prophet Dauid, Psal. 147. 11. saith, that the Lord is delighted in them that feare him and attend vpon his mercy; euen as though he reioyced much, to haue an occasion offered, of exercising his mercy and goodnes towards those, who earnestly desiring it, waite vpon him, that they may be made partakers of it. For the object of Gods mercy, about which it is exercised, is mans misery, and the action thereof, is to pitie, and helpe him out of his wretched and miserable estate; and therefore, if there were no misery and wretchednesse, and no Sin to be forgiuen, there would be wanting that externall object, about which Gods mercy should be exercised and manifested to all the World. And hence it is, that the Lord willingly permitted the fall of our first parents, to the end that he might make a way for the manifestation of his mercy, in pardoning repentant Sinners, and his iustice in punishing the contemners of his grace. And as the Apostle saith, Rom. 11. 32. God hath shut vp all in vnbeliefe, that he might haue mercy vpon all, that is to say, on all the Elect, both Iewes and Gentiles. Seeing therefore God delighteth himselfe in exercising and manifesting his mercy, to the praise of the glory of his grace, by pardoning and forgiuing repentant Sinners; let not any who are grieuously laden, and groane for wearinesse vnder the heauy burthen of their Sins, feare to come vnto the Lord, and to implore his mercy for the forgiuenesse of their Sins, though neuer so grieuous and manifold, neither let them doubt, lest God will reiect their suite, and refuse to receiue them into his grace & fauour, because of their great rebellions and vnworthinesse. For although there were not (as in truth there is not) any thing to be respected in vs, saue that wee are creatures of God, and the work of his hands, yet the Lord will haue compassion vpon vs, euen for his owne sake, because he is exceedingly delighted in shewing mercy to all those who turne vnto him. And this the Lord himselfe professeth, Esay 43. 25. I, euen I am he that putteth away thine iniquities for mine owne sake, and will not remember thy sins. And therefore the Prophet Daniel calling vpon the Lord for mercy, in the behalfe of himselfe and the people, disclaimeth their owne righteousnesse, and all respect of their owne merits and worthinesse; saying, We doe not present our supplications before thee for our owne righteousnesse, but for thy great tender mercies: O Lord heare, O Lord forgiue, O Lord consider and doe it; deferre not for thine owne sake, Dan. 9. 18, 19.

Dan. 9. 18, 19.

9. Sect. 5. That the grieuousnesse of sinne cannot debarre the repentant sinner of Gods mercy.

But here Satan will be ready to obiect vnto the afflicted conscience, labouring vnder the burthen of Sin, that God indeed is mercifull, but yet he will neuer extend his mercy towards such hainous offenders, whose Sins are in number numberlesse, and in qualitie and nature most grieuous and outragious. For answering of which tentation, wee are to know, that though our Sins be neuer so innumerable and hainous, yet this should not discourage vs from comming to God by vnfained repentance, with assured hope of forgiuenesse; for though our Sins be great, his mercies are infinite, & consequently though it were imagined that all the Sinnes which were euer committed in the world were ioyned together, yet in comparison of Gods mercy they are without all comparison lesse then a mote in the Sun to all the World. To which purpose Augustine saith, Ille solus diffidat quis tantum peccare potest, quantum Deus bonus est. Let him alone, distrust and despaire who can match and exceed Gods mercy and goodnesse with his Sins. Neither is God like vnto man, whose bounty and mercy are limited in some straight bounds which they will not passe, and therefore they are soone weary both in giuing to those who want, and forgiuing those that offend; but his bounty is endlesse, and his mercies infinite, and therefore he can and will as easily forgiue vs the debt of ten thousand millions of pounds, as one penny, and assoone pardon the Sins of a wicked Manasses, as of a righteous Abraham, if we come vnto him by vnfained repentance, and earnestly desire and implore his grace and mercy. And this our Sauiour Christ sheweth in the Parable of the poore Publican, whose hainous Sins the Lord presently forgaue vpon his true confession. And in the Parable of the two debtors, where the lender our bountifull God, as easily forgaue the 500. pence as the fifte, that is, innumerable great Sins, as well as few and lesse. And the Apostle Paul teacheth vs, that where sinne hath abounded, there grace hath much more abounded. Rom. 5. 20. Seeing therefore Gods mercy is infinite and without all limits, let not vs restraine it, neither let vs so aggrauate our Sinnes as that in the meane time we derogate from Gods mercy. If a Prince should send his generall pardon vnto vnto a number of offenders, without any exception or limitation, and one amongst the rest should say: This pardon doth not appertaine vnto mee, because I am so great an offender, and therefore I will stand in doubt of my Princes mercy, and suspect his word; who would not accuse such an one both of folly in refusing his pardon, and of vngratefulnesse and diffidence in distrusting his gracious Prince, calling his great mercy and truth in his promise into question? Who would not thinke this offence greater then all the rest? But the Lord who is infinite in mercy, hath sent his generall pardon to all repentant and beleeuing Sinners without all exception; why therefore should wee make question of his mercy, because of our hainous Sins? Why should wee vnto our other Sins adde this which is more hainous then all thereſt, in doubting and distrusting his word and promise, and in extenuating his infinite and endlesse mercies? For if wee thinke our debt so great that God will neuer forgiue it, what we do else but detract from Gods rich bounty and liberality? if we suppose our Sins may not be forgiuen because of their greatnesse, what doe wee else but imagine that they surpasse Gods infinite mercy, which is a most horrible blasphemy once to conceiue?

§. Sect. 6. That Gods mercy is ouer all his workes.

The mercy of the Lord extendeth it selfe to the beasts of the field, and hee graciously feedeth the Rauens and young Lions, which in their brutish manner implore his helpe; and shall he not extend his mercies to reasonable creatures that seeke after them? Yea the Lord is good to all, and his mercies are ouer all his workes, as it is *Psal.*145.9. and will not the Lord be gracious to man, who is his most excellent workmanship, created according to his owne Image, if hee sue vnto him for grace, and desire to bee partaker of his mercy? His goodnesse stretcheth it selfe vnto his obstinate enemies, for hee causeth his raine to fall, and his Sunne to shine both vpon the euill and the good, on the iust and vniust, *Matth.*5.45. And shall it bee restrained from his repentant seruants? hee multiplieth his mercies in temporall benefits vpon the wicked and reprobate, and shall it be scanted towards his elect? Hee is very gracious to malicious rebels, and will hee deny grace to humble suters for mercy and repentant Sinners? Hee shewed his goodnesse and long-suffering vnto wicked Achab vpon his fained and hypocriticall humiliation, and will hee not extend it towards those who being truly penitent vnfainedly turne vnto him? Yes assuredly, for though he be good to all, euen sensleſſe creatures, brute beasts, and rebellious Sinners, yet hee is in especiall manner good to those who are of the houshold of faith.

*Psal.*36.6. & 104.21,27. & 147.9. & 145.9.

*Matth.*5.45.

§. Sect. 7.

But if we cannot behold Gods mercies in their owne glorious brightnesse, let vs looke vpon them in some small resemblance and little counterfeit: if we cannot comprehend them in their owne infinite nature, yet let vs view them in a small modell. Euen man himselfe who hath but a sparke of this mightie flame, and a small drop of this bottomlesse Ocean spareth his sonne when he offendeth, pardoneth his seruant when hee desireth forgiuenesse, yea, is oftentimes reconciled to his enemy, who hath many wayes wronged him, when he sueth for reconciliation, and confesseth his faults; shall therefore man who hath receiued a little sparke from this euer burning flame of Gods goodnes, a small drop of this endlesse and bottomlesse Ocean, and but a little modell of this infinite greatnesse, whose greatest mercie compared with Gods, is but sauage and barbarous crueltie; shall he (I say) bee readie to spare his sonne, forgiue his seruant, and be reconciled vnto his enemy, and shall not God spare, forgiue, and be reconciled vnto those who turne from their sins by vnfained repentance, and earnestly sue for grace? Shall wee see, and acknowledge, the mercies of man, and shall we doubt of the mercies of God, which is the plentifull fountaine, from which like a pearling streame they flow? Shall wee confesse, that a drop of water is moist, and affirme that the Ocean is dry? Shall wee be sharp-sighted in seeing the light of a small sparke, and be starke blind, in beholding the glorious beames of the Sunne? Nay, let vs know, acknowledge, and assure our selues, that as much as the whole globe of the earth, exceedeth in quantitie the least mote in the Sunne, as much as the whole Ocean exceedeth the smallest drop of water, yea, as much as the infinite Creatour exceedeth the finite creature, betweene which, there can be imagined no degrees of comparison, so much doth the mercy and bountie of God, exceed the bountie and mercy of mortall man. And therefore if vpon repentance of our fault, and earnest desire of reconciliation, we hope of mercy and wonted kindnesse from our friend or neighbour, let vs not make any question, nor once doubt of the Lords loue and fauour towards vs, though our sinnes be neuer so grieuous, so we truly repent, and vnfainedly turn vnto him by hearty sorrow for our transgressions.

That euen man is mercifull towards the penitent, and therefore much more God who is infinite in mercie.

§. Sect. 8. That doubting of Gods mercies in respect of our vnworthinesse, argueth pride.

But heere the afflicted conscience will bee ready to say, that though there bee no doubt of Gods mercie, but that it is in it selfe most infinite, yet I doubt, lest I shall neuer bee partaker thereof, because of my manifold imperfections, and great vnworthinesse. To which I answere, that this distrusting of Gods mercies, in respect of our vnworthinesse, proceedeth not from true humilitie, but from our naturall pride: for if wee had denied our selues, and were nothing in our owne owne eyes; if we had wholly remoued our owne righteousnesse, and did wholly and onely rest on our Sauiour Iesus Christ for our saluation, we would neuer hope the more in regard of our owne worthinesse, nor yet doubt in respect of our vnworthinesse. But it is our secret and inbred pride of heart, which makes vs to doubt of Gods mercy, vnlesse wee bring him a bribe, and deserue it at his hands; and to desire to make the Lord beholding to vs, rather then we would be any whit beholding vnto him. Which is nothing else but to disgrace Gods mercies, that wee may grace our owne merits; and by labouring that we may be something in our selues, we will not allow that God should be all in all, and haue the whole prayse of our saluation. But wee are to root out of our hearts this spirituall pride, and to plant therein true humilitie, and then we may assure our selues; though our sins be great, yet the mercies of God are farre greater, though wee bee most beggerly in merits, yet we shall be made rich by Christ Iesus righteousnesse; for the poorer we are in desert, the richer Gods mercie will appeare in accepting vs to his grace and fauour; and where sin hath abounded, there grace will abound much more. Seeing therefore Gods mercies are infinite, and are not any whit restrained by our vnworthinesse, let vs seeke vnto the Lord by vnfained repentance, and assure our selues of his loue and fauour in Iesus Christ: Let the wicked forsake his wayes, and the vnrighteous his owne imaginations, and returne vnto the Lord; and he will haue mercy vpon him, and to our God, for he is very ready to forgiue; as the Prophet exhorteth vs: Esay 55.7.

CHAP. XXXV.

Of the second Argument, grounded vpon Gods iustice.

THe second argument to assure those [illegible] of the forgiuenesse of their sins, [illegible] who vnfainedly repent and relie [illegible] wholly vpon Iesus Christ for their saluation by a liuely faith, may bee drawne from Gods iustice; for their sins are fully and sufficiently punished in Christ Iesus, and therefore it will not stand with the iustice of God to punish them againe in any of those who haue applied vnto them the merits and sufferings of Christ by a liuely faith. And as he is vniust in iustice let sin goe vnpunished, and therefore hath punished the sins of all men either in Christ Iesus, or will throughly punish them in the parties themselues; so the same iustice will not admit that the same sins should be twice punished, once in our Sauiour, and againe in the faithfull. Now that our Sauiour Christ hath sufficiently suffered for all the sins of the faithfull, it is euident by many places of the Scriptures, Esay 53.4. Surely he hath borne our infirmities, and carried our sorrowes. 5. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was broken for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was vpon him, & with his stripes we are healed. 2. Cor. 5.21. He hath made him to be sin for vs which knew no sin, that we should be made the righteousnesse of God in him. So the Apostle, Hebr. 9.26. saith, that our Sauiour Christ hath appeared once to put away sin by the sacrifice of himselfe. And Peter 1. Epist. 2.24. saith, that his owne selfe bare our sins in his body on the tree, that we being deliuered from sin, should liue in righteousnesse. Seeing then our sins were laid vpon Christ, and seuerely punished in him, God in his iustice will not inflict any more punishments vpon the faithfull, but will pardon and forgiue them; which pardon and forgiueneſſe is a worke of his iustice as well as of his mercie; and therefore it is said, Rom. 3.25. that God hath set forth our Sauiour Christ to be a reconciliation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousnesse by the forgiueneſſe of sins that are passed through the patience of God. 26. To shew at this time his righteousnesse that hee might be iust, and a iustifier of him who is of the faith of Iesus. So it is said, 1. Iohn 1.9. that if we acknowledge our sins, he is faithfull and iust to forgiue vs our sins, and to cleanse vs from all vnrighteousnesse. So that Gods righteousnes is declared in the forgiueneſſe of sins, and he sheweth his iustice in iustifying those who are of the faith of Iesus, and in pardoning all their offences. And therefore if we will beleeue in our Sauiour Christ and bring forth the fruits of our faith in vnfained repentance, wee need not seruilely to feare Gods iustice, nay wee may be assured, that because he is just, he will in Christ pardon and forgiue our sins, and neuer inflict any punishment, which by them in our selues we haue iustly deserued.

9. Sect. 2. That our sins are debts, and therefore not to be twice paid.

But that the equitie hereof may be more manifest, we are to consider that our Sins in the Scriptures are called debts, for the Lord in our Creation lent vnto vs the rich talents of his graces, to be employed for the setting forth of his glory, all which wee wastefully mispent and brought our selues into such extreame beggerie, that wee were altogether vnable to pay to God the least part of that which we owed, nor to render account vnto our Lord and Master, how in any good sort we had bestowed his rich treasures; & therefore in his iustice hee sent his Sergeant death to arrest vs, and to cast vs in the prison of vtter darknesse, there to remayne in the custodie of Satan our most malicious jaylour, till wee had fully discharged our debt and made full satisfaction to his iustice; which when wee were altogether vnable to performe, it pleased our Sauiour Christ in his infinite loue towards vs, to become our surety, and to take vpon him the answering of our debt, which he fully discharged in as exact a manner and measure as the justice of God required. For whereas wee are bound to performe perfect obedience to the Law, hee performed it for vs; whereas wee for our disobedience were subject to the sentence of condemnation, the curse of the Law, and death of body and soule, he was condemned for vs and bore the curse of the Law, and died in our stead an ignominious death; whereas wee deserued the anger of God, and to bee kept prisoners in the graue vnder the dominion of death, he endured his Fathers wrathfull displeasure, and himselfe was for a time held captiue of death in the graue, that so hee might reconcile vs to his Father, and set vs at liberty. In a word, whatsoeuer wee owed, Christ discharged; whatsoeuer wee deserued he suffered, if not in the selfe-same punishments, (for he could not suffer the eternall torments of Hell) yet in proportion, the dignitie of his person giuing value vnto his temporary punishments, and making them of more value and worth, then if all the world should haue suffered the eternall torments of Hell. Seeing therefore our Sauiour Christ hath fully discharged our debt, and made full satisfaction to his Fathers justice, God cannot in equity exact of vs a second payment, no more then the Creditor may justly require that his debt should be twice paid, once of the Suertie and againe of the Principall. Neither now hath Gods justice any thing to shew against vs, for the Law which was the hand-writing of Ordinances which made against vs, and as it were a bond, whereby wee were obliged and bound to God the Father, either to performe obedience or to vndergoe the penaltie, euen euerlasting death and condemnation, is now cancelled, taken away, and fastened to the Crosse of Christ, as the Apostle affirmeth, Coloss. 2.14. So that now the Lord cannot in his justice put vs in suite, nor recouer any debt of vs, seeing our Sauiour Christ, our good and al-sufficient Suerty hath vndertaken the matter in our behalfe, discharged our debt to the vtmost farthing, cancelled the hand-writing or bond, in which wee were obliged, and by the Law acquitted vs of all payments, which Gods justice by vertue of the Law might require of vs. And therefore if wee turne vnto God by vnfained repentance, and lay hold vpon our Sauiour Christ and his merits by a liuely faith, we haue our quietus est, and generall acquittance, which God himselfe hath pronounced from Heauen in the presence of many witnesses, saying, This is my welbeloued Sonne, in whom I am well pleased, that is, in whom I am delighted, and rest fully satisfied, and well contented, Matth. 3.17.

Coloss 2.14.

Matth. 3 17.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Of the third Argument grounded vpon Gods Truth.

THe third Argument, whereby all those who repent and beleeue may bee assured of the pardon and remission of their sins, is grounded vpon Gods Truth. For the Lord is most true, yea Truth it selfe, and all his promises in Christ are yea, and Amen. He is a faithfull and true witnes, and whatsoeuer hee hath spoken shall be accomplished; so that though the heauens decay and wax old like a garment, though the Sun lose his light, and the Moone be turned into bloud, though the earth tremble and quake, and the foundations of the mountaines bee mooued and shake; yea, though Heauen and Earth and all things therein contained perish and passe away, yet shall not one iot or title of his word fall to the ground vnaccomplished. And therefore whatsoeuer the Lord hath promised in his Word, that he will most vndoubtedly performe, for he is Iehoua, who hauing his essence and being in & from himselfe alone, giueth being vnto all things else, especially to his word and promises. But he hath promised to all beleeuers and repentant Sinners, that he will in Christ Iesus pardon all their sins, and will receiue them into his grace and fauour; and therefore if we beleeue and rest vpon our Sauiour Christ alone for our saluation, truly repenting vs of all our sins, we may assure our selues, that though our sins be neuer so many and grieuous, yet the Lord will receiue vs to mercy, and pardon and forgiue them.

But that the poore soule wounded with sin, and groning for wearines vnder this vnsupportable burthen, may haue some ground whereupon to rest, when it is ready to faint, and some spirituall weapons whereby it may defend it selfe, and beate backe the violence of Satans tentations, I will make choise of some amongst many of the comfortable promises of the Gospell, made vnto all repentant Sinners. First therefore let vs consider, that when the Lord like a mighty Monarch would set out his owne stile, as it were in faire text letters, to bee read of all his subjects, hee thus proclaymeth it, Exod. 34.6. The Lord, the Lord, strong, mercifull and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in goodnesse and truth. Reseruing mercy for thousands, forgiuing iniquitie, and transgression, and sinne. Where wee may obserue, that the greatest part of his stile consisteth of his mercy, graciousnesse, long-suffering, goodnesse and readinesse to forgiue the iniquities of repentant Sinners. Therefore we cannot offer a greater disgrace to a mighty Prince, then to deny or call into question any part of his Titles or Regall Stile; so wee cannot more dishonour the Prince of Princes, and Soueraigne King of Heauen and Earth,

Earth, then by doubting of, or denying any of these his Titles, which in his owne Stile he hath attributed vnto himselfe. Seeing then he professeth and proclaimeth himselfe to be a gracious, mercifull, long-suffering God, who is alwayes ready to forgiue repentant Sinners when they implore his mercy, let vs not offer God that disgrace to rob him of any part of his glorious Titles, nor deprive our soules of that true comfort which he by them in his infinite goodnes hath granted vnto vs.

Moreouer, this is one mayne part of the couenant of grace, which the Lord professeth that he will make with his Church and people, namely, that hee will forgiue their iniquitie and remember their sinnes no more. Ier. 31.34. the counterpaine of which couenant we haue, Heb. 8.6,12,17. And therefore if wee on our part performe the condition of this couenant betweene God and vs, that is, if wee truly and vnfainedly repent vs of our sins, and rest and rely on Iesus Christ for our saluation by a liuely faith, wee may be assured that God on his part will not go one iote from his word, nor breake the couenant which he hath made with vs. For hee hath not onely made this his couenant with vs by word of mouth, but he hath also committed it to writing; and not contenting himselfe herewith, that there might bee no place left to doubting, he hath confirmed and ratified his hand-writing by adding thereunto his seales, which are the Sacraments; as first the seale of Baptisme, whereby hee assureth vs, that being outwardly receiued into the body of the Church, and inwardly ingrafted into the body of Christ, we haue all our sins and filthy corruptions washed away with his precious bloud, as the outward filth of the body is washed and purged by the washing of water. The vertue of which spirituall washing is not limited and restrained to the time past or present, as though it washed away onely our originall corruption, as some haue foolishly imagined, but extendeth it selfe to the whole course of our liues: so that if falling into many and grieuous sins wee vnfainedly repent vs of them, and apply Christ Iesus and his merits vnto vs by a true and liuely faith, wee may be assured of the pardon and forgiuenesse of them all, for this was promised, sealed and confirmed vnto vs in our Baptisme. Secondly, the Lord hath further confirmed this his couenant by the Sacrament of his Supper, for he hath therefore instituted and ordained it, that thereby wee should bee put in mind of our Sauiour Christs death and sufferings, to the end that wee may gather more and more assurance, that our Sauiour gaue his blessed body to be crucified, and shed his most precious bloud, that hee might take away the curse of the Law, and naile it vnto his Crosse, free vs from his Fathers anger by bearing it himselfe, and by his death deliuer vs from euerlasting death, and by his bloudshed wash away all our sins and corruptions. And hence it is that the Apostle calleth the Wine in the Lords Supper, the New Testament in Christs bloud, because thereby the New Testament is sealed and confirmed vnto vs. And therefore whensoeuer wee receiue the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, the Lord doth thereby certainly assure vs that our sins in Christ are pardoned and forgiuen, and that he hath receiued vs into his loue and fauour. Yea, the Lord hath not only ratified and confirmed his couenant with vs, concerning the remission of our sins with his owne hand-writing and seales annexed, but also by his oath; For God willing more abundantly to shew vnto the heires of promise, the stablenesse of his counsell, bound himselfe by an oath: that by two immutable things, wherein it is impossible that God should lie, we might haue strong consolation, as the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 6.17,18. And therefore vnlesse wee would conceiue of God that he is vntrue of his word, a couenant breaker, yea a perjured person (which were most horrible blasphemy once to imagine) we may vndoubtedly assure our selues that hee will pardon and forgiue vs all our sins, be they in number neuer so innumerable, nor so hainous in their nature and qualitie, if wee will turne vnto him by vnfained repentance, and lay hold vpon Christ Iesus our Sauiour by a true and liuely faith.

1.Cor.11.25.

Heb.6.17.

But let vs more particularly consider of some of the speciall promises of God, contained in the couenant of grace, that so wee may gather vnto our selues more full consolation and firme assurance of the pardon and forgiuenesse of our sins. The Prophet Dauid, who had in himselfe often experience of Gods mercy telleth vs, Psal. 32.10. that whosoeuer trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compasse him. The Prophet Esay exhorteth the wicked to forsake his wayes, and the vnrighteous his own imaginations, & to returne vnto the Lord, assuring them that he will haue mercy vpon them, for hee is very ready to forgiue, Esay 55.7. The Lord himselfe also doth make this gracious promise, Ezech. 18.21. But (saith he) if the wicked will returne from all his sinnes which hee hath committed, and keepe all my statutes, and doe that which is lawfull and right, hee shall surely liue and not die. 22. All his transgressions that hee hath committed, shall not be mentioned vnto him, but in his righteousnesse that hee hath done, he shall liue. 23. Haue I any desire that the wicked should die, saith the Lord God? or shall he not liue, if he returne from his wayes? Verse 32. For I desire not the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; cause therefore one another to returne and liue: yea, and Chap. 33. Verse 11. As I liue, saith the Lord, I desire not the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turne from his way and line. So Mal.3.17. the Lord professeth that he will spare his people and children, as a man spareth his owne sonne that serueth him. Now wee know that a louing father is ready to forgiue, and to receiue into his grace and fauour his repentant sonne, though he hath very often offended him: and so surely the Lord, who is infinitely rich in mercy, will much more forgiue his children when they turne vnto him. Yea, he is not only ready to receiue them into his grace and fauour, but it filleth him (as I may say) with exceeding ioy and delight, when his penitent children forsake their sinnes and euill wayes, and turne vnto him by vnfained repentance, as it appeareth most euidently in the Parable of the prodigall sonne, of the strayed sheepe, and the lost groat. Moreouer, our Sauiour Christ had his Name Iesus giuen him of God by the ministery of an Angell, because hee saueth his people from their sins: as appeareth, Matth. 1.21. and he therefore came into the world, not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, as it is, Matth.9.13. And hee inuiteth and calleth vnto him all those who are weary and heauy laden with the burthen of their sins, promising that he will ease them, Matth.11.28. yea, so certaine it is that they shall haue remission of their sins and euerlasting happines who truly repent and beleeue, that our Sauiour Christ saith, they haue it already, as though they were in present possession, Iohn 5.24. Verily, verily, I say vnto you, he that heareth my word, and beleeueth in him that sent me, hath euerlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life. So Chap.6.47. and Chap.11.26. Whosoeuer liueth and beleeueth in me shall neuer die. The Apostle Peter also plainly affirmeth, that God would haue no man to perish, but would haue all men to come to repentance. Seeing therefore the Lord hath made so many gracious promises in the Gospell to all repentant and beleeuing Sinners, let vs vnfainedly turne vnto the Lord, and apply Christ and his merits vnto vs by a true and liuely faith, and then we may assure our selues that he will pardon and forgiue vs all our sins, and receiue vs graciously into his loue and fauour.

9. Sect.5. That all Gods promises are made indefinitely to all that beleeue.

But against this which hath beene alleaged, Satan will be ready to obiect to the afflicted conscience, that these promises were made to the Prophets, Apostles and holy men of God, but not to such hainous and rebellious Sinners who haue most iustly deserued that God should powre out vpon them the Vialls of his wrath, and those fearefull punishments threatned in the law, because of the innumerable number of their sins, and the outragiousnesse of their wickednesse; and therefore such haue nothing to doe with the sweet promises of the Gospell, but are to apply vnto themselues the terrible threatnings denounced in the law against such grieuous Sinners. For the answering of which tentation, we are to know that the Lords promises made in the Gospell, are generall, indefinite, and vniuersall, excluding none who turne from their sinnes by vnfained repentance, and beleeue in Christ Iesus, resting on him alone for their saluation. Neither is there any limitation or exception of this or that sin; for be they neuer so grieuous and manifold, yet if wee performe the condition of faith and repentance, the Lord will make good his promises vnto vs. For the first, namely, that the promises of the Gospell are indefinite, and generally made to all who repent and beleeue, it shall manifestly appeare if we consider the particulars. Esay 55.1. the Lord calleth all vnto him indefinitely, saying, Hoe, every one who thirsteth come to the waters, and yee that haue no siluer, come, buy and eate; Come I say, buy wine and milke without siluer, and without money. So that though we haue no worthinesse and righteousnesse of our owne, yet if wee thirst after the mercy of God and righteousnesse of Christ, and come vnto God by vnfained repentance, and vnto our Sauiour by a liuely faith, our thirst shall be satisfied, and all our wants supplied. So Ezech. 33.11. the Lord solemnely sweareth, that he will not the death of a Sinner, but that they turne from their wicked wayes and liue; where he speaketh not of this or that Sinner, but of all without exception who turne vnto him. Our Sauiour Christ likewise maketh this indefinite promise, Marke 16.16. that whosoeuer shall beleeue and be baptized shall be saued. And Iohn 3.14. hee saith, that as Moses lift vp the Serpent in the wildernesse, so must the sonne of man be lift vp. 15. That whosoeuer beleeueth in him, should not perish but haue eternall life. So that as all who were stung of the fiery Serpent were healed, if they looked vpon the brazen Serpent, neither was there any exception or distinction betweene those who were deeply, or but a little pierced with the sting, for if they were stung they died, if they vsed not the remedy ordained of God, though their wound were but smal and shallow; but if they looked vp to the brazen Serpent according to Gods Ordinance, they were cured though their wound were neuer so deadly and desperate: so those who looke not vpon Christ Iesus hanging on the Crosse with the eye of faith, are sure to fall into euerlasting death and damnation, be their sins neuer so few; and on the other side, they who lay hold vpon Christ and beleeue in him, are sure to bee saued, though their sins be neuer so many and grieuous. So in the 16. Verse it is said, that God so loued the world, that he hath giuen his only begotten Son, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him should not perish but

but

but haue euerlasting life. And Verſe 36. He that beleeueth in the ſonne hath euerlasting life, &c. So that here is no exception of Sins; for the promiſes are made indefinitely to all that beleeue. In like manner our Sauiour hath promiſed, Iohn 6.37. that whoſoeuer come vnto him, hee will not caſt them away. And Verſe 40. hee aſſureth vs, that it is the will of his Father who ſent him, that euery man who beleeueth in him ſhould haue euerlasting life. And the Apoſtle Peter, Acts 10. 43. ſaith that vnto our Sauiour Chriſt giue all the Prophets witneſſe, that through his Name, all that beleeue in him ſhall haue remiſſion of ſins. And the Apoſtle Iohn likewiſe ſaith, 1. Iohn 2. 1. That if any man ſinne wee haue an Aduocate with the Father Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, and hee is the propitiation for our ſins, and not for ours only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world, that is, for whoſoeuer repent and beleeue, of euery Kingdome, Country, and Nation. So that by all theſe places it is cleere and euident that none are excluded from being partakers of Gods mercifull promiſes, but thoſe who exclude themſelues through their infidelitie and vnrepentancie.

Neither is there any Sins ſo innumerable in multitude, and ſo hainous and grieuous, which will debarre vs from receiuing the benefit of Gods mercy and Chriſts merits, ſo we repent and beleeue, as may appeare alſo by plaine teſtimonies. Eſay 1. 18. The Lord thus ſpeaketh to the Iewes, whom hee had deſcribed to be rebellious, and moſt outragiouſly wicked. Come now (ſaith the Lord) and let vs reaſon together: though your ſins were as crimſon, they ſhall be made white as ſnow: though they were red as ſcarlet, they ſhall be as wooll. The Apoſtle Paul likewiſe witneſſeth, that our Sauiour Chriſt gaue himſelfe for vs, that hee might redeeme vs from all iniquity: And the Apoſtle Iohn ſaith, that the blood of Chriſt cleanſeth vs from all ſinne, and if wee acknowledge our ſins, hee is faithfull and iuſt to forgiue vs our ſins, and to cleanſe vs from all vnrighteouſneſſe. So that here is no mention made of any ſinnes which are excepted, or which exclude vs from Gods mercy and Chriſts merits, ſo that wee repent and beleeue. Neither are the promiſes of the Goſpell limited or reſtrained in reſpect of the number or grieuouſneſſe of our ſins, ſo wee performe the condition of faith and repentance, for whoſoeuer is heartily ſorry for his ſins paſt, and purpoſeth for the time to come to leaue & forſake them, whoſoeuer doth beleeue Gods promiſes, and reſteth vpon Chriſt Ieſus alone, for his ſaluation, by a true and liuely faith, he may be certainly aſſured, that the Lord hath pardoned and forgiuen all his ſinnes, and receiued him into his grace and fauour, though his ſinnes be neuer ſo many and hainous. And on the other ſide, whoſoeuer continueth in his vnrepentancie and infidelity, ſhall be condemned though his other ſins be neuer ſo few and ſmall; neither will all our other ſins debar vs of Gods mercy, vnleſſe they be joyned with vnrepentancy and vnbeleefe, for obſerue the condition of the promiſes, faith and repentance, and all the promiſes of the Goſpell belong vnto thee, though thou were the greateſt Sinner that euer liued. For whereas it may be objected that the Sin againſt the Holy Ghoſt is vnpardonable, wee are to know it is not ſo much in regard of the hainouſnes of the ſin, as that becauſe it is alwayes ſeuered and diſioyned from faith & repentance, God denying theſe his graces to thoſe who vpon deſperate malice haue made a generall Apoſtaſie, and haue perſecuted the knowne truth. So that if it were poſſible for them to repent and beleeue, it were poſſible alſo that they ſhould be ſaued. Seeing therefore the promiſes of the Goſpell are generall excluding none, let not any man who is laden with the burthen of his ſinnes, exclude himſelfe through his want of repentance and infidelity, for though their other ſins are grieuous, yet this is more hainous and damnable then all the reſt. For whereas the Lord ſaith, that he will extend his mercy vnto all who come vnto him; if we reply, No he will not extend it vnto mee, becauſe I am a grieuous Sinner, what doe we elſe but contradict the Lord, and giue truth it ſelfe the lie; not giuing credit to his word and promiſes? And therfore let vs take heed that we do not ſo aggrauate our ſins as that in the meane time we extenuate and derogate from Gods infallible truth.

Q. Sect. 7. A dangerous exception againſt the former comfort anſwered.

But againſt this the tempter will object that howſoeuer the promiſes of the Goſpell are in themſelues generall and indefinite, yet they are alwayes limited and reſtrained to the condition of them; which is a liuely faith, alwayes accompanied with vnfained repentance and new obedience; & that howſoeuer we are freed by Chriſt from that exact obedience which the Law requireth, yet all thoſe who haue their part in him doe performe Euangelicall obedience, that is, in vprightneſſe and ſincerity of heart doe labour and ſtriue after perfection, and when they come ſhort doe bitterly bewayle their wants and imperfections. But thou (will hee ſay) art quite deſtitute of faith, and in ſtead thereof haſt all this while flattered thy ſelfe with vaine preſumption, as hereby it appeareth in that it is quite deſtitute of the fruits of obedience. Nor canſt thou by reaſon of thy hardneſſe of heart repent of thy ſins, but ſtill liueſt in them, neither bewailing thoſe which are paſt, nor groning vnder the burthen of preſent corruptions, nor haſt yet throughly reſolued to leaue, and forſake them for the time to come. Beſides thou art vtterly deſti-

tute of all other sauing graces as of the loue and feare of God, zeale, affiance, hope and the rest. And whatsoeuer shew thou hast made of these graces in the fruits of them, yet all this while thou hast but plaid the Hypocrite, and hast done nothing that is good in sinceritie and truth. And therefore none of the promises belong vnto thee, nor hast thou any part in Gods mercies and Christs merits, which belong only to the faithfull, penitent, and vpright; but thou art a Reprobate child of wrath ordained to destruction, and consequently dost but delude thy selfe with false hopes, which makes thee spend much labour in vaine. Whereas it were a much better and easier course to neglect all these laborious meanes in seeking bootlesly hopelesse saluation, and vtterly despairing of future happinesse to enjoy those present delights which the world and thine owne lusts can yeeld vnto thee. For the answering of which temptation we must (granting the præmises) insist only on the application and conclusion. And because wee can indeed haue no part in the promises of the Gospell, Gods mercies and Christs merits vnlesse we beleeue, repent and bring forth the fruits of new obedience in sincerity and truth; therefore wee must (not entertayning these accusations vpon Sathans word) trie and examine our selues whether we are indued with these graces or no by obseruing what markes and signes, effects and fruits of them we can find in vs, of which I haue already formerly spoken. And if thorough the violence of temptation wee can take notice of none for the present, let vs call to minde the time past, wherein we haue discerned the fruits and signes of these graces in vs, comfortably concluding that if euer we had them wee still haue them, seeing the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. But what if vpon this examination we can haue no comfort, seeing we can haue no assurance vpon any signe past or present, that euer we had any sparke of grace in vs? what if our owne consciences approuing as true Sathans accusations, doe tell vs that we are and alwayes haue beene vtterly destitute of faith, repentance, loue, and all fruits of new obedience, and that we haue done all hitherto in meere Hypocrisie and therefore remayne in infidelity and in the state of condemnation, how must wee then behaue our selues that wee may haue any hope and comfort? Surely we may well suspect this testimony as false, proceeding from the Deuils malice and the strength of melancholy inraged with the violence of temptations, which so blindeth our vnderstanding and consciences with the cloud of our corruptions, which they set before them, that they haue for the present no spirituall discerning, and therefore can giue no true iudgement of our estates: Seeing Sathan seldome or neuer accuseth mere worldlings that they are quite destitute of grace, because hee knoweth that the sense of our wants worketh in vs some desires to haue them supplyed, whereby our hearts are prepared to receiue grace, and to this end moued to endeuour in the vse of the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto them; but rather worketh in them carnall securitie, and perswadeth them vnto an opinion of their owne excellency, and that they are already so rich in grace that they need not labour after more. But though all the præmises should be granted, that wee neuer had grace, and haue beene hitherto but grosse Hypocrites, yet is there no reason that wee should yeeld vnto Sathans conclusion, namely, that wee should cast off all hope, and suffer our selues to be plunged into deepe desperation, seeing as long as wee liue and enjoy the meanes of grace and our conuersion, the acceptable time and day of saluation is not yet past, but still the Lord offereth vnto vs mercy if wee will turne vnto him, and is ready to worke his graces in vs, which are yet wanting, if we will but carefully and conscionably vse the meanes which he hath sanctified for this purpose, as hearing the Word, reading, praying, and such like: And therefore as those who are stript of all their worldly wealth, or neuer had any, doe not sit idlely still and perish in their wants, but begin the world a new, and the more they are pinched with their wants, the more diligently and painefully they labour in the vse of all good meanes whereby they may minister vnto their necessities: So let vs doe in this case, and finding our wants in Gods graces, let vs not like sluggards slothfully sit still and spend our time in bootlesse sorrow and fruitlesse complaining. But let vs hauing lost much time now labour to redeeme it with our future diligence; and the longer wee haue deferred to set out in the way of righteousnes and holinesse which leadeth to our heauenly home, let vs (like wise trauailers) make so much the more speed in dispatching of our journey. But the Deuils malice is such hauing gotten poore soules vpon so great an aduantage, and the humour of melancholy naturally so sluggish and blockish; that it hardneth the heart, dulleth and deadeth the spirits, and so besotteth and stupifieth all the senses and powers of the soule, that poore creatures in this case are much more apt to complaine of their miseries, then to vse any meanes to be eased of them, and euen to die and perish in their spirituall wants then to take any paines to haue them supplied. And therefore none more then these need the help of good, faithfull and skilfull Ministers and other their Godly and able friends by whose counsailes and incouragements, admonitions and exhortations, comforts and rebukes, as it were goades in their sides, they may be quickquickned and incited to vse with all care and diligence, the meanes of their saluation.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Of other Arguments drawne from the persons in the Trinitie.

Sect. 1. ons me from rst per- God the er,

AND these are the Arguments which are drawne from the nature of God; whereby we may be assured of the remission of our sins. There may also other arguments be drawne from euery person of the Trinitie. First, God the Father hath created vs of nothing, euen according to his owne image, and when wee had defaced this his image in vs, and made our selues slaues to Sathan, he so tenderly loued vs his poore miserable creatures, that he spared not his dearely beloued and onely begotten Sonne, but sent him into the world to take our nature vpon him, that therein hee might suffer all misery and affliction, and lastly the cursed & bitter death of the crosse, that so hee might satisfie his justice for our sins, and perfect the worke of our Redemption. And this the Euangelist witnesseth, Iohn 3.16. All which loue the Lord shewed vnto vs, euen for his owne Names sake, when we neither deserued it nor yet desired it. For wee were bondslaues vnto Sathan and well contented to liue in his bondage; wee were children of wrath & dead in our sins, yea we were enemies vnto God and all goodnesse. And therefore if our mercifull God so loued vs, whilest we were in loue with our sins, at league with his enemy Sathan, and at enmity with him, that hee sent his dearely beloued and onely begotten Sonne to die for vs, that by his death and bloudshed hee might redeeme and saue vs out of this miserable estate, how much more will hee now receiue vs to mercy, and pardon, and forgiue our sins, if we seeke and sue for grace? If he loued vs so dearely when wee hated him, and sought all meanes of reconciliation when we were professed enemies against him, how much more will hee receiue vs into his fauour, when as we earnestly desire to be reconciled? If he so loued vs, that he sent his Sonne to die for our sins, how much more will hee remit those sins for which hee hath satisfied, when as with heartie sorrow wee doe bewayle them, and earnestly desire to be freed from them? If he hath giuen his Son to mankind to this end, that he should saue and redeeme repentant Sinners, why should any doubt of their redemption and saluation, if they turne vnto him by vnfained repentance, and lay hold on Christ by a liuely faith? And if he hath giuen vs his chiefe Iewell, his onely begotten and best beloued Son, and that when we were his enemies, what will hee deny vs, when in Christ wee are reconciled vnto him and become his friends? And thus the Apostle reasoneth, Rom. 5.8. God (saith he) setteth out his loue towards vs, seeing that whilst wee were yet Sinners Christ died for vs. 9. Much more then being now iustified by his bloud, wee shall be saued from wrath through him. 10. For if when wee were enemies, wee were reconciled to God by the death of his Sonne, much more being reconciled we shall be saued by his life. Rom. 5.8.9.

Secondly, we may draw most firme arguments to strengthen our assurance of the remission of our sins, from the second person in Trinitie, our Sauiour Iesus Christ; for first he is our Sauiour and Redeemer, who therefore came into the world that he might saue and redeeme vs out of the captiuity of our spirituall enemies, Sin, Death, and the Deuill, and that hee might satisfie his Fathers justice, obtaine the remission of our sins, and reconcile vs vnto him. Though then our sins be many and grieuous, this should not hinder vs from comming to Christ by a true faith, and firme assurance, that in him wee shall haue the remission of our sins, and be receiued into Gods loue & fauour. Yea rather this should be a forcible argument to moue vs to seeke his helpe, when we find our selues in a desperate case, destitute of all meanes whereby we may attaine vnto saluation, seeing our Sauiour Christ came into the world to saue such as were lost in themselues, and intralled in the miserable bondage of Sinne and Satan. And this is euident by the Scriptures: Matth. 9.13. our Sauiour professeth that he came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance: and Luke 19.10. The Sonne of man is come to seeke and to saue that which was lost. 1. Tim. 1.15. This is a true saying, and by all meanes worthy to be receiued, that Iesus Christ came into the world to saue Sinners. The Apostle also affirmeth, that our Sauiour Christ hath quickned vs who were dead in our sins and trespasses, Ephes. 2. 1.5. And our Sauiour Christ, doth not onely call vnto him small Sinners, but those who are heauie laden with an intolerable weight of sin, promising that hee will ease them. Seeing therefore hee came into the World to saue and redeeme grieuous and hainous Sinners, and to giue life vnto those who were euen starke dead in their Sinnes; seeing also he calleth and inuiteth such vnto him as are heauy laden with an intolerable weight of wickednesse, and promiseth to ease them; let vs not excuse our selues from comming because our sins are hainous and grieuous, but therefore let vs the rather goe vnto Christ, because wee had need of his helpe. If a man being loaded with a weighty burthen, should refuse the helpe of a friend, both able and willing to ease him, because his burthen is very heauy, who would not

2. Sect. 2. Reasons drawne from the second person God the Sonne. 1 Because he came into the world to saue Sinners. Matth. 9.13. Luke 19.10. 1. Tim. 1.15. Ephes. 2.1.5.

laugh at such ridiculous folly? For therefore hee should more earnestly desire, and more thankfully accept of his friends offered courtesie, because himselfe is tired, pressed down, and altogether vnable to beare this intolerable waight: but such and greater folly doe they commit, who being pinched and oppressed with the heauy burthen of their sins, doe through their infidelitie refuse the helpe of Christ, offering himselfe to release and ease them, vnder this pretence, because their burthen is ouer heauy; for seeing to them it is intolerable, therefore they should rather goe vnto Christ and earnestly desire to be eased and released, seeing hee is not only able, for his power is omnipotent, but also most willing, for he hath most graciously promised, and freely offered his helpe.

Q. Sect. 3. That the price which Christ hath paid for our redemption far exceedeth all our sinnes.

Moreouer, wee need not to doubt of the sufficiencie of the price which our Sauiour hath paid for our Redemption, for it is of infinite value, and of more vertue and power to justifie and saue, then all the sins of the World to condemne and destroy. So that though we were the greatest sinners that euer liued, yea, though the waight of all sinne which euer in the World hath beene committed did lie vpon vs, yet the merits of Christ and the price which hee paid for our Redemption doe farre exceed them, and if we come vnto him by a liuely faith resting vpon him alone for our saluation, hee will surely ease vs of this intolerable burthen. And therefore though the grieuousnes of our sins should increase our repentance, yet they should not diminish our faith and assurance of pardon and forgiuenesse; for though our debt were neuer so great, our surety Christ Iesus hath paid it to the vttermost farthing; though our sins are neuer so many and grieuous, our Sauiour hath borne them all vpon the crosse in his owne body, and fully satisfying Gods justice for them, hath freed and deliuered vs from this heauy burthen. Though we were neuer so deeply inthralled in the bondage of our spirituall enemies, yet our Almighty Redeemer hath freed vs out of captiuity, and hath paid a sufficient price for our ransome; and though we had no right or interest in the Kingdome of Heauen, yet our Sauiour hath dearely purchased it for vs by his precious death and bloud-shed. And therefore seeing in Christ wee haue fully satisfied Gods justice, and fully merited the pardon of our sins; seeing in him wee haue not onely paid our debt, but also giuen a sufficient price for the purchasing of eternall happinesse, we need not to make any doube of the pardon of our sins, and of possessing our heauenly inheritance, for the Lord cannot in justice hold that from vs which of right appertaineth vnto vs. Yea we may assure our selues that though he could, yet hee would not; for who can imagine that the Lord who of his bounteous liberalitie giueth vnto vs more then wee can deserue or desire, will keepe from vs that which of right appertaineth to vs? that he who for his owne Name sake without any respect of our works or worthines freely multiplieth his benefits vpon vs, should withhold our rightfull inheritance in his heauenly kingdome from vs, which our Sauiour Christ hath purchased for vs by his precious death and bloud-shed? And therefore seeing we haue vndoubted right to the pardon of our sins, because Christ Iesus hath satisfied for them, and just title to our heauenly inheritance which our Sauiour hath purchased for vs with so deare and al-sufficient a price, let vs in the Name of Christ goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, desiring a generall acquittance of that debt which is already paid, yea let vs not feare to approach the throne of Gods seuere justice, and to claime our heauenly inheritance which Christ by his death and al-sufficient merits hath so dearely purchased.

1. Pet. 2. 24.

Furthermore, we are to consider that our Sauiour and Redeemer is so gracious and bountifull, so rich in mercy, and so full of all power, vertue and perfection, that our Sins should not discourage vs from comming vnto him; for the more miserable, wretched and sinfull wee be, the more fit subjects wee are, whereupon hee may exercise and shew the infinite riches of his bountie, mercy, vertue and all sufficiencie. If we were but a little soiled with Sin, it were not so great a matter to make vs cleane; but when wee are most filthily defiled, and our pollution is ingrained in vs (as it were) with a scarlet die; when our vncleane corruption stickes as fast to our soules as the Ethiopian blackenesse to their skins, then is the vertue of the excellent liuer of Christs bloud sufficiently manifested, when as he purgeth vs and maketh vs cleane, washing away all our filthy corruptions, and making our scarlet Sinnes as white as snow. Our Sauiour Christ is our spirituall Physician, who can as easily cure desperate diseases, euen the remediles consumption, the dead apoplexie, and the filthy leprosie of the soule, as some small maladie, or little faintnesse? Neither is he onely able, but also as willing to vndertake such desperate cures as the least infirmities, because his skill will bee the more manifest, and his prayse the more extolled, for the more desperate the disease is, the more it argueth his cunning who helpeth it; and the more commendations hee shall receiue who effecteth such a cure. And therefore though our diseases are most dangerous and desperate, yet let vs resort to this our heauenly Physician, for the more desperate the cure is, the more fit occasion shall he haue of shewing his neuer failing skill; and of aduancing his immortall praise.

praise. Hee is our heauenly Chirurgion, euen the good Samaritane which powreth the soueraigne oyle of his grace, and the precious balme of his bloud into our wounded soules; and therefore the more grisly our wounds are, the more praise and glory hee getteth in curing them, the more is the vertue of the soueraigne salue of his bloud manifested to all the world by healing of them. Though therefore our soules are most filthy and polluted, yet if wee come to Christ, hee will surely wash and purge vs, for to this purpose he suffered that precious water and bloud to issue out of his side, that thereby as with a liuing and cleare streame, issuing from a most pure fountaine, he might cleanse vs from all our sins, and wash away all our filthy corruptions; though we are most desperately sicke, let vs come vnto our spirituall Physician, for he can cure the most remediless diseases as perfectly and as speedily, as the most small infirmity and faint weaknes: though our soules are wounded euen to the death, with the deepe piercing and deadly impoysoning sting of Sinne, yet let vs seeke helpe of this our heauenly Chirurgion, who with the precious balme of his bloud, can as easily heale the most dangerous wounds, as small scratches or little cuts. Neither is hee more able then willing, for hereby his vertue and power, his loue and bounty, is the more manifested to his endlesse and immortall praise.

But if wee thinke our soules so filthy that hee cannot purge them, what doe wee else but derogate from the vertue of his bloud? If we will not goe to this heauenly Physician to craue his helpe, because our sicknesse is grieuous and dangerous, what do we else but call his skill into question? If we will not shew our wounds, because they are grisly, what doe we else but notably detract from the cunning of this our spirituall Chirurgion, and doubt of the vertue and efficacy of the precious balme of his bloud? whereas on the other side, if wee see our polluted filthinesse, and yet goe vnto Christ, that we may be washed and cleansed, wee acknowledge the vertue and excellency of the spirituall lauer of his bloud. If wee plainly discerne that our sicknesse is desperate, and yet goe to our soules Physician, not doubting of recouery, we thereby extoll our Physicians skill: if our wounds be in themselues grisly and incurable, and yet we resort to our heauenly Chirurgion to be healed of them, wee cannot more commend his al-sufficient cunning. And therefore seeing it is in these our extremities to our Sauiour Christ most honourable and acceptable, and to our selues most profitable and full of comfort, if wee come vnto Christ, not doubting of his helpe, let vs not pretend excuses, either because we are vnfit, vnworthy, or in a desperate state; for by thus aggrauating our owne remediless misery, we extenuate and call into question Gods mercy, and Christs al-sufficiency, wee spoile him of his honour and glory, and our owne soules of all joy and consolation.

Secondly, we may gather firme assurance of the pardon of our sins, from the offices of Christ. For first he is our Prophet who hath reuealed vnto vs all the will and counsell of his Father, he hath declared vnto vs the mystery of our Redemption, and the meanes of our saluation, how we may attaine vnto the remission of our sinnes, and how wee may come out of that miserable and wretched estate, in which we are by nature, and attaine vnto eternall happinesse. Hee it is, who by the bright beames of his Word doth illuminate our vnderstandings, and by the operation of his holy Spirit, doth cause the scales of ignorance to fall from our eyes, Giuing knowledge of saluation to his people, by remission of sinnes. Hee is that glorious and bright shining day-starre, which from an high hath visited vs, to giue light vnto them who sit in darknesse and in the shadow of death, and to guide our feet into the way of peace. If therefore wee will walke in the way which he sheweth vs, and vse those meanes which he reuealeth vnto vs in his Gospell, namely, turne vnto God by vnfained repentance, and beleeue in him by a liuely faith, wee shall not need to feare our sinnes though neuer so grieuous and manifold, for this our heauenly Prophet hath truly reuealed vnto vs a plaine way how wee may come out of our sins, and be reconciled vnto God; how wee may be adorned with the glorious Robe of his righteousnesse, and bee made partakers of all his merits; how wee may become of the children of wrath and fire-brands of Hell, the children of God, and heires of Heauen. And therefore let vs walke in this way and assure our selues that wee shall come to the journey end of our desires, for truth it selfe is our guide, so that we need not to doubt of the way.

2. Sect. 5. That the offices of Christ, giue vs assurance of the remission of our sinnes. And first in that hee is our Prophet.

Luke 1.77,78.

Secondly, our Sauiour Christ is our High Priest, who hath offered vp vnto his Father an al-sufficient Sacrifice and full satisfaction for our sinnes, whereby Gods justice is fully satisfied, and his wrath appeased, who also sitting at the right hand of his Father, continually maketh intercession for vs. The sacrifice which this our High Priest offered was himselfe, as the Apostle testifieth, Heb. 9.26. euen his body to be crucified, and his bloud to be shed for the putting away of our sins; the which oblation was offered on the Altar of his Deity which sanctified the Sacrifice, and gaue vnto it such sufficiency and value, that it was a perfect price and full satisfaction for the sins of all the faithfull, as the

2. Sect. 6. Reasons drawne from Christs Priesthood.

1. Iohn 2.2. the Apostle witnesseth, 1. Iohn 2.2. He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours onely, but for the sinnes of the whole world. Seeing therefore this our High Priest hath giuen himselfe for vs, euen his body to be crucified, and his bloud to be shed to this end, that it might be a propitiatory Sacrifice and full satisfaction for our sins, and seeing he was once offered to take away the sinnes of many, as the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 9.28. wee need not doubt of the remission of our sins if we come vnto him by a liuely faith, for to this end he hath shed his bloud, that hee thereby might offer vnto God a full satisfaction for our sins, and purge away all our wickednesse, and therefore if hee should not attaine vnto his end, that is, if hee should not satisfie Gods iustice and appease his wrath, by purging & taking away all our sins, his precious bloud should be shed in vaine.

Heb. 9.28.

2. Sect. 7. Reasons drawne from Christs intercession.

Moreouer, he is our Mediatour and Intercessour, who continually sitteth at the right hand of his Father making intercession for vs, by shewing and pleading his owne merits, righteousnesse and obedience whereby he pacifieth his Fathers displeasure, and worketh vs into his loue and fauour. And this the Apostle witnesseth, Rom. 8. 34. It is Christ which is dead, yea, or rather which is risen againe, who is also at the right hand of God, and maketh request for vs. So also Heb. 9.24. it is said that our High Priest Iesus Christ is entred into heauen, to appeare in the sight of God for vs. And the Apostle Iohn saith, 1. Iohn 2.1. If any man sinne, we haue an Aduocate with the Father Iesus Christ the iust, and he is the propitiation for our sins. Neither need wee to doubt of his effectuall dealing for vs: for if he loued vs so dearely that hee spared not to giue his precious life for vs, there is no question but he will be exceeding earnest in making request for vs, neither will hee be sparing in words who hath not spared his deerest bloud. And therefore seeing our High Priest doth continually make intercession for vs, wee need not to doubt but that he will obtaine his suite, and procure the pardon of our sins, and his Fathers loue and fauour. Especially considering that hee entreateth nothing which hee hath not deserued, and by his death purchased for vs; and consequently when like an Aduocate he pleadeth his full payment of our debt, and alleageth his al-sufficient merits and sufferings, God cannot in his iustice but grant his most lawfull request; considering also that he maketh his suite not to a stranger or some common friend, who will either preuent his suite with a strange and sterne countenance, or deny it with some vaine excuse; but vnto his most gracious and dearly louing Father, who willingly hearkeneth vnto, and readily graunteth all his requests. And this our Sauiour himselfe testifieth, Iohn 11.41. Father (saith hee) I thanke thee, because thou hast heard me. 42. But I know thou hearest mee alwayes, &c. And therefore considering Christs merit in deseruing, and Gods mercy in granting, Christs importunitie in asking, and his Fathers facilitie in yeelding; seeing he that intreateth for vs, loued vs so entirely that he died for vs, and will vndoubtedly be most earnest in soliciting our suite, and hee who is entreated, so heartily affecteth vs, that hee spared not to giue vnto vs his only begotten and dearely beloued Sonne, that by his death, hee might purchase for vs euerlasting life; let vs shake off all doubting, and goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, that wee may receiue mercy, and finde grace to helpe in time of need, as the Apostle exhorteth vs, Heb. 4.16. For our good High Priest is able perfectly to saue them, who come vnto God by him, seeing he euer liueth to make intercession for them, as it is Heb. 7.25.

Iohn 11.41.

Heb. 4.16. & 7.25.

Thirdly, as our Sauior Christ is our Prophet and Priest, so likewise he is our King, & this also may assure vs of the pardon & remission of our sins if we will come vnto him. For he who is our Aduocate, is also our Soueraigne, he that is our Mediatour is our Iudge, hee that intreateth for vs, hath power in his hands, both to obtaine and grant his owne suite; he that gaue his life a ransome for our sinnes, hath all power in Heauen and Earth committed vnto him, so as he is able to remit all our sinnes, and to blot out all our iniquities, For (now) the Father iudgeth no man, but hath committed all iudgement vnto the Sonne: as himselfe testifieth, Iohn 5.22. and euen when he was vpon the earth, he exercised this authority, as appeareth, Matth. 9.2. whereas he saith to the sicke of the palsie: Sonne be of good comfort, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee. For which being challenged, he defendeth his Regall priuiledges, affirming, Verse 6. that the Sonne of man hath authoritie euen on earth to forgiue sinnes. Now what can be more comfortable vnto any soule wounded with sinne, then the consideration of this vndoubted truth? For seeing our Sauiour who so tenderly loued vs, that he spared not to giue his owne most precious bloud for the price of our redemption, hath al-sufficient power in his owne hands to saue and deliuer vs out of the hands of all our enemies, who can imagine that hee will suffer vs to be lost whom hee hath so dearely bought. Seeing hee gaue his life to purchase for vs the remission of our sinnes, who can doubt that hauing thus dearely purchased it, he will not bestow it, and so suffer his bloud to be spilt in vaine, seeing he was content for our sakes to endure all misery, mockings, reuilings, whipping, crucifying, death it selfe, and the anger of his Father more bitter then death; to this end that by all these his sufferings, he might procure the remission of our sinnes and euerlasting life, and that when we were rebellious traytors did fleeing away from him; who can make any question, but that now hee will bestow these inestimable benefits which hee hath of purpose bought for vs, they being in his owne power and custody, if like humble seruants and penitent children we turne vnto him and implore his grace? If a Malefactour had a deare friend who loued him so entirely, that hee would not spare to giue his whole substance to procure his pardon, would this miserable offender feare death or condemnation, if hee were assured that now his pardon were in his friends hand, and that the matter were by his Prince referred to him, as vnto a supreame Iudge absolutely to determine what he will? But our Sauiour hath not giuen goods or gold, or any corruptible thing, but euen his owne most precious bodie to be crucified, and his bloud to be shed, that by this inestimable price, he might purchase our pardon of God our soueraigne King, and now he hath the law in his owne hands, and is appointed of God for our supreame Iudge to acquit vs at his owne pleasure: who therefore can make any doubt of grace and pardon, seeing his Iudge is his Sauiour who hath loued him so dearely, that to this end he hath shed his precious bloud, that he might procure for him the remission of his sinnes and euerlasting happinesse? And therefore if hee would not sticke to buy it at so high a rate, how much more hauing bought it only for this purpose, will hee now bestow it if wee seeke vnto him, and earnestly desire to be partakers of his grace and mercy?

on

Moreouer, as this our most gracious King and louing Sauiour hath sufficient power to pardon all our sinnes, and in respect of his inestimable loue, is most certainly willing to blot out all our wickednesse, if we repent & come vnto him, so also hee hath bound himselfe hereunto by most free and faithfull promises, Matth. 11.28. Come vnto mee all yee that labour and are heauy laden, and I will ease you. Iohn 3.36. He that beleeueth in the Sonne hath eu rlasting life. And Iohn 6.37. He hath assuredly promised, that whosoeuer commeth vnto him hee will not cast away. These and many such like gracious promises hee hath made, of the performance whereof we need not to doubt, especially considering that he gaue continual experience in his practice here on earth, of his loue, goodnesse, mercy and truth. For who euer came vnto him with any lawfull suite and receiued a repulse? who euer intreated his helpe, and was abandoned? who euer asked any thing of him which was profitable for him to receiue, and did not obtaine his suite? whatsoeuer sicke came vnto him receiued their health; whatsoeuer lame desired his helpe receiued their limbs; whatsoeuer blind resorted vnto him receiued their sight; whatsoeuer Sinner implored the forgiuenesse of his sinnes receiued full remission and pardon. Yea so gracious, mercifull and louing was this our King and Redeemer, that he preuented his poore miserable subjects with his grace, and sought all occasions of extending his loue and mercy towards them, giuing vnto them more then they desired; the sicke of the palsie comming vnto him not onely was cured of his disease, but also receiued the remission of his sinnes, Matth. 9. Zachæus desired but to see his face, and he offereth vnto him his company, and therewith eternall saluation, Luke 19. The woman of Samaria requested but elementall and common water, and he offereth vnto her the water of life, Iohn 4. The people followed him to be fed by miracle with corporall food, and Christ offereth vnto them the bread of life, Iohn 6. The poore blind man desired that he might be by Christ restored to his bodily sight, and Christ also illuminates the eyes of his soule, so that as with his bodily eyes hee discerned him to be a man, so by the eye of faith hee knew him to be his Redeemer and Sauiour. By all which it cleerely appeareth that there was neuer any more ready to aske then Christ to giue; yea such was his goodnesse and loue, that hee was alwayes more ready to grant then they to intreat, and to grant more then they euer desired. Now we must not think that our Sauiour is altered in nature, or that (as it is vsuall amongst men) honours haue changed manners, for hee is God immutable in goodnesse, and without change or shadow of change, as it is Iames 1. 17. and therefore wee may assure our selues if wee turne from our sinnes by true repentance, and come vnto him by a liuely faith, we shall be receiued to grace and mercy, and receiue the pardon of our sins be they neuer so hainous and innumerable.

Iames 1.17.

Lastly, the vnion and communion which is betweene Christ and all the faithfull, may giue vnto them full assurance of the pardon and remission of all their sinnes. For first they are coupled vnto him in spirituall matrimony, and hee becommeth the Bridegrome, they the Spouse; hee the Husband, they the Wife; now wee know that in law there will no action of debt lie against the Wife, whilest the Husband liueth, because she is vnder couert barne; and therefore her Husband who hath taken vpon him to maintaine and defend her, must answere and follow all her suites and his goods are liable for the paying of her debts. And thus it is also betweene Christ the Husband, and the Church his Spouse; being married vnto her, he hath taken her vnder his charge and protection, and hath vndertaken to answere all suites, and to satisfie all her debts, yea, hee hath discharged them already, and therefore

9. Sect. 10. Reasons drawne from our communion with Christ wee need not to feare any action which Satan, the Law, or Gods iustice may lay against vs, for our Husband Iesus Christ hath taken vpon him to follow all our suites, and to satisfie all our debts. So that if either the Law, Gods iustice, or our enemy Satan doe commence any suites against vs, we are not now to take vpon vs the answering of them in our owne persons, but we are to send them to our Husband Iesus Christ, who hath taken our causes in hand and will giue vnto them a sufficient answere. Secondly, the faithfull are vnited vnto Christ in a more neere vnion, for he is their head and they his members, as appeareth, Ephes. 5.23,30. hee is the true Vine, and we the branches, as himselfe speaketh, Iohn 15.1. he is the fruitfull Oliue tree, we the cions which are grafted into him, as it is, Rom. 11. he is the foundation, we the building, as the Apostle affirmeth, Ephes. 2.20,21. By reason of which neere vnion, it commeth to passe, that those things which appertaine vnto Christ belong vnto vs, and ours vnto him; for as the head deriueth sense and motion vnto the members; and as the Oliue tree and Vine doe communicate their vertue, fatnesse, and sap vnto their branches and cions, by which they liue and bring forth fruit; and as the foundation doth sustaine and vphold all the building: so doth our Sauiour Christ our head, roote and foundation communicate vnto vs his members and branches, the vertue of his merits, and the iuice and sap of his precious bloud, whereby we are quickned and reuiued who were dead in trespasses, our sinnes washed away and purged, and wee made fruitfull in all righteousnesse and holinesse, as in that his imputed righteousnes wherby we are iustified before God, and that inherent righteousnesse begunne in vs by his holy Spirit, whereby we are iustified before men. And as he hath bestowed and communicated vnto vs his righteousnesse, death and obedience, so hath hee taken vpon him from vs all our sinnes originall and actuall, of commission and omission, and in his owne person hath suffered all that punishment, which wee by them had deserued; so as now he hauing taken vpon him our sinnes, and indued vs with his righteousnesse, merit and obedience, wee need not to feare the exact rigour of Gods iustice, for by him and in him we are without sinne, pure and vndefiled, and perfectly righteous in Gods sight. Neither shall wee need to feare the violence of all our spirituall enemies, for our Head Iesus Christ is God almighty, and therefore none shall bee able to pluck vs out of his hands against his will, and wee are as deare vnto him as the members of his body, and therefore looke how loth any carefull head would be to haue any of the members pulled from it by force and violence, so loth and vnwilling will our Sauiour and head bee, to haue any of his members plucked from him. And therefore seeing he wanteth neither will nor power to defend vs, wee need not feare the raging malice and cunning violence of any of our spirituall enemies, Sinne, the Deuill, the World and the Flesh, for our Head is al-sufficient, and also most willing to saue and defend vs from all their force and malice.

And so much concerning the reasons drawne from the second person, whereby euery repenting and beleeuing Sinner may be assured of the pardon and remission of all his sinnes. Now we are to speake of those which may be drawne from the third person, the holy Spirit. First, therefore we are to know, that though our sinnes be manifold, and our corruptions exceeding filthy, yet this holy Spirit will sanctifie and purge vs from all our pollution; so that though in times past wee were most hainous sinners, idolaters, adulterers, theeues, drunkards, railers, extortioners, yet now we are washed, now we are sanctified, now we are iustified in the name of the Lord Iesus, and by the spirit of our God, as the Apostle speaketh, 1.*Cor.*6.11. Hee is that heauenly fire which consumeth and purgeth vs from all the drosse of our corruptions, he is that diuine water which washeth away all our filthy pollution, it is he who doth regenerate and beget vs anew who were dead in our sinnes; and whosoeuer are thus regenerated shall be heires of the Kingdome of Heauen. Secondly, we may hereby be assured of the remission of our sinnes, in that the Spirit of God joyneth with vs in our suite, and together with vs, maketh request vnto God in our behalfe; and whereas we are ignorant and know not how to pray as we ought, the Spirit it selfe helpeth our infirmities, and maketh request for vs with sighes which cannot be expressed. But God who searcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the meaning of the spirit: for hee maketh request for the Saints according to the will of God, as the Apostle speaketh, *Rom.*8.26,27. Who therefore can doubt of obtaining his suite, euen the remission of his sinnes and reconciliation with God, seeing it is framed & indited by Gods Spirit, and consequently is most wise, iust, and as the Apostle saith, according to the will of God? yea it is sollicited and followed with great earnestnesse by the same spirit; & therefore our suite being wise, iust, and framed by the spirit according to the will of God, and by the same spirit in most earnest manner sollicited and furthered, there is no question but we shall obtaine it.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Other Reasons to perswade the weake Christian of the remission of his sinnes.

AND these are the reasons which may be drawne from euery of the persons of the Trinitie, to assure vs of the remission of our sinnes; to which we may adde diuers others. First, the beleeuing of the remission of our sinnes, is an Article of our Creed, which wee doe daily confesse and professe, and it is not left vnto our choice to beleeue or not to beleeue, but as wee confesse it with the mouth, so wee are bound to beleeue it with the heart, if wee would be reckoned in the number of Christians. Why then should wee doubt of that which we are bound to performe; and if wee doe not, we grieuously sinne through infidelitie, which is more dangerous and damnable then all our other sins whatsoeuer? And therefore though there were no other reason to moue vs, though our hainous and manifold sinnes should make it seeme vnto vs neuer so incredible, yet let vs set aside all impediments and breake through the violence of all objections, and beleeue in obedience to Gods Commandements, and because it is our dutie, the performance whereof is very acceptable vnto God, and the neglect is a sin most dangerous and damnable. Which that we may performe, let vs carefully obserue the condition of the couenant of grace, that is, let vs rest and relie vpon Christ Iesus alone for our saluation by a liuely faith, and turne vnto God by vnfained repentance, and then there is no place left to doubting of that which in duty we are bound to beleeue.

1. Sect. 1. That we are bound to beleeue the remission of sinnes, because it is an Article of our Creed.

Secondly, the afflicted soule labouring vnder sinne may receiue no small assurance by the testimony of Gods faithfull Ministers. For the keyes of the Kingdome of Heauen are committed vnto them, and they haue power giuen them of God here on earth to binde and loose; not as though they could by their owne authority, and in their own name giue pardon of sinnes to whom they list (as the Papists teach and practise) for this is proper and peculiar vnto God alone, as euen the Pharisies well knew; whereof it was, that seeing our Sauiour Christ take vpon him to forgiue sinnes, whom they imagined to be a meere man, they affirmed that he blasphemed. For who (say they) can forgiue sin but God only? but they haue authoritie giuen them of God, vpon due examination and triall of their faith by the fruits thereof, vnfained repentance, certainly to declare and pronounce vnto them that their sins are forgiuen. Whosoeuer therefore haue this testimony of Gods faithfull Ministers, who are well acquainted with their estates, giuen vnto them, they may assure themselues that it is vndoubtedly true and most certaine; for who is it that dare oppose himselfe and contradict the testimony of Gods Spirit in the mouth of so many his faithfull Ambassadours? Who dare be so presumptuous as to take vpon him the discerning of his state better then the Ministers of God, who being appointed by him, to this function are indued with a great measure of his Spirit, whereby they are inabled to discerne and judge of mens estates, better then they themselues? for hee that is spirituall discerneth all things, and is made acquainted with the mind of Christ, as the Apostle speaketh, 1. Cor. 2, 15, 16. And therefore if diuers of Gods faithfull Ministers with one consent pronounce vnto any penitent sinners the remission of their sinnes, and assure them after the examination of their estate that they are in the loue and fauour of God, it should bee vnto them ten thousand times more forcible an argument to perswade them, and to confirme their faith in the assurance of Gods loue, then the contrary testimony of Satan, or their timorous vnbeleeuing flesh to moue them to doubting thereof? If our bodies be sicke, we commit our selues to the skill and care of the Physician, and good reason, because wee know he is better able to discerne of our estate then we our selues; and beleeuing his judgement to be good, wee suffer him to apply such remedies as he thinketh most fit; why then should we not committ the discerning of our estate to the Physician of the soule no lesse carefull, and in this respect much more skilfull? For the others rules in some patient may faile him, but the grounds whereupon the spirituall Physician buildeth, are most infallible, being the vndoubted truth of God. Why should we not rather beleeue their often approued judgement then our owne timorous phantasies, or Satans testimony, who is our malicious enemy?

2. Sect. 2. The testimony of Gods faithfull Ministers. Iohn 20. 23.

Thirdly, the afflicted soule may gather assurance of the remission of sinnes from the contrary testimony of the Deuill. For when there is any suggestion cast into our mindes which is repugnant to the Word of God and the testimony of Gods Spirit in the hearts of the faithfull, we may assure our selues that it is the speech of Satan, or of our corrupt flesh the messenger of Satan, both which come to one end; but these motions and suggestions, that God will not receiue vs to mercy, that our sinnes are vnpardonable, that we are reprobates and castawayes; that now it is too late to turne vnto God, proceed not from Gods Spirit, for they are quite contrary to that which the Scriptures teach vs, namely, that the mercies of God are infinite, and hee alwayes ready to receiue vs to grace when we turne vnto him, that if we will earnestly repent, and in the mediation of Christ sue for mercy, he will make our scarlet sinnes as white as snow, that it is neuer too late to turn vnto God; for if wee repent, he hath promised to remit our sinnes, and to receiue vs into his fauour. Neither are we to imagine that the testimony of Gods Spirit in our consciences is contrary to the testimony of the same Spirit in the holy Scriptures: and therefore seeing these suggestions are flatly repugnant to the Word of God and testimony of the Spirit, wee are to assure our selues that they are the tentations of Satan, either immediatly suggested by himselfe, or mediatly by his messenger, our corrupt flesh. Seeing then these suggestions come from Sathan who is our malicious enemy, and a liar from the beginning, yea the father of lies, wee are not to beleeue them, yea rather wee may gather certaine assurance that the contrary is true; for he speaketh onely lies, or if at any time hee speake the truth it is to this end that hee may deceiue vs. For example, hee telleth the secure carnall man that hee is in the state of grace, and highly in Gods fauor; but vnto the humbled Sinner he saith, that hee is a reprobate and shall most certainly be damned; vnto the worldly secure man he saith, that God is most mercifull, then the which nothing can be more true, but doth not speake this in his conscience, because he would haue him to taste thereof, but to lull him asleepe with this sweet Syren Song to his eternall perdition. On the other side, when he hath to deale with the bruised heart and contrite spirit, he telleth him of nothing but of Gods exact justice, to the end hee may plunge him into vtter desperation. In a word, whatsoeuer he speaketh in the conscience of man, it is either false in it selfe, or if true in thesi, yet false in hypothesi, if true in the generall, yet false in the particular application. As what can be more true then that God is just? and what more false, then that he will exercise his justice in punishing repentant and humbled sinners? What can bee more true then that God is most mercifull? and what more false, then that he will shew this his mercy in sauing those who liue & die in their sins without repentance? and yet it is most vsuall with Satan to affirme both the one and the other, lying in both, because he doth misapply them. And therefore seeing Satan doth neuer speake the truth, or else doth falsly apply it in respect of our estate, let vs acquaint our selues with his false language; and so by hearing his lies, wee may bee the better assured of the truth. For example, when he tels vs that our sinnes are vnpardonable, that it is now too late to turne vnto the Lord, that wee are reprobates and damned wretches, we knowing that our malicious enemy by his lies doth continually seeke our destruction, are contrariwise to assure our selues, that Gods mercy and Christs merits farre exceed our sins; that now is the acceptable time and day of saluation, if wee will turne vnto God, and hearing his voice not harden our hearts, that we are in the state of saluation, the vessels of mercy, and beloued children of God.

2. Sect. 3. The 3. Reason drawne from the contrary testimony of Satan.

2. Cor. 2. 15.

Iohn 8.44. Satan either lieth or elle speaketh the truth to deceiue.

Lastly, those who are heauy laden with the burthen of their sinnes, may gather vnto themselues assurance of the forgiuenesse of them, by the consideration of Gods mercy extended vnto other repentant Sinners; for there was neuer any from the beginning of the world to this day, were their sinnes neuer so hainous or innumerable, who haue not beene receiued to mercy, and pardoned of our gracious God, whensoeuer they did vnfainedly turne vnto him. And this may appeare whether wee consider whole Cities or Nations, or else particular men. Of the first wee haue a notable example in the Israelites which liued in the time of the Iudges, who though they did many times negligently forget the great mercies, and inestimable benefits of God shewed to their fore-fathers, of which also themselues had beene partakers, though they forsooke the Lord not once or twice but very often, euen then when hee most bound them vnto him with multiplying vpon them the benefits of peace and plentie, and though they let the raines loose vnto all wickednesse, yea (which was most abominable and odious in the sight of God,) though they worshipped and serued Baal and Asteroth and other Idols of the cursed Nations, for which horrible Idolatry, God had cast out the Nations before them; yet whensoeuer they turned vnto the Lord, he pardoned their sinnes, receiuing them into his former loue and fauour, and deliuered them out of the hands of all their enemies. So likewise in the time of the Prophet Esay, to what a notorious height of wickednesse were the same people growne, as the Lord by his Prophet doth decipher and describe them in the first Chapter of that Prophecie? In the second Verse hee calleth Heauen and Earth to witnesse their horrible rebellion; in the third Verse he sheweth that their vnthankfulnesse for all his mercies, farre exceeded the vngratitude of bruit beasts; in the fourth Verse he exclaimeth out against them, calling them a sinfull Nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of the wicked, corrupt children, who had forsaken the Lord, and prouoked the holy one of Israel to anger. In the fift and sixt Verses he sheweth their hardnesse of heart and obstinacie in their rebellion, which was so great, that though the Lord sent afflictions and chastisements vpon them, yet they were no whit reformed but waxed worse and worse, and that this was not the case of some few but of all the whole body of the people, for the whole head was sicke and the whole heart was heauy, and that from the sole of the foote to the crowne of the head there was nothing sound therein, but wounds, an

and swellings, and sores full of corruption, the cure whereof they vtterly neglected. In the tenth Verse he matcheth the sins of both Prince and people, with those crying sinnes and outragious wickednesse of Sodome and Gomorrah, which brought downe from heauen fire and brimstone to consume them. In the 11, 12, 13. and 14. Verses, hee complaineth of their filthy hypocrisie in Gods outward worship ioyned with the vtter neglect of true godlinesse, and his spirituall seruice, which caused the Lord to detest all their Sacrifices, Sabbaths, and new Moones. So that there could not bee imagined greater wickednesse in any people, respecting those norable meanes which the Lord continually granted vnto them aboue all other Nations for their owne conuersion. And therefore who would not haue thought their state to be most desperate, who would not haue looked daily that the Lord should haue consumed them with fire and brimstone, or haue caused the earth to haue swallowed them vp aliue, as it did Corah and his associates? but behold the infinite mercies of our gracious God, euen when they wallowed in this filthy sinke of all impietie, the Lord calleth them to repentance, and when as they had forsaken him, and fled from him, desiring nothing lesse then to make or meddle with him, the Lord calleth vnto them, and he in whose power it was euery minute yeerly to destroy them, first of all desireth a parly; he who might well abhorre to vouchsafe them his presence, earnestly desireth conference with them, saying, Verse 18. Come now and let vs reason together, saith the Lord; though your sinnes were as crimson, they shall be made as white as snow; though they were red like scarlet, they shall be as woll.

In like manner in the time of our Sauiour Christ, the same Iewes most wickedly rebelled against the Lord; for when the Lord in his rich mercy sent the promised Messias, to deliuer them out of the hands of their enemies, they would not receiue him; nay, they continually afflicted and persecuted him, they mocked and reuiled him, they haled him before the iudgement seate, and caused him to be condemned who came to iustifie and acquit them, they buffeted and whipped him, and preferred a wicked murderer before him, who preferred their saluation before his owne life: lastly, in most ignominious sort they crucified & killed him: after all which outragious wickednesse offered against the Lord of life, they continued in their hardnesse of heart and impenitencie, neuer acknowledging their sinne nor desiring pardon, yea, rather as they had perfected their Head, our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ, so when they could offer no more wrong vnto him in his owne person, they were ready to satisfie and glut their malicious rage in persecuting his poore members. Now what more hellish impietie was euer committed? What more outragious sinne was euer heard of? Who would euer haue imagined that there was any hope of pardon for such rebellious bloudy wretches? But O the infinite and bottomlesse depth of Gods mercy! whileft their wickednesse was fresh in memory, and their hands still imbrewed in the guiltlesse bloud of this innocent Lambe: when as they continued in their course, and ran head-long forward in their wickednesse without any sense of sinne or desire of pardon; the Lord sent his Apostles vnto them to bring them to repentance, and to assure them that their sins were pardoned. Seeing therefore these obtained the remission of their sinnes, who needs to doubt of pardon who earnestly desires it? for did the Lord graciously offer forgiuenesse to such rebellious wretches, and will he not grant it to lesse offenders, if they desire it? Did he offer them mercy before they sought it, and will he deny mercy vnto any, who earnestly seeke and sue for it? Doth he seeke to draw men to repentance and to turne vnto him; and will he not receiue them when they doe repent? Was he so exceeding mercifull in times past, and shall wee now thinke his arme shortned or his mercy? Nay assuredly he is immutable euer like himselfe one and the same, most mercifull, and full of all goodnesse and compassion towards all them that come vnto him. And therefore if wee turne from our sinnes by vnfained repentance, we may assure our selues, that they shall be pardoned, and wee receiued into Gods loue and fauour.

Acts 2. 38.

To these examples of whole multitudes, wee may adde the examples of particular Sinners, who haue beene receiued to mercie and obtained pardon, though their sinnes haue beene many and grieuous. As Matthew, Zacheus, Leui, who were sinfull Publicans that got their liuings by pilling and polling, oppression and extortion, men so notoriously wicked, that Publicans and Sinners are ioyned together, as though they were Sinners by profession, and therefore as Synonyma, or diuers words of one signification they interpret one another. And yet such was the riches of Gods mercy, that euen these professed Sinners were conuerted, and receiued remission of all their outragious wickednesse. The like may be said of Mary Magdalene, who though shee had beene a woman of lewd behauiour and loose life, though shee were possessed of many Deuils, and commonly noted for an infamous and notorious Sinner, yet vpon her true repentance obtained the remission of her sinnes: and whileft she washed the feet of our Sauiour Christ with her teares, she purged and cleansed her body and soule from the filthy leprosie of sin with his owne most precious bloud; whilest shee wiped them with the haires of her head, hee beautified and adorned her with the rich robe of his righteousnesse. Yea, shee was receiued into an high degree of fauour with our Sauiour Christ, so as shee had in some things the preeminence before his chiefe Apostles, for after Christs rising againe he first vouchsafed her his presence, and vsed her as his messenger to certifie the rest of his resurrection. So likewise the Apostle Paul before his calling was not only no louer, but a bitter and fierce persecutor of the truth, and of all the Professours thereof, imprisoning, stoning, and cruelly murthering the Saints of God; but behold and admire the wonderfull mercy of God, euen whilest his imbrued hands were yet red with the bloud of Gods faithfull children, and whilest his heart was so full of burning rage, that he breathed out still threatnings & slaughter against the Disciples of the Lord, it pleased God wonderfully to conuert him, to assure him of the remission of all these his horrible sinnes, and to make him of a bloudy persecutor, a most excellent Preacher of his Gospell, and of a rauenous deuouring Wolfe, a most vigilant & painful shepheard. To these we might adde the example of the thiefe, who though he had spent his whole life wickedly and prophanely, yet was conuerted at the houre of death, and receiuing the pardon of his sinnes, was presently assured of euerlasting happinesse. But I shall not need to heape vp many particulars, only I cannot passe that notable example of Manasses, one of the most outragious Sinners, and prophanest wretch that euer liued, as the holy Ghost hath described him in the 21. Chapter of the second Booke of the Kings. For there he affirmeth of him that he was a most horrible Idolater, a most malicious enemy and cruell persecutor of Gods Truth, a defiler of Gods holy Temple, a sacrificer of his owne children vnto Idols, that is, Deuils, a notable Witch, and wicked Sorcerer, a bloudy murtherer of exceeding many the deare Saints and true Prophets of the Lord; one who did not runne head-long alone into all hellish impietie, but also led the people vnder his gouernment out of the way to doe more wickedly then did the Heathen people whom the Lord destroyed before the children of Israel, and in a word, wrought more abominations and outragious wickednesse then the cursed Amorites and Cananites, of whom notwithstanding the Land surfeited and spued them out for their crying sinnes. And yet this Manasses, this wretch, more like a Deuill incarnate then a Saint of God, repenting him of his sinnes from the bottome of his heart, was receiued (I cannot speake it without ravishing wonder of Gods bottomlesse and neuer sufficiently admired mercy) was receiued (I say) to grace, and obtained the pardon of all his horrible sinnes, and most abominable wickednesse. Now all these examples are written for our learning, and are recorded by the Holy Ghost, to the end that wee may continually laud and prayse the Lord for his endles and infinite mercies, and gather vnto our selues assurance, that though our sinnes were as grieuous and hainous as any of theirs before named, yet if with them wee turne from our sinnes by vnfained repentance, and goe vnto Christ by a liuely faith; wee shall also with them receiue the pardon of our sinnes, and be entertained into Gods loue and fauour.

2. Sect. 1. That vnrepentant Sinners haue nothing to doe with the inner consolation.

And thus haue I set downe most infallible reasons, vpon which as vpon immoueable firme grounds, the afflicted conscience may lay the foundation of sound comfort. Now if any abuse the Gospell of Iesus Christ, and gather out of this heauenly doctrine this deuillish vse, that because Gods mercies abound, therefore they will abound in their sinnes without repentance, and still more and more prouoke the wrath of the Lord against them: to these I answere with the Apostle, that their damnation is iust, in that they abuse Gods mercy, as an occasion to sinne, which should serue as a forcible argument to leade them to repentance: neither let such flatter themselues with vaine hope of Gods mercy, for despising the riches of his bountifulnesse, patience, and long suffering, and continuing in their hardnesse of heart and vnrepentancy, they treasure vp vnto themselues wrath against the day of wrath, and of the declaration of the iust iudgement of God, as the Apostle plainly speaketh, Rom. 2.4,5. Neither let them foolishly bolster vp themselues in their sinnes, by putting vnder their elbowes the sweet soft pillowes of Gods mercifull promises: for as there is none so speciall which doe exclude the most hainous Sinner that repenteth and beleeueth; so is there none so general which do extend themselues to those who continue in their vnrepentancie and vnbeleefe. And therefore though there be a sinne so grieuous, which being repented of and forsaken, will condemne vs if we rest and relie vpon our Sauiour Christ for our saluation by a liuely faith; so there is no sinne so small and venial which will not plunge vs into the bottome of Hell, if we liue therein without repentance, and doe not desire to leaue and forsake it. And therefore so long as we liue in our sinnes, and doe not seriously turne vnto the Lord by vnfained repentance, let vs not in vaine arrogate and misapply vnto our selues the mercy of God, the merits of Christ, and the sweet promises of the Gospell, for vnto such appertaine the fearefull threatnings of the Law, as being still the children of wrath, dead in their sins, and subiect to Gods heauy wrath and displeasure.

CHAP. XXXIX.

How we may know whether we be effectually called or no.

AND so much concerning those reasons whereby the humbled and repentant Sinner may gather vnto himselfe certaine assurance of the pardon and remission of his sinnes: of all which consolations Sathan earnestly indeauoureth to spoile the afflicted soule, by suggesting into his mind diuers subtill and dangerous tentations. As first, that all these gracious promises and sweet consolations of the Gospell, doe onely belong vnto those who are called, neither to all in this number, for, many are called, but few are chosen; but vnto those alone whose calling is effectuall, that is to say, who are separated from the world, giuen vnto Christ, & Christ vnto them, and who are ingrafted into him, & become liuely members of his body. But thou, will hee say to the humbled Sinner, art not thus effectually called, and therefore doe not flatter thy selfe with the hope of Gods promises; for though in themselues they are most certaine, yet they belong not vnto thee, but vnto those alone whose calling is effectuall. Against which tentation if we would strengthen our selues, we must examine our calling whether it be effectuall or no; and that both by considering the meanes whereby all are effectually called, and also the parts of effectuall calling, making application of both vnto our owne particular. For the first, wee may thus reason against our spirituall enemy: Whosoeuer can find the meanes of effectuall calling powerfully working in himselfe, and conuerting him vnto God, he is effectually called: but I haue, and doe finde these meanes thus working in me, and therefore I do not flatter my selfe with vain hope, but am certainly assured that I am effectually called and conuerted.

The meanes whereby wee are effectually called, are first the sauing and fruitfull hearing of Gods Word, by the ministery whereof the Lord calleth and inuiteth vs to come vnto him by vnfained repentance, and to our Saviour Christ by a liuely faith, euen when we are dead in our sinnes, without any desire to will, or ability to performe any thing that is good, whilest we are the bond-slaues of Satan and meere worldlings, not desiring nor once thinking vpon the meanes of our saluation. And this is done first by the preaching of the law, by which are reuealed vnto vs our innumerable hainous sinnes, and the fearefull punishments due vnto them: as that we by our continuall transgressions are subject to the curse of the law, vnable to performe obedience vnto any of the Commandements, or to make satisfaction to Gods iustice for the least of our sinnes, and so consequently that wee are obnoxious to Gods wrath, subject to those horrible torments prouided for the wicked; and therefore in respect of our selues, our owne righteousnesse, satisfaction, or any other meanes of our owne whatsoeuer, in a most damnable and desperate estate. Secondly, after the Law hath thus shewed vnto vs our sinnes, and the punishments due vnto them, the Lord by the ministery of the Gospell doth reueale vnto vs a plaine way by which we may come out of this miserable estate, and attaine vnto euerlasting saluation, namely, by beleeuing and applying vnto our selues Christ Iesus and all his benefits. Thirdly, with this outward ministery of the Word the Lord joyneth the inward cooperation of his holy Spirit, whereby he openeth our deafe eares, and maketh vs attentiuely to heare, and as with a precious eie-salue inlightens the blind eyes of our vnderstandings, enabling vs to conceiue and vnderstand those things which are deliuered vnto vs, both out of the Law, and out of the Gospell.

Psal. 40.6. Iohn 6.44. Acts 16.14. 1. Iohn 2.20, 27.

The second meanes of our effectuall calling is the softening of our hard hearts, when as the Lord taketh away our stony hearts, and giueth vs hearts of flesh, as hee promiseth, Ezech. 11.19. and breaketh vp these fallow grounds fit in themselues to bring forth no fruit, but weeds and thistles, that so they may bee prepared to receiue the seed of his Word, and bee made fruitfull in all grace. And thus our stubborne and rebellious hearts are softned, when as we particularly apply vnto our selues the doctrine of the Law, whereby first wee come to the knowing and acknowledging of our sinnes, originall and actuall. Secondly, our hearts are pricked, and our consciences wounded by apprehending and applying to our guiltie soules the curse of the law, the anger of God, and those fearefull punishments prepared for the wicked. Thirdly, seeing this our misery, and finding no meanes of our owne how we may come out of this wretched estate, we are brought to despaire of our owne strength, righteousnes, & satisfaction, finding them of no vertue for our iustification. By all which, being throughly humbled and cast downe in our selues, the Lord by the preaching of the Gospell doth reueale vnto vs a way how we may escape out of this miserable estate, namely, by applying vnto our selues Christ Iesus, and all his merits and obedience by a true and liuely faith; which the humbled Sinner seeing together with his own wants and misery by the Law, and perceiuing that our Saviour Christ is so rich in merits, that hee can easily supply all his defects, and so gracious and powerfull, that hee can and will free him out of his wretchednesse, hee doth plain-plainly discerne that he standeth exceedingly in need of Christ Iesus and his righteousnesse. After which sense of his owne wants, there is begot in him an earnest & hungring desire to be made partaker of Iesus Christ his righteousnesse, merits, obedience, and of all those inestimable benefits which are purchased by them. And lastly he is mooued to appeale from the sentence of the Law, to the throne of grace, pleading not his owne righteousnesse or satisfaction, but Christs merits and obedience. The third and last meanes of our effectuall calling, is a true and liuely faith, whereby we apprehend Christ Iesus and all his benefits, giuen and applied vnto vs by Gods Spirit, resting vpon him alone for our iustification and saluation.

Sect. 3. The second meanes of our effectuall calling Ezech. 11.19.

The third meanes.

Q. Sect. 4. That all who find the former meanes powerfull in them are effectually called.

And these are the meanes of our effectuall calling, which whosoeuer haue found powerfully working in themselues for their conuersion after the manner before spoken of, they may most certainly assure themselues that they are effectually called, and are already partakers of Iesus Christ and all his benefits. If therefore the Lord whilest wee did lie frozen in the dregs of our sins, without all desire of grace or meanes to escape out of our misery, hath vouchsafed vnto vs the ministery of his holy Word, if by the Law he hath reuealed our sinnes vnto vs, and the punishments due vnto them; and if by the Gospell he hath shewed vs the way how we may come out of this misery; if by the inward cooperation of his holy Spirit he hath opened our deafe eares, and with this precious eye-salue hath anointed the blind eyes of our vnderstandings, so that wee haue attentiuely heard, and in some measure vnderstood those principles of our Christian Religion, which haue in the ministery of the Word beene deliuered vnto vs; if our hearts haue beene softned and pierced, and our consciences wounded with the sight and sense of our sins; if despairing in our owne strength, righteousnesse and all other meanes of our owne, we haue gone out of our selues, and rested and relied vpon Christ Iesus alone for our iustification and saluation, then are wee without all doubt effectually called, and are in the number of Gods Church and people, to whom the promises of grace doe appertaine.

Q. Sect. 5. That we may knew that wee are effectually called by considering the seuerall parts thereof.

Secondly, wee may come to the knowledge of our effectuall calling, by considering the seuerall parts thereof. The first is our selection and separation out of the corrupt masse of mankind, whereby it commeth to passe, that though wee be in the world, yet we are not of the world, and therefore wee neither loue it, nor the world vs; and this our Sauiour sheweth, Iohn 15.19. If (saith he) ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne, but because yee are not of the world, but I haue chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. And the Apostle Iohn affirmeth, that if any man loue the world, the loue of the Father is not in him, 1. Iohn 2.15. and the Apostle Iames telleth vs, that the amitie of the world is enmitie with God, and therefore whosoeuer will be a friend of the world maketh himselfe the enemy of God. If therefore our loue and affections be weaned in some good measure from the world, and fixt on spirituall and heauenly things; if wee cease to be Citizens of the World, and begin to haue our conuersation in heauen, from whence wee looke for a Sauiour euen the Lord Iesus Christ; and if the world begin to hate and scorne vs, then may wee be assured that wee are seuered from the world, and entertained into Gods Church and Family.

Iames 4.4.

Phil. 3.19.

Q. Sect. 6. Satans temptation answered, whereby he perswadeth the Christian that he loueth the world, and the world him.

But here the tempter will obiect, that by this it plainly appeareth that wee are not yet effectually called nor separated from the World, because we still loue the world, affecting and desiring the vaine pleasures, honours, and riches thereof, yea and also loue those who are meere worldlings; and on the other side the world also loueth vs, giuing vs good countenance, and performing other duties vnto vs. For the answering of which suggestion we must distinguish betweene our selues and our selues: for whilest we continue in this life wee are partly flesh, and partly spirit, and as there is great enmitie betweene the spirit and the world, so is there great amitie betweene the world and the flesh. So farre forth therefore as wee are still carnall and corrupt flesh the world loueth vs, but as much as is spirituall and regenerate, so much the world hateth and abhorreth. Moreouer, we may generally be considered as men, or more specially as wee are Christian men; in the first respect, the world, that is, wicked worldlings, may loue vs for some naturall parts or meere morall vertues, or else in common humanitie as members of the same ciuill or politicke bodie: but as we are Christians who haue giuen our names vnto God, and deuoted our selues to his worship and seruice, the world hateth vs and our profession, Religion, and all the fruits and exercises of sanctification and holinesse, so that though in other naturall, worldly, and meere ciuill respects it loueth vs, yet in regard of our regeneration and the fruits thereof it cannot indure vs, and our company and conuersation is exceeding tedious, irkesome and vnpleasant. So on the other side whereas Satan obiecteth that we loue the world, that is, carnall worldly men, we may answere, that euen as wee are regenerate, it is lawfull to loue them in the same respects which they loue vs, namely, as they are men and the excellent creatures of God, as they are indued with excellent naturall gifts or morall vertues, as they are of the same ciuill bodie

or kinred, or as they haue beene vſed of God as his inſtruments for the beſtowing of any his benefits vpon vs: in which reſpects louing them, we may notwithſtanding with a true zeale hate and abhorre their vices, their carnall worldlineſſe, profane irreligion, and wicked conuerſation. Neither will Religion make vs to lay aſide all humanitie, & transforme vs into ſome brutiſh, or rather deuilliſh Timon who was a hater of men: For euen our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe who was wholly exempted from ſin, notwithſtanding loued the worldly young man for ſome good things he ſaw in him, though he were not religious, yea though he were ſo carnall, that he preferred his vaine and vncertaine riches before the ſaluation of his ſoule; as appeareth, Marke 10.21,22. So alſo hee vſed all humanitie and ciuill conuerſation, euen amongſt the Publicans and Sinners, that hee might haue the better opportunitie of conuerting all thoſe who belonged to Gods election. And therefore wee need not feare to follow Chriſts example, ſo it be with the ſame holy affection. For we alſo muſt indeuour to gaine thoſe vnto Chriſt who are without, and by our holy conuerſation giue them occaſion of glorifying God in the day of their viſitation, as the Apoſtle exhorteth vs, 1. Pet. 2.12. which we can neuer doe by hatred, rough ſeueritie, and Cynicall inhumanitie, but with louing courteſie, vpright behauiour, gentle admonitions and charitable reprehenſions. But if through our corruption wee giue Sathan occaſion further to obiect, that vnder theſe pretences we ſet our hearts too much vpon the world, louing worldlings more then thoſe who are of the houſhold of faith, and more delighting in their vaine conuerſation for outward reſpects, then in the company of the faithfull, if not alwayes yet oftentimes; we are to anſwer, that though theſe be ſinnes in vs, and notable ſignes of our great corruption, yet are they no ſtrong arguments, that wee are not yet effectually called, or truly ſeuered from the world, for as much as we are not wholly ſeparated from the world, but only ſo much of vs as is ſpirituall and regenerate; ſo that it is no maruell if the fleſh and vnregenerate part ſtill loue the world, becauſe it is ſtill worldly; but if in the inner man wee hate this loue, and ſtriue to bridle, yea to mortifie it, if we are truly ſorry and diſpleaſed with our ſelues for this as for other ſinnes and labour to reforme it, we may be aſſured that the Spirit of God is in vs, which hath ſeuered vs from the world, and joyned vs to the body of Ieſus Chriſt.

The like alſo may be anſwered concerning the loue of worldly things, honours, riches and pleaſures; we may loue them as they are the bleſſings of God, and deſire them ſo far forth as they are temporall benefits, and furtherances, or at leaſt no hinderances in the workes of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, wee may ſo loue them as that in the meane time our loue be ſubordinate to the loue of God, our brethren and ſpirituall things. But if our loue paſſe theſe limits, it is corrupt and carnall, yet no vndoubted argument to prooue that wee are not effectually called, if wee are diſpleaſed with it, and labour againſt it. And though oftentimes wee are ouercome therewith through the violence of our carnall affections and corruptions of the fleſh, yet if wee hate this ſinne in the inner man, if wee entertaine it through violence, and not with affection and delight, if it dwell in vs, but doe not raigne in vs, if but ſometimes it get the vpper hand and do not continually ouerrule vs, it is no more we that doe it but ſinne that dwelleth in vs, that is, the old man and corrupt fleſh, which whileſt wee liue in this life will beare ſome ſway in vs.

That the world loueth them not whom Satan hateth.

Laſtly, when as Sathan aſſaulteth the poore Chriſtian his with tentations, perſwading him that he is not yet called nor ſeparated from the wicked world, becauſe it loueth him, he may well ſuſpect his argument of falſhood, for Sathan doth not hate thoſe whom the world loueth; but by his continuall aſſaulting of the weake Chriſtian, & his daily labouring to bring him through the violence of his tentations to vtter deſtruction, it manifeſtly appeareth that Satan like a mortall enemy deadly hateth him; and therefore it is not likely that he is beloued of the world though it may for a time fawne vpon him, that by pretending loue & friendſhip, it may work him the greater miſchiefe.

9. Sect. 8. Of the ſecond part of our effectual calling.

The ſecond part of our effectuall calling is the mutuall donation of God the Father, whereby hee hath giuen Chriſt Ieſus vnto vs to be our Sauiour and Redeemer, and vs vnto Chriſt to be ſaued and redeemed, by which alſo we may prooue that wee are effectually called. For this gift is mutuall and reciprocall, and therefore the one doth cleerly proue the other, ſo that if wee can haue any aſſurance that Chriſt is giuen vnto vs, then may wee alſo bee aſſured that wee are giuen vnto Chriſt: & contrariwiſe, if we haue any aſſurance that we are giuē vnto Chriſt, then may wee be alſo aſſured, that Chriſt is giuen vnto vs: and conſequently that we are effectually called, for this mutuall donation is one part thereof. Now we may be aſſured that Chriſt is giuen vnto vs, if wee beleeue in him, reſting vpon him alone for our juſtification and ſaluation, as appeareth, Iohn 3.16. So God loued the world that hee hath giuen his onely begotten Sonne, that as many as beleeue in him ſhould not periſh, but haue euerlaſting life. And ſo alſo we may be aſſured that we are giuen vnto Chriſt, if wee heare his voice and follow him, as himſelfe ſpeaketh, Iohn 10.27. and ſubmit our ſelues to be led and gouerned

Iohn 3.16.

Iohn 10.27.

uerned by his Spirit, for as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sonnes of God, and whosoeuer are sonnes, are heires of God, and heires annexed with Christ: As it is Rom.8.14,16. But here Satan will obiect, that those who are giuen vnto Christ haue kept his word, as himselfe also affirmeth, Iohn 17.6. How therefore, will he say, canst thou bee assured that thou art one of those who are giuen vnto him, seeing thou keepest it not, but continually transgressest his Commandements? To which we must answere, that the Word of Christ is his Gospell, wherein he promiseth euerlasting life to all that beleeue in him, and bring forth the fruits of their faith in vnfained repentance, as it appeareth, Iohn 5.38. where hee thus speaketh to the vnbeleeuing Iewes: And his word (saith he) haue yee not abiding in you: for whom hee hath sent, him yee beleeue not; whereby it is manifest, if Christs reasoning be of sound consequence, that those haue his word abiding in them who beleeue in him, whom God hath sent euen our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ. So that wee keepe the word of our Sauiour when wee beleeue in him, resting and relying vpon him alone for our saluation, and truly repent vs of our sinnes, sorrowing and grieuing that by them wee haue offended and displeased our louing God and mercifull Father, hating our sinnes because they are sins, purposing and labouring to forsake them, and indeuouring according to the measure of strength and grace receiued, to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life. And therefore if wee can find in our selues this faith, and this repentance, we may vndoubtedly be assured notwithstanding our manifold falls and great corruptions, that wee haue kept the word of Christ, and therefore are giuen vnto him of the Father; and consequently, that we are effectually called, and shall be eternally glorified. For it is the will of the Father, that whosoeuer beleeueth in his Sonne Iesus Christ should haue euerlasting life, as our Sauiour testifieth, Iohn 6.40. As for our corruptions they shall be washed away with the bloud of Christ, and our imperfections shall be couered with the rich robe of his perfect righteousnesse, so that in him wee shall appeare perfect before Gods iudgement seate, and there bee accepted as iust and righteous.

Rom.8.14,16. How those that are giuen to Christ, keep his word.

Iohn 17.6.

Iohn 5.38.

Iohn 6.40.

Q. Sect. 9. Of the third part of our effectuall calling.

The third part of our effectuall calling is our vnion and communion with Christ, whereby he becommeth our Head, and wee his members, of which whosoeuer can be assured, they need not to make any question of their effectuall calling; but all those who are indued with faith, are vnited vnto Christ, for it is a propertie thereof to apply vnto our selues Christ and all his benefits, it is the hand of the soule whereby we lay hold vpon Christ, it is the mouth of the soule whereby wee spiritually feed vpon him, and hee that eateth his flesh, and drinketh his bloud dwelleth in Christ, and Christ in him, as himselfe speaketh, Iohn 6.56. So also whosoeuer are indued with Gods Spirit, and haue submitted themselues to be led and gouerned thereby, they are ingrafted in the body of Christ, for the Spirit is the band of this vnion, and therefore if we can discerne the Spirit of God in vs by any of the fruits thereof, wee may be assured that we are the members of Christ, and consequently effectually called. Lastly, wee may be assured that wee are ingrafted in the body of Christ by our workes of sanctification, either appertaining to Gods seruice, or Christian righteousnesse towards our Neighbour; for it is impossible that wee should bring forth any ripe Grapes of godlinesse, if we were not ingrafted in the true Vine Iesus Christ, as himselfe affirmeth, Iohn 15.4. Abide in mee and I in you: as the branch cannot beare fruit of it selfe, except it abide in the Vine, no more can yee, except ye abide in me. 5. I am the Vine, yee are the branches, hee that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruits, for without me yee can doe nothing. And therefore if we make conscience of our wayes, and exercise our selues in some measure, in those good workes which the Lord hath commanded, in obedience to his will, and to this end, that his Name may be glorified, we may assure our selues that we are ingrafted into the true Vine Christ Iesus, for of our selues wee are altogether vnfruitfull and could doe nothing.

Iohn 6.56.

Gal.5.22.

Iohn 15.4.

But here Satan will obiect, that this argument maketh against our selues, for we thereby make it manifest that wee are not ingrafted into Christ, because our fruits of holinesse and righteousnesse are commonly exceeding small, and sometimes none at all, whereas the liuely branches of this Vine are exceeding fruitfull, and abundant in good workes. To which we are to answere, that all the branches of the Vine doe not bring forth fruits in like abundance, but some more and some lesse; and yet notwithstanding this doth not prooue that these are not true branches as well as the other, although they receiue lesse sap and liuely iuice from the roote and stocke: and so also it is in this mysticall Vine; if the branches be not altogether barren and fruitlesse, though their fruits bee not in so great abundance, yet if they be right and of the same nature with the other they may assure themselues that they also are liuely branches of the true Vine Iesus Christ. Neither is the quantitie and number of our fruits so much in this regard to be respected; for if according to the quantitie of sap and good iuice which wee receiue from our root we bring forth fruit, that is, if according to that measure of grace and gifts of Gods holy Spirit, which our Sauiour Christ hath bestowed vpon vs, wee spend our liues in Gods seruice, which himselfe hath commanded, to the end that we may glorifie his holy Name, wee may assure our selues that wee are true branches of this Vine, which our Sauiour will purge & prune that we may bring forth more fruits, as he hath promised, Ioh. 15. 2. Moreouer, whereas Satan obiecteth, that wee are not branches of this Vine, because at sometimes wee can shew no fruits; wee are to answere, that as the earthly Vine hath not alwayes Grapes, no not so much as leaues vpon it, and yet notwithstanding it liueth; receiuing nourishment from the root, & bringeth forth fruit in due time and season: so the branches of this mysticall Vine are sometime without the fruits of good workes, yea, haue not so much to beseene vpon them as the faire greene leaues of an outward profession, as it is most vsuall when as they are throughly nipped with the colde winter of tentations, and haue all their beauty blasted and blowne away with the boysterous blasts of Sathans fierce encounters; and yet at the same time they receiue the sap, juice, and vertue of Gods Spirit from their roote Iesus Christ, by which they seeming dead, do liue and receiue nourishment; vntill at Gods good pleasure the comfortable beames of his loue and fauour doe shine vpon them, with which their frozen hearts being throughly warmed, doe againe bring forth not only the leaues of profession, but also the ripe fruits of godlinesse and righteousnesse, and therefore though presently in such cases wee haue no fruits to shew, yet let not Satan perswade vs that we are not true branches of this vine: for if we can cal to mind, that euer in former times wee haue brought forth any right and kindly fruits of sanctification and true godlinesse, wee are true branches of the Vine Christ, which hee will lop and prune, and againe make fruitfull; for out of him wee could neuer haue brought forth such fruits: and those who are once ingrafted into him can neuer possibly be plucked away by Satan, the World, or all the powers of Hell, though (as I said) they may for a time bee nipped and shrewdly weather-beaten.

CHAP. XL.

Satans tentations obiecting to the weake Christian vnrepentancie, and hardnesse of heart, answered.

AND so much for answering that generall tentation of Sathan, whereby he laboureth to rob and deprive the poore humbled Sinner of all the hope and comfort which hee might reape in applying vnto himselfe the gracious promises and sweet comforts contained in the Gospell, by perswading him that he is not effectually called. Wherewith if he cannot preuaile, he descendeth from the generall to the particulars, and hauing as it were a farre off discharged his shot of dangerous tentations, without inflicting desired hurt and destruction, he approcheth neerer and fighteth against the poore Christian with handie blowes, that thereby hee may beate him downe into deepe desperation. Let it be granted, will he say, that thou art called, yet it followeth not hereof that thou art elected and shalt be saued; for Christ Iesus himselfe hath said, that many are called, but few are chosen, and why mayest not thou be in the greater number? neither is the calling thou speakest of sufficient to make a Christian, vnlesse it be accompanied with vnfained repentance and a liuely faith. And the promises of the Gospell, wherein thou vainly hopest, are not made vnto all those who are called, but vnto those who are endued with a true justifying faith, which is alwayes ioyned with the fruit thereof, vnfained repentance. But if thou examine thy selfe aright, thou shalt find that both these are wanting in thee: for to beginne first with repentance which is most sensible, and to be discerned with greatest ease, if thou search thine heart without any affectionate partialitie or vaine conceit, thou shalt find that thou art altogether destitute thereof. For is not thy heart so obstinately hard, and so stubbornly rebellious that thou canst not bewaile thy sinnes with any vnfained sorrow, nor scarce with much straining force one teare, whereas for any worldly losse, or temporary affliction, which indeed toucheth thee with true griefe, thou canst without any difficultie weep more bitterly then the Apostle Peter, and shed as many teares as Marie Magdalene. Besides, whereas those who repent, turne from their sinnes with a true and vnreconcileable hatred of them, and spend the rest of their life that remaineth, in the seruice of God; whereas they haue their hard stonie hearts mollified and turned into hearts of flesh, which are flexible vnto holy obedience, and full of alacritie and cheerefulnesse in performing seruice to God, thou through thy hardnesse and heart that cannot repent liuest still in thy sins, and spendest a great part of thy time in vanitie and wordly delights; thy heart as hard as the Adamant is ready sooner to breake then to bow to Gods will; and when thou forcest thy selfe hereunto, thou canst not but discerne the blindnesse of thy vnderstanding in spirituall things, which is so sharpe and Eagle-sighted in matters concerning the World, thy spirits so dull and blockish, and thine affections so glutted and tired in performing ser-ſeruice vnto God, which are ſo full of life and alacritie in following worldly vanities. And therfore it is impoſſible that thou ſhouldeſt haue any true repentance for how can repentance & hardnes of hart, a hart of fleſh and an heart of ſtone be at once in thee?

9. Sect. 2. For the anſwering that former tentation, two extreames to be auoided.

Againſt which tentation of Satan, if wee would arme our ſelues, it behoueth vs to be very carefull that we doe not runne into two dangerous extreames; the one whereof is ſecurely to flatter our ſelues with an opinion of our good eſtate, when as in truth, it is moſt dangerous and damnable: the other, that we doe not too much ſuffer our ſelues to be dejected and caſt downe, though we haue not as yet attained to ſo great perfection as our heart deſireth. And to this purpoſe, wee are to know, that hardneſſe of heart is of two ſorts; the firſt is of them, who being moſt hard-hearted, notwithſtanding do not feele nor perceiue it: the other, of thoſe who feeling their hardneſſe of heart are grieued therewith, and deſire to haue it mollified, ſoftened, and euen reſolued into teares of vnfained repentance. The firſt ſort is damnable, or at leaſt moſt dangerous; for it lulleth vs aſleepe in carnall ſecuritie, it taketh away all ſenſe of ſinne, and conſequently all ſorrow whereby we ſhould bewaile it; it ſeareth and brawneth the conſcience, couering it as it were on all ſides with a thicke hard skin, which will neuer or moſt hardly bee pierced, either by Gods juſtice and threatnings to cauſe vs to feare leſt wee incurre his wrathfull diſpleaſure, or by his mercies and gracious promiſes to mooue vs to loue him, and to bring forth the fruits of our loue in acceptable obedience; it repelleth all the good motions of Gods Spirit, and filleth the ſoule with ſuch drowſie dulnes and blockiſh deadneſſe, that it is altogether vnfit to performe any ſeruice vnto God, and moſt apt to entertaine any of Satans tentations. And this inſenſible hardneſſe of heart which is the ſpirituall lethargy of the ſoule, is of two kinds; the firſt is joyned with wilfull obſtinacie and affected rebellion, whereby men aduiſedly and contemptuouſly withſtand the outward miniſtery of the Word, and the inward motions of Gods Spirit, with all other meanes which might moue and inuite them to ſerious repentance: an example whereof wee haue in Pharaoh, who hardned his heart againſt the Lord, oppoſing himſelfe againſt his ambaſſage deliuered vnto him by Moſes, and confirmed by ſo many miracles, and alſo obſtinately and with an high hand of rebellion checked and quenched the good motions of Gods Spirit, whereby hee was ſometimes moued to confeſſe his ſinne, and to acknowledge the Lord righteous. As alſo in Saul, who againſt his conſcience perſecuted Dauid, becauſe the Lord loued and had made choice of him to ſucceed in his place: and howſoeuer ſometimes by occaſion of ſome notable fruit of Dauids innocencie hee was moued to condemne himſelfe and to juſtifie him, yet preſently he hardned his heart again and raged againſt him with wonted malice. And thus likewiſe were thoſe Iſraelites hardened and frozen ſtiffe in the dregs of their ſinnes, of whom the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh, Eſay 28.15. Yee haue ſaid (ſaith he) we haue made a couenant with death, and with hell we are at agreement: though a ſcourge runne ouer and paſſe thorow, it ſhall not come at vs: for wee haue made falſhood our refuge, and vnder vanitie are we hid. And thoſe alſo of whom the Prophet Zachary complaineth, Zach. 7.11. Who (obſtinately) refuſed to hearken, and pulled away the ſhoulder and ſtopped their eares that they ſhould not heare, yea, and made their hearts as an Adamant ſtone, leſt they ſhould heare the Law and the words which the Lord of hoſts ſent in his Spirit by the miniſtery of the Prophets. And ſo alſo many of the Scribes and Phariſies hardened their hearts againſt our Sauiour Chriſt, obſtinately contemning the gracious and powerfull words, which proceeded out of his mouth, and quenched the good motions of Gods Spirit, occaſioned by his wonderfull miracles & admirable workes, which none could performe, but hee who was the very true and only begotten Sonne of God. Now wee are to know that this hardneſſe of heart is moſt damnable, and whoſoeuer are poſſeſſed therewith, they can neuer eſcape Gods fearefull judgements and euerlaſting condemnation in the life to come.

Two ſorts of hardneſſe of heart. 1. That which is inſenſible.

The inſenſible hardneſſe of heart is of two ſorts. The firſt ioyned with obſtinacy.

The other kind of inſenſible hardneſſe of heart proceedeth from careleſſe retchleſneſſe and carnall worldlineſſe, when as men hauing their vnderſtandings blinded, doe not perceiue their filthy corruptions, prophane wickedneſſe, and extreame miſery, nor feele the burthen of their ſinnes though they bee growne to an intolerable waight, but flatter themſelues with a vain opinion of their good eſtate in themſelues, without any other help, as though they needed not the meanes appointed of God for their conuerſion, which others vſe. And therefore they neglect the miniſtery of the Word, as knowing and practiſing enough already; or if they heare it, they remoue far from them the threatnings of the Law denounced againſt impenitent Sinners, as not appertaining to them, and check all the good motions of Gods Spirit, which are commonly joyned with the publike miniſtery of the Word, and the priuate admonitions of godly men, or with the example of Gods judgement on others, or with the ſenſe of their owne afflictions; and ſo returne to their old prophaneneſſe, and lie wallowing in the dregs of their ſinnes without any remorſe or hatred of euill, or any true loue of that which is good; vntill at length their hearts are so hardned and their consciences so seared with customable sinning, and by often repelling and beating backe the meanes of their conuersion, the outward ministery of the Word, and the inward motions of Gods Spirit, that they proceed from carelesse senselesnesse, and negligent securitie, to wilfull prophanenesse and obstinate rebellion. And this hardnesse of heart is most commonly incident vnto worldlings, and is nothing else but carnall securitie, whereby they rest contented with their miserable and wretched estate, neither louing that which is good, nor hating that which is euill, nor vsing any meanes to better themselues, because they either think they are good enough, or at least neuer enter into consideration of their estate, nor come to the sense and feeling of their euill corruptions, in which they are wholly plunged and ouer-whelmed. Yea sometimes and in some measure, this befalleth the deare children of God through their careleſse negligence, and want of the due examination of themselues (as may appeare in the example of Dauid, who many moneths together lived in his sinne of adultery and murther, without any serious and sound repentance, till it pleased the Lord to rouze him out of this spirituall lethargie by the ministery of the Prophet Nathan) but yet the Lord doth not finally leaue them, but by the preaching of the Word, godly admonitions and reprehensions, & also with the inward motions and secret operation of his holy Spirit, he pulleth them out of this wretched estate, giuing vnto them a sight and feeling of their sinnes, and mollifying their hard hearts, working in them an hatred and detestation of their sinnes, and an earnest desire to be vnburthened of them. But howsoeuer this may befall the children of God, yet this can be no encouragement vnto any to continue still in this wretched case: for howsoeuer they may be indeed the children of God, yet assuredly they can neuer haue any true assurance in their consciences that they are his children and in his fauour, till their hearts bee mollified and resolued into the teares of vnfained repentance, at least in some measure. And therefore let euery one beware of carnall security, and of hardening their hearts through careleſse negligence, and lyke committing sinne against their knowledge and conscience; let them beware of resisting the Ministerie of the Word, and of quenching the good motions of Gods Spirit: for though the conscience at the first be most tender, and the heart so soft, that euery sinne will pricke and pierce it, and euery good admonition will make it relent, yet in continuance of time through customable sinning, and resisting the meanes of our conuersion and saluation, the conscience is so seared, that it becommeth senselesse, though it be oppressed and surcharged with a heauy masse of outragious wickednesse, and the heart groweth to such Adamantine hardnes, that the thundring Canon threatnings of the Law, and of Gods fearefull and imminent iudgements cannot batter or bruise it, nor make any breach, whereby true repentance may enter. In which respect the conscience is not vnfitly compared to the eye, which of all other parts of mans body is most tender and impatient of the lightest touch, so that the smallest mote vexeth it, & the least pricke causeth incredible torment: but if once it be affected with a disease called of Oculistis, scir. hosis oculi, which ouercouereth it with a hard fleshie skin, it becommeth of all other parts most insensible: so the conscience of man is most tender of all other parts, and at the first, small sinnes vexe and torment it, but if through custome in sinning it bee ouerspread with a Callum or thicke skin, it becommeth insensible, and nothing will wound it.

CHAP. XLI.

Of that hardnes of heart which is ioyned with sense and feeling thereof.

1. Sect. 1. Of hardnesse of heart, ioyned with sense and feeling thereof.

[redacted]He second sort of hardnes of heart, is that which is ioyned with sense and feeling, when as wee see and with sorrow feele our dulnes and blockishnesse in Gods seruice, our obdurate inflexiblenesse to holy obedience, our hardnesse of heart, which at the hearing either of the terrible threatnings of the Law, or sweet promises of the Gospell, cannot relent nor resolue it selfe into the teares of vnfained repentance. And this hardnesse of heart is commonly incident vnto Gods deare children, being at the same time in the state of grace, and is a part of that inbred corruption and fleshly old man which before our calling wholly possesseth and ouer-ruleth vs, and after also beareth some sway in vs, euen when we are regenerate, till with all our other corruptions wee lay this aside also by death. And this appeareth in the example of the Prophet Dauid, who desireth the Lord to create in him a cleane heart, and to renew a right spirit within him, Psal. 51. 10. In which words he implieth that his hardnesse of heart was sorgreat, and the corruption thereof so abominable, that it was euen past mending, and therefore bee doth not pray the Lord to purge and reforme his old heart, but to create a new one, and to take quite away his stony heart, and to bestow vpon him a heart of flesh. As though his heart were like a building exceeding ruinous which could no longer bee repaired, vnlesse it were raced downe euen to the foundation, and all anew built vp againe. So, whereas hee prayeth

Psal. 51. 10.

Ezech. 11. 19.

the Lord to renew his Spirit in him, hee giueth vs to vnderstand, that hee hath lost the feeling of the Spirit of adoption, crying in his heart Abba Father; and that there was in him such an intermission and surcease of the actions and fruits thereof, that it seemed vtterly quenched and departed from him. So else-where hee prayeth vnto the Lord to quicken him according to his louing kindnesse, that hee might keepe the testimonies of his mouth: wherein he intimateth his drowsinesse and deadnesse in Gods Seruice. The Prophet Esay likewise in the behalfe of himselfe and the people complaineth thus: Esay 63.17. O Lord why hast thou made vs to erre from thy wayes, and hardened our heart from thy feare? By all which it appeareth that euen the deare children of God do oftentimes see and feele to their great griefe, their hardnesse of heart, which is joyned with exceeding dulnes and drowsines in Gods Seruice. Yea in truth this kind of hardnesse of heart is incident vnto them alone. For whilest men are worldly and carnall, though their hearts are most hard and obdurate, yet they doe not discerne it, neither are they any whit displeased with their estate, but fondly flatter themselues, imagining that they are in exceeding good case and very deuout in Gods Seruice; which indeed (as they performe it) is meerly formall, customable rather then conscionable, in shew and externall, but not in spirit and truth; but when the Lord by the ministery of his Word made effectuall by the inward operation of his holy Spirit, doth pull off the thicke skin of carnall securitie from off their hearts, and causeth the scales of ignorance to fall from their eyes, then and not before doe they plainly discerne and sensibly feele that huge masse of inbred corruption, their dulnesse and drowsinesse in Gods Seruice, their hardnesse of heart and impenitency, and now they are much vexed and grieued with them, which in former times neuer troubled them. And therefore let not such be dismayed, nor debarre their soules of that consolation which of right belongeth to them; for flesh and bloud hath not reuealed this their corruption, hardnesse of heart, dulnesse and deadnesse in Gods Seruice, but the good Spirit of God, which hath begun already to worke in them shewing them their corruptions, and mouing them to an vnfained dislike of them, and therefore they may assure themselues, that he who hath begun this good worke in them, will also bring it in his good time to perfection; Only (as the Psalmist exhorteth) Let them waite the Lords leisure, waxe vpon and trust in him, and he shall comfort their hearts.

Psal. 27.14.

Sect. 2. Two sorts of sensible hardnesse of heart. The first ioy-

Now this sensible or discerned hardnesse of heart is also of two sorts: the first is of them who carefully vse all good meanes and endeauour with all diligence to better their estate, which they see to be most miserable, and to mollifie their hard hearts, and to attaine vnto heartie and vnfained repentance. Which who so doth, he may assure himselfe that hee is the childe of God and in his loue and fauor; for earnestly to desire repentance, and carefully to vse the meanes whereby we may attaine thereunto; to be displeased with our hardnesse of heart, and to labour that it may be mollified; to be sorry that wee can be no more sorry, and to be displeased with our selues, because we can no more be displeased with our sinnes, is very acceptable in the sight of God, though wee see but a little progresse in godlinesse, and but a small increase of repentance which we desire in great measure: for the Lord esteemeth the will for the deed, and the affection for the action, and wee may assure our selues that if on our part wee bee not wanting in the vse of the meanes, the Lord will not be wanting on his part to supply our wants, and to satisfie all our godly desires. Of this hardnesse of heart, which very often befalleth the dearest of Gods children, we haue many examples. The Prophet Dauid thus complaineth, Psal. 77.2. In the day of my trouble I sought the Lord, my sore ranne and ceased not in the night, my soule refused comfort. 3. I did thinke vpon God and was troubled, I prayed, and my spirit was full of anguish. 4. Thou keepest mine eyes waking; I was astonied and could not speake. So the Church complaineth thus, Cant. 3.1. In my bed I sought him by night whom my soule loued: I sought him, but I found him not. And Chap. 5. Verse 6. I opened to my welbeloued, but my welbeloued was gone and past: mine heart was gone when he did speake; I sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he answered me not. Whereby it is manifest, that euen the deare Saints of God are oftentimes destitute of all comfort and void of all feeling of Gods fauour, and of the powerfull working of the graces of his holy Spirit which they haue receiued, though they vse the meanes appointed of God for the stirring vp and increasing of grace in them; which commeth to passe, by reason of their hardnesse of heart, and drowsie dulnesse of Spirit in these spirituall exercises. And hence it is that many of Gods children doe grieuously afflict their soules, because they see these vnciean corruptions and imperfections, & hereby oftentimes are mooued to thinke that they are destitute of faith, and of all sauing graces of Gods sanctifying Spirit, because though they vse the meanes ordained of God for the begetting and increasing of grace in them, yet they cannot perceiue any fruitfull commeth thereby, nor feele in their soules any true comfort or joy in these spirituall exercises. For example, some complaine that though they continually heare the word, yet they feele ned with the vse of the means whereby it may be softned.

Example of this hardnesse of heart, Psal. 77.2.

Cant. 3.1. & 5.6.

feele no increase of any grace, no more Knowledge, no more Faith, no more zeale of Gods glory, no more mortification of their old corruptions, nor any reformation at all of their former sinfull liues, and therefore they thinke that they heare the Word of God without any profit, nay, that the more they heare it, the more wicked and rebellious they are; and that for this cause, it were much better not to heare the word at all, for as much as it will but aggrauate their sinnes and increase their condemnation, For hee that knoweth his masters will and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes.

But let not such poore mourning soules deprive themselues of that true comfort which of right belongeth to them: and to this end let them know first, that this is an vsual complaint of those children of God which profit most in hearing of the Word, though in truth they doe therein deceiue themselues; for in complaining that they profit not, they shew they profit. For whereas men naturally blinded with selfe-loue and carnall securitie, neuer discerne any such want and corruption in themselues, and therefore though they profit nothing by hearing the Word of God, yet it neuer troubles them, nay, they imagine that it is sufficient to present their bodies in Gods assemblies, and to heare Gods Word with their outward eares, though they vnderstand it not, nor retaine it in memory, nor bring forth any fruits thereof; these humbled soules by the hearing of the word are freed from this selfe-loue and carnall securitie, and haue the blind eyes of their vnderstandings opened, so as they see their faults and corruptions, and haue their hard hearts softened, so as they are grieued and displeased with them, and their will also are in some good measure sanctified, so that they earnestly desire to bee freed from their corruptions, and to heare the Word of God with more profit. Whereby it appeareth that though they cannot profit so much as they desire, yet they haue made a good progresse, and the Lord in his good time will perfit that good worke which he hath begun in them. And the same Spirit of God which hath wrought in them this desire of profiting by hearing the word, will also accomplish it, and so open their dull eares and soften their hard hearts that they shall profit, and reape manifold fruits of the seed of the Word which is sowed in the furrowes of their hearts. In the meane while the Lord may in his heauenly wisedome feed them for a time with a sparing hand, to the end that hee may truly humble them vnder the sight and sense of their corruptions, and that he may hereby so sharpen their appetites, that they may with more hungring desire, and earnest endeuour, feed vpon the heauenly Manna of his Word, but as this should increase their diligence, so it should not decrease their hope and comfort, for most assuredly when the Lord hath a while whetted their stomacke, and by pulling backe his hand moued them more earnestly to desire, and more highly to esteeme this precious food of their soules, he will fully satisfie their hungring desire, nourish them in all spirituall graces, and make them who are but babes, strong men in Christ. In the meane time let them not faint, but wait vpon the Lord, be strong and trust in him and hee will surely comfort their hearts, as the Psalmist speaketh, Psal. 27. 16.

& Sect. 4. Consolations for such as bewaile their want of feeling the fruit of their hearing.

Secondly, whereas they complaine that they doe not after the hearing of the Word, perceiue in themselues any increase of knowledge, faith, or any fauing grace; they are to know that howsoeuer no man ought to rest contented in this estate, but to labour more and more, not only to haue, but also to discerne an increase of grace in them, and a progresse in all vertue and godlinesse (for otherwise, though they may be the children of God, who for a time liue in such a case, yet they cannot attaine vnto the assurance thereof, nor feele the comfort of it in their owne conscience) neuertheless, there is no reason, why they should despaire or bee vtterly discouraged; for though they find no fruits of their hearing, yet if in obedience to Gods commandement, they will with care and diligence continue still hearers of the word, they shall vndoubtedly in the end attaine vnto their desire, and discerne in themselues a great increase of grace and godlines. Wee know that the seed doth not presently bring foorth fruite when it is cast into the ground, but first it seemeth to rot and perish, and then it sprouteth vp in a green blade, and then it beareth an eare, and a great increase and much fruit; and so it fareth oftentimes in hearing the word of God, for at first it seemeth quite lost and perished being sowne in some grounds, and yet afterwards it bringeth foorth not only a faire greene blade of an outward profession, but also a great increase of the ripe fruits of true godlinesse. So also the sicke patient taking soueraigne physick, is not presently cured, nay, in stead of feeling any ease thereby, he is made much more sicke in his owne sense and feeling, and yet after the physicke hath a while wrought with him, and purged him of some superfluous and hurtfull humours he findeth some amendment, and so by little and little hee is restored to his former health: And so is it also with the spirituall sicke patient, he doth not alwayes presently finde ease and quiet peace of conscience, yea, many times hee is tormented and vexed after he hath receiued the spirituall physike of the soule, the Word of God, more then euer in former times, but yet notwithstanding in processe of time when this physick hath effectually wrought with him, it purgeth him from his filthy corruptions, and strengtheneth him in all grace and godlinesse. And therefore though we feele presently no profitable fruits of hearing, let not this discourage vs from hearing, yea rather let it serue as a sharpe spurre to pricke vs forward to more diligence, and let vs ioyne therewith harty prayer, desiring the Lord to water the seed of his word sowne in our hearts with the dew of his holy Spirit, and then vndoubtedly the Lord in the end will heare vs, and to our exceeding comfort shew vnto vs the plentifull fruites of all our labours.

§. Sect. 5. Consolations for such as complain that the more they heare, the more they abound in sin.

Thirdly, whereas they complaine that the more they heare the greater are their sinnes and rebellion against God, in this they much deceiue themselues; for the Word of God doth not make them more sinfull, but whereas heeretofore they liued in carnall securitie and hardnesse of heart, hauing their vnderstandings darkened, and their consciences seared so as they could neither see nor feele their sinnes, though they were manifold and grieuous, now the Word of God made effectuall by the inward operation of his holy Spirit, like a glorious light hauing dispelled the dark foggy mists of ignorance, and illuminated the eyes of their vnderstandings with the knowledge of Gods Law, they better discerne their sinnes and miserable estate then in former times. And this the Apostle Paul sheweth vnto vs in his owne example, Rom. 7. 9. For (saith hee) I was once aliue without the Law, but when the commandement came, sinne reuiued. 10. But I died: and the same commandement which was ordained vnto life, was found to be vnto death. And Verse 13. Was that then which was good made death vnto mee? God forbid: but sinne that it might appeare sinne, wrought death in me by that which is good, that sinne might be out of measure sinfull by the commandement. So that the preaching of the Law doth not make vs more sinfull, but reuealeth those sinnes vnto vs which before we discerned not. As therefore the Sun shining vpon some filthy place doth not make it so filthy, but only doth make it manifest which was not seene in the darke; and as the wholesome physicke is not the cause of those corruptions which it purgeth out, but by expelling them out of the body sheweth them vnto vs: so the heauenly light and soueraigne physicke of Gods Word doth not worke in vs our filthy corruptions and hurtfull humours of sinne, but it reuealeth them vnto vs, which we before times by reason of our ignorance and blindnesse they were secret and hidden.

Rom. 7. 9, 10.

§. Sect. 6. That wee are not to neglect

When therefore out of the former premises this conclusion is inferred, either by Satan, who continually like a malicious enemy seeketh our destruction, or by our owne corrupt flesh (which is impatient of any rough handling, and therefore would rather haue vs sicke still then indure any paine in being cured) that it were better for vs to surcease the hearing of Gods Word, as seruing to no other end but to increase our condemnation; let vs in any case resist such motions, as being most dangerous tentations, which being entertained, will bring vs to vtter ruine and endlesse destruction. For if we depriue our selues of this heauenly light, the Deuill will easily leade vs hood-winkt vnto all sinne and wickednesse; if we long abstaine from this comfortable food of our soules, they will be hunger-starued, and all the graces of Gods Spirit will waxe faint and die in vs; if we disarme our selues of this Sword of the Spirit, Satan without any resistance will ouercome and take vs captiues, forcing vs as his miserable slaues to commit all those works of darknes in which he will imploy vs. And therefore as we tender the saluation of our owne soules, let vs not be discouraged from hearing the Word of God by any suggestions whatsoeuer, no not though wee seeme vnto our selues euery time wee come into the Church to goe a step towards Hell; for whilest we vse Gods Ordinance which is appointed as the meanes for our conuersion and saluation, there is some good hope, but when wee vtterly neglect it, our state is most desperate. But of this I haue already spoken more at large, and therfore will here passe it ouer referring the Reader to that place.

CHAP. XLII.

Consolations for such as bewaile their hardnesse of heart and wants in Prayer.

§. Sect. 1. Consolations for such as complain they cannot pray at all.

OThers complaine that they are so ouer-whelmed with hardnesse of heart, and drowsie dulnesse of spirit, that either they cannot pray at all, or if they doe, it is bartenly without all forme or fashion; or if they haue the eloquence of the tongue and good set formes of Prayer, yet they performe it coldly and drowsily without all earnestnesse and feruencie of spirit, hauing their minds carried away with wandring thoughts, so their prayers are but meere lip-labour; and therefore it were better not to pray at all, because they cannot performe this dutie in any good manner or measure as God requireth. And this is a tentation wherewith euen the dearest children of God are much vexed and troubled, and therefore it shall not be amisse to answere the seuerall branches of this complaint. First therefore, whereas they complaine that they cannot pray at all, this is to be vnderstood generally of all times, or specially at sometimes. If they say they can neuer pray, it is very likely that either they forget, or much deceiue themselues, for few or none, who are altogether destitute of the spirit of supplication, haue any vnderstandingeo discerne their want, or any grace to bewaile it, but content themselues with their lip-labour, as though they had performed acceptable seruice vnto God. And it is a worke of one and the same Spirit to make vs see our infirmities with hatred and dislike of them, and to mooue vs earnestly to desire of God that we may be freed from them, which earnest desire is heartie prayer. But if they further affirme, that they are most sure they doe neuer pray vnto God; I answere, that though this in it selfe be a most dangerous case, for it is a signe of a worker of iniquitie, not to call vpon God, as the Psalmist speaketh, Psal. 53.4. yet they haue no cause to despaire, for the same Spirit which hath reuealed vnto them this their sin and infirmity, and hath wrought in them a dislike thereof, will also remoue it and supply their want in Gods good time, if they will labour for this good gift, and not quench the good motions of the Spirit, when God offereth them vnto them.

But if they cannot deny that sometimes they haue had the grace giuen them of God to call earnestly vpon his Name; howsoeuer for the present time they are altogether disfurnished thereof, then let them know that their case in this respect is common with all the deare children of God. For hearty praier is not in our owne power, neither doth it attend vpon our owne will, but it is the gift of God, which at some times in plentifull measure he bestoweth vpon his children, and at other times he pulleth back his liberall hand; to the end that by the want thereof, wee may learne to ascribe the glory and prayse of our heartie prayers vnto God, who worketh in vs the will and the deed, and is in truth the only true Author of them; which prayse, otherwise in pride of heart wee would arrogate vnto our selues, as being a naturall facultie and in our owne power: and also to the end we may more highly esteeme it, and with more joy and diligence vse it when we haue it bestowed on vs, least through our negligence and slothfulnesse we moue the Lord to take it from vs. Seeing therefore this heartie calling vpon Gods Name is a gift of God, and a worke of his holy Spirit in vs, which at sometimes heretofore we haue discerned in our selues, let vs not altogether be discouraged, though at sometimes wee want it; for the gifts of God are without repentance; and though at sometimes they are withdrawne from our sense and feeling, yet shall they neuer be taken from vs; and if at any time we haue had assurance that the Spirit of God hath dwelled in vs, by this work thereof, effectuall prayer, wee may assure our selues that it hath not forsaken vs, but will againe helpe our infirmities: and whereas we cannot tell how to pray as we ought, the spirit it selfe will make request for vs with sighes; which cannot be expressed. Rom 8.26.

Secondly, whereas they complaine that they cannot pray in any good forme, but oftentimes fill Gods eares with impatient cries, and vncomfortable roarings in stead of prayers, they are to know that this is often incident vnto the children of God, especially when his hand is heauy vpon them, either in some outward affliction of body, or some inward anguish of minde. For example, the Prophet Dauid confesseth that when Gods hand was heauy vpon him day and night, his prayers were but roarings, Psal. 32.3. So Ezechias saith, that when hee should haue prayed, he chattered like a Crane or a Swallow, and mourned as a Doue, Esay 38.14. And the poore Publican oppressed with the heauy burthen of his sinnes, in stead of a long and eloquent speech, vttereth these few words; O God be mercifull vnto me a Sinner: and yet our Sauiour Christ testifieth of him, that hee receiued the remission of his sinnes, and went home iustified, Luke 18.13. 14. Neither in truth doth the Lord regard the eloquence of the tongue, but the earnestnesse of the heart, he respecteth not our well-couched words, and smooth vttered stile, but the feruencie of the spirit, and our humble and hearty desires, which are acceptably heard of him, though our tongues be silent. The sacrifices of God are not eloquent words, but a contrite spirit, a contrite and broken heart will not the Lord despise: as it is, Psal. 51.17. The Prayers indited by Gods Spirit, which also are according to the will of God, consist not in the words of the mouth, but in the sighes of the heart which cannot bee expressed, as the Apostle teacheth vs, Rom. 8. 26. And therefore if wee offer vnto God an humble and contrite spirit, if wee can sigh and grone earnestly, desiring those things we want according to his holy will, though wee cannot expresse our minds in any good order, or in a continued forme of speech; yet if we can from our hearts roare with Dauid, chatter with Ezechias, and vtter this abrupt speech with the poore Publican, O God be mercifull vnto mee a Sinner, the Lord will heare vs, and that as speedily, as though we could pray vnto him with the eloquence of men and Angels. For to what end principally serue words, but that we may by them expresse our minds to men, who otherwise could not vnderstand them? but the Lord who searcheth the hearts vnderstandeth our sighes, which cannot bee expressed, as it is, Rom. 8.26,27. And hee knowes our thoughts long before wee thinke them, as the Psalmist §. Sect. 2. Consolations for such as complain that they cannot pray in any good forme.

Psal.139.2. speaketh, *Psal.*139.2. Heis a Spirit, yea an al-seeing Spirit, and therefore our Prayers vnto him, are the desires of the heart, neither doe our words serue to perswade him, but to stirre vp our owne dull spirits, and to keep vs from disorderly wandring thoughts. Exod.14.15. So that if wee can with Moses lift vp our hearts vnto God with earnest desires, this will be a strong crie in the eares of the Lord, and he will surely heare it. If we can vnfainedly say with the Prophet Dauid, *Psal.*38. Psal.38.9. 9. Lord I powre my whole desire before thee, and my sighing is not hid from thee, we may be assured he will heare vs and grant our request, for he heareth the desire of the poore, he Psal.10.17. prepareththeir heart, and bendeth his eare vnto them: as it is, *Psal.*10.17. yea he doth not only heare them, and in some sort incline to their request, but hee will fulfill the desire of them that feare him, hee will heare their Psal.145.19. cry, and saue them; as the same Prophet speaketh, *Psal.*145.19. We know that a kind louing father, if hee see his sonne exceeding sicke will be very carefull and tender ouer him, to prouide all things necessary for him which may doe him good; and though with a faultering tongue and vnperfect speech hee aske any thing which is profitable for him to receiue, yet how readily will he hearken vnto him and grant his desire? yea if his sickneesse so increase that he becommeth speechlesse, vttering nothing but deepe grones, euen this language mooues him to no lesse care in vsing all meanes which may doe him good. Shall then wee daily obserue such fruits of loue in sinfull man, and shall wee doubt of finding lesse in the Lord, who is infinite in loue, mercie and goodnesse? farre be it from vs. Nay, let vs assure our selues, that though (our soules being sicke in sinne, and exceedingly dulled and beaten downe with some grieuous tentation) wee cannot vtter any thing but vnperfect speeches, yea, though we are through the grieuousnesse of our affliction and greatnes of our corruption stricken dumbe, and can vtter nothing but grones and sighes, yet if we desire to be freed out of this wretched case, and to haue the comfort of Gods Spirit, the Lord, who searcheth the heart and vnderstandeth our secret thoughts, will hearken vnto vs, and grant the desires of our heart, at least so far forth as it will stand with his owne glory and our euerlasting good.

*Q. Sect.*3. Consolations for such as bewaile their coldnesse and dulnesse in prayer. Thirdly, whereas others complaine that their hearts are so hard, and their spirits so dull, that they cannot vtter vnto God a prayer with any earnestnesse or feruencie of spirit, but exceeding coldly & very weakly and therefore they feare that God will neuer heare them; they are to remember, that the Lord heareth vs not, nor granteth our requests for the worthinesse and excellencie of our prayers, but for his Sonne Iesus Christs sake, who is our Mediatour and Intercessor, in whose Name we call vpon God; and therefore though our prayers be full of infirmities and vttered with much weaknes, yet calling vpon the Lord in our Sauiours Name, he will surely heare vs, as our Sauiour hath promised, Iohn 16.23. Verily, verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer you shall aske the Father in my Name, hee will giue it you. Moreouer, we are to know, that we doe not offer vp our prayers immediatly vnto God the Father, but by the mediation of Iesus Christ, who putting our prayers into the golden Vials which are full of the precious odours of his merits, thereby perfumeth them and maketh them an offering of sweet smelling sauour vnto God, and by washing them in his owne most precious bloud hee purgeth them from all their corruptions, and perfecteth all their wants and imperfections, so as now, though not in themselues, yet in him they will bee acceptable vnto God, and hee will mercifully grant our petitions.

Fourthly, whereas others complaine that their minds are carried away with worldly distractions and wandering imaginations when they are making their prayers vnto God; they are to know, that this befalleth also euen the deerest children of God, partly through their owne corruption, and partly through the malice of Satan, who laboureth most to interrupt vs in those holy exercises which he knoweth most profitable and effectuall for our saluation. Whereof it commeth to passe, that though diuers houres together we can talke of worldly affaires, and heare the speech of others without any distraction of minde, or thinking of any thing but of the subject of our present speech, yet when wee heare God speake vnto vs in the preaching of the Word, or when we speake vnto God in prayer and supplication, our minds wander hither and thither, though we striue never so much to containe them, because through our naturall corruption wee are soone weary of these holy exercises, and Satan is still at hand to suggest into our minds wandring thoughts, in which we take most delight: but this should not discourage vs from taking in hand these holy actions, but rather the consideration hereof should strongly mooue and prouoke vs to more earnestnesse, care and diligence, so as Satan may not preuaile against vs. And because we cannot as wee ought performe this holy dutie with reuerence and attention, faith and feruency of spirit, let vs in the beginning of our prayers craue the assistance of Gods holy Spirit, desiring him to helpe our infirmities in these respects, and to inable vs to performe this seruice vnto God in some good and acceptable manner. (And if notwithstanding sometimes, nay often, we receiue a foile, let it be an occasion to moue vs to take the more

paines, and to make a double request vnto God, not only that hee will grant vnto vs those things which wee desire, but also that for Christs sake hee will pardon our sinnes and infirmities in that we haue begged them so coldly negligently.

Lastly, whereas our spirituall enemy taketh occasion altogether to discourage vs from vndertaking these spirituall exercises, because therein wee bewray notable corruptions, and cannot though we striue neuer so much, performe them as we ought; let vs in no case yeeld vnto this temptation, but stoutly striue our selues against it. And to this end let vs consider, that if Satan can perswade vs to desist from performing those duties altogether, which wee cannot performe as wee ought, but with great weaknesse, corruption and imperfection, wee shall doe nothing at all which God requireth of vs. For example, the Lord commandeth vs to loue him with all our hearts, and with all our soule, and with all our strength, which duty of loue we performe with great weaknesse, and exceeding coldly; but because we cannot doe it as God requireth and as wee ought, shall wee not therefore doe it at all? God forbid. So the Lord commandeth vs to trust and to put our whole affiance in him, but wee are readie to rest and relie vpon the arme of flesh, and inferiour meanes, either in whole or at least in part, and when they faile vs, our trust in God is very weake & mingled with much diffidence and doubting: but shall we therefore put no affiance in God at all, because we cannot doe it so perfectly as hee requireth? be it farre from vs. So in the very like manner, the Lord expresly chargeth and commandeth vs to call vpon his holy Name, which dutie oftentimes we performe coldly and negligently, hauing our mindes carried away with wandring thoughts and worldly imaginations: but shall Satan working vpon our corruptions, therefore perswade vs altogether to desist from this holy exercise? no in no case let vs not yeeld to this tentation. For it is not left vnto vs at our owne choice as a thing indifferent to pray, or not to pray, but it is a notable part of Gods worship and seruice, and a singular duty which the Lord expresly enjoyneth vs to performe, whereunto he hath adjoyned most comfortable promises which depend not vpon our worthinesse, and the excellencie of our prayers, but on his owne free mercie and goodnesse, and the merits and intercession of our Sauiour Christ. So Psal. 50. 15. Call vpon mee in the day of trouble, so will I deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie mee. And Matth. 7. 7. Aske and it shall be giuen you. And Iohn 16. 23. Verily, verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer you shall aske the Father in my name, he will giue it you. 24. Aske and you shall receiue, that your ioy may be full. And the Apostle Paul chargeth vs, that we pray continually. Seeing therefore the Lord expresly requireth this dutie at our hands; though our infirmities and corruptions be neuer so great, let vs labour continually to performe it, assuring our selues, that if in obedience to his commandement wee call vpon him, and labour and striue against those corruptions, which shew themselues vnto vs in this holy action, he that hath enjoyned vs this dutie will also giue vnto vs his holy Spirit, if wee will attend his leasure, which will teach vs how to pray according to Gods will with sighes and groanes, which cannot be expressed; whereas on the other side, if our infirmities and corruptions wholly discourage vs from performing this dutie, we shall grieuously sinne against God in transgressing his commandement, and in robbing him of a chiefe part of his worship and seruice, and also wee shall plunge our selues into a most desperate estate, adjoyning our selues vnto the number of those wicked Atheists, of whom the Psalmist speaketh, who call not vpon God, Psal. 53. 4.

1. Thess. 5. 17.

Psal. 53. 4.

Q. Sect. 6. Of the second kind of sensible hardnes of heart.

And so much for answering those tentations, which Satan and our corruption doe suggest to discourage vs from the seruice of God, which haue their occasion and ground from our hardnesse of heart, and drowsie dulnesse, and deadnesse in performing these holy exercises. The other kind of sensible hardnesse of heart is seuered from the vse of these holy meanes; for sometimes it commeth to passe especially in the spirituall combate of tentation, that euen Gods deare children are so besotted and astonished, through the violence of the tentations of Satan, and huge waight of their owne corruptions, that they cannot endeuour in any sort to vse these meanes, whereby they might be comforted and releeued in this wretched estate, as the hearing of the word, calling vpon Gods Name, meditating in the Scriptures, and holy conferences; yea these holy exercises seeme for a time odious and loathsome vnto them, vntill it please the Lord by his owne good Spirit to awaken and raise them vp out of this spirituall trance, and to giue vnto them againe the feeling of his grace, and fauour, and good motions and abilities to serue him, and reape comfort vnto themselues, by these holy duties. In the meane time such are to support themselues from falling into vtter desperation, by calling to their remembrance their state and condition in times past: for if euer they haue had any delight in the holy exercises of Religion, Prayer, hearing the Word and godly conferences, if euer they could discerne in themselues any faith by the true fruits of sanctification they may take comfort thereby, assuring themselues that they shall againe be restored vnto their former estate, for the gifts and calling of God

Rom. 11. 29. Iohn 13. 1.

are

are without repentance, and those whom hee hath once loued, hee loueth vnto the end. An example hereof wee haue in Dauid, who being troubled and full of anguish in his spirit, his soule refusing all comfort, and being so astonished that hee could not speake, yet hee considered the dayes of old, & the yeeres of ancient time, hee called to remembrance his former songs in the night, occasioned by the great benefits which the Lord had bestowed vpon him, and so knowing that the Lord was vnchangeable in his mercie and goodnesse, he relieued his poore soule, which was ready to faint vnder the heauie waighe of present afflictions. And thus also Iob being brought through the violence of those heauy crosses which the Lord laid vpon him, euen to the brinke of desperation, so that he spared not to vtter in the bitternesse of his soule, fearefull curses and most impatient speeches comming neere vnto blasphemy, oftentimes comforteth himselfe by calling to mind his former integritie and righteousnes: whose example if the poore humbled soules will follow, they may raise themselues with true comfort, when they are sunke downe vnder their heauy burthen of present corruptions.

Psal. 77. 2, 3, 4.

CHAP. XLIII.

How the weake Christian may bee assured that his repentance is true and vnfained.

§. Sect. 1. Of the signes of true repentance, and first of the seuerall degrees thereof.

AND so much for answering Satans tentations, drawne from hardnes of heart, whereby he laboureth to perswade poore humbled sinners that they are vtterly destitute of repentance: but if hee faile of his purpose, then he will endeuour to make them beleeue, that though they haue some shew of repentance, yet it is not such as God requireth. For either he will affirme that it is hypocriticall and dissembled, rather for feare of punishment then for hatred of sinne or true loue of God; or if it be true, yet it is not sufficient, as being in very small measure, and in no proportion answerable to their hainous sinnes. Against both which tentations, it behoouen the humbled sinner to arme himselfe that hee may repell them, when they are suggested; and to this purpose that he may proue his repentance true and vnfained, hee is to take a true search of his owne heart and conscience and to examine his repentance according to some vndoubted signes which may serue as touch-stones to discouer whether it bee true and vnfained or dissembled, and hypocriticall. The first vndoubted signe of vnfained repentance is, when wee can obserue in our selues the seuerall degrees or parts thereof, as they haue beene wrought in vs by Gods Spirit; for from the enumeration of all the parts, wee may conclude that we haue the whole. The first degree is, that by the Law wee come to the knowledge, and acknowledgement that wee are hainous and grieuous sinners, who haue broken and transgressed all Gods Commandements. Secondly, from this knowledge and acknowledgement of our sinnes, proceedeth a true sense and feeling of them, and the punishments due vnto them, and an apprehension and applying to our selues of the anger of God, the curse of the Law, and eternall condemnation due vnto vs for our sins. Thirdly, from this sense of our miserable estate, there ariseth in our consciences feare and horrour of being ouer-taken and ouer-whelmed of those iudgements of God, and fearefull punishments which hang ouer our heads for our sins. Fourthly, from this feare and anguish of mind, proceedeth sorrow and bitter griefe, because wee haue thus hainously sinned, and made our selues obnoxious to all these euils; and also in the same respects a true hatred of sinne which still hangeth vpon vs, and an earnest desire to bee freed from it. Fiftly, this hatred of sinne and desire to bee freed from it, maketh vs earnestly to seeke and inquire after some meanes whereby we may attain vnto our desires, that being freed from all those fearefull euils which oppresse our consciences with the waighe of them, we may obtaine Gods loue and fauour and the assurance of our saluation. Sixtly, thus inquiring and searching wee find by the preaching of the Gospell, that our gracious God hath sent his Sonne into the World, to the end that hee might saue and deliuer vs out of this miserable estate, if wee beleeue in him, and also hath commanded vs to beleeue. Which being made effectuall by the inward operation of Gods holy Spirit, we haue true faith begot in vs, whereby we are assured of Gods mercie in Iesus Christ, and of the full remission of all our sinnes; the consideration whereof doth comfort and raise vs vp from falling into desperation and vtter destruction. Seuenthly, after this assurance of Gods loue, and of the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, there followeth first a true hatred of sinne, because it is sinne, and vnfained sorrow, not so much in regard of the punishment, which by our sinnes we haue iustly deserued, as that because wee haue offended our so gracious a God and tender louing father. Secondly, this sorrow will not suffer vs to hide, excuse, or extenuate our sins, but moueth vs in all humilitie to prostrate our selues before Gods mercie seate, and in griefe of soule to confesse them, acknowledging that confusion and condemnation is due vnto vs, which by no meanes we can escape but by Gods mercie, and the merits and righteousnesse of Iesus Christ. Thirdly, being assured of the pardon

Acts 2.

2. Cor. 7. 10.
1. Ioh. 3. 4.

don for our sinnes past, we labour and striue for the time to come to leaue and forsake them, and to mortifie the flesh and corruptions thereof, whereby we are led captiue vnto sinne, and also wee endeuour with a feruent zeale of Gods glory to serue the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse, that so by our godly liues we may glorifie him and expresse our thankfulnesse for all his inestimable benefits. Fourthly, if at any time besides or contrary to our purpose, we be ouer-taken by our corruption, and fall into sinne, there followeth in vs an holy anger and indignation with our selues, because we did not more carefully looke to our wayes; which godly anger proceedeth to the taking of a holy kind of reuenge, to the end that thereby our sinnes may be subdued, and our corruptions mortified. For example, hee that hath offended through gluttonie and drunkennesse, being truly penitent and angrie with himselfe for his sinne, will also tame the flesh by punishing the same through fasting and abstinence. Hee that hath offended by vsing excessiue pride in apparell, being angry with himselfe vpon his true repentance, doth withdraw from himselfe such costly attire, as otherwise in respect of his calling hee might lawfully weare.

And thus may wee come to the assurance that our repentance is true and vnfained, if we can find these degrees thereof and these effects and fruits in our selues. The second signe of vnfained repentance is, that it bee whole and intire, and that both in respect of the subject, and also the object thereof. In respect of the subject or of him in whom it is, it is required that it be not of any part alone, or yet of all parts sauing one, but it must be intire and totall of the whole man and of euery of his seuerall parts. It must be a reformation in the forsaking of sinne, and imbracing of righteousnesse, not in the body or soule alone, but of them both, and of all their seuerall faculties and powers; it must not onely be of the outward actions, but also of the inward affections and cogitations, it must not only be of the tongue & hand, but also of our wils & hearts, according to that, Iames 4. 8. Draw neere vnto God, and hee will draw neere vnto you: cleanse your hands ye Sinners, and purge your hearts ye wauering minded. Otherwise, if wee doe not turne vnto the Lord with all our hearts, with all our soules, with all our bodies, and euery faculty and part of them; if wee willingly entertaine sinne, and purposely suffer it to lurke in any secret corner of vs, our repentance is hypocriticall and not acceptable in Gods sight. And hence it is that Dauid saith, that if he should regard wickednesse in his heart, the Lord would not heare him. Psal. 66. 18. Secondly, it must be whole and intire in respect of the obiects: for it is not sufficient that wee performe obedience vnto some of Gods Commandements, if wee endeuour not to shew our obedience vnto all. It is not enough if wee forsake some of our sinnes, if we willingly and with delight entertaine and nourish others, neuer striuing against them, nor labouring to mortifie them: but if we would approue our repentance to bee sincere and vnfained, both vnto God and our owne consciences, we must desire and endeuour to performe obedience, as well to those Commandements which seeme hard and most vnpleasant vnto vs, as vnto those which are more easie and delightfull; we must not only forsake those sinnes which are not so pleasing vnto vs, but euen those which otherwise are as deare vnto vs as our right hand or eye; for hee that truly repenteth of one sinne, repenteth of all; hee that repenteth not of any one sinne, repenteth of none as he ought. Hee that wittingly and aduisedly neglecteth any one commandement, will in time neglect all, whatsoeuer outward reformation may seeme to bee in him, he that willingly entertaineth any one sinne, and nourisheth it as his deare darling in his bosome, will in the end make conscience of none; for a little leauen leaueneth the whole lumpe, and euen small sinnes if they be not mortified, will make roome for those which are greatest and most hainous.

The third signe of true repentance is, when our conuersion from sinne vnto God is not deferred in whole, or in part from time to time, but presently vndertaken: neither is it sufficient to vow repentance vnto God, or to purpose it for the time to come, but wee must presently endeuour and labour in it. It is not enough that wee subdue some sinnes now, and performe obedience vnto some of the Commandements, purposing to labour after more perfection when wee haue better opportunitie, but wee must presently labour and endeuour to performe obedience not to some, but to all Gods Commandements, and wee must out of hand set vpon all our sinnes, and labour to mortifie all our corruptions. For if the whole bodie of sinne be not beaten downe and subdued together, that which still liueth in vs, will giue life againe vnto that which is mortified, that which is still retained in the heart, will open a wide doore to let in that which is expelled. And so we shall but take in hand an endlesse and fruitlesse worke, if wee doe not set aside all excuses, and instantly labour to destroy the whole bodie of sinne, breaking thorow all difficulties and impediments; for wee shall neuer want hindrances in these holy actions, and excuses for want of fit occasion and conuenient opportunitie will continually offer themselues vnto vs. And therefore hee that will not turne wholly vnto God, till he haue a cleere passage and plaine way free from all

are without repentance, and those whom hee hath once loued, hee loueth vnto the end. An example hereof wee haue in Dauid, who being troubled and full of anguish in his spirit, his soule refusing all comfort, and being so astonished that hee could not speake, yet hee considered the dayes of old, & the yeeres of ancient time, hee called to remembrance his former songs in the night, occasioned by the great benefits which the Lord had bestowed vpon him, and so knowing that the Lord was vnchangeable in his mercie and goodnesse, he relieued his poore soule, which was ready to faint vnder the heauie waight of present afflictions. And thus also Iob being brought through the violence of those heauy crosses which the Lord laid vpon him, euen to the brinke of desperation, so that he spared not to vtter in the bitternesse of his soule, fearefull curses and most impatient speeches comming neere vnto blasphemy, oftentimes comforteth himselfe by calling to mind his former integritie and righteousnes: whose example if the poore humbled soules will follow, they may raise themselues with true comfort, when they are sunke downe vnder their heauy burthen of present corruptions.

CHAP. XLIII.

How the weake Christian may bee assured that his repentance is true and vnfained.

§. Sect. 1. Of the signes of true repentance, and first of the seuerall degrees thereof.

AND so much for answering Satans tentations, drawne from hardnes of heart, whereby he laboureth to perswade poore humbled sinners that they are vtterly destitute of repentance: but if hee faile of his purpose, then he will endeuour to make them beleeue, that though they haue some shew of repentance, yet it is not such as God requireth. For either he will affirme that it is hypocriticall and dissembled, rather for feare of punishment then for hatred of sinne or true loue of God; or if it be true, yet it is not sufficient, as being in very small measure, and in no proportion answerable to their hainous sinnes. Against both which tentations, it behoueth the humbled sinner to arme himselfe that hee may repell them, when they are suggested; and to this purpose that he may proue his repentance true and vnfained, hee is to take a true search of his owne heart and conscience and to examine his repentance according to some vndoubted signes which may serue as touch-stones to discouer whether it bee true and vnfained, or dissembled, and hypocriticall. The first vndoubted signe of vnfained repentance is, when wee can obserue in our selues the seuerall degrees or parts thereof, as they haue beene wrought in vs by Gods Spirit; for from the enumeration of all the parts, wee may conclude that we haue the whole. The first degree is, that by the Law wee come to the knowledge, and acknowledgement that wee are hainous and grieuous sinners, who haue broken and transgressed all Gods Commandements. Secondly, from this knowledge and acknowledgement of our sinnes, proceedeth a true sense and feeling of them, and the punishments due vnto them, and an apprehension and applying to our selues of the anger of God, the curse of the Law, and eternall condemnation due vnto vs for our sins. Thirdly, from this sense of our miserable estate, there ariseth in our consciences feare and horrour of being ouer-taken and ouer-whelmed of those iudgements of God, and fearefull punishments which hang ouer our heads for our sins. Fourthly, from this feare and anguish of mind, proceedeth sorrow and bitter griefe, because wee haue thus hainously sinned, and made our selues obnoxious to all these euils; and also in the same respects a true hatred of sinne which still hangeth vpon vs, and an earnest desire to bee freed from it. Fiftly, this hatred of sinne and desire to bee freed from it, maketh vs earnestly to seeke and inquire after some meanes whereby we may attain vnto our desires, that being freed from all those fearefull euils which oppresse our consciences with the waighe of them, we may obtaine Gods loue and fauour and the assurance of our saluation. Sixtly, thus inquiring and searching wee find by the preaching of the Gospell, that our gracious God hath sent his Sonne into the World, to the end that hee might saue and deliuer vs out of this miserable estate, if wee beleeue in him, and also hath commanded vs to beleeue. Which being made effectuall by the inward operation of Gods holy Spirit, we haue true faith begot in vs, whereby we are assured of Gods mercie in Iesus Christ, and of the full remission of all our sinnes; the consideration whereof doth comfort and raise vs vp from falling into desperation and vtter destruction. Seuenthly, after this assurance of Gods loue, and of the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, there followeth first a true hatred of sinne, because it is sinne, and vnfained sorrow, not so much in regard of the punishment, which by our sinnes we haue justly deserued, as that because wee haue offended our so gracious a God and tender louing father. Secondly, this sorrow will not suffer vs to hide, excuse, or extenuate our sins, but moueth vs in all humilitie to prostrate our selues before Gods mercie seate, and in griefe of soule to confesse them, acknowledging that confusion and condemnation is due vnto vs, which by no meanes we can escape but by Gods mercie, and the merits and righteousnesse of Iesus Christ. Thirdly, being assured of the pardon

Rom. 8.

2. Cor. 7. 10.
1. Cor. 3. 10.

don for our sinnes past, we labour and striue for the time to come to leaue and forsake them, and to mortifie the flesh and corruptions thereof, whereby we are led captiue vnto sinne, and also wee endeuour with a feruent zeale of Gods glory to serue the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse, that so by our godly liues we may glorifie him and expresse our thankfulnesse for all his inestimable benefits. Fourthly, if at any time besides or contrary to our purpose, we be ouer-taken by our corruption, and fall into sinne, there followeth in vs an holy anger and indignation with our selues, because we did not more carefully looke to our wayes; which godly anger proceedeth to the taking of a holy kind of reuenge, to the end that thereby our sinnes may be subdued, and our corruptions mortified. For example, hee that hath offended through gluttonie and drunkennesse, being truly penitent and angrie with himselfe for his sinne, will also tame the flesh by punishing the same through fasting and abstinence. Hee that hath offended by vsing excessiue pride in apparell, being angry with himselfe vpon his true repentance, doth withdraw from himselfe such costly attire, as otherwise in respect of his calling hee might lawfully weare.

And thus may wee come to the assurance that our repentance is true and vnfained, if we can find these degrees thereof and these effects and fruits in our selues. The second signe of vnfained repentance is, that it bee whole and intire, and that both in respect of the subject, and also the obiect thereof. In respect of the subject or of him in whom it is, it is required that it be not of any part alone, or yet of all parts sauing one, but it must be intire and totall of the whole man and of euery of his seuerall parts. It must be a reformation in the forsaking of sinne, and imbracing of righteousnesse, not in the body or soule alone, but of them both, and of all their seuerall faculties and powers; it must not onely be of the outward actions, but also of the inward affections and cogitations, it must not only be of the tongue & hand, but also of our wils & hearts, according to that, Iames 4. 8. Draw neere vnto God, and he will draw neere vnto you: cleanse your hands ye Sinners, and purge your hearts ye wauering minded. Otherwise, if wee doe not turne vnto the Lord with all our hearts, with all our soules, with all our bodies, and euery faculty and part of them; if wee willingly entertaine sinne, and purposely suffer it to lurke in any secret corner of vs, our repentance is hypocriticall and not acceptable in Gods sight. And hence it is that Dauid saith, that if he should regard wickednesse in his heart, the Lord would not heare him. Psal. 66. 18. Secondly, it must be whole and intire in respect of the obiect: for it is not sufficient that wee performe obedience vnto some of Gods Commandements, if wee endeuour not to shew our obedience vnto all. It is not enough if wee forsake some of our sinnes, if we willingly and with delight entertaine and nourish others, neuer striuing against them, nor labouring to mortifie them: but if we would approue our repentance to bee sincere and vnfained, both vnto God and our owne consciences, we must desire and endeuour to performe obedience, as well to those Commandements which seeme hard and most vnpleasant vnto vs, as vnto those which are more easie and delightfull; we must not only forsake those sinnes which are not so pleasing vnto vs, but euen those which otherwise are as deare vnto vs as our right hand or eye; for hee that truly repenteth of one sinne, repenteth of all; hee that repenteth not of any one sinne, repenteth of none as he ought. Hee that wittingly and aduisedly neglecteth any one commandement, will in time neglect all, whatsoeuer outward reformation may seeme to bee in him; he that willingly entertaineth any one sinne, and nourisheth it as his deare darling in his bosome, will in the end make conscience of none; for a little leauen leaueneth the whole lumpe, and euen small sinnes if they be not mortified, will make roome for those which are greatest and most hainous.

The third signe of true repentance is, when our conuersion from sinne vnto God is not deferred in whole, or in part from time to time, but presently vndertaken: neither is it sufficient to vow repentance vnto God, or to purpose it for the time to come, but wee must presently endeuour and labour in it. It is not enough that wee subdue some sinnes now, and performe obedience vnto some of the Commandements, purposing to labour after more perfection when wee haue better opportunitie, but wee must presently labour and endeuour to performe obedience not to some, but to all Gods Commandements, and wee must out of hand set vpon all our sinnes, and labour to mortifie all our corruptions. For if the whole bodie of sinne be not beaten downe and subdued together, that which still liueth in vs, will giue life againe vnto that which is mortified; that which is still retained in the heart, will open a wide doore to let in that which is expelled. And so we shall but take in hand an endlesse and fruitlesse worke, if wee doe not set aside all excuses, and instantly labour to destroy the whole bodie of sinne, breaking thorow all difficulties and impediments; for wee shall neuer want hinderances in these holy actions, and excuses for want of fit occasion and conuenient opportunitie will continually offer themselues vnto vs. And therefore hee that will not turne wholly vnto God, till he haue a cleere passage and plaine way free from all thornie distractions which pull him backe, and worldly incumbrances, which like blockes lying before him hinder him in his journey, may as well resolue to sit still and neuer returne vnto God by vnfained repentance.

¶. Sect. 4. The fourth signe, when it is continuall and constant.

The fourth signe of true repentance is, if it bee continuall from the first day of our conuersion vnto the end of our liues; for it is not sufficient to serue God by fits, or that our Religion should take vs like a tertian ague but euery other day. It is not that which God requireth, that wee should diuide our time betweene him and the World, or hauing begunne in the spirit wee should end in the flesh; but after wee are gone out of this Sodome of sinne, we must goe forward in our journey of holy obedience, and neuer like Lots wife looke backe with a desire to enjoy the pleasures thereof againe. Wee must so runne this spirituall race that wee may obtaine: now we know that runners of a race, as they doe not stand still after the watch-word is giuen, but labour with all speed to set forth with the first: so they doe not sit downe in the middle way, much lesse runne one while backward, and another while forward, but they still hasten on till they come to the Goale and obtaine the garland; and so it behoueth vs to runne speedily to the Lord by vnfained repentance, and not to desist in this our race till the end of our liues, if wee purpose to receiue that Crowne of glory which the Lord hath promised vs. Our life therefore must bee a continuall repentance, and so long as we liue, so long must we grieue for our sinnes past and present, and striue after newnesse of life, and a greater measure of sanctification. And of this wee haue an example in Dauid, who after his sinne was forgiuen, professeth that it was euer before him, Psal. 51. 3. that his teares were his meat day and night, Psal. 42. 3. that hee mourned all the day long, Psal. 38. 6. And all the night made his bed to swimme, and watered his couch with his teares, Psal. 6. 6.

¶. Sect. 5. The fifth signe, when it proceedeth from faith.

The last signe of vnfained and true repentance is, if it be mixed with faith: for true repentance is a fruit of faith, and they are neuer disioyned the one from the other, neither can wee euer sorrow for sinne as wee ought, till we haue some assurance of Gods mercie and loue in Iesus Christ. For otherwise though our sorrow be neuer so great, yet it is not so much for sinne as for the punishment thereof; not so much because we haue thereby displeased God, as for those torments of conscience which wee presently endure, and the torments of Hell, which for the time to come we feare. And therefore this desperate sorrow is it selfe to bee sorrowed for, as being seuered from faith, and therefore sinfull: and not proceeding from any loue of God, or hatred of sinne, but from the feare of punishment and condemnation.

2. Cor. 7. 10.

Rom. 14. 23.

But it may bee demanded, why amongst the signes of true repentance, I haue not numbred teares and weeping for our sinnes. To which I answere, because howsoeuer it is a notable fruite of vnfained repentance, vnto which euery Christian with true compunction of heart is to accustome himselfe, yet notwithstanding it is not an inseparable propertie thereof, for oftentimes there are teares whereas there is no true repentance, and there is true repentance whereas there are few or no teares. For the first, wee may plainly perceiue by continuall experience that teares proceed from diuers other causes then from true repentance; sometimes from excessiue ioy, whereby the pores and passages of the eyes are loosed and opened; and sometimes from naturall and worldly sorrow, whereby the said passages are constringed and straightned; sometimes from furious anger, and sometimes from compassion and pittie; and in spirituall things, sometimes these teares flow from vnfained repentance, sometimes from desperate sorrow, conceiued vpon the apprehension of Gods horrible wrath, or of the fearfull torments and eternall condemnation prepared for them. Whereof it commeth to passe that in the abundance of their teares, they vtter from a heart full of raging malice, horrible blasphemies against God. An example hereof we haue in Esau, who in the middest of his weeping and howling comforted himselfe with the remembrance of his fathers death, and of that most wicked murther which he intended vnto his innocent brother, Gen. 27. 41. So the rebellious Israelites being discouraged with the newes which the Spies brought who were sent to search the Land, are said to haue cried and wept, and yet in the midst of their lamentation to haue murmured against God and his seruants Moses and Aaron. So that simply teares are not a signe of true repentance vnlesse they issue from a broken heart and contrite spirit, from a true hatred of sinne, and from heartie sorrow conceiued because wee haue offended our gracious God. On the other side, if we be in sincerity of heart truly sorry for our sins in these respects, because we hate them and loue God, and are displeased with our selues, because we haue displeased our gracious Father, endeuoring to forsake our sinnes, and to leade a new life in holinesse and righteousnesse, then though wee can seldome or neuer shed teares, which is the case of some of Gods dearest children, yet our repentance is true and vnfained; for in this action the broken and contrite heart is more to be respected then the blubbred eies, howsoeuer oftentimes they goe together.

Gen. 27. 41.

Numb. 14. 1.

¶. Sect. Why teares are not numbred amongst the signes of vnfained repentance.

But for the better clearing of this point, let vs further consider, that true repentance con-

¶. Sect. The former point further proued.

consisteth in the conuersion of the whole man vnto God, and is chiefly exercised, and by exercise approoued and manifested in the conuersion of the chiefest faculties of the soule. As in the changing and renewing of the mind, when being freed from ignorance it conceyueth and vnderstandeth spirituall things; of the iudgement, when it doth approue that which God approueth, and doth disallow that which hee disalloweth, and being inlightened by Gods Spirit is enabled to discerne betweene things that differ, truth and falshood, right and wrong, good and euill. But chiefly it consisteth in the conuersion of the heart vnto God, and in the renewing and sanctifying of the will, when as it refuseth and shunneth that which the vnderstanding and iudgement doe present vnto it as euill and sinfull, and contrariwise thirsteth after and imbraceth that which they approue as good and lawfull. From whence it descendeth vnto the inferiour faculties, namely, the passions and affections, causing vnto loue that which God loueth, and to hate that which hee hateth; to reioyce in well doing, because it is pleasing vnto God, and to sorrow and grieue when by our sinnes we haue displeased him; the which sorrow is sometime expressed outwardly by our teares, prostrating of the body, beating of the brest, fasting and externall humiliation. So that if our vnderstanding bee inlightened with sauing knowledge, if our iudgements be sanctified and inabled to discern betweene things that differ; especially if our hearts and wils be changed, being now auerse vnto that euill vnto which formerly they inclined, and forsaking that same, which they before naturally imbraced, then may we be assured that we are soundly conuerted and haue truly repented, and that our affections and passions which are ruled and ordered by those superiour faculties are also changed and sanctified, though it doth not as yet appeare in the outward shedding of teares; seeing these are chiefe faculties of the soule in which our repentance is principally exercised and approued. Neither in truth are teares any part of our repentance, no not of vnfained sorrow for our sinnes, but only outward expressions and signes of it, which are not infallible (for they may be where true repentance is not, and not be where it is) but only probable and likely. Neither doe they so much follow the habit and disposition of the soule, as the constitution and temperature of the bodie, how ready and apt fine from moist braines, as from a full fountaine, and hardly gotten and wrung from a braine which is naturally dry, and therefore yeeldeth no superfluity of moysture; euen as a fountaine cannot ouerflow which hath not water enough to fill into the bolne. Whereof it is that children sometime apter weepe then those that are of ripe age, and women then men, and old men more, then when they were in their full strength, because they want naturall heate, to digest and consume their vnnaturall moisture. And yet no man will hence conclude that children, women and old men doe more seriously and soundly repent of their sinnes then men of ripe age and in their ful strength. Finally, extraordinary acts doe produce extraordinary passions and expressions; whereof it is that men truly conuerted, and falling through frailtie, besides their purpose into great and grieuous sinnes, are apt to entertaine great sorrow, and to manifest it to themselues and others with suitable and proportionable expressions of teares, afflicting of the body and externall humiliation. And this wee see in the example of Dauid, the waight of whose sinnes pressed out of him such streames of teares that hee mingled his bread, and watred his couch with them. And in Peter who hauing denied and forsworne his Master expressed his deepe sorrow with bitter weeping. And in Mary Magdalene who hauing beene a grieuous Sinner expressed her sorrow vpon her conuersion by powring out such streames of teares, that therewith shee washed the feet of her blessed Sauiour, whose hands and feet, and side being pierced with her sinnes, became a fountaine of bloud to purge her soule and body from all sinne and vncleannes. Whereas they who being assisted and vpholden with Gods gracious Spirit, and carefully keeping the Christian watch, haue alwayes their spirituall armour fast buckled vnto them, are preserued from such fearefull fals, and walke with God in the integritie and vprightnes of their hearts. And consequently hauing no sinnes to bewaile but humane frailties and infirmities, they are not apt to entertaine such bitter and extraordinary sorrow, nor to testifie it by such passionate expressions of teares; because renuing daily their repentance they haue a pardon of course sealed in their consciences, and their hearts fraughted with much peace, comfort and ioy in the holy Ghost, which causeth them to reioyce and to sing for ioy, euen in the midst of afflictions and persecutions, in the assurance of the remission of their sinnes, the sense of Gods loue and fauour, shining vnto them as a cleere light in the darkest and deepest dungeon, and the infallible hope of their eternall happines in Gods Kingdome. And so much concerning the signes of true repentance, which if after due examination wee can find in our selues, wee may be assured that wee are truly penitent; yea, I will say more, for the comfort of all humbled sinners, if after diligent search they find not in their owne hearts and feeling these signes of true repentance in them at all, or at least in very small measure, yet if they earnestly desire and sincerely endeuour

Rom. 5.5.

Act. 16.25.

deuour to attaine vnto true repentance, vsing those good meanes ordained of God for this purpose, they may assure themselues that they haue truly repented in the sight of God, who accepteth of the will for the deed, and of the affection for the action, as before I haue shewed.

Q. Sect. 8. That the assurance of the remission of sinnes dependeth not on the dignitie of our repentance.

And thus may wee repell the tentations of Satan, and receiue comfort vnto our owne soules, when he laboureth to perswade vs that our repentance is not true and vnfained but false and hypocriticall. But if the tempter cannot thus preuaile, in the next place hee will tell vs that our repentance though it be true, yet it is not sufficient, neither is there any proportion betweene our small repentance and our great sinnes, as Gods iustice doth require. To which we must answere, that the remission of our sinnes and reconciliation with God, dependeth not vpon the dignitie or quantitie of our repentance, but vpon the righteousnesse and full satisfaction of our Sauiour Iesus Christ. Neither doe we repent to the end that thereby wee may in whole, or in part satisfie for our sinnes; for though it could be imagined that the whole substance of our bodies should be resolued into teares, yet would they not all of them satisfie and appease Gods wrath for one breach of his Commandements; neither is it the water of our eyes, no nor yet the bloud of our hearts wounded deeply with sorrow, which will purge vs from our sinnes, either in respect of the guilt, punishment, or corruptions themselues; but it is the water and bloud which flowed from our crucified Lord, which cleanseth our guiltie soules from the filthy spots of sinne, being applied vnto vs by a true and liuely faith. And therefore let vs not with the Popish rabble, foolishly imagine that we can by our repentance merit any thing at Gods hand, or satisfie his iustice for our sinnes, for so shall we rob our Sauiour Christ of the glory due vnto him for our saluation, and spoile our soules of all true comfort; but let vs repent and vnfainedly turne vnto God in obedience to his Commandements, and to the end that thereby we may approoue our faith before God, the world, and our owne consciences to be true by this liuely and vndoubted fruit thereof. For it cannot bee if wee haue attained to the assurance of Gods loue and the remission of our sinnes, for the merits and satisfaction of Christ, but that wee will loue God againe; and this loue cannot be idle but will shew it selfe with a feruent zeale of Gods glory, and this zeale will make vs abhorre sinne whereby our gracious God is dishonoured, and loseth his reuerentiall, whereby his holy name is prophaned, and then sorrow with bitter griefe wring as wee are ouergrieuously with our sore transgressions fall into sin, scaling our Sauiour Christ hath purchased his precious bloud to purge vs, when as nothing else could make vs cleane. Seeing therefore our repentance doth not satisfie Gods iustice nor purge away any sinne, let vs not bee perswaded by Sathan that reconciliation with God, and the remission of our sinnes dependeth on the dignitie or quantitie of our repentance, but let vs assure our selues that it is only the bloud of Christ applied vnto vs by a liuely faith, that purgeth vs from all our sins, and maketh full satisfaction vnto Gods iustice. And therefore though our repentance bee but in small measure, yet so it be true & vnfained it is a certaine fruit of a liuely faith, and he that beleeueth is made partaker of Christ and all his benefits.

Lastly, Sathan will obiect, that many who haue more bitterly sorrowed then wee, and haue shewed more notable signes of exceeding repentance, haue notwithstanding beene rejected and condemned. To which wee are to answere, that though such haue shewed more sorrow, yet they haue had no true repentance, in that their sorrow hath beene destitute of faith, and not so much for any hatred of sinne or loue of God, or vnwillingnesse to displease him, as for horrour of conscience, and desperate feare of eternall condemnation. And therefore, though notwithstanding such sorrow, they haue beene condemned, yet we may be assured that vpon our true repentance, whereby on the one side, we looke vpon our sinnes, and are grieued for them, and on the other side behold Gods mercifull and gracious countenance in Iesus Christ by a liuely faith, we shal haue the pardon of our sinnes, and bee made partakers of eternall saluation. For the promises of the Gospell are not made to those who afflict themselues with a desperate sorrow, without any hope or desire of Gods mercie in Christ Iesus, but vnto those who turne vnto him by vnfained repentance, which is ioyned with a true faith and assurance of the remission of our sinnes and euerlasting life.

CHAP. XLIV.

How wee may preuent against Satans tentations that we haue true faith.

AND so much for answering those tentations of Sathan, whereby he laboureth to proue that wee haue no repentance, or at least a false and insufficient repentance, and consequently that the sweet and gracious promises of the Gospell doe not belong vnto vs. Now wee are to produce and answere such tentations as he alleageth and suggesteth into the minds of those who are effectually called against their faith. And these are of two sorts: the first whereby he laboureth to perswade them that that they haue no faith; the second, that their faith is so weak, so imperfect, & so mixt with doubting, that it is altogether insufficient for their saluation. For the first, he will thus frame his reason: Though thou boastest much of thy faith, and thereby presumest that thou shalt attaine vnto saluation, herein thou mayest much deceiue thy selfe, and altogether faile of thy purpose. For there may be in many shewes and shadowes of faith, and yet nothing in them but infidelitie; there are also many kinds of faith, and yet but one justifying and sauing faith, there is a generall or historicall faith; there is a faith of working miracles, which Iudas had as well as Peter; there is a temporary or hypocriticall faith; there is also carnall presumption, wherewith many who haue made goodly shewes haue beene bewitched and deceiued to their perdition; seeing then there are many false faiths, for one which is true, it is likely that thine is one of the greatest number, and consequently no true faith. And therefore doe not flatter and deceiue thy selfe in thy fond presumption, by applying the sweete promises and gracious consolations of the Gospell, for they appertaine only vnto those who are indued with a liuely faith, of which thou art altogether destitute.

And thus Satan endeauoureth to perswade the Christian exercised in the combate of tentations that he hath no faith, to the end that he may destroy it, and if it were possible bring it indeed to nothing. To which tentation we may first answere thus generally, that Sathans testimonie is no sound argument to proue that we haue no faith, nor to be beleeued of vs, seeing he is not only a malicious murderer, who continually seeketh our destruction; but also a false liar from the beginning, who hath not feared to belie men only, but euen God himselfe, accusing him of vntruth, enuie, and want of power in that tentation, wherewith hee assailed and ouercame our first parents. And therefore if he be so audaciously impudent, as that he durst belie God himselfe, we may assure our selues he wil make no scruple of belying vs. Seeing the Sonne is a malicious liar, who desireth nothing more then our destruction, let vs not doubt of our faith because of his testimony, yea rather because he saith we want faith, we may assure our selues that we are endued therwith: for that he may worke our finall ouerthrow, it is his vsuall custome to tell the true beleeuing Christian that he is destitute of faith, & contrariwise the vnbeleeuing worldling, that he hath a strong faith, whereas in truth there is nothing in him, but secure presumption. And therefore let it suffice vs, that we know we haue a liuely faith by the testimonie of Gods Spirit, and by trying and examining our faith by the touchstone of Gods Word, for on these our faith dependeth, and not on Satans testimony.

Yea, but when this thought or perswasion is put into our minds that wee haue no faith, how may we know, that it is the suggestion of Satan, & not the testimonie of the Spirit, or our owne well grounded opinion, seeing it is true, that many want faith who are so perswaded? I answer, that as there are diuers differences betweene them, so these two especially. First, because the testimonie of the Spirit and our owne true iudgements agree with the word, perswading vs that we haue a true faith when wee haue the vndoubted signes, and bring forth the inseparable fruits thereof, for the Spirit sealeth vs in the assurance of that truth of which wee are instructed in the Scriptures. As for example, when we haue a loue of vertue and obedience, and an hatred of impietie and sinne, a delight in the societie and fellowship of the godly; and an irksome and tedious dislike of their company who are lewd and vicious, when wee haue an earnest desire of pleasing God, joyned with an heartie endeauour of vsing all good meanes whereby wee may be enabled hereunto; and a heartie sorrow when contrary to this desire and endeuour we fall into sinne and displease God; and finally, when as wee bring forth the fruits of faith in the workes of holinesse towards God, and of righteousnesse, mercie and compassion towards our neighbours. So that the testimony of the Spirit, and a well grounded iudgement doe cleerely and demonstratiuely conclude that we haue a liuely faith, by euidence of truth, and such vndoubted signes & fruits thereof, as are specified in the Booke of God; or contrariwise that we haue no faith when these fruits and signes are wanting. Neither is this conclusion suddenly and rashly inferred, but vpon mature deliberation and examination, whether we can approue our faith by these euidences or no; whereupon it followeth that the party is perswaded that hee hath a true faith, and comfortably resteth, and rejoyceth in this perswasion, when after examination hee findeth these fruites and signes in him; or is throughly conuinced that he is yet in the state of infidelitie, when after search he seeth them wanting. But Satans suggestions, as they are for the most part vngrounded, so are they also rash and sudden. For as he telleth the secure worldling that hee hath a strong faith, when it is nothing else but a strong presumption, which is vtterly destitute of all those holy signes and fruites; so is he ready to perswade the true Christian, that he hath no faith at all, when as hee hath euident signes thereof, whereby he might easily demonstrate it both to himselfe and others, if hee were brought to the touchstone of Gods Truth, and would but examine his workes and wayes according to this vnpartiall rule which neuer erreth. And hereof it is that because their tentations §. Sect. 3. How we may know the former tentation to be the suggestion of Satan; and may discern it from the testimony of the spirit.

2. Cor. 1. 22.

tations haue no ground and footing in the Scriptures, therefore Sathan in his malicious policy thinketh it not fit deliberately to alleage his testimonies and reasons to proue that either the Worldling hath faith, or that the Christian wanteth it; but suddenly casteth into their minds such conceits, confirming them rather by his forcible injections, and often iteration of them, than by any euidence of reason or testimony of Scripture. And therefore though his tentations bee strong enough in the children of vnbeliefe, because their corrupt flesh ioyning with him, desireth to be thus perswaded, that they may goe on in their sinnes with security and delight; yet doe they not leaue any setled perswasion in the children of God, that they are destitute of faith; but onely for a time trouble and vexe them with feare and doubting; with which the Lord suffereth them for a while to be turmoyled, that they may vse all good meanes with more diligence to strengthen their faith, and make their election sure, and to labour that those signes and fruits may be so manifest in them, that they cannot be called into question.

Q. Sect. 4. That Satan out of all promises inferreth damnable conclusions.

The second difference whereby wee may discerne them, is the vse which is inferred of this conclusion; for if the good Spirit of God vpon the want of those signes and fruits, concludeth in our consciences that wee haue no faith, then doth hee moue vs hereupon to vse all good meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto it. Thou seest (will hee say) that thou art destitute of faith, because all those signes and fruites which are mentioned in the Scriptures are wanting; and therefore let neither Sathan nor thine owne flesh deceiue thee, by causing thee to mistake and rest in a fond presumption, in stead of a firme assurance; but considering that without faith there is no saluation, therefore (it being a matter of such necessitie, and so well worth thy labour) vse all diligence in the vse of the meanes whereby thou mayest haue true faith wrought in thee, as the hearing of the Word, reading of the Scriptures, Prayer, holy conferences and such like; and neuer be at rest till thou not onely haue a iustifying faith, but also till by the infallible signes and inseparable fruits thereof thou canst proue and demonstrate it to thine own conscience. But contrariwise Sathan out of this conclusion inferreth another vse. Thou (will hee say to the weake Christian) art destitute of a liuely faith, and therefore thou art not the child of God, nor heire of Heauen, but thou art a wicked reprobate reserued to destruction. Thou hast no faith, and therefore despaire of thy saluation seeing thy state is desperate, and no longer trouble thy selfe in vaine by vsing any meanes to attain vnto life eternall, for he that beleeueth not is condemned alreadie; but rather comfort thy selfe in thy discomfort, by following thy worldly pleasures and contentments; resting in this perswasion, that either those who want faith may be saued, and so thou among the rest, or that thou canst not be saued, seeing thou wants it. And thus may we discerne the testimony of the Spirit, from the suggestions of the Tempter, seeing the one proueth and demonstrateth, the other barely auoucheth and affirmeth: the one perswadeth the Christian, the other only vexeth and troubleth him; the one by enforcing the same conclusion draweth men vnto God, the other driueth them from him. Finally, the one mooueth them thereby to labour more earnestly in the vse of the meanes whereby they may attaine vnto faith, that so also they may be saued, the other draweth them vnto doubting and despaire, that so they may be damned.

Q. Sect. 5. How we may be stirred vp and against the former tentation, whereby Satan perswadeth vs that we haue no faith.

Now when by these signes we doe cleerely perceiue that this suggestion, to wit, that we haue no faith, is the tentation of Sathan, we must in the next place arme our selues against it. And to this purpose we must vse all good meanes with greater diligence, whereby our small sparke of faith may grow to a great flame, that so it may shine vnto vs in its owne light, and warme our hearts with true comfort; and then it will not easily bee hidden from vs with the ashes of Satans tentations, and much lesse extinguished with feare and despaire. As also wee must labour to haue in vs plentifully all those signes and fruites of faith, euen the rest of Gods sauing Graces, Sanctification, and Holinesse of life, and hatred of all sinne because it is displeasing vnto God, and a loue of all religious duties, ioyned with an earnest endeuour of approuing our holinesse towards God, by the workes of righteousnesse, mercy and compassion towardes our Neighbours. And then when Satan telleth vs that we haue no faith, wee may boldly according to the Apostles rule, Try and examine whether wee be in the faith or no; and finding in our selues the infallible signes and vndoubted fruits thereof, we may easily reject Satans tentation, giuing more credit to our own demonstrations grounded vpon Gods Word, than vnto his bare suggestion and assertion. In the meane time if by reason of the weakenesse of our faith we haue not these euident signes and fruits, whereby we may demonstrate it, and by reason hereof are continually molested with this suggestion, that we are destitute of faith, and therefore in the state of condemnation, the best way to be freed from it, is out of this assertion of Sathan, to inferre the Holy Ghosts consequence and conclusion; and when hee telleth vs that wee haue no faith; let vs conclude hereupon that therefore wee will with more care and diligence vse the meanes appointed by God for the working of true faith in vs; or when he affirmeth that, if we haue

any

any faith at all, it is weake and insufficient for our saluation; let vs inferre from hence that therefore wee will more conscionably heare the Word, receiue the Sacraments, vse reading, meditation, and holy conferences, and with all zeale and feruencie of spirit beg a greater measure of this grace at the hands of God, that so our faith being by all these good meanes strengthened and increased, may more certainly assure vs that wee shall be saued. And as wee account it an abused manner of arguing in earthly things, if any should thus reason with vs; thou art hungry and emptie, and therefore thou must bee content to perish for want of sustenance; thou art sicke, and therefore resolue to die; thou hast no wealth, and therefore thou must needes end thy dayes in want and penurie, seeing euery mans knowledge of his hunger, sicknesse and pouertie, maketh him resolue and conclude, that hee will therefore vse all good meanes to attaine vnto foode, physicke and riches, that so his bodie may bee nourished, his health recouered, and his state bettered and repaired: so let vs esteeme it alike foolish and ridiculous that wee should be moued by the sense of our spirituall wants idly to lie downe, despaire, and perish; seeing the Lord hath ordained ordinary meanes for the begetting and increasing of his graces in vs; which if we will vse we may be assured, that wee who are beggerly and poore in these sanctifying gifts, shall haue them multiplied and increased in vs, vntill at last wee shall haue plentie and abundance, for if wee bee not wanting in our labours and endeuours, the Lord will neuer be wanting in blessing them so with his holy Spirit, that we shall haue a good issue, and find ourselues much inriched with these spirituall graces. And if we will thus resist Satan he will flee from vs, if we make this vse of his suggestions, wee shall foile him with his owne weapons; and profiting in grace by his trials and temptations, and growing more strong by his more assaulting, we shall vtterly discourage him, and make him weary of such a fight which he findeth so beneficiall vnto vs, and disaduantageable to himselfe. And thus much for some generall meanes, whereby wee may be strengthened against this suggestion of Satan, whereby hee endeauoureth to perswade the weake Christian that he hath no faith.

Now let vs after a more especiall manner arme our selues against this temptation; and to this purpose is behoouefull vs, first, that wee preuent against Sathans false suggestions, that we haue faith: and secondly, that wee arme our selues by all good meanes with the shield of Faith, seeking daily more strength and increase thereof, vntill at last wee attaine vnto that fulnesse of perswasion, which will fill our soules with true peace and comfort, & also beate backe all the violence of Sathans subtill and fierce tentations. For the first wee may proue that we haue a true iustifying faith by diuers arguments, as first by the degrees thereof, from which we may thus reason; Whosoeuer can truly finde in himselfe the seuerall degrees of a liuely faith, hee may certainly be assured that he is indued therewith: but I (may euery Christian man say) doe truly, howsoeuer in weake measure, find these degrees of a liuely faith in mee, and therefore I am assured that I am indued therewith.

The first degree vnto true faith, is the illumination of our darke and ignorant minds, with the knowledge of the Gospell, or with the maine principles thereof, wrought in our minds by the outward meanes ordained of God; and the inward operation of his holy Spirit, whereby wee giue our assent to that truth of God, in which the vnderstanding is informed. And of this, the Apostle speaketh, 1. Tim. 2. 4. where hee saith, that it is the will of God, that all men should bee saued, and come to the acknowledging of the truth, that is, to the knowledge of the truth of God, and assenting thereunto.

The first degree of true faith, the illumination of the minde.

1. Tim. 2. 4.

The second degree is an assurance that our sinnes are pardonable, which is wrought in vs by the knowledge and due consideration of Gods infinite mercie, and Christs inualuable merits and indefinite promises of the Gospell, made without exception to all repentant and beleeuing Sinners; from whence also ariseth a generall hope that wee shall receiue the pardon and remission of our sinnes, which hope is nourished and increased by this consideration, that the Lord hath placed vs in his Church, and graciously granted vnto vs the outward meanes, whereby wee may bee brought vnto vnfained repentance, and haue a liuely faith wrought in vs, euen the ministery of the Word and administration of the Sacraments, vpon which onely condition, the couenant of grace, and all the sweet promises of the Gospell are made and assured vnto vs.

The second degree, a perswasion that our sinnes are pardonable.

The third degree is a hungring desire after grace, that is, not onely to bee made partakers of Gods mercie, and Christs merits and righteousnesse, by which wee are iustified, reconciled vnto God, and receiue the pardon and remission of all our sinnes; but also after the meanes and instrumentall causes, whereby the assurance of Gods mercie and Christs merits is deriued vnto vs, namely, true faith, and vnfained repentance, and the rest of the graces of Gods sanctifying Spirit. The which desire of grace is the beginning of grace, neither can wee desire it, till in some measure it be wrought in vs. For regeneration and sanctification is begun at the same time in all the

Q. Sect. 7.
The third degree, an hungring desire after grace.

parts & faculties of our bodies & soules, so that hee who is truly regenerate in any facultie or part, is also regenerate in the whole man. And therefore whosoeuer hath his will renewed and sanctified to desire that which is good, is also sanctified and renewed in his vnderstanding, affections, and in all the powers and faculties of bodie and soule. Moreouer (as before I haue deliuered at large) our desire of grace, faith, and repentance are the graces themselues which wee desire, at least in Gods acceptation, who accepteth of the will for the deed, and of our affections for the actions. And therefore if we earnestly desire to repent and beleeue, we doe repent and beleeue in Gods sight: and the Lord hath made the like gracious promises to this earnest desire of grace, which hee hath made to those who finde themselues plentifully endued with the graces themselues. So Matth. 5. 6. Blessed are they which hunger and thirst for righteousnesse, for they shall be filled. So the Virgin Marie saith in her song, That the Lord filleth the hungry with good things, and sendeth away the rich empty. And our Sauiour Christ calleth vnto him such as thus hunger and thirst: promising that he will satisfie them: Iohn 7. 37. Reuel. 21. 6. and 22. 17. Lastly, whosoeuer feeleth this desire in him ioyned with a carefull and continuall vse of the meanes whereby his desire may be satisfied, hee may assure himselfe that the Lord who hath wrought in him the will to desire, will also in his good time worke in him abilitie to performe, and the graces which hee so earnestly desires; for he will fulfill the desire of them that feare him: hee will also heare their cry and will saue them. As it is, Psal. 145. 19. So Psal. 10. 17. Lord, thou hast heard the desire of the poore: thou preparest their heart, and bendest thine eare vnto them. And therefore if in the midst of our afflictions and grieuous tentations we can cry out with the Prophet Dauid, Psal. 38. 9. Lord, I powre my whole desire before thee, and my sighing is not hid from thee; we may be assured how miserable soeuer we are in our owne sense and feeling, that we are in the state of grace, and shall haue our desires satisfied, for hee that hath begun this good worke in vs, will also in his good time finish and perfect it: as the Apostle speaketh, Phil. 1. 6.

Psal 145. 19. and 10. 17.

Q. Sect. 8. The fourth degree, an approching to the throne of grace.

The fourth degree is an approching vnto the throne of mercy, that we may in all humilitie confesse our sinnes, and acknowledge that we are guiltie of death and condemnation, and also that we may in the name and mediation of Christ obtaine the pardon and remission of them. And of this the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 4. 16. Let vs therefore goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, that wee may receiue mercy, and find grace to helpe in time of need. And the Prophet Hosea, Chap. 14. 2. O Israel returne vnto the Lord thy God, for thou hast fallen by thine iniquitie. 3. Take vnto you words, and turne vnto the Lord, & say vnto him: Take away all iniquitie, and receiue vs graciously, so will we render the calues of our lips. An example hereof we haue in the Prophet Dauid, Psal. 32. 5. Then (saith he) I acknowledged my sinne vnto thee, neither hid I mine iniquitie: for I thought I will confesse my wickednesse vnto the Lord, and thou forgauest the punishment of my sinne. So likewise the prodigall son hauing attained vnto the sight of his sinne, and to a desire of forgiuenesse resolueth to goe vnto his father, and to say; Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee; and am no more worthie to bee called thy sonne; make me as one of thy hired seruants, Luke 15. 18. 19.

Heb. 4. 16.

Hos. 14. 2.

Psal 32. 5.

Luk. 15. 18. 19.

Q. Sect. 9. The fifth degree, a speciall application of the promises of the Gospell.

The fifth degree, is a speciall perswasion wrought in vs by Gods spirit, whereby wee particularlie applie vnto vs the sweete promises of the Gospell, and are assured of Gods loue and fauor, and of the remission of our sinnes for the merits, righteousnesse, and obedience of Iesus Christ, resting vpon him alone for our saluation. An example whereof wee haue in the Apostle Paul. Gal. 2. 20. Then (saith he) I liue, yet not I now, but Christ liueth in mee: and in that I now liue in the flesh, I liue by faith in the sonne of God, who hath loued me and giuen himselfe for me. And this perswasion ought to goe before sense and experience: for first we beleeue, and are perswaded of the truth of Gods promises, and resist diffidence and doubting, and afterwards followes ioyfull sense and experience of Gods mercy, truth & goodnes towards vs. And hence it is that the Apostle defineth faith to bee the ground of things which are hoped for, and the demonstration or euidence of things not seene, Heb. 11. 1. And to this purpose our Sauiour Christ saith to Thomas, Iohn 20. 29. Thomas, because thou hast seene me, thou beleeuest: blessed are they which haue not seene, and haue beleeued. An example hereof wee haue in the Canaanitish woman, who though shee had no experience of Gods truth in his promises, yea though shee had many repulses, yet beleeued, and afterwards to her comfort had ioyfull experience of them: Matth. 15. 27.

Gal. 2. 20.

Heb. 11. 1. Iohn 20. 29.

Mat. 15. 27.

And these are the degrees of faith, which whosoeuer findeth in himselfe, he may bee assured that hee hath a true, liuely and iustifying faith, notwithstanding all the tentations of Sathan. If therefore hauing heard the Gospell, wee haue attained vnto some measure of knowledge of the chiefe principles thereof; if we haue giuen our assent vnto this truth in which our vnderstandings are informed; if hereby wee haue attained vnto this assurance, that our sinnes are pardonable, and haue conceiued some hope in consideration of Gods infinite mercie and Christs merits, that we shall be forgiuen and pardoned; if we haue an hungring desire after grace and mercie, and highly esteeme the merits and righteousnesse of Iesus Christ, so that wee wish nothing more then to bee made partakers of them; if by this desire we haue beene moued to flee vnto the throne of grace, and there humbly acknowledging our sins, haue earnestly desired pardon and forgiuenesse: lastly, if at any time wee haue discerned in our selues a perswasion of Gods loue, and of the pardon and remission of our sinnes, and that wee haue, or doe rest vpon the alone merits and obedience of Christ Iesus for our iustification and saluation, then may we be assured that wee are indued with a true iustifying faith.

The second argument to proue that wee haue a true and a liuely faith, is the testimony of Gods Spirit: for as the Apostle speaketh Rom.8.15. We haue the spirit of adoption, whereby we crie Abba Father. 16. And the same spirit beareth witnesse with our spirit that we are the children of God: and Verse 26. Likewise the spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what to pray as we ought, but the spirit it selfe maketh request for vs with sighes which cannot be expressed, &c. Whosoeuer therefore haue this testimonie in their hearts and consciences that they are the children of God; whosoeuer at any time feele or haue felt the Spirit of God powerfull in them, in powring out their soules in hearty prayer with sighes & grones which cannot be expressed, they may be assured that they haue receiued the spirit of adoption, and consequently are indued with true faith; for the spirit and the fruits thereof (amongst which, faith is one of the chiefe) are neuer seuered. Moreouer, the Apostle saith, 1.Cor.2.12. that we haue not receiued the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are giuen to vs of God. That is, not onely his spirituall graces in this life, in which number faith is one of the greatest, but those excellent ioyes in Gods Kingdome in the life to come, of which also wee haue some knowledge and taste by the illumination of the same spirit. Lastly, the Apostle affirmeth, 2.Cor.1.22. That God hath sealed vs, and hath giuen the earnest of the spirit in our hearts: and Ephes.1.13. he telleth the Ephesians, that after they had heard the Gospell and beleeued, they were sealed with the holy spirit of promise, which was the earnest of their inheritance, vntill the redemption of the possession purchased vnto the praise of the glory of God. Wheresoeuer therefore this testimonie of the spirit is, which is an earnest or seale assureth them that they are the children of God, there also is faith, for as the Apostle witnesseth, after that wee beleeue wee are thus sealed.

The third argument to proue that wee haue faith, is the conflict and fight which euery Christian feeleth in himselfe betweene the spirit and the Flesh, the World and the Deuill, and the Combat which is betweene faith and doubting. For so long as wee are destitute of the spirit, and a liuely faith, we are wholly ouer-swayed with the flesh, and Satan like a mightie Tyrant holdeth vs captiue peaceably and without any resistance; but when we haue receiued the spirit of God, and haue faith wrought in our hearts, then beginneth a fierce battell, which neuer endeth till by death our spirituall enemies get a finall ouerthrow. Though therefore this fight be most sharpe, and exceeding troublesome to the poore Christian, yet hee may thereby gather vnto himselfe sound comfort, and certaine assurance that he is indued with the Spirit of God, and a liuely faith. For when he discerneth that he is assaulted with Sathan and his owne corrupt flesh, hee may be assured that Sathan is diseased of his quiet possession by a superiour power, which can be no other but the power of Gods Spirit. Secondly, by his assaulting, it manifestly appeareth that hee findeth some resistance, so as hee cannot peaceably re-enter. Thirdly, that howsoeuer our faith seeme vnto vs neuer so weake, yet it is so strengthened continually by vertue of Gods Spirit, that Sathan and all the power of Hell cannot preuaile against it: for otherwise how could such weaknesse withstand such might? Lastly, being assured that it is the Spirit of God which assisteth and inableth vs to withstand Satan, we may also be assured that in the end we shall obtaine victory, vnlesse wee would fondly imagine that the Deuill is stronger than God, and the violence of his tentations more forcible to destroy vs, than the Spirit of God to protect and defend vs. For now they haue ioyned battell, and either the one or the other must get the vpper hand, either the Spirit of God must thrust out Sathan, or Sathan the Spirit of God. And therefore how can we doubt of conquest, seeing we are assured that God cannot take the foile, for his power is omnipotent, and with a word of his mouth, hee is able to destroy Sathan and all his adherents? and of his will wee need not to make any question, for it will not stand with his glory to receiue a repulse by giuing Sathan place, after he hath taken vpon him our protection.

Yea (will the Tempter say) but how wilt thou know that this battell is fought in thee? How canst thou be assured that it is the Spirit of God which fighteth in thee against thy spirituall enemies, and not rather thine owne tumultuous passions and perturbations, and diuers tentations suggested by the same Deuill? To which it is easie to make answere,

Q. Sect. 11. The third argument is the fight betweene the flesh and the spirit.

Q. Sect. 12. How we may know that this combate is fought betweene the flesh and the spirit.

for neither doth the flesh fight against Sathan, nor Sathan against the flesh, nor either of them against themselues, for so their Kingdome being diuided could not possibly stand, as our Sauiour Christ himselfe hath taught vs, Matth. 12. 25, 26. And therefore it must needs be some other force that causeth this opposition, which can proceed from nothing else but the Spirit of God. But this will more manifestly appeare, if we consider the contrary affections and actions which plainly shew themselues in this battell. For wee finde our faith assaulted with doubting and infidelitie, and these also againe beaten backe after they haue gotten some ground and subdued with the strength of faith; wee discerne also our affiance in God shrewdly shaken with diffidence and distrust, and afterwards this distrust vanquished againe by affiance, so as after we haue vttered through the violence of tentation some diffident and impatient speeches, yet at the length wee grow to Iobs resolution, Though he kill mee, yet will I trust in him. We may also discerne our zeale sometime so hot in Gods seruice, that it expelleth coldnesse and the fruit thereof dulnesse and drowsinesse of spirit, and sometimes by them it is cooled and in outward appearance quenched; and the like may be said of all the other fruits of the flesh and the spirit. Besides which fight and striuing betweene them and their fruits, the Christian may obserue in himselfe a misliking of the corruptions of the flesh, great griefe and vexation of minde, because hee is still subject vnto them, and an earnest desire to be freed from them, joyned with an holy endeuour in the vse of the meanes which are ordained of God for this purpose, and howsoeuer through the violence of Satans tentations and his owne corruptions, he be sometimes led captiue into sin, yet afterwards he is grieued for it, he hateth and abhorreth it, and earnestly desireth and endeuoureth for the time to come to leaue and forsake it, and to serue the Lord in newnesse of life. Now whence doth all this opposition & contrarietie proceed? shall we say from the flesh? why it is against all reason; for as the Apostle Iames disputeth, Iam. 3. 11. Doth a fountaine send out at one place sweet water and bitter? Can the fig-tree bring forth Olives, or a Vine figges? or rather as our Sauiour Christ reasoneth, Matth. 7. 16. Do men gather grapes of thornes, or figges of thistles? So may I demand, can the flesh, in the which, as the Apostle affirmeth, dwelleth no good thing, bring forth the fruits of the spirit, which are quite contrary to the nature thereof, namely, sorrow for sinne, hatred of it selfe, and its corruptions, and an earnest desire of sanctification and holinesse of life? it is impossible. And therefore we may conclude, that they are the fruits of Gods Spirit in vs, & consequently that we are the sonnes of God who are endued with a true and liuely faith; for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sonnes of God, which priuiledge belongeth onely to the faithfull, as appeareth, Iohn 1. 12. As many as receiued him, to them hee gaue the prerogatiue to be the sonnes of God, euen to them that beleeue in his name. So that whosoeuer haue the Spirit haue faith also, for the Spirit and faith, which is a fruit thereof, cannot be seuered.

Iam. 3. 11.

Matth. 7. 16.

Rom. 7. 18.

Rom. 8.

Iohn 1. 12.

The fourth argument, whereby wee may be assured that we haue faith, is our mortification and dying vnto sin, and rising againe to newnesse of life. For the bloud of Iesus Christ, which is applied vnto vs by faith, as it doth wash away the guilt and punishment of our sinnes, so doth it also cleanse vs in some measure from the corruptions themselues; and as his death and obedience hath merited the pardon of our sinnes, so also Gods Spirit, by vertue whereof we are more and more freed from the bondage and seruitude of sinne and Satan; and as by his resurrection, hee hath made way for our second resurrection, whereby we rise to euerlasting happinesse, so also for our first resurrection, whereby wee rise from sinne to newnesse of life. If therefore wee can find in our selues, that our sinnes and corruptions are by little and little mortified, and that wee striue and endeuour after holinesse and righteousnesse of life; if our vnderstandings be somewhat inlightned in the knowledge of Gods truth, and our stubborne wils inclined to holy obedience; if we discerne that our affections are in some measure changed and renewed, then may we be assured that wee are endued with a true and liuely faith, which hath applyed vnto vs Christ Iesus and his bloudshed, death and merits, by vertue whereof this worke of regeneration is begun in vs.

S. Sall. The fourth ... gument ... from our ... ctification.

Lastly, wee may be assured that wee haue faith by the seuerall fruites of sanctification and regeneration which proceed from it. For example, when we can sorrow & grieue for our sinnes past, not for any worldly losse or feare of punishment, but because thereby we haue offended God; when as we hate our present sins and corruptions, especially those which sticke fastest vnto vs, and are most pleasing to our corrupt nature; when as wee endeuour and striue to forsake and mortifie all sinne, though our carnall affection bee much indeared to it, by reason of some great pleasure or profit which it bringeth with it, auoiding with no lesse care, those sins which bring worldly benefit, then those which are accompanied with shame and punishment; when as wee loue God euen when hee afflicteth vs, and in obedience to his commandements, performe such holy duties, and embrace such vertues, not onely which are commendable mendable in the world, but also those which are accompanied with shame and reproch; when as we loue our brethren, yea euen our enemies, and shew this our loue by giuing vnto those who want, and forgiuing those who offend vs; and when more especially we extend this loue and the fruits thereof to those who are of the household of faith, and amongst these principally to Gods Ministers, who are instruments appointed of God for our conuersion and saluation; when as we can submit our selues vnto Gods will, and rest contented in al estates with his good pleasure; when as we loath this life, and the vanities of the world, and desire our dissolution, that wee may be with Christ, and be freed from our sinnes; when as wee are patient in afflictions, and in the middest of them haue some hope of tasting Gods mercie and goodnesse, grounding our hope vpon Gods promises and our owne former experience; when as wee delight in the hearing and meditating in Gods Word, and continue constant in the profession and practice of his truth, not only when our obedience is good cheape, but also when it is deare and very costly, and as well when it is accompanied with losse, as when we are in hope to gaine thereby. These and many other the branches of sanctification are the vndoubted signes of a true and liuely faith, and therefore whosoeuer after due examination, finde that they are endued with them, may also be assured (notwithstanding all Sathans suggestions to the contrary) that they haue faith; for this is the root from which these fruits spring, and they cannot be seuered.

But here the Tempter will take occasion to shake and weaken the faith of those that are but Babes in Christ, by telling them that these fruits of sanctification are wanting in them. Yea, that they ought not to beleeue, nor to apply Christ and the promises of the Gospell till they can discerne them; or if they doe, that they beleeue an vntruth and sinne against God through fond presumption. To which I answere, that if they can wholy denie themselues in the worke of saluation, and acknowledge that there is no name vnder Heauen by which they may be saued but by Christ alone; if they receiue him giuen vnto them of God, as their only Sauiour, and abandoning their owne merits doe rest wholly vpon Gods mercies, making his free couenant of grace in Christ the only ground of their faith and hope; then may they beleeue, yea ought to bee perswaded that Christ is their Sauiour, and that in and through him they shall attaine vnto saluation. Neither is it left at libertie to beleeue or not beleeue, but a thing expressly required, according to that of the Apostle Iohn; This is his Commandement that we should beleeue on the name of his Sonne Iesus Christ, with whom the Apostle Paul agreeth whereas he saith, that it is not only a faithfull saying in it selfe, but worthy to bee accepted and applyed to euery ones particular vse, that Christ Iesus came into the world to saue Sinners, which by our Sauiour himselfe is pressed vpon all vnder the penaltie of euerlasting condemnation for their vnbeliefe. He (saith he) that beleeueth not shall be damned. Secondly, I answere that this is a disorderly proceeding (which in many weake Christians shaketh their faith and hindreth their progresse in sanctification) when as they thinke themselues bound first to find in them the fruits of holinesse, and then to beleeue. For this is to make the effect to goe before the cause, and the fruit before the tree and root; whereas we must first beleeue and then bring forth the fruits of our faith in sanctification and newnesse of life. First, we must receiue Christ as our Sauiour, and be ingrafted into him by a liuely Faith, and then through the sap of grace, receiued from him, we shall be inabled to bring forth the fruits of holinesse and righteousnesse. Neither must wee in our first entrance into Christianitie examine our fruits that we may beleeue, (for this were to ground our assurance of saluation rather on something in our selues then on Gods free grace and Christs all sufficient merits and satisfaction) but to beleeue first, that afterwards we may be fruitfull. Nor must we first receiue Christ vpon the finding of any abilities in our selues, but vpon Gods vndeserued grace and free gift. It is true that we cannot attaine vnto further and higher degrees of faith or full assurance vnlesse we first bring forth the fruits of it in sanctification and true holinesse; nor haue the comfortable sense and feeling of our faith, vnlesse we can approue it by these signes and effects. But the first act notwithstanding in Christianitie is to beleeue, and receiue Christ by faith, and therefore if we will not beleeue till wee see those fruits, wee shall neuer see them because we doe not beleeue. For till we beleeue wee are in Christ, and without him we can doe nothing, as himselfe hath told vs. Iohn 15.5. whereas on the other side if by true faith we receiue Christ, and are ingrafted into him, then haue we an inward principle of life begot and begun in vs, which will kindly and naturally set vs on working as the soule doth the bodie, and will necessarily exercise it selfe in spirituall motion, and bring forth fruits without compulsion, as the impe doth that is grafted into a liuing stock. When as wee beleeue that God in Christ loueth vs, then will wee loue him againe (for we loue him because he loueth vs first, as the Apostle Iohn teacheth vs) and this loue will make vs carefull to please and fearefull to displease him, and willing to glorifie him by the shining light of our godly liues; if wee beleeue that Christ is our Sauiour, who hath dedeliuered vs out of all our miseries, and saued vs out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies, then will we loue our Lord and Redeemer, and in thankfulnesse for so great benefits, will chearefully serue him without feare in holinesse and righteousnesse all the dayes of our liues. Whereas if we will not beleeue, but doubt of the loue of God and our Sauiour Christ, because wee cannot discerne the fruites of our faith, wee shall bee made the more vnfruitfull by reason of our doubting.

CHAP. XLV.

Satans tentations grounded vpon our want of sense and feeling of faith, answered.

§. Sect. 11. Satans tentation, whereby he perswadeth vs that wee haue no faith, because wee feele it not.

WE haue shewed the signes by which euery beleeuer may bee assured that hee hath a true and liuely faith: which howsoeuer they bee to be obserued in euery faithfull man, yet not at all times, for oftentimes it commeth to passe, that the beleeuing Christian doth neither feele his faith nor the fruits thereof, especially in the infancie of faith, and in the combat of tentations, which giueth occasion vnto Satan of suggesting into his mind a dangerous tentation. Thou braggest much (will hee say) of thy faith, and thou confirmest this thy perswasion, that thou art enduced therewith with many signes and fruits which haue accompanied it; but if now thou examine thy selfe aright, thou shalt find in thee no such matter; and not to stand vpon other arguments, I appeale vnto the testimony of thine owne conscience, whether at this present thou hast any sense or liuely feeling of faith, or canst discerne those fruits thereof, which before thou hast spoken of; if not, then doe not flatter thy selfe in vaine with a fond perswasion, for though thou wilt not beleeue me, yet at least beleeue thine owne sense and feeling, which plainly telleth thee, that either thou neuer haddest any true faith indeed, or if thou haddest, yet that now it is quite lost and perished. For the answering of which tentation wee must distinguish betweene the habit of faith, and the act of faith; or betweene faith it selfe and the work and function thereof, which is to apprehend and apply Christs merits & Gods mercie and louing fauour, with all the gracious promises of the Gospell. As it is an habituall faculty of the minde, it alwayes continueth and abideth in Gods children, after it is once wrought in them by the Spirit of God; but in respect of the function, act or work thereof it hath many intermissions, and oftentimes seemeth to bee cast (as it were) into a dead sleepe. Now we are to know that wee cannot sensibly discerne faith, as it is an habituall vertue or facultie of the minde, although we haue it in great measure in vs, but only so farre forth as it manifesteth it selfe in its actions, workes and fruits. And therefore it is an vnsound and false manner of reasoning, to inferre, because we doe not sensibly feele and discerne that wee haue faith, therefore we are destitute thereof; for the habit of faith, or faith it selfe may be in vs, and yet for a time may bee so hindered by outward accidents, that it cannot shew it selfe in his actions and fruits, by which alone it is sensibly discerned.

The answere to the former tentation.

But I will make this more cleere and manifest by some familiar similitudes and examples. We know that in the sicknesses and diseases of the bodie nature is so infeebled and ouercome, that sometimes the partie affected falleth into a dead swound, wherein he is depriued for a time, not only of the vse of the vnderstanding, reason and memory, but also of his senses, motion and vitall functions, so that in respect of sense and outward appearance, hee is quite depriued of all his vitall, sensitiue and intellectuall faculties; but yet a while after by reason of some outward meanes vsed, or by the secret power of nature working in him, hee is restored to the vse of all againe, and liueth, feeleth, moueth and vnderstandeth as in former times, because he had not lost these faculties, but onely by some grieuous impediment was hindred of the vse of them in their actions and functions: so that heere this manner of reasoning appeareth absurd and false, these faculties of the soule cannot be sensibly discerned, and therefore he is quite destitute of them. And thus also it is in respect of our faith, and other habituall vertues, oftentimes through the sicknesse of the soule in sinne or the outward violence of Satans tentations it seemeth cast into a swound, and depriued of all the spirituall facultes and vertues thereof, faith, loue, zeale, hope, patience and and the rest; but yet soone after by hearing the word, by godly admonition, instructions, reprehensions, and consolations made effectuall by the inward operations of Gods Spirit it is reuiued, and all the spirituall graces thereof shew themselues againe in their wonted strength; so that this inference is no lesse false then the other, there is no sensible appearance of these sanctifying gifts and graces, and therefore they are quite lost and perished; for the graces themselues remaine, though for a time they appeare not in their actions and fruits. So in the time of winter the fruitfull trees are so nipped with the cold frosts, and so weather-beaten with with tempestuous stormes that they appeare naked and bare, not onely without fruit but also leaues, so as if we shall iudge according to sense and outward appearance, we should falsly conclude that they are dead;

for

for by experience we know that they liue & suckе nourishment out of the earth, euen when they are most spoyled of their lumper beautie, and though they are tossed with the winde, yet hereby they are not hurt, but rather like deeper rooted, and so are made capable of more nourishment, and though they be nipped with cold frosts, yet hereby they are not made barren, yea rather hereby their wormes and cankers are killed, and they prepared and made fit to bring forth more fruit in the time of Summer, when the comfortable spring approcheth, and the sweet showres and warme Sun-beames fall and descend vpon them. And thus it is with the spirituall graces in the poore Christian, in the winter of affliction, they are nipped with the cold frosts of feare and doubting, and weather-beaten with the boysterous blasts of Sathans temptations, so as they seeme euen dead at the very roote, if we shall iudge according to outward sense and appearance: but yet by experience we finde that it is farre otherwise, for hereby they are not ouer-turned though they be shaken, and this shaking maketh them to take more deepe roote in godlinesse, and though they be nipped and pinched with feares and doubtings, yet they perish not, only the canker-worme of pride, fond presumption, and false confidence is mortified and killed, and they hereby are prepared & fitted to bring forth more plentifull fruites of holines and righteousnes, when the spring of true comfort commeth, wherein the sweet showres of Gods holy Spirit distill vpon them, and the warme Sun-shine of Gods loue and fauour againe appeareth to them. The fire is sometime so couered with ashes, that it sendeth forth neither light nor heate, and therefore in outward sense and appearance, it seemeth quite extinguished, but when the ashes are removed and more wood added to it, it bursteth out into a great flame, and makes all the standers by to perceiue its heat and light: and so the graces of Gods Spirit are sometimes so couered with the ashes of our corruptions, that there appeareth no sparke of them, nor yet any heat of true comfort; but when our corruptions are removed with vnfained repentance, and a new supply of grace ministred vnto them by Gods Spirit, then doth their light appeare vnto vs and warme our hearts with true comfort, and not to vs alone but euen those about vs see our shining light, and glorifie our heauenly Father. A man hath not always the vse of his senses, reason, and vnderstanding, as in his sleepe, but because we cannot alwaies discerne these faculties, shall we therefore conclude that this man who is asleepe is senselesse, vnreasonable, and without vnderstanding? it were most absurd: for if we but expect a while till hee bee throughly awaked, our argument will appeare manifestly false: and so sometime the poore Christian is ouer-taken with the fleepe of drowsie securitie, and is ouer-whelmed for a time with hardnesse of heart and dulnesse of spirit, so as none of those spirituall graces which are in him can sensibly bee discerned by himselfe or others; but shall hee or wee conclude, or beleeue Sathan so concluding, that he neuer had them, or now is depriued of them? Why it were as absurd as the other. For when hee is awaked out of his drowsie sleepe by the voice of the Lord sounding in his eares, and by the good motions of his holy Spirit, his faith, loue, zeale and all other vertues and graces shew themselues in their fruits and actions, as manifestly as in former times.

Cant. 5. 2. Matth. 25. 5.

Seeing then these arguments which are taken from sense and feeling so often faile, let vs not be perswaded by Satans temptations, to beleeue that we are destitute of faith, and other sanctifying graces of Gods holy Spirit, because at sometimes we cannot sensibly discerne them; for though now our soules seeme so sicke in the sense of sinne, that there appeareth no signe of life, yet the Lord will raise vs vp againe, and restore vs to perfect health. Though now we seeme fruits of faith, whilest we are nipped with the winter of temptations, yet the Lord will water vs with his holy Spirit, and warme our frozen hearts with the liuely beames of his loue and fauour, so as we shall bring forth abundant fruits in due time and season. Though now there appeare not a sparke of grace in vs, by reason all is couered with the ashes of our corruptions, yet the Lord will surely adde a fresh supply, and blow vpon vs by his holy Spirit, so that our light and heate shall appeare to our selues and others; and though now our spirits bee oppressed with drowsie dulnesse, yet the Lord in his good time will cause vs to awake by hearing his voice sounding in our eares out of his holy Word, and will againe quicken and reuiue vs with his holy Spirit, so as after this sleepe wee shall be enabled to follow with cheerefulnesse, our labours and workes, both which concerne his seruice, and those duties also which concerne our brethren, only let vs not tempt the Lord in prescribing him a time, but wait his leisure, and he will surely helpe vs.

CHAP. XLVI.

How the weake Christian is to comfort himselfe, whenbee is depriued of the sense of faith, and sensibly feeleth the vnnaturie corruptions.

§. Sect. 1. That the Christian in the want of present sense, must comfort

BVt thou wilt say, how is it possible that my soule should receiue any comfort, or that I should preserue my selfe from falling into vtter desperation, seeing I cannot feele in me any good thing, nor discerne any sparke of Gods grace? What hope remayneth, when as I plainly discerne in stead of faith, doubting and infidelitie; in stead of the loue of God, hatred & rebellion, in stead of zeale, coldnes and drowsie dulnes, and in stead of all sanctifying graces, nothing else but a beastie masse of filthy corruptions? I answere, that when thou hast no comfort in thy present sense and feeling, then thou must call to thy remembrance the times past, in which thou hast by faith apprehended Gods loue, mercie and goodnesse towards thee, and brought forth the fruits of thy faith in the works of holinesse, appertaining to Gods seruice and the workes of Christian righteousnesse, belonging to our brethren. For we may assure our selues, that if euer wee haue truly discerned these graces of Gods Spirit by the fruits of sanctification in vs, they are not taken from vs, seeing the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. And where he hath begun a good worke, there he will finish it and bring it to perfection, as the Apostle speaketh, *Phil.*1.6. Wee know that the woman being with child, feeleth no life or motion of the childe diuers moneths together, after the time of her conception, and after that she hath felt it stirre and moue oftentimes, there is an intermission wherein shee feeleth not the motion thereof a good space together, and yet notwithstanding because in former times shee hath felt it, shee is perswaded that a liue childe is in her, and comfortably hopeth to haue happy trauell. And thus it fareth with Gods children oftentimes, after that by the seed of the Word, faith is begotten and conceiued in them, they feele no life, motion, nor vndoubted signes thereof a long while, and after that they haue the remission of their sins & are reconciled vnto God, they haue not the feeling & sense of pardon & reconciliation diuers moneths, yea sometimes many yeeres together, which the Lord in his wisdom & mercy doth, that hee may moue them hereby vnto more serious repentance, and earnestly to hunger after a greater measure of faith, carefully vsing the meanes ordained for this purpose; and that they may more esteeme & be more thankfull for his inualuable benefits after that they haue full assurance of them. And after they haue a feeling of faith and other spirituall graces by their motions and fruits, oftentimes againe they are depriued of it, either because they haue wounded their consciences by falling into some knowne sinne, or for that it pleaseth the Lord to exercise their faith, and manifest his power in their weakenesse, mouing them hereby to denie themselues, and to rest wholly vpon him, yeelding vnto him the whole glory [illegible] of their saluation. What therefore [illegible] done in such a case? Surely they are not vtterly to be discouraged, nor to suffer themselues to sinke into the gulfe of desperation; but as the sense and feeling of their state ought to humble them vnder Gods hand, and to moque them to enter into a due examination of themselues, and to a serious repentance for their sinnes, so they must take comfort vnto themselues, and prop vp their declining faith, by calling to minde former times wherein the Lord hath shewed his mercifull and gracious countenance vnto them, and wherein they in token of thankfulnesse haue glorified God, by their holines and righteousnesse of life. An example whereof we haue in the Prophet Dauid, who being grieuously afflicted, could not receiue in his soule any true comfort: for howsoeuer he did thinke vpon the Lord, yea hee was still troubled, and though hee prayed vnto him, yet his spirit was full of anguish. What helpe did he then find in this his present distresse? Hee telleth vs in the fifth Verse: Then (saith he) I considered the dayes of old, and the yeeres of ancient time; I called to remembrance my song in the night, namely, his songs of thanksgiuing, whereby hee had prayed God for his great benefits: and I remembred the workes of the Lord, certainly I remembred thy wonders of old. So the holy man of apprehending and conceiuing of God as of his enemie, in respect of his present sense and feeling, and being moued by his friends to doubt of his graces, which hee had receiued, and to condemne himselfe for an Hypocrite, comforteth himselfe and strengtheneth his faith in the middest of all these grieuous temptations, by calling to his remembrance, his fruits of faith and workes of sanctification, which hee had discerned in himselfe in former times, as appeareth, Chap.31. Whose example if the children of God in like distresse will follow, how miserable soeuer they are in their present sense and feeling, yet they may receiue vnto themselues comfort, because Gods gifts and calling are without repentance.

Rom.11.29.

Philip.1.6.

Psal.77.

Ver.11.

And as wee are thus to comfort our selues with the remembrance of our state in times past: so for the present when wee haue not a liuely sense and feeling of our faith, we must examine it in the fruits thereof, which are oftentimes euident and apparant, when as faith it selfe from which they spring is hidden and secret. For as, though wee see not the roote of a tree which is couered with the earth, yet when we behold the boughes, and branches, leaues and fruits, wee certainly conclude, that there is a roote, which giueth vnto them life and nourishment; And as when we see the Sun-beames, wee thereby know that it is risen and shineth, though wee doe not, or cannot behold the bodie thereof; and finally as when wee looke vpon the flowing streames, we are assured that there is a fountaine from which they spring, though it bee re-remote and not subject to our view: so though our faith, the roote of godlinesse and fountaine of all grace be hidden from vs, and is not to bee discerned by our sense and feeling; yet by the fruits of sanctification, and by the Chrystall streames of pietie flowing from vs, both in our words and actions, we may be assured, that howsoeuer our faith be couered with the heauy burthen of grieuous tentations, so as we cannot comfortably behold it; yet it dwelleth and liueth in vs, seeing these effects doe necessarily shew, that their is a cause from which they proceed. If therefore we cannot feele faith rooted in our hearts, let vs labour to discerne it in its fruits; And first let vs consider, if wee be inflamed with Gods loue; for seeing we haue only so much loue of God, as we haue assurance of his loue towards vs, hereof it will necessarily follow, that according to the proportion of our loue, such also is the measure of our faith, though for the present wee haue no sense and feeling of it. And if we be alike doubefull of our loue, let vs examine it also by the fruits thereof; as namely whether we be not desirous to please God, and endeuour in some poore measure, to performe obedience to his Commandements; whether we be not zealous of his glory, and euen grieued and much displeased, when we see or heare, that he is dishonoured either by our selues or others; whether wee loue our brethren and take delight in the societie and fellowship of those who are good and vertuous, loathing on the other side their company who are impious, and professed sinners; whether we affect a Christian because he is a Christian, and, hauing no worldly respects, could be content to performe vnto him all duties of mercy and loue, because he is a sincere Professour of God true Religion. For if wee haue this Christian loue & charity towards men, wee may hereby bee assured that our hearts are possessed with the loue of God; seeing this is the fountaine from which it issueth and springeth. So also we may examine our faith by the fruits of repentance: for if our sinnes trouble and grieue vs, euen in this respect, because by them we haue offended our gracious God; if euen those sinnes which heretofore haue beene pleasant to our carnall appetites, are now so loathsome and distastfull, that we would not be hired to commit them wittingly & willingly with great riches and preferments; If we haue a desire to be freed from sinne, not onely in respect of the guilt and punishment, but also in regard of the pollution and corruption, and in loue to God, striue to performe the works of holines, yea (if it were possible) to yeeld perfect obedience to the Law of God, then may we hereby be ascertained that we haue a true & liuely faith, though we cannot sensibly discerne it, in the act of apprehending and applying the mercies of God, and merits of Christ, because it were as impossible to haue these things in vs without a liuely faith, as it is to find a perpetuall running riuer without a fountaine, or fruit vpon that tree, which neuer had either sap or root.

Psal. 77.

§. Sect. 3. That there is a proportion betweene our faith and all other sauing graces, and between these graces one with another.

And as we may by other of Gods sanctifying and sauing gifts and graces which are the fruites of faith, bee assured that faith it selfe is rooted in our hearts: so may we also by their measure and quantitie be certified of the measure and quantitie of our faith; for as all our sauing gifts and graces, sanctification and new obedience, doe spring and issue from our faith as from the roote and fountaine, so haue they an answerable proportion thereunto. So that where there is a large root and plentifull fountaine of a liuely Faith, there are also many fruites of grace, and abundant streames of repentance, sanctification and new obedience. For example, according to the measure of our Faith and assurance of Gods loue towards vs, such a proportion wee haue of loue towards God, and answerable to our loue is our feare to displease him, our zeale of his glory, our desire to doe those things which are acceptable in his sight, our hatred of sinne and loue of righteousnesse, our sorrow for our former iniquities, our care and endeauour of future amendment, and our loue of the brethren, yea, euen of our enemies for Gods sake. And so also according to the measure of our faith, such is the measure of our affiance, hope, patience and the rest. Whereupon it followeth, that where there is a strong faith, and full perswasion of Gods loue, there is also a great measure of loue towards God, of zeale to glorifie him, of care to please him, hatred of sinne, loue of righteousnesse and the rest: and contrariwise where there is a large proportion of these graces and fruits of Faith, there also is strength of Faith, and fulnesse of perswasion answerable thereunto. So as it is impossible that wee should haue a great hatred of sinne, or loue of righteousnesse, a zeale of Gods glory, or loue of our brethren, if either wee were destitute of faith, or had it but in small measure, seeing according to the proportion of our faith, wee haue a like quantitie and proportion of all and euery of Gods sanctifying and sauing graces.

§. Sect. 4. With what cautions and limitations it is to be held that there is a iust proportion betweene all Gods graces in vs.

Howbeit this which I haue said is to bee vnderstood with some caution and limitation; neither doe I here speake of common gifts of the spirit, or of meere morall and ciuill vertues, which being either naturall, or attained vnto by a mans owne industry and labour, are imparted to the vngenerate as well as vnto those who are truly conuerted vnto God, all which may bee in diuers measures and proportions, either as they are immediatly bestowed vpon them, or as they more labour for the inriching of themselues with with one rather then with another: but onely of euangelicall, sanctifying, and sauing graces, which are so proper and peculiar to Gods elect, as that they are imparted to them all, and to no other. Neither doe I speake of the acts and operations of these sanctifying and sauing graces, by which they are made sensible vnto vs, and subiect to our feeling & comprehension: for in regard hereof they are oftentimes, either all of them ioyntly, or any of them seuerally increased and diminished; yea some of them quite lost in our sense and feeling, when as the other doe still remaine without any great alteration; by reason of some outward accidents which further the manifestation of some graces, or hinder and hide others: so as the one sort are more cleerely seene, and the other not discerned: but I only vnderstand it of the inward habits of these graces which hold still their proportion, euen when their acts and operations doe most differ. And this wee may see euen in corporall faculties and their actions and operations; for whilest the hand is bound so as it cannot worke, the eye may see, and the foote may walke; whilest the eye cannot see, by reason of the darknes, or because it is hudwinckt, the mouth may taste, and the nose may smell, and all the parts of the bodie feele: and yet at the same time when the actions and operations of any of these parts are hindred, their faculties doe still remaine in their wonted proportion, the hand hauing his full strength when it is bound, as well as when it is at libertie, and the eye the faculty of seeing, euen when it is couered, or in the darke, as well as at noone day, when the vaile is taken away, though for the present they cannot exercise them in their functions and operations. Whereof it is that wee may truly say at the same time, that the eye cannot see, and that the hand hath no power to worke, speaking of their actions and functions: and that the eye can see, and the hand as able to worke as euer before, if we respect their faculties and habituall vertues and abilities. And thus also these sanctifying and sauing graces increase and diminish in their actions and operations, when as the faculties, habits, and graces themselues doe still keepe the wonted proportion. They increase and exceed one another when as being exercised they master their contrary corruptions, and being tried doe get the vpper hand in the tentation; whereby (like the Sunne in his full strength when all cloudes are vanished away) they shine gloriously vnto vs in their perfect brightnesse. And contrariwise they are decreased & diminished, when they are hindred in their operations, through the violence of our corruptions, and foiled in the tentation, not in their habits, but in their acts, not in themselues, but in respect of our sense and feeling; for in this regard they hold still their owne proportion, euen as the Sunne is alwayes alike light and bright in its owne nature, when it is couered with a cloud, and when the cloud is quite dispelled, though there bee great difference in respect of our sight and apprehension.

The which being rightly vnderstood may enable vs to answere diuers obiections: for first it may bee said, that as there are diuers tentations which generally oppugne all graces, so there are some which more directly oppose against some one sanctifying gift, then against any other; euen as there is also some naturall corruption, which striueth and struggleth against one grace vnto which it is directly opposed, in more speciall & forcible manner than against all the rest; and therefore when in these incounters these speciall tentations and corruptions doe preuaile, and foile those particular graces which they oppose, it must needs follow that they are more impaired and abated then other graces which are not thus assaulted.

To which I answere, that if the habit of one grace could be thus abated (which I doe not hold) the proportion might still continue, seeing the other graces might be abated with it, because they are mutuall causes of one another, and so any one receiuing strength imparteth it to al the rest; & contrariwise. But I rather say, that the habits of the graces do still continue in their perfection & proportion; & that the defect and disproportion which by reason of these tentations and corruptions, are in one grace more then in another, is not in the habit of this grace, but onely in its act and operation, which for a time is hindred and impaired through the violence of this spirituall incounter. For as in a corporall fight the hand and arme being more exercised then other parts, are also more wearied and become weake and feeble, when as other parts of the bodie retaine their wonted strength; but yet this weakenesse is only in respect of the act and operation, and that only for a time, and not in respect of that habituall strength and power which is in the hand and arme, (for this as experience teacheth vs is not abated, but rather increased by this exercise.) So though that grace which is exercised more especially in the tentation, or fighteth against some strong corruption, in respect of the act and operation be weakened and foiled, the rest retaining their wonted vigour, yet the habit of this grace is not impaired, but rather by this spirituall exercise strengthened and increased. And yet though it increaseth & waxeth stronger in this fight and exercise, this growth maketh no disproportion, nor maketh it exceed the rest of Gods

Gods saving graces which are not thus exercised and tried, because (as I said) they are mutuall causes one of another, and therefore no sooner is any of them increased & strengthened, but it also strengtheneth and increaseth all the rest. As for example, the stronger our faith is in the assurance of Gods loue, the stronger also our loue towardes God waxeth; the stronger also our hope, affiance, zeale and obedience: the more wee increase in loue, the more in repentance, sorrowing more heartily that wee should by our sinnes offend one whom we loue so much; and more earnestly endeuouring to doe those things which are acceptable vnto him. And so againe the more wee are increased in loue, zeale, repentance, and the rest; the more cause we haue to increase in faith and in the assurance of our election and saluation, because these things make our election sure, and they who embrace and doe them shall neuer fall, as the Apostle telleth vs. And of this mutuall strengthening and increasing of one grace by another, Saint Paul telleth vs where he saith, that, Faith causeth peace with God, and this peace and Faith worke patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope, Christian boldnesse, which suffereth vs not to be ashamed, because the loue of God is shed abroad in our harts by the holy Ghost which is giuen to vs.

Againe, whereas it may be objected that in the Scriptures some are commended for one grace more than for an other; yea when as they are discommended for their defects in some, they are praised and approued for their excellency in others; the same answere may serue which I gaue to the other. For in regard that they had some one grace more tried than the rest, when they got the vpper hand in the triall and tentation, and exercised their grace to the glory of God who gaue it, it was more manifested, and by this occasion more approued and commended, euen as one Souldier in the band being of equall strength and valour with some others, may yet haue more prayse of these vertues, hauing had that occasion of exercising and manifesting them which the other wanted. And thus Iob is specially commended for his patience, because this was more principally exercised by his afflictions, though he had as great a measure of faith, hope, affiance, and obedience, as in the History plainly appeareth. And so Abraham is chiefly commended for his Faith, because it was chiefly exercised in the apprehension of Gods promises, though his loue, obedience, hope and the rest, were in him in as great a proportion. And thus also when one grace more than another was hindered, and foiled in the tentation, their defect and weakenes in this grace is condemned, as more tending to the dishonour of God and euill example of others, not that the habit was lost or impaired, but only that it failed in the act and operation, either because God withdrew his strength, or suffered it to bee assaulted with a more strong and violent tentation. And yet they are said to haue this grace abated, because the operations are hindered and empaired, which alone manifest them vnto vs, and make them subject to our sense and feeling; though the habit remayne in his wonted perfection. And thus the Angell of the Church of Ephesus is commended for his workes, labour, patience, zeale, wisdome, perseuerance, and yet is censured for defect in loue, not that these graces could be in him, and loue it selfe, or the habit of loue wanting, for loue is the fountaine of all true obedience; but because his loue by some inward corruption or outward tentation was for a time hindered in some particular acts and operations, which tended to Gods dishonour and the offence of others; and therefore afterwards admonishing him to rise from whence hee had fallen, and to repent, he biddeth him not to recouer his lost loue but to doe his first workes, that is, such actions of loue as hee had formerly done, which either through the violence of his inward corruptions, or through the strength of some outward tentation hee had omitted and neglected.

Verse 5.

Lastly, whereas it may bee objected, that one man excelleth in zeale, another in loue, another in meeknesse, another in patience, and so in the rest; and that they appeare defectiue in some graces that excell in others; to this wee may answere, that it is not because this proportion of Gods saving graces holdeth not; but eyther because mens naturall parts, inclining to one grace more than to another, doe make it seeme greater than the rest; or because some naturall corruptions, or strong tentations, doe hide and hinder the operations of some one grace more than another, so as it cannot appear in its owne quantitie and greatnesse. For example, if a man be of an hot and cholericke nature, a small measure of true zeale, will seeme great and feruent. If a man be of a soft and milde disposition, a little true meeknesse, patience or humilitie, will make a goodly shew and seeme excellent. And contrariwise a great proportion of grace is scarce discerned, where the naturall corruptions are strong and contrary vnto it. So a great deale of holy loue is hardly perceiued in a man who is naturally of a sowre and sullen disposition; an high degree of spirituall patience scarce appeareth in a cholericke and froward nature, and so in the rest. Whereby it appeareth that notwithstanding a man may seeme rich and excellent in some graces in respect of his naturall parts inclining to them, and very poore and defectiue in others, vnto which he is naturally most auerse and indisposed, yet theſe ſanctifying gifts and graces in themſelues hold a proportion, both euery one, one with another, and all with faith from which they flow and ſpring.

Q. Sect. 8. The conſolation which ariſeth from the equall proportion of Gods ſauing graces in vs.

From whence ariſeth to euery Chriſtian man a ſingular conſolation: for when hee feareth that he is deſtitute of any ſpirituall grace, he is to conſider if he haue any other graces; as when hee cannot diſcerne his faith, hee is to examine himſelfe, what meaſure of repentance, hatred of ſinne, or loue of righteouſneſſe he hath attained vnto; what loue hee hath of his brethren, and eſpecially of Gods Miniſters, what zeale, what feare of God, what patience, humilitie and the reſt; aſſuring himſelfe that though his faith or other graces bee hid from him through the greatneſſe of his corruptions, or violence of tentations, yet they are in him, and hold a proportion with thoſe other graces which he beſt diſcerneth. As therefore though wee cannot ſee the roote of a tree, yet wee may iudge at the quantitie thereof by the bodie and boughes which ſpring from it; and when we haue but one limbe of a man, we may by holding a proportion, geſſe at the quantitie of euery other member, & alſo at the whole ſtature: ſo howſoeuer we can not diſcerne our faith or ſome other grace of God in vs, yet may we know that we haue it, and in what quantitie and proportion it is in vs, by ſome other grace and ſanctifying gift which is more plaine and eaſie to bee diſcerned; ſeeing they are ſo enchained one to another, that he who hath one hath all the reſt, and the linkes of this golden chaine hold a fit and conuenient proportion amongſt themſelues.

Q. Sect. 9. That we may haue a true faith though we apprehend Gods wrath, and haue no preſent ſenſe of his loue.

But heere Satan will further obiect, that we are not onely without all ſenſe and feeling of faith, but alſo that we doe ſenſiblie feele the heauie burthen of Gods wrath, and plainely diſcerne his frowning and angrie countenance againſt vs: and therfore howſoeuer thoſe children of God, who are in his loue and fauour, may haue ſome faith in them, although it doe not alwayes ſo ſenſibly appeare, yet it is impoſſible that wee ſhould haue any ſparke thereof, ſeeing wee haue not any ſenſe of Gods loue and fauour; nay do ſenſiblie perceiue the cleane contrarie. To which we are to anſwere, that faith doth not relie it ſelfe vpon our ſenſe and feeling; for as the Apoſtle ſaith, faith is the ground of things (not preſently enioyed, but) which are hoped for, and the euidence or demonſtration of things (not which are ſubiect to the ſenſes, & ſenſiblie diſcerned; but which are not ſeene Heb. 11. 1. And wee beleeue that ſuch ioyes are prepared for vs, as neither eye hath ſeene, nor eare hath heard, nor the heart of man conceiued, as it 1. Cor. 2. 9. And it is a kind of infidelitie to beleeue onely thoſe things which are ſubiect vnto our ſenſes and vnderſtandings; and therefore when Thomas would not beleeue that Chriſt was riſen before it was made manifeſt to his ſenſes, he is reproued for infidelitie, Be not (ſaith he) faithleſſe but faithfull. So that when our ſenſe and feeling ceaſe, then faith beginneth his chiefe worke; and the moſt excellent faith ſheweth it ſelfe moſt clearely when we haue no ſenſe and feeling, or when wee diſcerne and feele the plaine contrarie, for it is an eaſie matter to bee ſtrong in faith, when God ſheweth himſelfe gratious and mercifull; but when hee appeareth vnto vs like an angrie Iudge, when as his wrath flameth out againſt vs, then to behold his loue thorow the vizard of anger, to apprehend by faith his mercie and goodneſſe towards vs, when our ſenſes apprehend nothing but his wrath and diſpleaſure, to grow to Iobs reſolution in the middeſt of our bitter agonies, and grieuous afflictions, though he kill me, yet will I truſt in him, and when wee haue receiued many repulſes and bitter ſnubs, yet with the Cananitiſh woman, to continue our ſuite, argueth ſuch a faith as is hardly found, no not in Iſrael. Our want of ſenſe therefore of Gods loue and fauour doth not argue want of faith, for our faith is not grounded vpon our ſenſe and feeling, but vpon Gods gratious promiſes, immutable goodneſſe, and infallible truth: and if euer wee haue taſted of Gods loue and mercie, whatſoeuer we apprehend in our preſent ſenſe and feeling, faith concludeth that wee are ſtill in his loue and fauour, for hee is without change or ſhadow of change, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Iam. 1. 17. and whom hee loueth, to the end he loueth them, as our Sauiour hath taught vs, Iohn 13. 1. Though then our ſenſe of Gods loue faile, yet may our faith continue ſtrong, as appeareth plainly in the example of Iob, who though he conceiued of God in his ſenſe and feeling that hee had hidden his face from him, and tooke him for his enemy, though he ſeemed to write bitter things againſt him, and made him to poſſeſſe the ſinnes of his youth, yet by a liuely faith he ſtill reſted and relied vpon him, proteſting, that though he ſhould ſlay him, yet he would truſt in him: as appeareth, Iob 13. 15. Yea our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe who could not ſinne through infidelitie, in reſpect of his preſent ſenſe and feeling complaineth that God had forſaken him.

If therefore Satan goe about to perſwade vs that wee are without faith, becauſe wee preſently apprehend not Gods loue, nor feele the ſweet taſte of his goodneſſe; we are to anſwere, that wee are not to build our aſſurance vpon our owne ſenſe and feeling, but vpon Gods vnchangeable goodneſſe, and gratious promiſes made vnto vs in Chriſt Ieſus. And if at any time our ſenſe and and feeling, tell vs one thing (namely, that God hath withdrawne his loue from vs, and will neuer againe looke graciously vpon vs) and the word of God assure vs of another thing (to wit, that God will neuer forsake vs, but continue his loue towards vs vnto the end) we are not to giue credit vnto our owne feeling, but vnto Gods word; for otherwise what do we else but prefer our oft deceiuing sense, before Gods infallible truth, and imagine that we can better discerne and iudge of our estate then God himselfe? But the word of God telleth vs, that if we turne vnto the Lord by vnfained repentance, sorrowing for our sinnes past, hating our present corruptions, and desiring and endeauouring to mortifie the flesh and the lusts thereof, and to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life; and if we beleeue in Iesus Christ resting vpon him for our saluation; or though presently wee feele not this faith and repentance, yet if euer in former time we haue discerned them in vs, that then we are receiued into Gods loue and fauour, and therefore shall haue his loue continued vnto vs vnto the end, be made partakers of his gratious promises, and heires of euerlasting life; for the promises of the Gospell are not restrained to those who feele their faith, but to those that haue faith; not to those who feele that they doe beleeue, but vnto those who doe beleeue.

Sect. 11. Neither is the not feeling of Gods loue & fauour a good argument to proue that we are out of his loue and fauour; or the apprehension of his wrath and anger in our sense and feeling a sound reason to perswade vs that wee are subiect to his wrathfull displeasure, seeing the being of a thing, and the sensible discerning of the thing to bee, are diuers; and therefore howsoeuer at sometimes they concurre, yet oftentimes they are seuered and disioyned. So that the conclusion which is inferred negatiuely from the senses, to proue the not being of their obiect, is not onely commonly false, but also oftentimes, absurd and ridiculous; For example, sometimes we see not the beames of the Sunne, as in the night season, or when it is couered with some thicke blacke cloud, but shall wee heerehence conclude that the Sunne shineth not, nor will euer againe appeare vnto vs? So the bright beames of Gods loue and fauour are sometimes hidden from vs in the night of tentations, & so shadowed with the cloud of our grieuous sinnes, that wee cannot sensiblie discerne them; but shall we hence inferre, that there is no grace and mercie to bee found with God, or that hee will neuer againe make them shine vpon vs? The one is as absurd as the other, and both grossly false. Thus sometimes the Sun is eclipsed by the interposition of the Moone, so as wee cannot discerne his light, or very dimly; but if any man should conclude from hence that it were quite taken away, or that we were depriued vtterly of his life-preseruing influence, the experience of two or three houres would shew the foolish weaknes of his sensible argument: and so in like manner, Gods fauour and loue are sometimes so eclypsed with the interposition of some great afflictions, that wee cannot discerne them for a time, or but very dimly: but if we shal inferre hereof that they are quite taken from vs, and that they cast forth no comfortable influence on vs, our present preseruation from being swallowed vp into vtter destruction, and the speedie returne of wonted ioy and consolation, by the apprehension of Gods loue and goodnesse towards vs, will euidently shew that this argument taken from the senses, is void of reason.

Lastly, it appeareth by the examples of Gods children from time to time, that though they haue beene endued with a great measure of faith, and in a high degree of fauour and loue with almighty God, yet sometimes in their owne sense they haue found in them, in steade of Faith nothing but doubting, diffidence and infidelity; and for Gods loue and fauour, they haue apprehended nothing in their present feeling, but the wrathfull anger of God, and his grieuous displeasure. Looke vpon the holy man Iob, who, by Gods owne testimonie was the iustest man vpon earth, and highly in Gods loue and fauour, and you shall finde that sometimes hee sheweth in his grieuous afflictions no signe of Faith, but grosse doubting, and in outward appearance vtter despaire of Gods mercie & loue; for he curseth the day of his natiuitie, and wisheth that he had neuer beene borne; he complaineth that God was his enemie, and had made him as a marke whereat hee shot venomed arrowes that Gods terrors did fight against him, and that hee did hide his louing countenance from him. So the Prophet Dauid, a man according to Gods owne heart, sheweth plainly that sometime he hath no sense and feeling of the graces of Gods Spirit in him; as when he desireth the Lord to create in him a cleane heart, and to renew a spirit within him, to restore him to the ioy of his saluation, and to stablish him with his free spirit; and sometimes hee apprehendeth in his present sense and feeling, in stead of Gods loue and fauour, nothing but his wrath and displeasure, and therefore complaineth as one reiected and forsaken of God. So Psal. 22. 1. My God, my God why hast thou forsaken mee, and art so farre from my health, and from the words of my roaring. 2. O my God I cry by day but thou hearest not, and in the night and haue no audience. And Psal. 77. 7. hee thus complaineth, Will the Lord absent himselfe for euer? and will he shew no more fauour? 8. Is his mercie cleane gone for euer? doth his promise faile for euermore? 9. Hath God forgotten to be mercifull? Hath hee shut vp his tender mercies in displeasure? 10. And I said this is my death, &c. So Psal. 88. 14. Lord, why doest thou reiect my soule, and hidest thy face from me? 15. I am afflicted, and at the point of death; from my youth, I suffer thy terrours doubting of my life. 16. Thine indignations goe ouer me, and thy feare hath cut me off. The Prophet Ieremy likewise being grieuously afflicted in bodie and minde, was for a time depriued of the sense of Gods loue and fauour, apprehending nothing but present misery, and in stead of faith, affiance in God, peace of conscience, and other sanctifying graces, he bewrayeth his doubting, diffidence and impatiencie, cursing the day of his birth, and euen the man that brought first newes hereof to his Father, and wishing that his mother had beene his graue, or her wombe a perpetuall conception: as appeareth, Ier. 20. 14, 15. &c. The like may be said of the Apostle Peter, for where, I pray you, was the sense and feeling of his faith, affiance in God, zeale of his glory, loue, feare, and other sanctifying graces, when as he shamefully denied his master, yea forswore him with bitter cursings. And yet we must either grant that Peter at this time was endued with a liuely faith, or else that the Prayer of our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ was not effectuall, for he had prayed for him that his Faith might not faile, as appeareth, Luke 22. 32. But what should I insist in the examples of these the seruants of God, seeing the alone example of Christ himselfe is sufficient to cleare this point; for though he were the only begotten, and best beloued Son of his heauenly Father, yet in his own sense & feeling he apprehendeth nothing but Gods wrath and grieuous displeasure, and lamentably complaineth as a man abandoned and cast out of all loue and fauour, (My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me: which words shew both Christs affiance in God, and his present apprehension in his sense and feeling; for in respect of his affiance and trust in God he called him still his God; in respect of his sense and feeling he complaineth that he is forsaken. Whereby it is manifest, that a man may bee dearely beloued of God, and yet for a time apprehend nothing but his wrath and displeasure; that he may haue faith and affiance in God, and yet at the same time be depriued of all sense and feeling of his loue and fauour. And therefore when we are exercised in the combate of tentations, let not Sathan perswade vs that wee are vtterly depriued of the loue and fauour of God, because through the violence of his tentations and grieuousnesse of our afflictions we doe not apprehend it; nor that we are destitute of faith, and all other spirituall graces, because wee doe not sensibly discerne them in our feeling, for this hath beene the state of the deare children of God from the beginning of the World, and shall be to the end thereof.

CHAP. XLVII.

Of the meanes whereby our faith may bee strengthened and increased.

AND so much concerning those reasons whereby we may proue that wee haue faith, and also answere Satans tentations, whereby he laboureth to perswade vs that we are destitute thereof. The second means whereby we may arme our selues against Satan & his suggestions, is, that we most earnestly labour & endeuor after we haue found that we haue some faith to increase therein, and grow vp from faith to faith, vntill we come to that fulnesse of perswasion which will bring such peace of conscience, as Satan with all his power & malice shal not be able to disturbe. Otherwise we shall be continually subject to feares and doubtings, and exceedingly shaken with his tentations. And in truth not without cause, if we stand still at a stay; for howsoeuer Satan and all the power of Hell cannot preuaile against the least measure of true faith to quench and vtterly destroy it; yet this will bring no sound comfort vnto those which rest contented with this little quantitie, & neuer labour after increase, because this is a shrewd presumption, that their faith is false and counterfeit. For assoone as the seed of true faith is sown in vs, and hath taken root, it sprouteth vp, vntill it come to full ripenesse; in which respect our Sauiour compareth it to a graine of mustard seed, which though it be one of the least seeds of the garden, yet it groweth to a great tree. Neither in truth is it possible that any who haue tasted of true faith, and of those inestimable benefits, which it assureth vs of, should content themselues with a small pittance, & neuer labour after more. For who is it that hauing tasted and eaten a little bit of some delicious meate, doth not with a hungring appetite desire more till hee be filled and satisfied? Who is it that hauing any weake title vnto, and assurance of some goodly inheritance, doth not earnestly desire and vse all good and lawfull meanes whereby his title may be strengthened, and his assurance confirmed? And can wee thinke that any haue truly tasted of faith, and the excellent benefits which accompany it, as namely assurance of Gods loue, and the remission of our sinnes, peace of conscience, joy in the holy Ghost, who content themselues with a little

modicum and neuer hunger after more? or can we imagine that we haue any small title or true assurance of those vnspeakable ioyes of Gods Kingdome, and that vnualuable patrimonie of euerlasting glory, if wee neuer vse meanes to confirme our title; and strengthen our assurance? Surely it is impossible; and therefore if wee would haue any sound comfort and peace of conscience; if we would euer attaine to a certaine perswasion that wee haue true faith indeed, let vs vse most carefully and diligently all good meanes, whereby wee may strengthen and confirme our faith, vntill it grow from a small seed to a great tree, which will bring forth plentifull fruits of godlinesse and righteousnesse; and vntill it wax of a small sparke, a great flame which will throughly warme our hearts with true comfort, which are naturally frozen with feare and doubting: for howsoeuer Sathan cannot quench the least sparke of liuely faith, yet he will so couer it with the ashes of his temptations, that wee shall neither discerne the light nor feele the heate thereof.

Now the meanes which we are thus carefully to vse, are of two sorts: the first tending to the increasing and strengthening of our faith, the other seruing to preserue vs from doubting and desperation. The meanes to strengthen and increase our faith are diuers: the first is the frequent and attentiue hearing of Gods Word, for as this is the ordinary meanes, whereby faith is begotten and begun in vs, so is it a chiefe meanes to strengthen and confirme it; as it is that liuely seed from which Faith doth spring, so is it that heauenly dew whereby it is watered, and increased from a little plant to a great tree. And therefore as it is not sufficient for a fruitfull haruest, that the blade or branch should sprout vp, vnlesse it be watered continually with sweet dew and showers from Heauen, and so preserued from dying and withering; so if euer we meane to reape the fruites of faith to our euerlasting comfort, we must be carefull that not only it take roote, and bring forth a blade of an outward profession, but also that it may be watered with this heauenly dew of Gods word; otherwise when the sunne of affliction and persecution ariseth, it will die and wither.

The second meanes to strengthen our faith, is diligently to reade and meditate in Gods Word, especially the Gospell, wherein is contained the sweet and gracious promises of mercy, which are indefinitely vnto all who repent of their sinnes, and beleeue in Iesus Christ, relying and resting vpon him alone for their saluation. And to this purpose our Sauiour willeth the Iewes to search the Scriptures, because they are they which testifie of him: Iohn 5.39. And hereby Dauid saith that he was comforted in his troubles and euen quickned when hee was dead, Psal. 119.50.

Psal. 119.50

The third meanes is holy conference with our godly brethren; for hereby those which are falling are confirmed, and the wearie hands and weake knees strengthened, as Eliphaz speaketh, Iob 4.3.4. And those who are weake in faith are comforted and established with the godly instructions, profitable exhortations and sweet consolations of those who are more strong. And therefore the Apostle Paul exhorts those who had attained vnto a great measure of faith, that they admit such as were weake into their company to be made partakers of their Christian conferences, to the end that hereby they might be more and more strengthened and confirmed: Rom. 14.1.

Iob 4.3.4.

Rom. 14.1.

The fourth meanes is the holy vse of the Sacraments: for the Lord hath added them as Seales to the hand-writing of his couenant of grace, to confirme our faith in the full assurance of his promises, and to take away all doubting. For whereas the weake conscience might make some scruple, in respect that the promises of the Gospell in the preaching of the word are deliuered indefinitely and after a generall manner, in the vse of the Sacraments, they are assured vnto them particularly and as it were by name; and that not after some obscure and hidden manner, but most familiarly by such common signes as are subiect to the senses, and within the reach of the shallowest capacitie.

The fourth meanes, the vse of the Sacraments.

A fifth meanes to confirme our faith, is to be continually conuersant in good workes, and so bring forth the fruits of holy obedience; for hereby our Faith is exercised, and by exercise strengthened and increased: whereas contrariwise the neglect hereof doth wound the conscience, and so quench the liuely heate of faith, that though it be not quite extinguished, yet it will not sensibly be discerned. As therefore the strength of the bodie is increased by exercise, and for want thereof waxeth faint and languisheth, and as the stomacke is by outward exercise of the bodie made more fit to performe his duty of concoction; so our Faith being exercised in good workes is made more strong and fit to performe his duties in applying Christ and the sweete promises of the Gospell vnto vs, and without this spirituall exercise it waxeth faint and the strength thereof abateth.

The fifth meanes, good workes.

The last meanes to strengthen and increase our Faith is continuall and feruent prayer, for faith is not in our owne power, but is the free gift of God, as the Apostle teacheth vs, Ephes. 2.8. Neither can any man come vnto our Sauiour Christ by a liuely Faith except it be giuen him of the Father, as himselfe speaketh, Iob. 6.65. And therefore when we see the small measure of our faith, we are with the Apostles to pray vnto the Lord that

Luke 17.5. he will increase it, Luke 17.5. And when wee perceiue that it is grieuously assaulted with doubting and infidelitie, we are in feruencie of spirit to cry out with the Father of the possessed child: Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeliefe, Marke 9.24. Marke 9.24. And then wee may be assured that the Lord will heare vs, and satisfie our godly desires making vs to grow vp from faith to faith, till at length wee attaine vnto such a fulnesse of perswasion, that wee shall be able truly to say with the Apostle; I am perswaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord: as it is Rom. 8.38,39. Rom.8.38,39.

And these are the meanes which properly tend to the strengthening and increasing of our Faith; which whosoeuer carefully and conscionably vse, they shall assuredly finde them effectuall for this purpose. Now wee are to speake of those meanes whereby wee may be preserued from doubting and desperation, of which I shall not need to speake much, seeing the most of these points are handled before.

The first meanes.

The first meanes to preserue vs from desperation, is to call continually vnto our remembrance, that the promises of the Gospell are generall and indefinite, excluding none how vnworthy and sinfull soeuer they bee, if they doe not exclude themselues through their owne infidelitie. So Matth. 11.28. Matth.11.28. our Sauiour calleth all humbled and repentant sinners without exception, saying, Come vnto me all yee that labour and are heauie laden, and I will ease you. And Iohn 3.16. Iohn 3.16. God so loued the world that hee sent his only beloued Sonne, that as many as beleeue in him should not perish, but haue euerlasting life. So Matth. 9.13. Matth.9.13. our Sauiour saith, that hee came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; either then refuse the name of repentant sinner, or acknowledge that he came to saue thee. And Iohn 6.40. Iohn 6.40. our Sauiour saith, that it is his Fathers will who sent him, that euery man who beleeueth in him should haue euerlasting life. Seeing therefore God taketh no exception, nor excludeth any, let vs not exclude our selues through our infidelitie and want of faith.

The second meanes.

Secondly, we are to consider that the Lord hath not only propounded his gracious promises vnto vs but also hath commanded vs to beleeue them. So Marke 1.15. Marke 1.15. Repent and beleeue the Gospell, and 1. Iohn 3.23. This then is his Commandement, that we beleeue in the name of his Sonne Iesus Christ, &c. Now to beleeue in Christ, is not only to beleeue that he is a Sauiour, for this euen the Deuils beleeue also, but to beleeue that he is our Sauiour, and to rest wholly vpon him for our saluation, and to say with the Apostle Paul, Gal. 2.20. I liue by the faith in the Sonne of God, who hath loued mee and giuen himselfe for me. And to the end that wee may be armed against doubting, and enabled to performe this commandement, it hath pleased the Lord to adde vnto his word, his oath, that by two immutable things, wherein it is impossible that God should lie, wee should haue strong consolation, as the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 6.18. Yea, he hath also vnto his word and hand-writing annexed his Sacraments as Seales, that there might be no place left for doubting. Seeing therefore the Lord hath expressly commanded vs to beleeue, and vsed all meanes to enable vs to performe his commandement, let vs not now dispute the question, whether we are worthy to beleeue or no, or whether such grieuous sinners are bound to this dutie, but setting all excuses aside, let vs beleeue in obedience to Gods Commandement.

Thirdly, wee must not alwayes set before vs the innumerable multitude and huge waight of our sinnes, but withall call to our remembrance the infinite mercies of God and merits of Christ, who hath offered vnto his Father a propitiatory sacrifice, and full satisfaction for all our sinnes, and not for ours only, but for the sinnes of all the world, as the Apostle speaketh, 1. Iohn 2.2. Seeing therefore our debt, how great soeuer it be, is already discharged; and our sinnes, how outragious soeuer they be, are fully punished long agoe in our Sauiour Christ, and seeing God himselfe who hath receiued this debt, and taken this punishment, is of infinite iustice & mercie, why should we now despaire of pardon? Yea, why should wee not most certainly be assured that the roll and reckoning of our sinnes, how long so euer it be, is quite blotted out and cancelled, so as they shall neuer againe be laid to our charge?

Fourthly, we are to consider, that desperation it selfe is a most hainous and outragious sin, for it causeth men to deny Gods truth in his promises and to account him a liar, as the Apostle plainly speaketh, 1. Iohn 5.10. Hee that beleeueth not God, hath made him a liar, because he beleeueth not the record, that God witnessed of his Son; it maketh them to deny the infiniteness of his mercies, as being ouer-matched with the multitude of their sinnes, and the sufficiencie of Christs merits, as though they were not a full satisfaction for their horrible offences; yea it maketh them to denie Gods iustice, in thinking that he will punish that sin againe in them, which hath already beene punished in Christ, and exact that debt which hee hath already discharged. Now to denie the truth, mercie, and iustice of God, is to deny God himselfe; for his attributes are his essence, the truth of God is the true God, the mercie of God is the the mercifull God, and the iustice of God is the just God. So that hee who despaireth, falleth into the most horrible and capitall sin of Atheisme, euen the highest degree of wickednesse, and therefore more hainously offendeth God by this sinne alone, then by all his other sinnes whatsoeuer, though they appeare neuer so monstrous and abominable in his owne eyes. For example, the sinne of Cain, in despairing of God mercie, was farre more horrible then his monstrous sin which he committed in murthering his own brother. The sinne of Iudas in despairing of Gods mercie, was without comparison greater than his sinne in betraying his Lord and master: in a word, to commit Idolatrie, blasphemie, murther, adulterie, and such like are hainous sinnes, but vtterly to despaire of Gods mercie is greater than they all. Though then wee haue committed other horrible wickednesse against the Lord, yet in no case let vs despaire, for this were to adde sinne vnto sinne, and clog our consciences more with the last, then with all the former, till with their intolerable waight they presse vs downe vnto hell. You would count him worse then mad, who being oppressed with a heauy burthen, should (in steed of vsing other meanes to ease himselfe) adde thereunto a double or treble waight, till he were pressed downe groueling vnto the earth: but assuredly such and greater madnesse it is when wee feele our consciences clogged with a heauie burthen of sinne, in stead of seeking ease by comming to Christ by a liuely Faith, to fall into vtter desperation, and thereby to adde a treble waight to the alreadie intolerable burthen of sinne, which lieth vpon our consciences, vntill they bee pressed downe into the torments of hell. Euery one would esteeme him a most desperate wretch, who hauing offended such a gratious Prince, as would most freely forgiue him vpon his vnfained sorrow for his fault, should in stead of humbling himselfe and asking pardon, desperately refuse his Princes mercie, and withall denie his truth in his promises, his mercy, iustice, and euen disauow him for being a lawfull Prince: but such and much more wickednesse doe they desperatly commit, who hauing offended God by their grieuous sinnes, who is so gratious and mercifull, that he would most certainly forgiue them vpon their repentance; in stead of humbling themselues by vnfained sorrow, doe desperately refuse to be partakers of his mercy, and not onely so, but denie the infinitnes of his mercy, iustice, truth in his promises, and consequently his Godhead and being. And therefore when (the waight of sinne pressing vs) Satan perswadeth vs to despaire of mercie and forgiuenesse, we are in any case to resist that temptation, and boldly say vnto the tempter; It is enough and too much that I haue offended my gratious God with my other sinnes, though I doe not adde thereunto this sinne, which is greater then all the rest; the waight of my other wickednes is alreadie too too heauie vpon my conscience, and therefore farre be it from mee to load it with a far more vnsupportable burthen; I haue already too much dishonoured my good God by my horrible sinnes, and therefore I will in no case more dishonour him now, than in committing all my other sinnes; by denying his mercy, iustice, truth, and euen the Godhead it selfe, for what were this but being alreadie in a burning feuer to cast my selfe into the fire; or being gone ouer the shooes in the filthy puddle of sinne to plunge my selfe ouer head and eares, and euen to drowne my selfe in the bottomlesse gulfe of desperation? yea rather now I will breake off my sinnes by vnfained repentance and turne vnto the Lord whom I haue offended, assuring my selfe that his mercies are infinite, and therefore he is readie to forgiue, and the merits of Christ a full satisfaction for all my sinnes, though many & hainous, & therefore in him, I may boldly challenge forgiuenesse as a thing of right appertaining to me. And thus are we to resist Sathans tentations, and though we be often foiled, yet to rise againe, in no case suffering him so plucke out of our hand the shield of Faith; though he hath disarmed vs of the brest-plate of righteousnes; for if once we be depriued of this part of the spirituall armour, we shall lie open to all his blowes and thrusts, vntill wee bee wounded to the very death.

But most lamentable it is to see the grieuous miserie of poore humbled sinners, whereunto they are brought through the violence of Satans tentations; for howsoeuer feeling the heauie waight of their other sins they earnestly desire to bee freed from them, howsoeuer being tormented with the grieuous smart of their other wickednesse they hate and abhorre it, yet they easily suffer themselues to bee plunged into desperation with euery friuolous tentation, and quietly offer their hands to bee manacled and bound in these gyues of hell without resistance. But let all such stirre vp themselues, and gather their oppressed spirits all together, saying to their owne consciences, I hate and detest from my heart my former wickednes, and shall I now entertaine a sin more horrible then all the rest? the burthen of my other sins oppresse me, and make me earnestly to desire ease, and shall I adde a loade farre more intolerable to my afflicted conscience? I am filled with horror and confusion, because by my former sinnes I haue dishonoured my gratious God: and shall I continue more to dishonour him by doubting

Luke 17.5. he will increase it, Luke 17.5. And when wee perceiue that it is grieuously assaulted with doubting and infidelitie, we are in feruencie of spirit to cry out with the Father of the possessed child: Lord I beleeue, helpe my vnbeliefe, Marke 9.24. And then wee may be assured that the Lord will heare vs, and satisfie our godly desires making vs to grow vp from faith to faith, till at length wee attaine vnto such a fulnesse of perswasion, that wee shall be able truly to say with the Apostle; I am perswaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord: as it is Rom. 8.38,39.

¶. Sect. 3. Of the meanes whereby wee may be preserued from doubting and desperation.

And these are the meanes which properly tend to the strengthening and increasing of our Faith; which whosoeuer carefully and conscionably vse, they shall assuredly finde them effectuall for this purpose. Now wee are to speake of those meanes whereby wee may be preserued from doubting and desperation, of which I shall not need to speake much, seeing the most of these points are handled before.

The first meanes,

The first meanes to preserue vs from desperation, is to call continually vnto our remembrance, that the promises of the Gospell are generall and indefinite, excluding none how vnworthy and sinfull soeuer they bee, if they doe not exclude themselues through their owne infidelitie. So Matth. 11.28. our Sauiour calleth all humbled and repentant sinners without exception, saying, Come vnto me all yee that labour and are heauie laden, and I will ease you. And Iohn 3.16. God so loued the world that hee sent his only beloued Sonne, that as many as beleeue in him should not perish, but haue euerlasting life. So Matth. 9.13. our Sauiour saith, that hee came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; either then refuse the name of repentant sinner, or acknowledge that he came to saue thee. And Iohn 6.40. our Sauiour saith, that it is his Fathers will who sent him, that euery man who beleeueth in him should haue euerlasting life. Seeing therefore God taketh no exception, nor excludeth any, let vs not exclude our selues through our infidelitie and want of faith.

Matth. 11.28. Iohn 3.16. Matth. 9.13. Iohn 6.40.

The second meanes,

Secondly, we are to consider that the Lord hath not only propounded his gracious promises vnto vs but also hath commanded vs to beleeue them. So Marke 1.15. Repent and beleeue the Gospell, and 1. Iohn 3.23. This then is his Commandement, that we beleeue in the name of his Sonne Iesus Christ, &c. Now to beleeue in Christ, is not only to beleeue that he is a Sauiour, for this euen the Deuils beleeue also, but to beleeue that he is our Sauiour, and to rest wholly vpon him for our saluation, and to say with the Apostle Paul, Gal. 2.20. I liue by the faith in the Sonne of God, who hath loued mee and giuen himselfe for me. And to the end that wee may be armed against doubting, and enabled to performe this commandement, it hath pleased the Lord to adde vnto his word, his oath, that by two immutable things, wherein it is impossible that God should lie, wee should haue strong consolation, as the Apostle speaketh, Heb. 6.18. Yea, he hath also vnto his word and hand-writing annexed his Sacraments as Seales, that there might be no place left for doubting. Seeing therefore the Lord hath expressly commanded vs to beleeue, and vsed all meanes to enable vs to performe his commandement, let vs not now dispute the question, whether we are worthy to beleeue or no, or whether such grieuous sinners are bound to this dutie, but setting all excuses aside, let vs beleeue in obedience to Gods Commandement.

Marke 1.15.

Gal. 2.20. Heb. 6.18.

The third meanes.

Thirdly, wee must not alwayes set before vs the innumerable multitude and huge waight of our sinnes, but withall call to our remembrance the infinite mercies of God and merits of Christ, who hath offered vnto his Father a propitiatory sacrifice, and full satisfaction for all our sinnes, and not for ours onely, but for the sinnes of all the world, as the Apostle speaketh, 1. Iohn 2.2. Seeing therefore our debt, how great soeuer it be, is already discharged; and our sinnes, how outragious soeuer they be, are fully punished long agoe in our Sauiour Christ, and seeing God himselfe who hath receiued this debt, and taken this punishment, is of infinite iustice & mercie, why should we now despaire of pardon? Yea, why should wee not most certainly be assured that the roll and reckoning of our sinnes, how long so euer it be, is quite blotted out and cancelled, so as they shall neuer againe be laid to our charge?

1. Iohn 2.2.

Fourthly, we are to consider, that desperation is selfe is a most hainous and outragious sin, for it causeth men to deny Gods truth in his promises and so account him a liar, as the Apostle plainly speaketh, 1. Iohn 5.10. He that beleeueth not God, hath made him a liar, because he beleeued not the record, that God witnessed of his Sonne: it maketh them to deny the infiniteness of his mercies, as being ouer-matched with the multitude of their sinnes, and the sufficiencie of Christs merits, as though they were not a full satisfaction for their horrible offences: yea it maketh them to denie Gods iustice, in thinking that he will punish that sin againe in them, which hath already beene punished in Christ, and exact that debt which hee hath already discharged. Now to denie the truth, mercie, and iustice of God, is to deny God himselfe; for his attributes are his essence, the truth of God is the true God, the mercie of God is the mercifull God, and the iustice of God is the iust God. So that hee who despaireth, falleth into the most horrible and capitall sin of Atheisme, euen the highest degree of wickednesse, and therefore more hainously offendeth God by this sinne alone, then by all his other sinnes whatsoeuer, though they appeare neuer so monstrous and abominable in his owne eyes. For example, the sinne of Cain, in despairing of God mercie, was farre more horrible then his monstrous sin which he committed in murthering his own brother. The sinne of Iudas in despairing of Gods mercie, was without comparison greater than his sinne in betraying his Lord and master: in a word, to commit Idolatrie, blasphemie, murther, adulterie, and such like are hainous sinnes, but vtterly to despaire of Gods mercie is greater than they all. Though then wee haue committed other horrible wickednesse against the Lord, yet in no case let vs despaire, for this were to adde sinne vnto sinne, and clog our consciences more with the last, then with all the formes, till with their intolerable waight they presse vs downe vnto hell. You would count him worse then mad, who being oppressed with a heauy burthen, should (in steed of vsing other meanes to ease himselfe) adde thereunto a double or treble waight, till he were pressed downe groueling vnto the earth: but assuredly such and greater madnesse it is when wee feele our consciences clogged with a heauie burthen of sinne, in stead of seeking ease by comming to Christ by a liuely Faith, to fall into vtter desperation, and thereby to adde a treble waight to the alreadie intolerable burthen of sinne, which lieth vpon our consciences, vntill they bee pressed downe into the torments of hell. Euery one would esteeme him a most desperate wretch, who hauing offended such a gracious Prince, as would most freely forgiue him vpon his vnfained sorrow for his fault, should in stead of humbling himselfe and asking pardon, desperately refuse his Princes mercie, and withall denie his truth in his promises, his mercy, iustice, and euen disauow him for being a lawfull Prince: but such and much more wickednesse doe they desperatly commit, who hauing offended God by their grieuous sinnes, who is so gratious and mercifull, that he would most certainly forgiue them vpon their repentance, in stead of humbling themselues by vnfained sorrow, doe desperately refuse to be partakers of his mercy, and not onely so, but denie the infinitnes of his mercy, iustice, truth in his promises, and consequently his Godhead and being. And therefore when (the waight of sinne pressing vs) Satan perswades vs to despaire of mercie and forgiuenesse, we ought in any case resist this temptation, and boldly say vnto the tempter; It is enough and too much that I haue offended my gratious God with my other sinnes, though I doe not adde thereunto this sinne, which is greater then all the rest; the waight of my other wickednes is alreadie too too heauie vpon my conscience, and therefore farre be it from mee to load it with a far more vnsupportable burthen; I haue already too much dishonoured my good God by my horrible sinnes, and therefore I will in no case more dishonour him now, than in committing all my other sinnes; by denying his mercy, iustice, truth, and euen the Godhead it selfe, for what were this but being alreadie in a burning feuer to cast my selfe into the fire; or being gone ouer the shooes in the filthy puddle of sinne to plunge my selfe ouer head and eares, and euen to drowne my selfe in the bottomlesse gulfe of desperation? yea rather now I will breake off my sinnes by vnfained repentance and turne vnto the Lord whom I haue offended, assuring my selfe that his mercies are infinite, and therefore he is readie to forgiue, and the merits of Christ a full satisfaction for all my sinnes, though many & hainous, & therefore in him I may boldly challenge forgiuenesse as a thing of right appertaining to me. And thus are we to resist Sathans tentations, and though we be often foiled, yet to rise againe, in no case suffering him to plucke out of our hand the shield of Faith; though he hath disarmed vs of the brest-plate of righteousnes; for if once we be depriued of this part of the spirituall armour, we shall lie open to all his blowes and thrusts, vntill wee bee wounded to the very death.

Sect. 3. Though the afflicted conscience abhorreth other sinnes, yet it easily inclineth to desperation.

But most lamentable it is to see the grieuous miserie of poore humbled sinners, whereunto they are brought through the violence of Satans tentations; for howsoeuer feeling the heauie waight of their other sins they earnestly desire to bee freed from them, howsoeuer being tormented with the grieuous smart of their other wickednesse they hate and abhorre it, yet they easily suffer themselues to bee plunged into desperation with euery friuolous tentation, and quietly offer their hands to bee manacled and bound in their gyues of hell without resistance. But let all such stirre vp themselues, and gather their oppressed spirits all together, saying to their owne consciences, I hate and detest from my heart my former wickednes, and shall I now entertaine a sin more horrible then all the rest? the burthen of my other sins oppresse me, and make me earnestly to desire ease, and shall I adde a loade farre more intolerable to my afflicted conscience? I am filled with shame and confusion, because by my former sinnes I haue dishonoured my gracious Gode and shall I continue more to dishonour him by doubting doubting of and denying his mercy, iustice, and truth in his promises? I haue heretofore with Iudas betraied my Sauiour Christ vnto the death, yea, & with my sinnes I haue whipped, mocked, and crucified him, and now he hauing made full satisfaction for my sinnes, and called mee vnto him that he may ease me of this intollerable burthen; should I with Iudas refuse to come, desperately cast off all hope of mercy, and become mine owne hangman? be it farre from me, nay as I hate all other sin, so let mee hate this aboue all the rest, as being more hainous then all the rest; as, I desire to be eased and freed from the heauy burthen of other my wickednesse, so I will with all my power resist Sathan when he seeketh to loade mee with this loade of desperation, as being farre more intollerable; heretofore I haue dishonoured God by my sins, but now I will giue him glory in beleeuing and acknowledging his infinit mercy, goodnesse, iustice, and truth in his promises; and seeing by my sins, I haue crucified the Lord of life, I will not adde hereunto this outragious wickednesse, to trample his pretious blood vnder my filthy feet, as a thing vnholy and of no worth, neither will I through my vnbeleefe, make it to bee spilt in vaine; but now with all care and conscience I will gather it vp as a most precious balme, and with the hand of Faith applie it to those grieslie gashes and deepe wounds which sinne hath made in my soule and conscience, and with this spirituall lauer I will wash my polluted soule, till it bee throughly purged from all vncleannesse. And seeing I haue deprived my soule of that inherent righteousnesse, wherewith it was indued by creation, now I will applie thereunto a farre more excellent righteousnesse by the hand of Faith, euen the righteousnesse of Iesus Christ God and man, wherewith being adorned, I may boldlie offer my selfe into the presence of my heauenly Father, and receiue the blessing of euerlasting happinesse.

9. Sect. 6. That desperation is a sinne most pernicious.

Lastly, wee are to consider, that as desperation is a sinne in it owne nature most grieuous, so also it is vnto our selues most pernicious: for whereas other sinnes make vs worthie of the torments of hell and eternall condemnation, this, as it aboue all the rest intitleth vs vnto the right of this hellish inheritance, so also it entreth vs into the most certaine and present possession thereof, euen whilest wee liue vpon the earth. For what are the torments of a despairing conscience, but the sufferings of hell fire? and what are their blasphemies which they vtter against God, and their impatient cursings of their accursed selues, but the yelling cries of damned soules? And therefore if wee would not cast our selues into the iawes of hell, if we would not whilest wee liue begin to die an euerlasting death, let vs in no case suffer our selues to be plunged with the violence of Sathans tentations into this bottomlesse pit of vtter desperation.

9. Sect. 7. That we [illegible] hope against hope, and [illegible] beleeue against beleefe.

Yea, will the afflicted soule say, But how should I auoid it, seeing I am forciblie presséd into it with the intollerable waight of my sins, & with the sense of apprehension of Gods fearful wrath, & displeasure, feeling no comfort nor assurance that euer I shall receiue pardon? To which I answer, that yet in no case they are to despaire, but to hope against hope, and to beleeue against beleefe, and as it were from the bottom of hell, to cast vp the eye of Faith into heauen, laying hold vpon Gods mercies and Christs merits: knowing that Faith is of things not seene, neither with the bodily eye, nor with the eye of reason, and that the Lord seemeth often to hate those, whom in truth he dearely loueth. For so long as we beleeue Gods promises, and haue some hope that our sinnes are either pardoned, or at least pardonable, there is certaine comfort: but when as all hope is cast off, and that wee reiect all Gods promises through vnbeleefe, and fall into vtter desperation, there nothing remaineth, but most certaine destruction. When sinne lieth vpon vs, it no question exceedingly vexeth vs with the torments of conscience, but if we despaire, we presently in stead of obtaining ease cast our selues into the torments of hell; the pangs of conscience caused by the sense of the heauie burthen of sinne, are a good meanes to bring vs to Christ, that we may be eased of this burthen; but despaire staieth vs in the mid way, and vtterly debarreth vs from euer being partakers of Christ, or any of his benefits. And therefore though the burthen of sinne be neuer so irkesome and grieuous, yet let vs bee contented to beare it till we come vnto Christ for ease: let vs beware in any case that wee doe not faint through impatiencie and want of hope and so fall into desperation, for so shall wee but increase the waight of our sinnes in exceeding measure, which already wee thinke an intollerable burthen and consequentlie our horror of conscience; so shall wee bring our selues from a doubtfull, or rather hopefull state, to most certaine and present destruction; so shall wee change our temporarie griefe for that which is euerlasting, and the terrors of conscience for the torments of hell. So shall that which wee most feare and flee, presently ouertake and ouerwhelme vs: for whilest in an horrible manner wee feare the paines of hell, we cast our selues into them by falling into vtter desperation, as if men for feare of death should end their owne threate, or for feare of hanging should drink some deadly poison, whereby they are presently tormented with that which they fearefully abhorred, and chuse rather to bee oppressed with the euill they feared, then any longer to indure the feare it selfe. Which howsoeuer it may carrie some shew of reason in vndergoing a momentany and temporarie death, wherein oftentimes the feare is more intollerable then the paine feared; yet it is extreame madnesse to plunge a mans selfe bodie and soule into the eternall torments of hell, rather then for a time to indure the horror thereof, seeing this horror and feare is but a small flea-biting in respect of those hellish punishments, and as it were but a smoke of that eternall fire.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Satans tentations concerning smalnesse and weaknesse of faith, answered.

AND so much for answering those tentations, whereby Satan laboureth to perswade afflicted Christians that they haue no faith; wherewith if hee cannot preuaile, in the next place hee will tell them that their faith is so small, if it bee any at all, so ouerwhelmed with doubting, so vnfruitfull, and so mixt with imperfections, that it will not be effectuall and sufficient for their saluation. Which tentation if wee would withstand, wee must not dreame or imagine, that to haue a true Faith, is to haue a perfect Faith, which is neuer assaulted with doubting nor shaken with any tentations, for there is no such Faith to bee found in any of Gods children, seeing the most perfect are partly flesh, and partly spirit; and as the fruit of the spirit is Faith and affiance in God, so the fruit of the flesh is doubting and infidelitie, and these continually assault and fight one against another. Againe, we are to know, that there are diuers degrees of true Faith, and that all the children of God haue it not in the like measure. For some haue attained to a strong and great measure of Faith, as those who are indued with much knowledge, and firmely assent vnto that which they know, and are most certainely perswaded of their saluation in Christ, and that all the gracious promises of the Gospell doe belong vnto them, so as nothing in the world shall bee able to separate them from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord: others are weake and indued with a small measure of Faith, as those who haue little knowledge, weake assent and perswasion, being yet but babes in Christ, and growing vp from Faith to Faith, as the Apostle speaketh, till at length they attaine to that fulnesse of perswasion, of which mention is made, Heb. 10. 22. Now wee are to hold first, that this small and weake measure of Faith is notwithstanding a true Faith, and therefore sufficient for the saluation of those who are indued therewith, neither are the promises of the Gospell made to those onely who haue a strong Faith, but to those who haue a true Faith; Iohn 1. 12. As many as receiued him; hee gaue to them prerogatiue to be the sonnes of God, euen to them that beleeue in his name. And Iohn 3. 18. He that beleeueth shall bee saued. In which and such like places there is no measure of Faith propounded, but the promises are made indefinitely to all that beleeue, how small and weake soeuer their faith bee in respect of the quantitie and apprehension, so that in regard of the qualitie it be true and liuely.

Iohn 1:12

Iohn. 3, 18.

That a weake and small measure of Faith is a true and liuely Faith, it is manifest both by reason and also plaine testimonies of the Scripture. For the first, diuersitie of degrees in quantity of a thing doth not take away and annihilate the existence and true being thereof. For example, a small drop of water, is as well and truly water as the whole Ocean; a little sparke is true fire, both in respect of substance and qualitie, as well as a mighty flame; a little man is as truly a man as a great Giant: and so a little Faith is as well a true Faith as a full perswasion; neither doth the small quantitie take away the being, nature, and truth thereof. Secondly, this also manifestly appeareth by the Scriptures, whereas many are said to haue Faith and to beleeue, who hearing the doctrine of Christ, and seeing his miracles beleeued, & acknowledged him to be the true Messias and their Sauiour, though at the same time they had attained to an exceeding small measure of knowledge, and were ignorant of many of the chiefe principles of Christian religion, because they nourished not this their ignorance, but resolued to vse all those good meanes of increasing in knowledge which God hath ordained for this purpose. And thus many of the Samaritans are said to haue beleeued for the saying of the woman, and because of his owne word: Iohn 4. 39. 41. Thus a certaine ruler and all his household are said to haue beleeued, when they saw the miracle which our Sauiour wrought in curing the rulers sonne of his feauer only with his word, vers. 52. Yea, the Apostles themselues, whose Faith our Sauiour Christ fitly compareth to a firme rocke, against which the gates of hell should neuer preuaile, were notwithstanding indued with a weake and small measure of Faith, before the ascension of our Sauiour, and sending of the holy Ghost. For they were ignorant euen of the maine principles of Christian religion, and of diuers articles of Faith, and consequently could not beleeue, assent or bee perswaded of

Q. Sect. 2. That a weake and small faith may by a true and liuely faith.

of thoſe things which they did not vnderſtand. For example, howſoeuer they knew and acknowledged that our Sauiour Chriſt was the promiſed Meſſias, yet they were ignorant that hee ſhould redeeme mankind by his death; for when he foretold that he ſhould bee deliuered into the hands of the Gentiles to be crucified, it is ſaid that they vnderſtood none of thoſe things, Mat. 20. 18. Luke 9. 45. So alſo they knew not that being dead, hee ſhould riſe againe the third day, as the Euangeliſt ſheweth, Matth. 9. 32. And when they heard thereof by the women, they thought it a fained thing, as it is Luk. 24. 11. They were ignorant alſo of his Aſcenſion, as appeareth Iohn 13. 36. and 14. 5. and of his Kingdome, for they dreamed of an earthly Kingdome, and of worldly preferments which they were to haue by him, as we may ſee, Acts 1. 6. Marke 10. 37. By all which it plainly appeareth, that though the Apoſtles were indued with a true faith, yet their faith was exceeding weake and ſmall, as alſo it is moſt euident in that reprehenſion vſed by our Sauiour when they were in ſome appearance of danger: Matthew 8. 26. Wherefore are yee fearefull, O yee of little faith?

§. Sect. 3. That all the power of Hell cannot preuaile againſt the ſmalleſt meaſure of true faith. Phil. 3. 12.

And therefore though wee find our faith to bee weake and ſmall, yet let not Sathan perſwade vs that for this cauſe it is falſe and counterfeite, or that wee ſhall eaſily bee ouercome of euery tentation, and neuer perſeuere vnto the end that wee may bee ſaued; ſeeing a weake and ſmall faith may bee a true faith, againſt which, how weake in itſelfe ſoeuer it be, yet the gates of Hell ſhall neuer preuaile againſt it; for the weaker our faith is, the ſtronger ſhall wee find Gods power in ſuſtaining and preſeruing vs; the more that Sathan laboureth to winnow vs in the ſieue of his tentations, the more effectually will our Sauiour Chriſt make interceſſion for vs, that our faith faile not; the feebler our faith is in apprehending Chriſt, the more powerfull will his ſpirit be in apprehending vs, and in joyning vs inſeparably in a holy communion with him. But yet wee muſt not content our ſelues with a ſmall and weake meaſure of faith, but earneſtly labour after more perfection, and to grow from faith to faith, till we attaine vnto fulneſſe of perſwaſion. Otherwiſe we ſhall make it manifeſt, that we deceiue our ſelues with a ſhew and ſhadow of faith, and that as yet we haue no true faith indeed, which as it reſembleth the graine of Muſtard ſeed in reſpect of the ſmalneſſe at the beginning thereof, ſo alſo in the growth and increaſe; and therefore if euer we would attaine vnto peace of conſcience, and aſſurance that wee are indued with a true and liuely faith, wee muſt earneſtly labour in the vſe of thoſe meanes ordained of God for the increaſe of faith, and feruently pray vnto God, that hee will not only ſow the ſeed of faith in our hearts, but alſo that he will ſo water it with the dew of his grace and holy Spirit, that it may grow from a ſmall ſeed to a great tree, and that hee will neuer ceaſe blowing this ſmoking flaxe with the breath of the ſame his holy Spirit, till it increaſe from a little ſparke to a mightie flame, whereby our hearts being warmed with true comfort, may with feruent zeale ſeeke to glorifie his holy Name by our Chriſtian and holy conuerſation.

Luke 22. 32.

That wee muſt not content our ſelues with a ſmall meaſure of faith.

Secondly, we are to know, that how weak and ſmall ſoeuer our faith bee, ſo it bee true, the Lord will not reject it, nor vs in regard of it, for he will not breake the bruiſed reed, nor quench the ſmoking flax till he bring forth iudgement vnto victory as himſelfe hath ſpoken, Matth. 12. 20. Hee will not contemne the leaſt meaſure of his owne grace which he hath beſtowed vpon vs; for though it be in neuer ſo ſmall a quantitie, yet if it be true, it is his owne gift, and his gifts are without repentance, neither doth hee euer contemne that which himſelfe hath giuen, nor take it away after it is once beſtowed, yea rather to him that hath ſhall be giuen vntill hee haue abundance: he that receiued fiue talents ſhall receiue fiue more, yea, and he that hath but one, if hee doe not hide it, but vſe it to his maſters glory, ſhall be accepted and haue his talent doubled. Wee reade in the Scriptures that Chriſt reproued ſome for their ſmall faith, but yet we neuer read nor heard that hee rejected and caſt off any, though their faith were neuer ſo weake if it were true, no not him who cried out in the ſenſe of his own weakneſſe; Lord, I beleeue, helpe thou my vnbeliefe. And therefore if with him, wee find a true faith in vs, at leſt in ſome meaſure, and though it be exceedingly mingled with doubting and aſſaulted with infidelitie, yet if wee can with this man earneſtly pray the Lord to helpe our vnbeliefe, and with the Apoſtles heartily cry out: O Lord increaſe my faith, the Lord will accept of our hearty deſire, and grant our requeſt which is made by his owne ſpirit in vs, and that according vnto his owne will.

Thirdly, wee muſt vnderſtand that Faith doth not juſtifie and ſaue vs by it ſelfe, as it is a vertue or facultie of the mind and heart, or in reſpect of it owne excellencie, quantitie, and worthineſſe, (for what were this but to imbrace againe the doctrine of the Papiſts which wee haue rejected, and to ſeeke for juſtification in our ſelues, and for our owne merits and worthineſſe?) but as an inſtrument, whereby we lay hold of, and apply vnto our ſelues Chriſt Ieſus, with his righteouſnes and merits, by which onely we appeare juſt before God; now a weake faith as truly, though not ſo powerfully, doth apprehend prehend and apply Christ Iesus, and all his merits and obedience, as a stronger Faith; euen as a small and weake hand if it be able to reach vp the meate to the mouth, doth as wel performe its dutie for the nourishment of the body as one of greater strength, because it is not the strength of the hand, but the goodnesse of the meate which nourisheth the bodie: So a weak faith laying hold of Christ, and applying him and his benefits to the beleeuer, is sufficient to nourish him to euerlasting life, as well as a stronger, because it is not the worthinesse or excellency of the instrument, but of Christ which it apprehendeth, that is effectuall for our justification and eternall saluation. So in like manner, as a small and weake hand is able to receiue an almes as well as a stronger and greater; and as a little eye doth see the whole body of the Sunne, or some great mountaine as well as a bigger: so our faith though weake and small, doth apprehend Christ as truly & effectually for the saluation of the Beleeuer, as the greatest and most strong. Our Sauiour Christ compareth himselfe to the brazen Serpent, and the beleeuing Christian stung with the sting of sinne to the Israelites which did behold it, to the end they might be cured: now wee know that all of them were not alike sharp-sighted, but some were pur-blinde, some bleare-eyed, some saw it but exceeding weakly and dimly, but yet notwithstanding as many as looked on it were cured and healed, though they were neuer so weake-sighted; so whosoeuer being stung with sinne doe looke vpon Christ with the eye of Faith, resting vpon him alone for their saluation, though they be neuer so weake-sighted, yet they shall be restored to health and be eternally saued, because it is not in their sight, but in the object thereof, Christ Iesus, to iustifie before God, and to purchase for them eternall saluation.

CHAP. XLIX.

Other tentations concerning faith, answered.

AND thus may we answere Sathans tentations, which he groundeth vpon the small quantitie and weakenesse of our faith: besides which he suggesteth diuers others; as first, that true justifying faith is a firme, certaine and constant perswasion; whereas ours (if we haue any at all) is weake and feeble, instable, inconstant and wauering, and that it is not only continually assaulted, but also often foiled and ouercome with doubting and infidelitie, and therefore that it is but a shadow of faith, and not true faith indeed. The which tentation we may easily answer, if we but remember that which already hath beene deliuered; namely, that the best cannot attaine in this life vnto such perfection of faith as is quite freed from all infirmities and corruption; that there are diuers degrees of true justifying faith, some weaker, some stronger, some in greater, and some in smaller quantitie; some like smoking flaxe, and a graine of Mustard seed; and some like a bright burning flame which giueth light, and the liuely heat of true comfort to those who are indued therewith, and of as high growth as the greatest tree in the Garden; and yet all true faith is sufficient for saluation: that so long as wee continue in this life, our knowledge is but imperfect, and vailed with much darknesse and ignorance, for wee know but in part, as euen the Apostle speaketh in his owne person, 1. Cor. 13. 12. And therefore our assent & perswasion must needs be imperfect, but in part, and often assaulted with much doubting: that howsoeuer faith and doubting are opposed in their owne nature, yet notwithstanding they may be together in the same subject in respect of diuers parts. For we are partly flesh, & partly spirit, & these two with their seuerall fruits do continually fight one against the other, and sometimes the flesh, sometimes the spirit with their seuerall fruits get the vpper hand; in the mean time both retaining their owne nature and properties, howsoeuer they doe not so euidently appeare, nor so powerfully worke their seuerall actions, when the aduerse part preuaileth, and hath put them to the foile. For example, Faith which is a fruit of the spirit, is continually assaulted by doubting, which is a fruit of the flesh and proceedeth from the root of infidelitie, and sometime Faith preuaileth, and sometime it receiueth the foile; but yet at the same time howsoeuer wee cannot sensibly discerne it, nor the actions thereof, yet it retaines its owne nature and properties, neither is it depriued of its firmenesse, constancie and certaintie, howsoeuer they bee for a time couered and hid out of our sight, like the fire vnder the ashes, or the Sunne vnder a cloud, as before I haue said. Though therefore wee find in vs much inconstancie and doubting, yet let not Sathan perswade vs that these are of the nature and properties of our faith, and that therefore our faith is not true, but temporarie, false and counterfeit; for this inconstancie and doubting proceedeth not from faith, and from the spirituall and regenerate part, but from the flesh and the part vnregenerate; and therefore howsoeuer it is assaulted, and sometimes foiled by them, yet in its own nature it is true, certaine and constant.

1. Cor. 13. 12.

§. Sect. 2. Sathans tentation grounded on the strong

Secondly, hee will suggest that the Saints mentioned in the Scriptures, had most certain and strong faith, and in exceeding great measure, and that they brought forth continually faith of some of Gods children answered

nually most notable fruits thereof, and were not subiect to such infirmities and doubtings as wee feele in our selues. To which wee answere, that this tentation is full of vntruth, and hath no sound part in it: for first, we are to assure our selues, that they fell into manifold doubtings, and were subiect vnto innumerable infirmities and corruptions, which are not specified in the Book of God: neither was it fit or expedient that it should be a register of all humane infirmities, and of their manifold falls, but onely that some should be recorded for our warning, that wee might more warily watch ouer our selues, lest we should fall into the like sinnes; and for our comfort also when we are fallen, in that our case is common with Gods dearest children; in which respect the Scriptures are not wanting. Looke vpon Abraham, the Father of the Faithfull, whose faith was so strong, that hee aboue hope beleeued vnder hope, and you shall see that his faith notwithstanding, was sometimes shaken with diffidence and doubting; as when distrusting Gods gracious promises made vnto him, and not resting vpon his Almightie power, hee was content to take vnto him Hagar his maid, and commit sinne with her, that so by his owne deuice hee might make good Gods promise, and obtaine the blessed seed; as though God could not performe that which he had spoken, vnlesse he helped him by such vnlawfull meanes. So where was the strength and constancie of Moses faith when he dishonoured God before the people in not beleeuing his Word, and by shewing his impatiencie? Numb. 20. 10, 11. Where was the strength and constancie of Dauids faith, when he complaineth that he was forsaken, that God had failed in his promises, that hee had forgotten to be mercifull, and had shut vp his tender mercies in displeasure? Psal. 22. 1. and 77. 8, 9. Or of Iobs faith when hee cursed the day of his birth, and accounted God his enemy, who had set him vp as a marke, against which he shot poysoned Arrowes? Or of Ieremy, when he likewise wished that hee had neuer been born, and bewrayeth great impatiency. Ier. 20. Or of Ionas when he rebelled against Gods Commandement, and fled from his presence; or when after his miraculous deliuery, he murmured and vttered impatient speeches euen against God himselfe, for the losse of a poore gourd which kept him from the heat of the Sunne; and when the Lord mercifully and mildly reproued him, saying, Doest thou well to bee angry for the gourd, he stubbornly answered; I doe well to be angry vnto the death, Ion. 4. 9. Or of the Apostles themselues when they fled away & forsooke their Lord and Master Iesus Christ for feare of worldly punishment, and when after his death they would not beleeue the women reporting that hee was risen againe, vntill their owne eyes had seene him? Lastly, though it bee euident that diuers of the Saints mentioned in the Scriptures had a far greater measure of faith, and brought forth much more plentifull fruits than we can discerne in our selues, yet this is no good reason to proue that our weaker and smaller faith is no faith, or vneffectuall for our saluation. For this is an absurd consequence, the Moone giueth much lesse light than the Sunne, therefore it giueth no light at all; one hand is far greater than another, therefore the lesser is not a true hand; this man excelleth another in the vse of reason, and therefore the other is vnreasonable; because the diuers degrees in the quantitie of things doe not take away the truth of their being and existence, so long as they bee of the same nature and qualitie. Besides, as the Holy Ghost hath set downe examples of most strong Faith in some of Gods seruants, so hath he made mention of some who haue had but weake and little faith, to the end that we should so labour to attaine vnto the highest degree, as that in the meane time wee bee not vtterly discouraged with the lowest. For example, as he hath remembred the faith of Abraham, who beleeued aboue hope vnder hope; so hee hath not forgotten his weake faith who cried, I beleeue, Lord helpe thou mine vnbeliefe. As he hath mentioned the faith of Iob who grew to this resolution; Though hee kill mee, yet will I trust in him; so he hath expressed also the faith of Nicodemus, in knowledge weake and simple, and in practice and profession cowardly and fearefull. As hee hath set downe the strong faith of Paul, who grew to this fullnesse of perswasion, that nothing should be able to separate him from the loue of God in Iesus Christ; so he hath not left out the little and weake faith of Thomas, who would not beleeue further than he saw and felt. Yea, the Lord in his Word hath reuealed vnto vs the diuers degrees of faith in the same men in respect of diuers times; at one time like a graine of mustard seed, at another time like a great tree; at one time like a little smoke, and soone after bursting out into a great flame; now like a weak reed wauering and declining with the smallest blast of any triall, and within a while like an immooueable rocke which beateth backe huge billowes, and euen a whole Sea of violent tentations. In a word, it setteth out to our view, as it were portraied in a fresh and liue picture, the diuers ages of a Christian as he is in his conception and preparation to grace, and as he is in his new birth and first conuersion; as he is a babe, and as he groweth from his infancie to greater age & strength, till he come to ripe yeeres, and to be a strong man in Christ. Besides, it sheweth vnto vs his diuers relapses through sinne, sinne, the sicknesse of the soule, and how oftentimes the spirituall growth is hindred, and the strength of Gods graces abated and much weakened by the quotidian ague of corruptions, and Satans tentations; also after these fits bee driuen away by vertue of Gods spirit, how wee receiue a greater increase of grace and measure of strength, whereby wee grow more in Christianity and godlinesse in a yeere then wee did in two before. All which is set downe to this end that wee should not make our infancie our ἄκμην, and full growth, but labour to increase in grace till wee become of babes strong men in Christ: as also that finding our selues as weake as little infants, wee bee not vtterly discouraged; for if we sucke the breasts of our spirituall mother the true Church, and receiue from her the milke and stronger meate of the word and sacraments, wee shall assuredly grow vp from grace to grace, and strength to strength, till of babes wee become strong men in Iesus Christ; and that though wee haue many great sicknesses of the soule, and relapses into sin, whereby our spirituall growth for a time is hindred, and our strength in Gods graces much abated, yet if wee often feed vpon the comfortable food of Gods word, and vse this spirituall physicke prescribed by God himselfe, we shall not only againe recouer our former strength and health, but also find a great increase of Gods graces in vs.

Lastly, Satan will suggest that though our faith be true, yet it is so exceeding small and weake, that with the violence of his tentations, and huge masse of our owne corruptions, it will easily be ouerthrowne and turned into infidelity. To which we are to answer, that though hereby our faith may bee shrudly shaken, yet it can neuer be ouerturned; though it may bee couered with the ashes of our corruptions, yet it can neuer be vtterly quenched; though through our grieuous foiles and fals in the combate of tentations, it may be as it were brought into a trance, so as wee cannot sensibly discerne any action, motion or life of faith, yet the habit and grace it selfe, after it is once giuen of God, is neuer taken away, neither is it possible, that it should be quite destroyed by all the power of hell. And this may appeare by diuers reasons: first, because faith is not of our selues, but the free gift of God, as it is Ephes. 2.8. And whatsoeuer sanctifying and sauing grace the Lord giueth, that hee neuer taketh vtterly away; for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, as the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 11. 29. Secondly, whosoeuer truely beleeueth, he is truly knit and vnited vnto the body of Christ, and is made partaker of his holy spirit, which as it begetteth and beginneth all sanctifying and sauing graces in vs, so also it nourisheth, strengtheneth and confirmeth them, so as they can neuer vtterly faile, for whatsoeuer good worke hee beginneth, that will he also perfect and accomplish, Phil. 1. 6. Thirdly, whosoeuer truly beleeueth, he is truly iustified; and whosoeuer is iustified is elected, called, and shall be glorified, for these inseparably goe together, Rom. 8. 30. and consequently, he that hath true faith, whereby he is iustified, can not fal away, seeing his iustification is as certaine as the eternall decree of Gods election.

Phil. 1. 6.

Rom. 8. 30.

Lastly, God both can & wil strengthen and confirme all those who are weake in faith, till they attaine vnto the end of their Faith, euen the saluation of their soules; and therfore it is impossible that they which once truly beleeue should fall away and be condemned. Concerning Gods power no man can make any question, seeing it is omnipotent and almighty; and for his will he hath fully reuealed it both by his word & works, namely, that hee will not take away that grace which he hath once giuen, but rather increase it til it be perfected & accomplished. For the first, the Lord saith that hee will comfort his Church and people, as the woman comforteth her Child, Esai. 66. 13. Now wee know that the mother doth not abandon her child, nor depriue him of that comfort which she can giue him because he is sicke and weake, but rather the sicker and weaker hee is, the more is her care and diligence in relieuing him in his distresse; when hee is not able to digest strong meat, shee prouideth for him comfortable food of light digestion; when hee is so weake, that he cannot goe, shee carieth him in her armes, or otherwise supporteth him, when he is so sicke, that hee falleth downe to the ground in a swoune, shee raiseth him vp, and neuer resteth till shee hath recouered life in him. Is this loue in a naturall mother? then surely much more shall wee find in our heauenly Father: for though a mother may forget the fruit of her wombe, yet will the Lord neuer forget vs, as he hath promised, Esay 49. 15. And therefore the greater our weakenes is in grace and the more grieuous our sicknesse is through sinne, and the noisome humours of our corrupsions, the more carefully will hee watch ouer vs with the eye of his prouidence, and support vs with his almighty power in our greatest weaknes; the more tenderly will he pitie vs, and in louing compassion will prouide for vs, such comfortable food, as will be fit to nourish vs, and repaire our decaied strength; when we cannot goe, hee will with his almighty hand vphold vs; and when wee fall into a dead trance, hee will not rest till hee hath againe reuiued and quickened vs with his holy spirit. Moreouer our Sauiour hath said, that he will not breake the bruised reed,

Q. Sect. 4. That God both can and will vphold the weakest beleeuer.

Esai. 49. 15.

Matth.12.20. nor quench the smoking flax, Matth. 12. 20. but he will support our weakneſſe with his almighty power, ſo that though like the reed wee bee borne downe to the ground, with the boiſterous blaſts of Satans tentations, yet wee ſhall bee raiſed vp againe, according to that Pſal. 37. 24. Though hee fall he ſhall not bee caſt off, for the Lord putteth vnder his hand; and hee will blow vpon vs with the breath of his holy ſpirit, till hee turne our ſmall ſmoke to a great flame, which ſhal neuer be quenched by al the malice of our ſpirituall enemies. So Mat. 13. 12. our Sauiour Chriſt hath promiſed, that whoſoeuer hath, to him it ſhall be giuen, and he ſhall haue abundance. Neither doth he limit or define any quantity leſſe or more but indefinitely promiſeth abundant encreaſe euen vnto the leaſt, ſo farre is he from taking away that which hee hath once beſtowed. And whereas wee through our weakneſſe and frailneſſe are eaſily caſt downe and fall away, and therefore haue good cauſe if wee ſhould onely looke vpon our infirmities to doubt and deſpaire of perſeuerance, yet in reſpect of Gods omnipotent power, watchfull prouidence, and promiſed aſſiſtance, we may confirme our ſelues in Faith, hope, and certaine aſſurance of continuing vnto the end; for the Lord vpholdeth all that are falling, and lifteth vp thoſe who are already downe, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh. Pſal. 145. 14. The power of God is manifeſted in our weakeneſſe, his riches in our beggerlineſſe, his mercy and goodneſſe in our frailneſſe and manifold corruptions; and with his holy ſpirit, hee helpeth our infirmities, as it is Rom. 8. 26. Wee haue not an high Prieſt which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all things tempted in like ſort, yet without ſinne; and therefore hee is able ſufficiently to haue compaſſion on them that are ignorant and out of the way, becauſe that hee alſo was compaſſed with our infirmities, as the Apoſtle reaſoneth: Heb. 4. 15. and 5. 2.

Pſal.37.24. Matth.13.12. Pſal.145.14. 2.Cor.12.9. Rom.8.26. Heb.4.15. and 5.2.

Q. Self. 5. The former point illuſtrated by examples.

Secondly, it appeareth manifeſtly by Gods works, adminiſtration and practiſe, that hee will not depriue any of that ſanctifying grace which hee hath once beſtowed, though the meaſure therof be neuer ſo ſmall; neither can wee obſerue either by our reading the whole booke of God, or by our owne experience, that any man hauing receiued the leaſt graine of true Faith hath vtterly beene depriued of it, and reiected of God. Euen the Diſciples themſelues when they were reproued for their little Faith, were by him ſtrengthened and confirmed, ſo that all the power of hell could not preuaile againſt it: and though Satan endeauoured to ſift them as wheat, yet Chriſts prayer was more mighty to defend them, then the diuell to deſtroy them, and his interceſſion a ſtronger prop to vphold them, then the waight of Satans tentations to ouerthrow and bring them to ruine: ſo hee who cried out, I beleeue Lord, helpe thou my vnbelief; though his Faith vvas weake, yet it periſhed not, but rather receiued a greater encreaſe. Yea, he reiected not Thomas in his wilfull doubting and obſtinate incredulity, but offered all occaſions of confirming his weake Faith, and neuer ceaſed till he had fully aſſured him of his reſurrection. In a word, all the Saints of God at one time or other haue had experience of this mercy, power, and goodneſſe of God in ſupporting their weakneſſe, vpholding them in their great infirmities, and in raiſing them when they were fallen to the ground; and to this end, our Sauiour was anointed by Gods ſpirit vnto the office of his mediation, that hee ſhould preach the Goſpel vnto the poore, heale the broken hearted, that he ſhould preach deliuerance vnto captiues, and recouery of ſight to the blind, and ſet at liberty them that are bruſed, Luk. 4. 18. To this end hee had familiar ſociety with the fraile and weake, with thoſe who had little Faith, that hee might increaſe it, and no Faith, that hee might beget it, with publicans and ſinners and men full of infirmities; that he might bring them vnto God by true repentance. To this purpoſe he calleth ſuch as thirſt and hunger, feeling their owne emptineſſe of grace, and earneſtly deſiring to be filled and ſatisfied, and ſuch alſo as labour, and are heauy laden with the vnſupportable waight of their corruptions, promiſing that he will eaſe them. Laſtly, to this end hee hath ordained the miniſtery of the word and adminiſtration of the Sacraments, not onely to beget faith where it is not, but to nouriſh and increaſe it where it is weake and feeble. And therefore though our faith be neuer ſo weake and ſmall, let not Satan perſwade vs that therefore it ſhall bee ouerthrowne and turned into infidelitie: for the Lord hath aſſured vs both by his gratious promiſes in his word, and alſo by the performance thereof in his works from the beginning to this day, that where he hath giuen the leaſt meaſure of faith, or any other ſanctifying grace, there he will alſo increaſe, ſtrengthen and confirme it; and where hee hath begun any good worke, there hee will finiſh and perfect it, notwithſtanding our fraile weakneſſe, and the forcible violence of all our ſpirituall enemies.

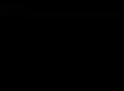
Of our iuſtification.



And ſo much concerning thoſe tentations of Satan which hee ſuggeſteth to the end that hee may fruſtrate our effectual calling

Q. Self. Of the ... ...

ling. The next subordinate cause and meanes of our saluation is our iustification, for whomsoeuer the Lord effectually calleth, those also hee iustifieth, as it is Rom. 8. 30. In speaking whereof I will first shew what it is, and afterwards answere such tentations of Satan, as he suggesteth into our mindes, to the end that he may infringe the doctrine of iustification, and make it vaine and vnprofitable vnto vs. For the first, iustification is an action or worke of the whole Trinitie, the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost, whereby God graciously and freely imputing vnto euery faithfull man the righteousnesse and obedience of Christ the mediator, doth accept of him, and pronounce him to be iust and righteous, for the glory of his name and saluation of the beleeuer. The efficient cause of our iustification is God alone, as appeareth by manifest testimonies. Esa. 43. 25. I euen I am hee that putteth away thine iniquities for mine owne sake, and will not remember thy sinnes. So Ezech. 16. 8. the Lord thus speaketh to his Church and people: I spread my skirts ouer thee, and couered thy filthinesse. 9. Then I washed thee with water, yea I washed away thy blood from thee, and anointed thee with oyle. 10. I clothed thee with broydred worke, &c. Whereby he signifieth that hee purged it with the blood of Christ from all sin, and adorned it with the rich robe of his righteousnesse. The Apostle likewise saith, that it is God who iustifieth him, who in himselfe was vngodly. Rom. 4. 5. and 8. 33. It is God who iustifieth, who shall condemne? The reason hereof is manifest, because it is the Lord against whom we haue sinned, as Dauid speaketh, Psal. 51. 4. It is his law which wee haue transgressed, and hee alone is our supreme Iudge, who hath authority to absolue or condemne vs, and therefore he onely can giue vnto vs the pardon and remission of our sinnes, and accept of vs as iust and righteous. And this worke is not peculiar vnto any one person, but in common to the whole Trinitie. For God the Father being fully satisfied by the full satisfaction, righteousnesse, and obedience of Christ the sonne, applied vnto vs by the holy spirit, doth pardon and forgiue vs all our sinnes, and pronounceth and accepteth of vs as innocent, and indued with perfect righteousnesse. The motiue or impulsiue cause, which moued the Lord thus to iustifie vs, was not any thing in vs or out of himselfe, but of his meere mercy and free good will, wherewith hee hath loued vs from the beginning, as it manifestly appeareth Rom. 3. 24. Where the Apostle saith, that wee are iustified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Iesus. And Tit. 3. 5. 7. Not by the workes of righteousnesse which we had done, but according to his mercy he saued vs, by the washing of the new birth and renewing of the holy Ghost. 7. That being iustified by his grace, we should bee made heires according to the hope of eternall life. The instrumentall causes are of two sorts: first on Gods part, the word and the Sacraments, whereby the Lord offereth, conueigheth, sealeth, and assureth vnto vs his mercie and grace, Christ Iesus with his merits, righteousnesse, and obedience, the remission of our sinnes, and euerlasting life. Secondly, on our part a true and liuely Faith, whereby we receiue and apply vnto our selues the mercy of God, Christ Iesus and all his benefits, resting vpon him alone for our saluation.

Q. Sect. 2. The materiall cause, Rom. 3. 25.

The materiall cause of our iustification is the actiue and passiue righteousnesse and obedience of Iesus Christ, his inherent holinesse, his fulfilling of the law, his death, sacrifice, and full satisfaction. So that we are not iustified by the essential righteousnes of the Godhead, nor by our owne workes ioyned with Christs merits, nor by any inherent righteousnesse infused of God through the merits of Christ, or by any other thing in our selues, or any other meere creature, but by the alone righteousnesse of our mediatour Iesus Christ God and man, which is out of our selues and in Christ as the proper subiect thereof, and not belonging to vs, till by the spirit of God and a liuely faith it be applied vnto vs and so becommeth ours. The formall cause of our iustification actiuely taken is a reciprocall imputation or transmutation of the sinnes of the beleeuer vnto Christ, and of his righteousnesse vnto the beleeuer: whereby it commeth to passe, that the faithfull man hath not his sins imputed vnto him, nor the punishment due vnto them inflicted on him, because Christ hath taken vpon him the guilt and punishment, and by making full satisfaction vnto his fathers iustice, hath obtained the pardon and remission of all his sins. And also is clothed with the glorious robe of Christ Iesus righteousnesse, and so appearing before God both free from all sin, and indued with perfect righteousnesse, hee is iustified, reconciled, and eternally saued. And of this imputed righteousnes the Apostle speaketh. Rom. 4. 5. But to him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousnesse. 6. Euen as Dauid declareth the blessednesse of the man vnto whom God imputeth righteousnesse without workes, saying. 7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiuen, and whose sinnes are couered. 8. Blessed is the man vnto whom the Lord imputeth not sinne. And 2. Cor. 5. 19. For God was in Christ and reconciled the world vnto himselfe, not imputing their sinnes vnto them, &c. 21. For hee hath made him to be sinne for vs which knew no sinne, that wee should bee made made the righteousnesse of God in him. And the Apostle affirmeth, 1. Cor. 1. 30. That Iesus Christ is made vnto vs of God, wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification and redemption. So that now Christs righteousnesse is our righteousnesse, his obedience our obedience, his merits our merits, as certainly, perfectly and effectually, euen as if wee our selues had beene most innocent, fulfilled the Law, or made full satisfaction to Gods iustice. By which it appeareth, that in respect of our selues weare justified freely of Gods meere mercy and grace, without any respect of our owne righteousnesse or worthinesse; but yet through Christ, and for his righteousnesse and obedience imputed to vs, both which are signified by the Apostle, Rom. 3. 23, 24. where hee saith that all in themselues are wretched sinners without difference, & thereby are depriued of the glory of Gods Kingdom. 24. And are iustified freely of his grace, through the redemption which is in Christ Iesus. The forme of our justification passiuely taken, is the application of Christs righteousnes by faith, whence it is, that faith is said to be our righteousnes, because it alone applyeth Christs righteousnes to vs, & no other grace.

1. Cor. 1. 30.

Rom. 3. 23, 24.

9. Sect. 3. The finall cause.

The finall cause of our justification is two fold, the chiefe and principall is the glory of God: for hereby the Lord hath most notably manifested his infinite justice and mercie; his justice, in that hee would rather punish our sinnes in his onely begotten Sonne, then he would suffer them to go vnpunished; his mercy, in that for our sakes he spared not his best beloued Sonne, but gaue him to suffer death, yea, the death of the Crosse, that by his one oblation, hee might make full satisfaction for our sinnes, and purchase for vs euerlasting life; and also in that hee vouchsafeth vnto vs the outward meanes of his Word and Sacraments, and the inward assistance of his holy Spirit, whereby we are vnited vnto Christ and haue a liuely faith begotten in vs, which apprehending Christ his righteousnes and merits, we are thereby justified, sanctified, and eternally saued. And this end is signified by the Apostle, Rom. 3. 24, 25. where he saith that God hath iustified vs freely by his grace, through the redemption which is in Christ Iesus, to declare his righteousnesse by the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and might shew himself iust by iustifying him, who is of the faith of Iesus. And Chap. 5. 21. hee saith, that as vnder the Law sinne had raigned vnto death so now grace raigneth by righteousnesse vnto eternall life through Iesus Christ our Lord. So Ephes. 2. 5, 6, 7. hee affirmeth that God hath quickned vs in Christ who were dead in our sinnes, and hath raised vvp in him, that he might shew in the ages to come the exceeding riches of his grace through his kindnesse towards vs in Christ Iesus. The inferiour and subordinate end is, that our salvation may hereby bee firmely assured vnto vs, for now our saluation is not in vs, but in the hands of God, and is grounded, not on our owne workes and worthinesse, but vpon the righteousnesse and obedience of Iesus Christ, which is a most certaine and firme foundation which will neuer faile vs. And this the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 4. 16. whereas he saith, that the couenant of grace whereby we are assured of euerlasting saluation is made by faith, that it might come by grace, and the promise might be sure to all the seed.

Rom. 3. 25. and 5. 21.

Ephes. 2. 5, 6, 7.

Rom. 4. 16.

The parts of our justification are two, the remission of our sins, and the imputation of Christs righteousnesse. For as in euery naturall man, there is the corruption, guilt and punishment of sinne, and the absence or priuation of holinesse and righteousnesse; so in Christ we haue a remedy for both: for the first by his passion and suffering: for the other by his actual obedience and perfect fulfilling of the Law. And this is manifest, Rom. 4. 6, 7. where the Apostle distinctly maketh mention of the righteousnesse of Iesus Christ imputed without workes, and of the forgiuenesse, couering and not imputing of sinne. Neither was it sufficient for the obtaining of euerlasting life and happinesse, that our Mediatour should by his death make full satisfaction for our sins, both of commission, and also omission, but also that hee should clothe vs with his actiue obedience, whereby we might appeare perfectly righteous before God. The truth hereof may further appeare, if wee consider first that our Sauiour Christ was not bound to fulfill the Law for himselfe, because hee was from the first moment of his conception assumed into the hypostaticall and personall vnion with the second person in Trinitie, and consequently was not only man but God also, and therefore not bound to any Law, neither needing any legall righteousnesse being already indued with a farre more excellent righteousnesse, euen the righteousnesse of God. So that either our Sauiour performed obedience to the Law to no purpose, or else to this end that he might impute it vnto vs, and thereby indue vs with such a most perfect and euerlasting righteousnesse as might giue vnto vs the right of eternall life. For whereas some say, that Christ fulfilled the Law for himselfe, that hee might be an holy High Priest, and an holy Sacrifice: I answere that this needed not seeing he was perfectly sanctified in the wombe by the holy Spirit, and by vertue of the Hypostaticall vnion indued with the righteousnesse of God; and therefore needed not to be made righteous by this legall obedience. Secondly, if onely our sinnes were pardoned and we not made partakers of Christs actiue righteousnesse, our imputed righteousnesse, should not excell the righteousnesse of Adam before his fall, for he neither committed sin of omission nor commission, till he transgressed Gods Commandement in eating of the forbidden fruit; but we are made partakers of a more excellent righteousnesse by faith, then wee lost in Adam, even the righteousnesse of God by the faith of Iesus Christ, as the Apostle speaketh, Rom.3.22. which consisteth not onely in the absence of euill and sinne, but in the presence also of actuall holinesse and righteousnesse. Thirdly, and lastly (because it is my purpose onely to touch this point by the way, as not so properly belonging to this Treatise) wee are vnited vnto Christ Iesus, and he is become our Head and we his members, by reason of which vnion as hee communicateth himselfe vnto vs, so also that which belongeth vnto him as he is our Mediatour, and consequently not onely his passiue obedience, whereby hee hath made full satisfaction for our sinnes, but also his actuall righteousnesse, whereby he perfectly fulfilled the Law. And thus it appeareth that our iustification consisteth of two parts, the first the remission of our sinnes for the full satisfaction of Christ, by his death and sufferings, the other the imputation of his habituall & actiue righteousnesse. The remission of sin is the first part of iustification, whereby God forgiueth for the death and full satisfaction of Christ, all our sinnes both originall and actuall, both in respect of the guilt and punishment, so as they shall neuer bee imputed to our condemnation, neither in this life, nor in the life to come. And of this the Psalmist speaketh, Psal.32.1. Blessed is the man whose wickednesse is forgiuen, and whose sinne is couered. 2. Blessed is the man vnto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquitie. So the Apostle saith, that God was in Christ, and reconciled the world to himselfe, not imputing their sinnes vnto them, 2.Cor.5.19. The imputation of Christs righteousnesse is the other part of our iustification, whereby God imputeth vnto euery Beleeuer the righteousnesse of the Mediatour Iesus Christ, as if it were properly their owne and performed by them, that being clothed therewith they may bee perfectly righteous in Gods sight, and so obtain right vnto euerlasting life and happinesse. And of this the Apostle speaketh, Rom.4.6. Euen as (saith he) Dauid declareth the blessednesse of the man vnto whom God imputeth righteousnesse without workes. And Rom.9.30. The Gentiles which followed not righteousnesse haue attained vnto righteousnesse, euen the righteousnesse which is of faith. So Phil.3.8,9. The Apostle saith, that he accounted all things losse, and judged them to be dung, that he might winne Christ, and might bee found in him, not hauing his owne righteousnesse which is of the law, but that which is of the faith of Christ, euen the righteousnesse which is of God through faith. Ier.23.6. Now this righteousnesse of Christ is twofold; his habituall and inherent holinesse and innocencie, whereby hee was free from all corruption and sinne both originall and actuall; and indued with all holinesse & puritie of nature, from the first moment of his conception. And of this the Apostle speaketh, 2.Cor.5.21. He that knew no sinne, was made sinne for vs. And 1.Pet.2.22. Who did no sinne, neither was there any guile found in his mouth. So Heb.4.15. he is said to be without sinne; And 1.Pet.1.19. hee is called the Lambe vndefiled and without spot. And himselfe challengeth the Iewes, Iohn 8.46. Which of you can rebuke mee of sinne? And this holinesse being imputed vnto vs, is opposed to our originall sinne and naturall corruption. The other is his actuall righteousnesse, whereby he performed perfect obedience vnto the Law in all his thoughts, words, and deeds, throughout the whole course of his life. And this being imputed vnto vs, and becomming ours by reason of that vnion which is betweene Christ and vs, is opposed vnto our actuall transgression, whereby we haue broken the whole Law of God, in omitting the duties commanded, & in committing the vices & sins forbidden.

for

Q. Sect.5. Of the subiect and time of Iustification.

The persons who are thus justified are all the faithfull, and they only who doe apply the righteousnesse of Iesus Christ vnto themselues by a true and liuely faith. And thus the Apostle doth limit and restraine it: Rom.3.21,22. where he saith, that the righteousnesse of God is made manifest without the law; to wit, the righteousnesse of God by the faith of Iesus Christ, vnto all and vpon all that beleeue. And 4,5. To him that worketh not but beleeueth in him that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousnesse. And our Sauiour hath promised, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him shall not come into iudgement, but hath passed from death to life; Iohn 5.24. The time when wee are thus justified is first in this life, as soon as true faith is begot in vs by the ministery of the Word, whereby wee particularly apply vnto our selues Christ Iesus and all his benefits, resting and relying vpon him alone for our justification and saluation; the which shall be fully perfected at the day of Iudgement, when as our Sauiour Christ shall pronounce the sentence of absolution, saying, Come yee blessed of my Father, take the inheritance of the Kingdome prepared for you from the foundation of the world, Matth.25.34.

That we are not iustified by our workes and merits.

Q. Sect.1. Satans tentations concerning iustifica-

HAuing shewed briefly the doctrine of Iustification: Wee are now to speake of and to answer such tentations as are suggested

by our spirituall enemy, to the end that hee may perswade vs that wee are not justified, or that hee may moue vs to seeke for justification where it is not to be had, and so in the meane time neglect it where only it is to be found, and the alone meanes whereby it is to be enjoyed. In speaking whereof I shall not need to handle things so largely as those points which went before, partly because our justification doth inseparably follow our effectuall calling, and therefore hee that is assured of the one needs not to doubt of the other, partly because the most of those tentations which Sathan suggesteth to impugne and make void our assurance that we are justified, are already answered, namely, those which concerne the remission of our sinnes, and true faith in Iesus Christ: and partly because those tentations which Satan suggesteth into the minds of afflicted Christians, are the selfe-same which the limbes of Satan the Antichrist of Rome and all his Apostaticall Synagogue doe hold and defend: and therefore I shal not need to intreat hereof at large because these points in controuersie haue beene already and will be hereafter so copiously, learnedly, & religiously handled by others of greater abilities, and farre more excellent gifts. But let vs come to the matter in hand. The tentations of Sathan concerning this point are of two sorts: the first tend to perswade vs to labour after and to rest vpon an imperfect and maimed righteousnesse for our justification, whereby we can neuer be justified in Gods sight, and so in the meane time hee causeth vs to neglect the al-sufficient and most perfect righteousnesse of Iesus Christ, by which alone we are justified before God and eternally saued: the other tend to make vs doubt of our true justification, that so hee may either make this gracious worke of God frustrate in vs, or else at least depriue our soules of that true consolation and peace of conscience, which dependeth vpon the assurance of our justification.

Sect. 2. How Sathan tempteth vs to neglect Christs righteousnes, and to rest vpon our owne.

For the first, hee will labour to perswade vs that it is not the righteousnesse of Iesus Christ, imputed vnto vs by God and apprehended and applied vnto vs by faith, whereby we are justified in Gods sight, for this imputatiue righteousnesse is but meerely putatiue and imaginary, but by that inherent righteousnesse which is in our selues. For Christ (will hee say) did not fulfill the Law and die, that this his righteousnesse and obedience should become ours by imputation, but he died to the end hee might merit for vs the Spirit of God, which should infuse into vs an inherent righteousnes, and he shed his bloud to the end that our good workes being dipped and died therein, might become perfect and so justifie vs in Gods sight, and therefore that wee are not justified by him alone, but by our other graces and vertues also, and our good workes proceeding from them; neither by faith at all as it is an instrument which applieth Christ and his benefits vnto vs, but as it is a grace or vertue infused into our selues. Against which tentation it behoueth vs most carefully to arme our selues, as being most dangerous and pernicious. For it robbeth God and our Saiour Christ of the whole glory of our justification and saluation, and deriueth some, yea the greatest portion vnto our selues, as being chiefly justified by our owne meanes; and also it depriueth our soules of all true comfort and full assurance that wee are justified and saued, by taking out of our hands the strong staffe of our saluation, the perfect righteousnesse of Iesus Christ, and by putting into them the weake reed of our owne workes, which will presently breake and faile vs, when we most rest vpon it. And so we shall vnrecouerably fall into the horrible pit of deepe desperation, when as we are abandoned of our chiefe hope, that is, when on the one side the huge waight of our grieuous sinnes, and on the other side the great imperfection of our most perfect righteousnesse, and the filthy pollution of our most glorious workes appeare vnto vs. And to the end that wee may be the better inabled to resist this dangerous and damnable tentation, I will first shew that we cannot be justified before the Tribunall of Gods judgement by our inherent righteousnesse and good workes; and secondly, that wee are justified by faith alone, as it only applieth vnto vs Christ Iesus his righteousnesse and obedience.

That wee are not justified by our owne workes and righteousnesse, it manifestly appeareth both by plaine testimonies of holy Scripture, and strong arguments which are grounded vpon them. For the first, the Apostle plainly saith, that by the workes of the Law shall no flesh be iustified in his sight, for by the Law commeth the knowledge of sinne: but now is the righteousnes of God made manifest without the Law, hauing witnesse of the Law and the Prophets; to wit, the righteousnesse of God, by the faith of Iesus Christ, vnto all and vpon all that beleeue. Rom. 3. 20. 21, 22. So Phil. 3. 9. Hee disclaimeth his owne righteousnesse, and resteth vpon the alone righteousnesse of Christ Iesus, which is made ours by faith, for his justification and saluation. I haue (saith he) counted all things loss, and doe iudge them to bee dung that I may winne Christ, and might be found in him, not hauing mine owne righteousnesse, which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, euen the righteousnes which is of God through faith: Phil. 3. 9. And Gal. 3. 10, 11. he affirmeth, that as many as rest in the workes of the Law, are vnder the curse;

Sect. 3. That wee are not iustified by our workes, proued by Scripture.

Rom. 3. 20. 21. Phil. 3.

Phil. 3. Gal. 3.

and that no man is iustified by the Law in the sight of God, it is euident, because the iust shall liue by faith. So Rom. 4. 5. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousnes. And our Sauiour Christ teacheth vs to say and acknowledge when wee haue done all to our vttermost power which is commanded vs, that wee are still vnprofitable seruants, Luk. 17. 10.

But vnto these and such like manifest places, it is answered that the Apostle speaketh not of the workes of the morall law, but of the ceremonies only. To which againe wee reply, that no such friuolous distinction can bee gathered out of the Apostles words, nay, the plaine contrary euidently appeareth, by his maine scope and drift in his whole discourse of our iustification, and also by some particular places. His chiefe scope is to beate downe the pride of all, both Iewes and Gentiles, to the end that the whole glory and praise of our iustification and saluation might be ascribed to the free mercy, grace, and goodnesse of God alone. Now it is most certaine that the morall duties are in themselues farre more excellent then the ceremoniall, and consequently more fit to puffe vs vp with a spirituall pride, and to make vs to rest in our selues for our iustification, ascribing at least some part of the praise vnto our owne works and vertues: so that if the Apostle had only spoken of the works of the ceremoniall law, mans pride should not bee beaten downe, neither should God haue the whole praise of our saluation, and so his discourse should be vaine, as not tending to proue and inforce that, for which end and purpose hee chiefly vndertaken it. Againe this should nothing concerne either the Gentiles in former times, or any true Christians since the comming of Christ, forasmuch as they did not, nor doe not, neither were, nor are bound to obserue the ceremoniall law, and consequently could neuer once dreame of obtaining righteousnesse by fulfilling the ceremonies; but they would rather ascribe the glory of their iustification to their morall duties, to which they found themselues bound by the Law of nature written in their hearts, or doe find themselues bound by the morall Law of God written in his word; and therefore it was necessary for the beating downe of their pride, and that they might ascribe the whole glory vnto God of their iustification and saluation, that the Apostle in this discourse should proue that they were not iustified, either by obseruing the Law of nature written in their hearts, or yet the morall Law of God reuealed in his word. Whereby it manifestly appeareth, that howsoeuer the Apostle excludeth the workes of the ceremoniall Law from being causes of iustification, yet not them alone, but the workes of the morall Law also.

But this may more manifestly appeare by particular places wherin the Apostle plainly sheweth that hee speaketh not onely of the ceremoniall Law, but of the morall Law also. In the second chapter of the Epistle to the Romanes, hee plainely disputeth as well of the Law of nature, to the obedience whereof the Gentiles were obliged, as of the Law giuen by Moses Chap. 3. 19. 20. hee saith that all the world are made culpable before God, and therefore by the workes of the Law shall no flesh be iustified in his sight. Now if this consequence bee good, he speaketh not onely of the ceremoniall, but of the morall duties, for the former belonged not to the Gentiles, and therefore the neglect of them did not make them culpable, nor debarre them of being iustified by their owne workes. Secondly, Rom. 10. 5. 6. and Gal. 3. 11. 12. 21. 22. 24. the Apostle putteth a plaine difference betweene the righteousnesse which is by the Law, and the righteousnesse which is by faith, and maketh a flat opposition in the act of iustification, not betweene morall and ceremoniall duties, but betweene doing & beleeuing, faith and workes. Thirdly, he saith, Eph. 2. 8. 9. that we are saued by grace through faith, not of our selues, nor of works, lest any man should boast himselfe. If he had spoken only, of workes they might (though foolishly) haue wrested it to ceremonies onely, seeing the Ephesians were not bound to the ceremoniall Law, as being strangers to the common wealth of Israel, as himselfe speaketh, verse. 12. but when he saith also not of our selues, he excludeth all whatsoeuer is in vs from being the cause of our saluation, not only ceremoniall but also morall duties. So writing to Titus he saith, Tit. 3. 5. Not by the workes of righteousnes which we had done, but according to his mercy he saued vs: in which place wee are necessarily to vnderstand the workes of the morall Law; for Titus being a Grecian was not bound to obserue the ceremoniall Law, and therefore hee was not so much as circumcised, as the Apostle plainly affirmeth, Ga. 2. 3. Fourthly, Paul speaketh of that Law by which we come to the knowledge of sin, as appeareth Rom. 3. 20. and 7. 7, 8, 9. But the knowledge of sin came especially by the Morall law, & therefore of this Law the Apostle speaketh. Lastly, the Apostle speaking of the works of the law, alleageth these sentences: Gal. 3. 10. As many as are of the workes of the Law are vnder the curse: for it is written, Cursed is euery man that continueth not in all things which are written in the booke of the Law to doe them. So that he speaketh not of the ceremoniall Law alone, but of the whole

Secondly, it is anſwered that the Apoſtle ſpeaketh onely of the workes of thoſe who are not regenerate nor indued with Faith, and not of the regenerate and faithfull. Which ſhifting cauill the Apoſtle cleerely taketh away, not onely by applying his ſpeeches vnto all men without any limitation, but eſpecially in that example of Abraham which hee bringeth for this purpoſe; who though hee were long before regenerate, indued with faith and exceeding plentifull in good workes, yet hee flatly excludeth all his workes from being any cauſes of his iuſtification. So Rom. 4. 2. If Abraham were iuſtified by workes, he had herein to reioyce, but not with God. And verſe 3. Abraham beleeued God, and it was counted vnto him for righteouſneſſe. 4. Now to him that worketh, the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt. 5. But to him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iuſtifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſſe.

And ſo much concerning the teſtimonies of Scripture, which manifeſtly prooue that wee are not iuſtified by our workes. The reaſons which may bee brought to the ſame purpoſe are exceeding many; but I will will briefly touch ſome few only. Firſt, iuſtification is manifeſtly oppoſed to condemnation: and they are both iudiciall wordes vſed in Ciuill Courts, and therefore to bee vnderſtood both iudicially and not after a diuers manner. But to condemne ſignifieth not to infuſe any fault or crime into the perſon condemned; but to pronounce him guilty and faultie: and therefore to iuſtifie ſignifieth not to infuſe righteouſnes into the perſon iuſtified; but to declare, pronounce and repute him as juſt and righteous. Secondly, by the ſame meanes whereby wee obtaine the remiſſion of our ſinnes, wee are alſo iuſtified and made righteous; but wee obtaine the remiſſion of our ſinnes, not for our workes or inherent righteouſneſſe, or any vertue that is in our ſelues, but by and for the alone merits, obedience, and full ſatisfaction of Chriſt, apprehended and applied vnto vs by a liuely faith, as appeareth Rom. 3. 25. And therefore by this meanes alone we are alſo iuſtified. Thirdly, whoſoeuer are iuſtified freely by grace, they are not iuſtified by their owne merits, workes, or inherent righteouſnes: but the Scriptures teſtifie that all the faithfull are iuſtified freely by Gods grace, as appeareth Rom. 3. 23. 24. All haue ſinned and are deprined of the glory of God. 24. And are iuſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Ieſus. So Eph. 1. 7. By whom we haue redemption, through his blood, euen the forgiuenes of ſinnes according to his rich grace, And 2. 8. By grace are you ſaued through faith, and that not of your ſelues, it is the gift of God. And Tit. 3. Not by the workes of righteouſneſſe which we had done, but according to his mercie he ſaued vs, &c. 7. That we being iuſtified by his grace, ſhould be made heires according to hope of eternal life. And therefore none are iuſtified by their owne merits, workes, or inherent righteouſneſſe. Laſtly, the Apoſtle Paul himſelfe gathereth many abſurdities which would follow this doctrine of iuſtification by works. Firſt, that our faith ſhould be vaine, and the promiſe of God void, Rom. 4. 14. Secondly, that Chriſt Ieſus ſhould die in vaine if we haue righteouſneſſe by the law, Gal. 2. 21. Thirdly, that wee ſhould haue cauſe of boaſting and glorying in our ſelues, Epheſ. 2. 9. for if a man were iuſtified by his owne inherent righteouſnes, hee ſhould haue whereof to glorie, and ſo God ſhould be robbed of the whole praiſe of our ſaluation, Rom. 4. 2. But the Lord of purpoſe hath iuſtified vs freely of his grace, and not for our workes and inherent righteouſneſſe, that all glorying in our ſelues might be excluded: as appeareth, Rom. 3. 27. Epheſ. 2. 9. Fourthly, it would follow hereupon that wee ſhould ſtill bee vnder the curſe of the Law, which is denounced againſt all who continue not in all that is written in the booke of the Law to doe it, as the Apoſtle reaſoneth Gal. 3. 10. Fifthly, that the obedience and ſatisfaction of Chriſt ſhould bee maimed and imperfect, vnleſſe it were patched vp with our owne righteouſnes: the contrary whereof the Apoſtle affirmeth, Heb. 7. 25. namely, that he is able perfectly to ſaue all them, who come vnto God by him. Sixthly, hereupon it would follow that wee ſhould continually wauer and doubt, in reſpect of our manifold corruptions and imperfect righteouſneſſe, and ſhould haue our ſoules depriued of that peace of conſcience which followeth iuſtification by faith, as it is, Rom. 5. 1. Laſtly, with the Iewes wee ſhall bring our ſelues into moſt certaine danger of being reiected and caſt off, from being the people and Church of God, if with them wee goe about to eſtabliſh our owne righteouſnes, in the meane time not ſubmitting our ſelues to the righteouſnes of God, which is of faith in Ieſus Chriſt, as it is Rom. 10. 4. 6.

CHAP. LII.

That faith alone iustifieth.

ANd thus much concerning the first point, namely, that we are not iustified by workes. The second is, that wee are iustified by faith alone: whereby wee are not to vnderstand that faith by its owne vertue, or as it is a faculty, habit, worke or action in vs, doth iustifie vs, but as it is the alone instrument, whereby we doe apprehend and applie vnto vs Christ Iesus, his righteousnesse, and obedience, by which only righteousnes, which is out of our selues, in Christ, as the proper subiect thereof, being offered in the word and Sacraments, and applied by faith, wee are iustified in Gods sight, as appeareth Phil. 3. 9. Secondly, whereas wee say that faith alone iustifieth, we do not vnderstand such a faith, as is alone without workes, charitie, and other sanctifying graces, which were nothing else but imaginarie, dead, and but as it were a carkasse of faith which breatheth not; but that among all other graces, vertues, and faculties of the soule faith alone, and not any of them, is the instrument, whereby we applie Christ Iesus vnto vs, who being thus applied doth iustifie vs. Otherwise we affirme that other graces of Gods Spirit, and even good works which as a fruit of them all, doe necessarilie accompanie our iustification, not as instrumentes or causes therof, but as inseparable effects and fruits. So that howsoever wee exclude workes from the act of justifying, yet wee necessarily require them in the subiect or person iustified; we affirme that faith alone iustifieth, but we denie that such a faith which is alone doth iustifie vs; we maintaine that wee are justified by faith alone without workes, but withall wee affirme that faith which is without workes doth not justifie vs, as being dead, false and imaginarie. This may bee made plaine by some similitudes. To the being of an honest man, there is necessarily required honest actions, not as causes but as effects, neither are his honest actions the cause of his honestie, but his honestie the cause of his honest actions. To a liuing man there is necessarily required as wel breathing which is an action or effect of life, as the soule which is the cause thereof; and so to a iustified man there is necessarily required, as well good works which are the effects of iustification, as faith which is the instrumentall cause thereof; for faith and workes are neuer seuered in the subiect or partie iustified, although they are distinguished in the act of iustifying. So the eye onely seeth and not the forehead; but yet the eye seuered from the forehead seeth not, because it is but a dead eye; the hand writeth & not the body, but the hand seuered from the body writeth not, because it is a dead hand. The foot goeth and not the head or heart, but the foot which is seuered from the head or heart goeth not; so faith only iustifieth, and not hope, not charitie, not workes, but the faith that is seuered from hope, charitie and workes, iustifieth not, because it is but a dead faith. As therefore when wee say the eye onely seeth, the hand onely writeth, the foot onely walketh, our meaning is not, that these parts being alone, and seuered from the rest, see, write and walke; but that amongst all other parts, the action or function of seeing belongeth peculiarly vnto the eye, writing to the hand, walking to the foote: so when when we say that onely faith iustifieth, our meaning is not that the faith which is alone, and seuered from other graces and the fruits of them good workes, iustifieth; but that amongst all other graces, this act of iustifying peculiarly and properly belongeth vnto faith, and not to any other grace, vertue or workes.

Now that faith alone, in this sense vnderstood, iustifieth, appeareth plainely, both by testimonies of Scripture and apparent reasons. For the first, it is manifest, Rom. 3. 28. where after long disputation concerning this point, the Apostle expressely concludeth thus: Therefore wee conclude, that a man is iustified by faith without the workes of the Law. And Chap. 4. verse. 5. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousnesse. So Galath. 2. 16. Know that a man is not iustified by the workes of the Law, but by the faith of Iesus Christ; euen we I say haue beleeued in Iesus Christ, that we might be Iustified by the faith of Christ, and and not by the workes of the Law, because by the workes of the Law, no flesh shall be iustified. So Chap. 3. 11. And that no man is iustified by the Law in the sight of God, it is euident: for the iust shall liue by faith. 12. And the Law is not of faith. And hence it is that the righteousnesse of Christ, whereby wee are iustified, is called the righteousnes of faith, Rom. 9. vers. 30. because faith is the onely instrument, which apprehendeth and applieth this righteousnesse vnto vs, for our iustification.

Q. Sect. 2. Testimonies to proue that faith alone iustifieth vs. Rom. 3. 28. and 4. 5.

Galath. 2. 16.

Galath. 3. 11.

Rom. 9. 30.

The reasons to proue that faith alone iustifieth are diuers. First that which alone applieth vnto vs Christ Iesus and his righteousnesse, that onely iustifieth vs: but faith alone applieth vnto vs Christ Iesus and his righteousnesse, and not hope, charitie, or any other grace: and therefore faith alone iustifieth. Secondly, that which only maketh the promises of the Gospell firme and sure vnto vs, that alone iustifieth vs: but faith alone resting vpon Gods mercy and Christs merits, merits, maketh the promises of the Gospell firme and sure vnto vs (which would be most vncertaine if they should depend on the condition of our workes and worthinesse, seeing they are most imperfect, and wee most corrupt and vnworthy of Gods least mercy; as the Apostle plainly sheweth, Rom.4.16. Therefore it is (namely the couenant of grace) by faith, that it might come by grace, and the promise might be sure to all the seed:) and therefore faith alone iustifieth vs. Lastly, our Sauiour Christ, Iohn 3.14,15. maketh this comparison: As Moses lift vp the Serpent in the wildernesse, so must the Sonne of man be lift vp; that whosoeuer beleeueth in him should not perish, but haue eternall life. From which wee may thus reason: as the Israelites who were stung with fiery Serpents, were cured not by any outward means of Physicke and Surgerie, or any thing in themselues, saue onely by looking vpon the brazen Serpent, which for this purpose was set vp by Gods Commandement; so we being stung of the olde Serpent with the sting of sinne, cannot be cured by any meanes without or within our selues, but by beholding the true substance Christ Iesus, signified by this shadow, with the eye of faith. And thus haue I proued, first, that we are not iustified by our workes, and inherent righteousnesse; and secondly, that we are iustified by faith alone: not as it is the chiefe and principall cause, for in this respect God iustifieth; nor as it is the matter or meritorious cause of our iustificatiō; for in this respect, the merits & righteousnesse of Iesus Christ iustifieth vs; but as it is the alone instrument and only cause in vs which applieth that meritorious cause vnto vs, whereby alone we are iustified in Gods sight.

Q. Sect. 3. Reasons to proue that faith alone iustifieth.

Rom.4.16.

Iohn 3.14,15.

Q. Sect.4. That the imputation of Christs righteousnesse is not putatiue and imaginary.

Secondly, the tempter will obiect, that this imputed righteousnesse wee speake of, is but imaginary, and a vaine phantasie; as if a man who were defiled with dirt should be reputed cleane by the imputation of anothers cleannesse, or as if a begger should bee esteemed rich, by imputation of anothers wealth. To which we are to answere, that the imputation of Christs righteousnesse vnto vs, is no imaginarie dreame, but a matter plainly expressed in Gods Word, as also the not imputation of our sinnes is therein specified. In the fourth of the Romans, this word is vsed by the Holy Ghost an eleuen times. So Verse 3. Abraham beleeued God, and it was imputed vnto him for righteousnesse. And Verse 4. To him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith is imputed for righteousnesse. And Verse 6. Euen as Dauid declared the blessednesse of the man vnto whom God imputeth righteousnesse without workes. And Verse 8. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not sinne, &c.

Rom.4.3,4.

Yea will the tempter say, it is true that we are iustified by imputed righteousnesse; but not by the righteousnesse of Christ, which is out of our selues; but our faith which is formed and perfected with Charitie, and other graces, and good workes, is imputed for righteousnesse: or more plainly, God accepteth of the workes of the faithfull, and their inherent righteousnesse, though imperfect and vnworthy in themselues, for, and through Christ, for such righteousnes which may iustifie vs in his sight. For the answering of which obiection, wee are to know, that this word imputing, or imputation, is taken two wayes in the Scriptures: first, when as the thing imputed is in our selues, and so it is said, *Psal.*106.31. that the fact of Phinees was imputed vnto him for righteousnesse; so *Rom.*5.13. But sinne is not imputed where there is no Law. Secondly, when as the thing imputed is out of our selues; and of this, mention is made, *Leuit.*17.4. and *Numb.*18.27. And in this latter sense the word is to be vnderstood in the doctrine of iustification, and not in the former. For our sinnes were imputed vnto Christ, when hee offered himselfe to stand in our place, to pay our debt and to make full satisfaction to his Fathers iustice, by suffering those punishments and manifold afflictions which wee by our sinnes had deserued; in which respect the Scriptures say that hee was reputed amongst the wicked, Marke 15.28. and that he was made sinne for vs, 2. *Cor.*5.21. not by infusion of our sinnes and corruptions into his most holy nature, but by imputation only. And contrariwise, wee are made iust or iustified, not by infusion of inherent righteousnes into vs, but by imputation of Christs righteousnesse, when as beleeuing in him, notwithstanding that our nature is still defiled with sinne and manifold corruptions, through the meere mercie and free grace of God for the merits and obedience of Christ, we are reputed iust, as though we had neuer committed sinne, and had performed perfect obedience vnto Gods Commandements, and so adiudged heires of euerlasting life. So that this imputation consisteth not in Gods reputing of vs iust, in respect of our inherent righteousnesse infused into vs; but in the free mercy and grace of God, which for Christ his sake couereth our sinnes, which are indeed inherent in vs, so as they shall neuer bee imputed vnto vs for our condemnation, and imputeth vnto vs the righteousnes which is not in vs but in Christ, wherewith being fully possessed, he reputeth of vs, as most innocent and perfectly righteous.

Q. Sect.6. The former point proued by the testimonies of the Scriptures.

Now, that imputation is to be vnderstood in this latter sense, it is most manifest where the Apostle Paul setteth downe the word in both these senses, denying that in this doctrine of iustification, it is to be vnderstood of

of the former, and affirming it of the latter. To him (saith he) that worketh, the wages is not imputed by fauour, but by debt (namely, because he hath merited it by his owne righteousnesse) 5. But to him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith is counted or imputed for righteousnesse; euen as Dauid declareth the blessednesse of the man vnto whom God imputeth righteousnesse without workes. In which words hee plainly sheweth, that there is a kind of imputation which hath its ground or foundation in workes and inherent righteousnesse, and this hee affirmeth is not of grace. And that there is another kind of imputation, which hath not its ground and foundation in him to whom it is made, but in the free mercy of God iustifying the wicked without his workes, and therefore not only destitute of inherent righteousnesse whereby he might be iustified, but also guiltie of inherent corruption and actuall transgression, whereby hee might bee condemned if God should enter into iudgement with him. So also he plainly affirmeth, Ephes. 2.8. that we are saued by grace through faith, and that not of our selues; it is the gift of God. 9. Not of workes, lest any man should boast himselfe.

Secondly, this may be proued by the example of Abraham, vpon which the Apostle in the former place insisteth; for by that imputed righteousnesse whereby he was iustified, we are also iustified: but the Apostle plainly affirmeth that this imputation was not of Abrahams inherent righteousnes, with the which notwithstanding hee was plentifully endued; for (as hee saith) if Abraham were iustified by workes, hee had wherein to reioyce, but not in God; but Abraham beleeued in God, and this was counted to him for righteousnesse, as it is Rom. 4.2,3. and therefore wee are not iustified by our workes and inherent righteousnesse, but by the righteousnesse of Christ imputed vnto vs.

Thirdly, that righteousnes which iustifieth vs must consist in perfect obedience and fulfilling of the Law of God, in that exact manner and measure which Gods iustice doth require: but this cannot possibly be done by any righteousnesse which is in vs, which is most imperfect and mingled with many sins and corruptions, for in many things we offend all, as it is Iam. 3.2. and he that saith he hath no sinne is a liar, as Iohn speaketh, 1. Epist. 1. 8. and our best righteousnes is like a polluted cloth, as it is Esay 64.6. but by the alone righteousnesse of Iesus Christ, which being imputed vnto vs, is sufficient to answere and satisfie Gods exact and most perfect iustice. That our righteousnesse whereby weare to bee iustified must bee perfect, and such as the Law and exact iustice of God requireth, it appeareth, Rom. 3.31. whereas the Apostle plainly affirmeth, that when faith is imputed vnto righteousnesse, the Law is not made void, but rather confirmed and fulfilled. Doe we then (saith hee) make the Law of none effect through faith? God forbid. Yea we establish the Law. But this cannot bee done by our righteousnesse, which is imperfect and mingled with innumerable sinnes, but by the alone most perfect righteousnesse of Iesus Christ imputed vnto vs. Againe, the Lord hath commanded and straitly charged, that in our ciuill iudgements the righteous shall bee iustified, and the wicked condemned, Deut. 25.1. And the Wiseman saith, that he who iustifieth the wicked, & he that condemneth the iust, euen they both are abomination vnto the Lord, Prou. 17.15. And the Prophet Esay denounceth a woe against them which commit this sinne, Chap. 5. Verse 23. Now, shall the Lord require this of vs, and shall we thinke that he whose will is the rule of iustice, will iustifie any whose righteousnesse is imperfect, and not according to his Law? No, hee hath told vs, that it is more easie that Heauen and Earth should passe away, then that one tittle of the Law should fall vnaccomplished, Luke 16.17. And therefore let vs not trust vnto our owne imperfect righteousnesse, but wholly rest vpon the alone righteousnesse of Iesus Christ by a liuely faith for our iustification. For hee is the Lord our righteousnesse, Ier. 23.6. In him we haue righteousnesse and strength. Esay 45.24. Hee is made vnto vs of God, wisdome, righteousnesse, sanctification and redemption, 1. Cor. 1.30. By his obedience many are made righteous, Rom. 5.19. And that which was impossible to the law, in as much as it was weake because of the flesh, God sending his Sonne in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and for sinne, condemned sinne in the flesh, that the righteousnesse of the law might bee fulfilled in vs: as it is Rom. 8.3,4. In a word, in him alone we haue all our righteousnesse, in him we shine gloriously in the sight of God, and he is that bright shining Sunne of righteousnesse, from whom we borrow all our light, without whose rayes of holinesse we should remayne in the darknesse of our sinnes and corruptions. Lastly, the Apostle setteth downe the forme of our iustification, namely, the imputation of our sinnes vnto Christ, and the imputation of his righteousnesse vnto vs. 2. Cor. 5.21. Hee which knew no sinne, was made sinne for vs, that wee might bee made the righteousnesse of God in him. As therefore Christ was made a sinner for vs, so wee are made righteous before God in him: but Christ Iesus was not made a sinner for vs by infusion of our sinnes and corruptions into his nature (for he was alwayes most holy, pure, vndefiled and without sinne, as the Apostle witnesseth of him) but by imputation onely, as being our suretie who who had taken vpon him to discharge all our debt: and therefore in like manner wee are made righteous, not by infusion of righteousnesse, but by imputation only.

§. Sect. 3. That iustification by imputation is not imaginary, but reall and in truth.

Now whereas they obiect, that to be iustified by imputation is but an imaginary mockery, as if a poore man should be reputed rich: to this we are to answere, that it is but a friuolous cauill: for wee doe not teach that God esteemeth and repuceth vs righteous, being wholly defiled with sinne and quite destitute of all righteousnesse; but that hee maketh vs perfectly righteous, by washing away our sinnes with the precious bloud of Christ, and by applying and appropriating vnto vs his perfect righteousnesse and obedience by vertue of his spirit principally, and a liuely faith instrumentally, whereby wee are vnited vnto Christ and become members of his Bodie, and consequently we haue right and full interest vnto all that which this our Head hath done for vs; and so being made partakers of his righteousnes and merits, God reputeth vs as wee are in truth perfectly just and righteous. If a man being poore and farre in debt, should be accounted and reputed exceeding rich and nothing indebted, it were indeed but a meere imagination: but if another of great sufficiencie should take vpon him to bee his suretie, and not onely discharge all his debts, but should bestow vpon him great summes of money and much treasure, this man whatsoeuer he was before time in himselfe, may now be esteemed rich & out of debt. So if we (as we are far indebted to the justice of God and exceeding beggerly, yea starke naked of all righteousnesse) should be reputed, as we are thus in our selues, righteous and nothing indebted, it were but a meere mockery; but seeing our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ hath taken vpon him to be our surety, who is himselfe al-sufficient, and seeing he hath perfectly and fully answered all our debts, wherein wee were ingaged to Gods justice; and not only so, but also hath communicated and bestowed vpon vs the infinite rich treasures of his righteousnesse and obedience, giuing vnto vs full interest and possession hereof, outwardly by his handwriting of the Gospell, and his Sacraments as Seales annexed thereunto, and inwardly by the vertue and cooperation of his Spirit, applying them vnto vs: and lastly, seeing we also haue receiued the full assurance of all this heauenly and spirituall rich treasure by the hand of faith, we are in truth quite out of debt, and exceeding rich with his righteousnesse which is now become ours, and therefore are so repued and esteemed in the sight of God. Againe the faithfull are to be considered not as diuers persons separated from Christ, but as they make one mysticall Body with him whereof he is the Head and they his members. By vertue of which vnion they become his and he theirs, and all that belongeth vnto him, as his satisfaction, righteousnesse, death and obedience. In which respect they cannot bee said to be just by anothers righteousnesse; seeing his righteousnesse by vertue of this vnion is truly become theirs, euen as the gifts and faculties which are in the Head doe belong to the whole Body and all the members of it for their vse and benefit. And thus also by the vnion of marriage a poore Wife becommeth really and truly rich by the riches of her husband; euen as wee also are inriched by vertue of our marriage with Christ: whereby he communicateth himselfe and all the riches of his righteousnesse vnto vs. For if Adams sinne became ours, because being the Head and root of mankind wee sinned in his loynes; then much more may Christs righteousnesse be truly reputed ours because of our mysticall vnion, whereby hee dwelleth in vs and we in him, and so make but one Body, head and members, both which are therefore by the Apostle called Christ, 1. Cor. 12. 12.

CHAP. LIII.

Sathans temptations moouing the weake Christian to doubt of his iustification, answered.

AND so much for answering Sathans temptations, wherby he would perswade vs to rest vpon a false and imperfect righteousnesse for our justification: Now we are briefly to speake of those which he suggesteth into the minds of weake Christians, to the end that hee may make them doubt of their justification, that so hee might (if it were possible) make frustrate this worke of God, or at least rob their soules of all comfort and peace of conscience, which alwayes accompanieth the assurance of our justification; for being iustified by faith wee haue peace towardes God through our Lord Iesus Christ, as the Apostle speaketh, Rom. 5. 1. First, therefore hee suggesteth that our justification is an action of God, and therefore vnknowne to vs; so that we cannot possibly attaine vnto any certaine perswasion that wee are justified of God, vnlesse he assure vs hereof by some speciall and extraordinary reuelation. For the answering whereof, wee are to vnderstand that this act of God in justifying a Sinner, is as cleerely reuealed ordinarily in the Scriptures, as any other thing concerning our saluation, and that euery true Beleeuer may as certainly conclude by vndoubted arguments grounded on Gods infallible truth, that hee is justified before God, as by naturall reason hee hee can proue that hee liueth and breatheth. For first our effectuall vocation and iustification are inseparably linked together by the Apostle, Rom.8.30. So that whosoeuer can prooue that hee is effectually called, hee may also most certainly inferre that he is iustified. But euery true Beleeuer may come to the certaine knowledge that he is effectually called, (as before I haue shewed at large) and that not by any speciall reuelation, but by the will of God, reuealed in his Word, by the inward testimony of Gods Spirit, and the vndoubted signes of effectuall calling, which he obserueth in himselfe; and therefore without any particular reuelation wee may attaine vnto this assurance also that we are iustified, that is, that our sinnes are pardoned for the merits and full satisfaction of Iesus Christ, and wee clothed with his righteousnesse.

Secondly, whosoeuer can come to the assurance that hee hath a true and liuely faith, hee may also be assured that hee is iustified: for it is the nature and an inseparable propertie of true faith, to apply vnto the Beleeuer Christ Iesus and his righteousnesse, whereby hee is iustified before God: and hence it is that the Scriptures plainly affirme that we are iustified by faith, and not by any thing else which is in vs, as before I haue sufficiently shewed. But wee may come to the certaine assurance that wee haue a true faith, by the vndoubted signes and inseparable fruits thereof, which wee may discerne in our selues (as hath beene already plainly proued) though wee neuer haue any speciall reuelation. And therefore without any such particular reuelation wee may attaine vnto the certaine assurance that we are iustified in Gods sight.

Thirdly, that which the Gospell assureth vs of, wee neede not to make any doubt thereof, or once call it into question: but the Gospell assureth vs, that whosoeuer beleeue in Christ Iesus, and truly repent them of their sinnes, shall be made partakers of all the gracious promises of life and saluation therein contained; So Iohn 3.16. God so loued the world that he hath giuen his only begotten Sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him should not perish, but haue euerlasting life. And Chap.5.24. Verily, verily, I say vnto you, he that heareth my word, and beleeueth him that sent mee, hath euerlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life. And Matth.11.28. Come vnto me all yee that labour and are laden, and I will ease you. And therefore whosoeuer beleeue in Iesus Christ, approouing their faith to the World and their owne consciences, to be true and vnfained by the fruit thereof, vnfained repentance, hee may assure himselfe of all the gracious promises of the Gospell, and consequently of the remission of his sinnes, and his iustification for the merits and righteousnesse of Iesus Christ. Lastly, the Lord hath not onely after a generall manner propounded these promises vnto vs, and left vs to our owne libertie to beleeue or not to beleeue them, but hee hath bound vs to the performance of this dutie by his expresse commandement, Marke 1.15. Repent and beleeue the Gospell. And 1.Iohn 3.23. This is his commandement that we beleeue in his Son Iesus Christ, that is, that wee doe not only after a generall manner beleeue that he is the Sauiour of mankind, but that hee is our Sauiour, who hath redeemed, iustified, and will most perfectly saue vs, and rest wholly vpon him alone for our saluation. And he that thus beleeueth, needeth no other arguments to assure him that he is iustified and shall be saued; for he hath the witnesse in himselfe, euen the testimony of Gods Spirit, crying in his heart Abba Father, and bearing witnesse vnto his spirit that hee is the childe of God: and not to beleeue this is to make God a lier, because we will not beleeue the record that he hath witnessed of that his Sonne, as the Apostle speaketh, 1.Iohn 5.10. Yea, (as before I haue shewed at large) hee hath added vnto the hand-writing of his Word, which containeth also his oath, for our better confirmation, his Sacraments; whereby he particularly conueyeth and giueth vnto euery Beleeuer, as it were proper possession of Christ Iesus and all his benefits, to the end that there should bee no place left to doubting, nor any need of any particular reuelation, for our further assurance.

Marke 1.15. 1.Iohn 3.23.

1.Iohn 5.10. Rom.3.25.

Secondly, Sathan will suggest, that those who are iustified are made iust, and those who are made iust do continually the works of righteousnesse; but thou, will hee say to the humbled Sinner, continuest still in thy corruptions, and thy wickednesse cleaueth fast to thee, and compasseth thee about; and in stead of doing the workes of righteousnesse, thou continually heapest vp the full measure of thy sinnes; yea, thy best actions are so stained with imperfections and so full of infirmities, that they justly prouoke Gods wrath against thee. To which we must answere, that indeed whosoeuer is iustified is made iust, but not by infusion of inherent righteousnesse into our selues, but by imputation of Christs most perfect righteousnes, as before I haue shewed. For hereby our sins are pardoned, hee hauing taken them vpon himselfe, and satisfied Gods justice by suffering those punishments which wee had deserued; and also hee hath perfectly fulfilled the Law, that hee might make vs partakers of his actiue obedience; and so imputing both vnto vs, hath made vs perfectly just and righteous in Gods sight. So that now the Lord doth not require obedience to his Law at our hands, to the end that wee should be

Q. Sect.2. That we are made iust, not by infusion but by imputation of righteousnesse.

iustified in whole or in part, by our owne righteousnesse; neither are we to this end to obserue Gods Commandements, that wee may offer vnto God our workes and inherent righteousnesse, desiring thereby to bee iustified; for, as I haue shewed, our best righteousnesse is imperfect, and mingled with manifold corruptions, so as it would rather condemne vs, than iustifie vs, if the Lord should examine it according to the exact rule of his most perfect iustice: but wee offer vnto God for our iustification, the most perfect righteousnesse and full satisfaction of Iesus Christ, which by his merits and sufferings hee hath once made for vs, desiring thereby wholly and onely to be iustified and saued.

9. Sect. 3. That our workes are not causes but effects of our iustification.

As for our workes and inherent righteousnesse, they are not causes, but effects and fruits of our iustification; neither is it possible that we should doe any good worke acceptable in Gods sight, till we are iustified, and reconciled vnto God in Iesus Christ, for our workes cannot please him, till our persons please him, and whatsoeuer we doe, before faith hath purified the heart, it is sinne and odious in the sight of God. But as soone as we haue faith begotten in vs, presently it apprehendeth Christ and his righteousnesse, whereby wee are iustified, and then being iustified, faith worketh by loue, and bringeth forth in vs the fruits of sanctification; which though they bee mingled with much corruption, and manifold imperfections, yet God in Christ accepteth of them as perfect, and will crowne them with glory, and immortalitie. Neither doth the Lord now require of vs, that we perfectly at once shake off all our corruptions, but that we labour as much as in vs lieth, to mortifie and subdue them according to the measure of his grace, & holy spirit, which he hath bestowed on vs. Hee doth not straitly command that wee should instantly banish and expell sinne from dwelling in vs, but that wee doe not suffer it to raigne in vs, nor willingly obey the flesh in the lusts thereof, submitting our selues vnto sinne, as seruants and vassals to their Lord and Master. He doth not enjoyne vs that we should wholly vanquish our corruptions, and obtaine a full victory ouer them, but that wee proclaime open warre against them, and manfully fight and striue vnder the conduct of his Spirit, against the flesh, and the sinfull lusts thereof; and when we are taken captiue of sinne, that we labour to attaine vnto our former freedome, in the meane time sorrowing and groning vnder the heauy waight of our corruptions, and crying out with the Apostle, Wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? Rom. 7. And that we confesse our miserable estate vnto our Captaine and Leader Iesus Christ, desiring him to assist vs with the power of his holy Spirit, that thereby we may be freed out of the hands of these our spirituall enemies, whose bondage and captiuitie is so irksome and grieuous vnto vs. He doth not now exact of vs the obedience of seruants, but of sons, not Legall but Euangelical obedience, consisting in the desire of the heart, and sincere endeuour of the whole man to doe the will of God in that perfection which hee requireth. Neither doth the Lord now require that we performe absolute and perfect obedience to his Commandements, but that to will be present in vs, that we consent and approue his Law to be good, and delighting in it concerning the inner man, that we desire & endeuour to performe that good wee cannot; and forgetting that which is behind, endeuour our selues to that which is before, and follow hard towardes the marke, though wee cannot attaine vnto the end of our race, til we come to the end of our liues. Finally, the Lord doth not require of vs a whole haruest of goodnes and righteousnes, but the first fruits therof; he doth not stand so much vpon our actions as vpon our affections; vpon the perfection of our works, as vpon the alacritie of our wils, and integritie of our hearts. The righteousnesse which he requireth is an humble confession of our vnrighteousnesse, a sincere hatred of our sinnes, a holy endeauour in the vse of the meanes to mortifie our corruptions, and to rise from the death of sinne, to holinesse and newnesse of life; which whosoeuer can offer vnto God, they may assure themselues that they shall bee accepted through Christ, as righteous in Gods sight, notwithstanding their manifold imperfections & corruptions. Phil. 3. 13.

That now the Lord doth not require of vs perfect righteousnesse.

Chap. I.

Of Sanctification and the causes thereof.

ANd so much for the answering of such temptations of Satan as concerne our justification. Now we are to speake of our sanctification, which is the next effect of Gods election, and inseparablie ioyned with our justification: wherein I will obserue my former order, first setting downe the doctrine of sanctification, and then answering those temptations of Satan which doe most impugne it. For the first, Sanctification is an action of the whole Trinitie, whereby the beleeuer throughout is fitted, is by little and little reuiued according to Gods Image in holinesse and righteousnes, by the mortification of the flesh, with the corruptions thereof, and the quickening of the Spirit. And this is our sanctification, which is expressed in the Scriptures by diuers names and phrases; for it is called regeneration, the new birth, renouation, the putting off or mortifying of the old man, and the putting on or quickening of the new man and such like. The efficient cause of our sanctification is God himselfe, who as he alone iustifieth vs and freeth vs from the guilt and punishment of sinne, so he onely sanctifieth vs and deliuereth vs from the tyrannie of sinne, so that it shall no longer raigne in our mortall bodies, freeing vs in such measure as pleaseth him from our naturall corruptions, which heretofore wholly swayed vs. And this appeareth by plaine testimonies of holy Scriptures: Iohn 1.13. it is said that the faithfull are borne, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. So Ephes. 2.10. we are said to be Gods workemanship, created in Christ Iesus vnto good workes: which phrase the Apostle vseth to note vnto vs, that as God onely did create vs, so he onely doth renew and regenerate vs. The Lord likewise doth appropriate this worke vnto himselfe as belonging to no other, Ezech. 36. A new heart will I giue you, and a new spirit will I put into you, and I will take away the stonie heart out of your bodie, and I will giue you an heart of flesh. And hence it is that the Apostle desiring the sanctification of the Thessalonians beggeth it at Gods hand, 1. Thess. 5. 23. The very God of peace sanctifie you throughout. And Dauid finding the want hereof in himselfe, fleeth his recourse vnto God, Psalme 51.10. Create in me a cleane heart, O God, and renue a right spirit within me. So that as God doth begin in vs this worke of sanctification, so likewise he doth accomplish and finish it. And therefore we are wholly to ascribe vnto God our election, vocation & justification, so also our sanctification; that he may be all in all in the worke of our saluation. For as hee only formed formed vs, so he only can reforme vs, as he is the author of our naturall generation, for by his blessing wee haue our being, so also of our spirituall regeneration, for by his spirit only we are renued. Neither must we imagine that it is in mans power to renue himselfe, no more then to beget himselfe: for as well may the Blackmoore change his skin, or the Leopard his spots, as we doe good who are accustomed to doe euill, Ieremi. 13. 23. yea, as easily may the dead man raise himselfe to life, as wee may raise our selues from the death of sinne to newnesse of life, Eph. 2. 1. It is only the water of Gods Spirit that can wash away our Ethiopian blacknesse, and turne our spotted vncleannesse into snowie whitenesse; it is only the God of life that can make vs rise from the death of sinne to newnesse of life. But heere it may be demanded, that if sanctification be wholly the worke of God, and not in our owne power, why do the Scriptures exhort vs to sanctifie our selues, to mortifie our sinnes, and to walke in newnesse of life? I answere, that though sanctification be wholly from God, yet these exhortations are necessarie; for he worketh this worke in vs, not as in stockes and stones, but as in reasonable creatures of whom hee requireth consent of will, desire and endeuor in the vse of the meanes ordained of God, for the beginning and perfecting of this worke of sanctification in vs. And although this will, desire and endeuour, bee his worke likewise, yet these exhortations to godlinesse are to good purpose: for with the exhortation God ioyneth the operation of his Spirit, and whilest he commandeth vs, hee giueth power also to performe that which he commandeth, whilest hee exhorteth vs to sanctification, he himselfe sanctifieth vs with his Spirit.

§. Sect. 2. That the worke of sanctification is common to the three persons in Trinitie.

Titus 3. 5. Ephes. 2. 4. 5. Hebr. 9. 14.

Now further we are to know, that as all other workes of God which hee exerciseth towards his creatures, so this worke of sanctification like wise is common vnto all three persons in the Trinitie. For first God the Father sanctifieth vs by giuing vs his Sonne and sending his Spirit, and therefore this worke is ascribed vnto him, Tit. 3. 5. Eph. 2. 4. 5. God the Father sanctifieth vs, mortifying our sinnes by vertue of his blood, purging our consciences from dead workes, that we may serue the liuing God; and by vertue of his resurrection raising vs also from the death of sinne to newnesse of life: and lastly, by his death hath merited for vs Gods Spirit, and rising againe hath sent him vnto vs, whereby we are regenerate and therefore he also is said to haue sanctified vs, and God is said to haue sanctified vs in him, Ephes. 5. 26. 1. Cor. 1. 2. and God the holy Ghost also sanctifieth vs, by applying the vertue of Christs death and resurrection vnto vs, and so immediately beginneth, Ephes. 5. 26. 1. Cor. 6. 11.

continueth and perfecteth his worke in vs, [illegible] pures this worke is ascribed vnto him, Ioh. 3. 5. 6. Act. 11. 16. Titus 3. 5. And thus it appeareth that God himselfe is the principall and only efficient cause of our sanctification; vpon which point I haue the longer insisted, to the end that wee should not in this worke rest vpon our owne strength, for then wee shall be subject to many discouragements, and lie open to innumerable tentations, grounded vpon our small measure and slow progresse in our sanctification, as also vpon the great difficulties and manifold discouragements, which both stay vs in the birth, and hinder our full growth in true godlines; all which in respect of our owne power proue this worke not onely hard, but euen impossible for vs to be perfected and accomplished. But rather that wee relie our selues vpon the Lords infinite power and gracious promises: whereby we are assured, notwithstanding our owne exceeding weaknes, that hee will not only begin, but also finish and perfect this good worke in vs.

Ioh. 3. 5. Act. 11. 16. Titus 3. 5.

§. Sect. 3. The motiue cause, Gods sole mercie.

And thus much concerning the principall efficient cause of our sanctification. The motiue cause which moued the Lord to sanctifie vs, was his own mercie and Christs merits. The first is expressed by the Apostle, 1. Pet. 1. 3. wherein it is said, that God according to his abundant mercie hath begotten vs againe, &c. The other is implied by Paul, Ephes. 2. 5. where hee saith, that God hath quickened vs in Christ, who by his death merited not onely the remission of sinne for vs, but also Gods Spirit, whereby we are sanctified. So that to [illegible] inclination vnto holinesse [illegible] else wherein wee excelled others, which moued God to sanctifie vs, for we were all alike the children of wrath, and dead in our sinnes, but onely his owne boundlesse mercie and the all-sufficient merits of Christ our Sauiour, were the onely causes which moued the Lord to giue vs his Spirit, whereby we are regenerate and raised from the death of sinne to holinesse and newnesse of life. And therefore let vs not arrogate the praise of our sanctification in whole or in part vnto our selues, but ascribe all the glorie vnto God who is the sole author and finisher of it.

§. Sect. 4. Of the instrumentall causes of our sanctification.

The instrumentall causes of our sanctification are either externall, or internall; the externall are first the word of God, of which our Sauiour speaketh, Ioh. 15. 3. Now are ye cleane through the word which I haue spoken vnto you. And Chap. 17. 17. Sanctifie them with thy truth, thy word is truth. So the Apostle Iames, Chap. 1. 18. Of his owne will begate he vs with the word of truth, &c. And the Apostle Peter affirmeth, that wee are borne anew, not of mortall seed, but of

Ioh. 15. 3. Ioh. 17. 17. Iames 1. 18. 1. Pet. 1. 23.

immortall by the word of God, &c. The word of God therefore is an inſtrumental cauſe of our ſanctification. In which reſpect alſo the Miniſters, by whoſe miniſtery wee are conuerted and regenerate, are ſaid to bee our ſpirituall Fathers who haue begotten vs vnto God: as appeareth, 1. Cor. 4. 15. and Philem. verſ. 10. In both which places Paul challengeth this title vnto himſelfe. Another externall cauſe of our ſanctification are the Sacraments, eſpecially the Sacrament of baptiſme, whereof it is that Ananias ſaith vnto Paul, Act. 22. 16. Ariſe and bee Baptiſed, and waſh away thy ſinnes. So Eph. 5. 26. it is ſaid that Chriſt gaue himſelfe for his Church, that hee might ſanctifie it and cleanſe it by the waſhing of water through the word. The which places as they are to bee vnderſtood principally of the waſhing of Iuſtification, whereby we are purged from the guilt and puniſhment of ſinne; ſo alſo of the waſhing of Sanctification, whereby we are cleanſed from the ſinnes and corruptions themſelues. The internall inſtrument of our Sanctification, is a liuely faith, without which, the other outward inſtruments are vneffectuall, in thoſe who are of yeares; neither muſt we thinke that the bare action of hearing, or the outward waſhing, take away our ſinnes and corrupcions, vnleſſe the word and things ſignified in the Sacraments bee applied vnto vs by a true faith. For the word which we heare profiteth not, vnleſſe it be mixed with faith in thoſe that heare it, Hebr. 4. 2. And vnleſſe thoſe that are capable of faith, beleeue with all their heart, it is to no purpoſe to be baptized, Act. 8. 37. and therefore vnto the other wee muſt ioyne this inſtrument of a liuely faith, if we would attaine vnto true ſanctification. For faith purifieth the heart, and is fruitfull in the workes of loue, as the Scripture ſpeaketh.

And thus haue I ſet downe the efficient cauſes of our ſanctification. In the next place let vs conſider of the manner how this worke is wrought in vs. For the vnderſtanding whereof wee are to know, that wee being vnited vnto Chriſt, principally by Gods Spirit, and inſtrumentally by a liuely faith, and ſo made members of his myſticall body, do participate the vertue of his death, buriall and reſurrection, whereby not only our iuſtification, but alſo our ſanctification is deriued vnto vs. For firſt, by vertue of his death our ſinnes are mortified, and our corruptions crucified together with him: as appeareth, Rom. 6. 6. Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the bodie of ſinne might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerue ſinne. Secondly, by vertue of his buriall, this death of ſin is as it were further confirmed, and thereby our ſinnes and corruptions are more and more ſubdued and kept vnder, that they cannot riſe and rebell againſt the ſpirit. And of this the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Rom. 6. 3. where he ſaith, that we are buried with Chriſt into his death. Thirdly, by vertue of his reſurrection there is a quickening power deriued into vs, whereby wee are reuiued and raiſed vp from the death of ſin to holines and newnes of life. And of this mention is made, Coloſſ. 2. 12. 13. where it is ſaid, that as we are buried with Chriſt, ſo likewiſe we are raiſed vp and quickened together with him: and Rom. 6. 4. the Apoſtle ſaith, that we are buried with him by baptiſme into his death, that like as Chriſt was raiſed vp from the dead by the glory of the Father, ſo wee alſo ſhould walke in newneſſe of life.

Coloſ. 2. 12. 13.

Rom. 6. 4.

And this is the manner according to which God worketh ſanctification in vs. Now we are briefly to ſpeak of the other cauſes, as they lie in order. The material and formall cauſes of our ſanctification may beſt be conſidered in the parts thereof. The finall cauſe is twofold: Gods glorie, which is the chiefe and principall cauſe of our ſanctification; and the eternall ſaluation of thoſe who are ſanctified, which is ſubordinate to the other. For the firſt, that Gods glory is the end of all our good actions and holy conuerſation, it appeareth, Matth. 5. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good workes, and glorifie your Father which is in heauen. So 1. Pet. 2. Haue your conuerſation honeſt among the Gentiles, that they which ſpeake euill of you as of euill doers, may by your good workes which they ſhall ſee, glorifie God in the day of their viſitation. And the Apoſtle Paul willeth vs, that we do all things whatſoeuer to the Glory of God. 1. Cor. 10. 31. For the other, we are therefore ſanctified that wee may be ſaued, and alſo bee aſſured of our ſaluation. And this wee may gather out of the Apoſtles words. Tit. 3. 5. 7. where hee ſaith, that God hath ſaued vs by the waſhing of the new birth, and renuing of the holy Ghoſt, that we ſhould be made heires of eternall life. Neither can wee euer enioy euerlaſting happineſſe, vnleſſe we bee regenerate, according to that Iohn. 3. 3. Except a man be borne againe, he cannot ſee the kingdome of God. So the apoſtle ſaith that fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdome of God, neither doth corruption inherit vncorruption, 1. Cor. 15. 50. And Apoc. 21. 27. it is ſaid that no vncleane thing ſhall enter into Gods kingdome. And therefore the Apoſtle, vſeth this as an effectuall argument to moue vs to embrace ſanctification, becauſe without this holineſſe no man ſhall ſee the Lord. On the other ſide if wee bee regenerate and ſhew the fruits thereof in holy conuerſation, by dying to ſinne, and riſing againe to newneſſe of life, then may we be certainly aſſured of our ſaluation: and therefore the Apoſtle willeth vs by theſe

CHAP. II.

Of the effects, subiect, obiect, and time of our sanctification.

Q. Sect. 1. Of the effects of our sanctification.

THe principall effects of our sanctification, are a detestation of our former sinnes in which wee haue taken our pleasure and delight, and an heartie loue of righteousnesse and holinesse, which before our regeneration were loathsome and vnpleasant vnto vs; when notwithstanding our infirmities and often falles, wee can say with the Apostle Paul, that we would faine doe that good wee doe not, and hate that euill which wee doe: and howsoeuer we cannot performe perfect obedience to all Gods Commandements, yet we delight in the Law of God in the inner man, Rom. 7. 15. 19. 22. Secondly, from these affections of louing good and hating euill; there ariseth an earnest desire to embrace the one and flie the other, and from this desire proceedeth a setled purpose of heart, and a carefull endeuour to mortifie our flesh with the corruptions thereof, and for the time to come to frame our liues according to the rule of Gods word: the which purpose and endeuour is ioyned with the diligent vse of all good meanes, whereby we may attaine vnto our desire. Thirdly, when as this desire and endeuour to leade a godly life is hindred by our spirituall enemies, the flesh, the world and the diuel, there followeth in the man regenerate a spirituall combate, wherein he struggleth and striueth to withstand their tentations, and to goe forward in his course of holy obedience. And if hee preuaile and foile his spirituall enemies, then there followeth peace of conscience and ioy in the holy Ghost; but if he bee ouercome and led captiue vnto sin, through the violence of their tentations, then doth he not lie still and suffer sinne to raigne in him, but he seeketh to rise againe by vnfained repentance which is accompanied with these seuen fruits: First, a care to leaue that sinne into which he is fallen. Secondly, an vtter condemning of himselfe for it. Thirdly an holy anger against himselfe for his fall. Fourthly, a feare lest againe hee should fall into the same sinne. Fifthly, a desire euer after to please God. Sixthly, a zeale of the same. Seauenthly, reuenge vpon himselfe for his former offences. And these are the effects of true sanctification, which whosoeuer can finde in himselfe, he may be assured that hee is sanctified and shall bee saued.

Rom. 7. 15. 19. 22.

2. Cor. 7. 11.

The subject in which this worke of sanctification is wrought, is all and euery one of Gods elect, and them only: neither is there any sanctified but those only that are elected and shall be saued as appeareth, Ephes. 1. 4. Nor is this worke begun in any one part of them alone, but in all the parts, powers, and faculties of soule and body, as appeareth, 1. Thess. 5. 23. The God of peace sanctifie you throughout. The minde is inlightned with the true knowledge of Gods will reuealed in his word, which before was blinded with ignorance. The memorie is inabled to retaine those holy things, which the vnderstanding conceiueth. The will fleeth that which is euill, and imbraceth that which is good. The affections are purged from their corruptions, and made seruiceable to holie reason. The body also is sanctified, and made a fit temple for the holy Ghost: so that whereas heretofore the members thereof were the readie seruants of vnrighteousnesse vnto sinne, they are now become the seruants of righteousnesse vnto holinesse. Lastly, the actions and outward conuersation which heretofore were sinfull and scandalous, are now holy and righteous, seruing both for the aduancement of Gods glorie, and the edification of our Christian brethren. In a word, whosoeuer are truelie sanctified, they are also wholly sanctified, that is, as the Apostle speaketh, sanctified throughout, in euery part and facultie of body and soule. And therefore whosoeuer would bee assured that hee hath attained true sanctification, he is to labour to compasse and frame the whole man, his minde and imagination, his will and affections, his outward actions, life and conuersation, according to the exact rule of Gods law: in all of them mortifying the old man, and his inbred corruption, and embracing the contrarie duties of holinesse and righteousnesse. Otherwise if our sanctification bee not of the whole man, and euery part in their seuerall measure, it will in the end bee vaine and fruitlesse: for as it is to no purpose for citizens being besieged, to fortifie one place of the wall, and leaue another part vnfortified, or to keep straite watch at some of the gates, and leaue others open: so it will not auaile vs to fortifie some parts against the power of sinne, and to leaue others weake and naked, not to guard some of the outward passages of the senses, and neglecting some other, suffer them to lie as an open entrance to let in our spirituall enemies, for so they will easily surprise vs, and leade vs captiue vnto sin; but if we would be in any safety in this straite siege, wee must set a strong guard, and a carefull watch, ouer euery part and facultie of our bodies and soules. The obiect of our sanctification about which it is exercised, is sinne and corruption, and holinesse

Rom. 6. 19.

and righteousnesse, that wee may flie the one, and embrace the other, mortifie the flesh and the lusts thereof, and bee quickned in the spirit, that wee may bee conformable in all holy obedience vnto the law of God, auoiding that which he hath forbidden, and labouring to performe that which hee hath commanded.

The time when sanctification is wrought in vs, is presently after wee are effectually called and iustified; for as soone as the vertue and power of Christs obedience, death and resurrection, is applied vnto vs by a liuely faith, it doth not onely free vs from the guilt of sinne, but also mortifie the flesh with the corruptions thereof, and quickneth vs in the inner man, enabling vs to forsake our former sins, and to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life. But howsoeuer our sanctification bee begun presently after our conuersion, yet it is not so soone finished; but as the seede being cast into the ground, doth first take roote, and then is scarcely discerned, afterwards shooteth forth into a blade and so springeth vp by little and little, till it bringeth forth an eare, and lastly, ripeneth and yeeldeth to the sower plentifull increase: so when first the seedes of sanctification are sowne in vs, by vertue of Gods spirit, they haue a time to take rooting, when as they make little or no shew to our selues or others, but afterwards they send forth as it were a blade of holy profession, & the ripe fruite of godlinesse. Notwithstanding these fruites in this life are not purely cleane, and without mixture; but as in the faireſt field, there is amongst the cleaneſt wheate some tares and cockell: so in those that are most sanctified, there are many corruptions of the flesh, mixed with the good fruits of the spirit, the which the Christian is still in weeding and plucking vp by the rootes so long as hee liueth, but yet can neuer ouercome this great worke; till the winter of death wholly nippeth and killeth these weeds of sinne. Wee must not therefore presently after our conuersion, dreame of a perfection in sanctification; no not yet at the first, estimate the truenesse thereof by the greatnesse of the measure: for as it is in the naturall generation and growth of the bodie, so also in spirituall regeneration; all is not finished at the first, but perfected by degrees. As soone as wee are conuerted, wee are but babes in Christ, and in respect of our infancie in knowledge, faith and other graces, such as haue needs rather of milke, then of strong meate: in the rest of our life we grow vp from strength to strength, till we come to mans state, vnto which age wee cannot properly be said to haue attained, till by death wee wholly lay aside the old man, and the corruptions thereof. And lastly, we attaine to our consummation and full perfection, when at the latter day wee shall rise againe, and both in body and soule bee indued with perfect holinesse, whereby we shall bee enabled to performe obedience to Gods will, in that degree which his iustice requireth.

CHAP. III.

Of the parts of sanctification.

Q. Sect. 1. That sanctification containeth two parts, mortification, and viuification.

THe parts of sanctification, are two, mortification, and viuification, the which also are said to bee the parts of true repentance, but in a diuers sense: for they are attributed vnto sanctification, as they are the worke and action of God, who by his holy spirit doth mortifie and quicken vs, and is the sole author and cause of our sanctification; and vnto repentance, as they haue reference vnto vs, who being regenrate and indued with Gods spirit, doe labour in the mortification of our corruptions, and endeuour to serue the Lord in newnesse of life; for Spiritu sancto actiagimur, we being first moued and set a worke by Gods spirit, doe worke together with him. This diuision hath its ground and warrant in many places of holy Scriptures, in which it is expressed in diuers phrases and formes of speech. Psal. 34. 14. Eschew euill and doe good. Esa. 1. 16. 17. Cease to doe euill, learne to doe well. Rom. 6. 11. Likewise, thinke you also that yee are dead to sinne, but are aliue to God in Iesus Christ our Lord. And vers. 18. Being free from sinne yee are made the seruants of righteousnes. Ephe. 4. 22. That yee cast off concerning the conuersation in time past the old man, which is corrupt through the deceiueable lusts. 23. And bee renued in the spirit of your minde. 24. And put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousnesse and true holinesse. So Rom. 7. 4. & 13. 2. Cor. 5. 17. Col. 1. 12. 3. 9. Gal. 5. 16. 1. Pet. 2. 24. 3. 11. By all which places and many others it is cleare and manifest, that our sanctification consisteth of these two parts, the mortifying of the flesh, and the quickning of the spirit.

Mortification is the first part of sanctification, wherein the spirit of God applying vnto vs the vertue and power of Christs death and buriall, doth by little and little weaken, subdue, and kill in vs our naturall corruption, the flesh, and the lusts thereof, so that they are not so powerfull as in times past to stir vp in our minds euill motions which are contrarie to the will and law of God. In this description is set downe, first the cause of our mortification, which is the vertue and efficacie of Christs death and buriall, communicated and applyed vnto vs by

Q. Sect. 2. Of Mortification what it is, and how it is wrought.

Rom.6.4.5. by the ſpirit of God whereby wee are ingrafted into the bodie of Chriſt, and ſo made partakers of the power and vertue of Chriſts death, which being deriued vnto vs, doth not onely take away the guilt and puniſhment of ſinne, but alſo doth mortifie and kill our naturall corruptions, which heretofore wholly ruled and ouerſwaied vs. Secondly, the forme, manner and progreſſe of this worke is heere expreſſed, namely, the weakning, ſubduing, and killing of our corruption by little and little; ſo that this worke is not perfected at once, and in an inſtant, but by degrees. Firſt it is weakned and the power thereof ſomewhat abated, ſo as though it beare ſway in vs, yet it doth not wholly ouer-rule vs without reſiſtance, as it was vſed to doe in the time of our ignorance. Then being further inabled by vertue of Gods ſpirit, working in vs, we preuaile againſt it, ſo that though it often rebell, yet doe we ſubdue it and obtaine victorie. Laſtly, obtaining a greater meaſure of the ſpirit, we mortifie and kill it; that is, though wee doe not vtterly depriue it of life and motion, yet we giue it ſuch a deadly wound, that it neuer recouereth its former ſtrength, but ſtill pineth and languiſheth, till with the death of the body it alſo dieth and is wholly aboliſhed. Now whileſt it is in this conſumption and neere vnto death, hauing a long time before beene weake, oftentimes it ſeemeth to recouer ſtrength, and to offer ſome violence vnto the regenerate part: but this muſt not diſcourage vs, as though now it were on the mending hand, and like to be reſtored to its former health and ſtrength. For as it fareth with thoſe that lie vpon their death-bed; ſo it is with our ſicke fleſh, and the corruptions thereof, after that nature ſeemeth ſpent, and the power thereof wholly decaied, oftentimes falling into ſome grieuous fit, wherein there is a fight betweene life and death, their ſtrength ſeemeth redoubled and farre greater than euer it was: but bee of good comfort, it is no ſigne of health, but a pang of death which neere approcheth. And thus you ſee the death of ſinne and our naturall corruption. Now as in the death of the body there is a certaine progreſſe therein, namely, when the dead carcaſe is alſo buried; ſo alſo there is not onely a death of ſinne, but alſo a buriall, the which is wrought by the vertue of Chriſts buriall applied vnto vs by Gods ſpirit, whereby it commeth to paſſe that ſin which is already ſlaine and dead, doth ſo remaine and continue, ſo that this buriall of ſinne is nothing elſe but the further progreſſe and continuance of our mortification. Of this the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Rom. 6.4. We are buried then with him by baptiſme into his death, &c. So Col. 2.12.

Rom.6.4. Col.2.12. and 3.5.

And thus haue I ſhewed what our mortification is, which as it is a worke moſt hard, ſo alſo moſt neceſſarie. The difficultie appeareth by the name which is borrowed from the practiſe of Chirurgions, who before they cut off any member, do firſt mortifie it, that after they may take it away with leſſe ſenſe of paine. And this is implied by our Sauiour Chriſt whereas hee inioyneth vs, if our right hand or eye offend vs, to cut it off and plucke it out: and plainely expreſſed by the Apoſtle Paul, Col. 3.5. Mortifie therefore your members which are in the earth, fornication, vncleanneſſe, the inordinate affection, euill concupiſcence and couetouſneſſe, &c. where calling theſe ſins by the name of members, he intimateth thus much, that they are as deare vnto vs as the members of our body, & alſo that it is as vnpleaſant and painfull vnto vs to forſake our naturall corruptions, as to be depriued of the hand, eye, or foote. But though this worke bee moſt hard, yet it is moſt neceſſarie, for the beſt things that are in the fleſh and vnregenerate part, euen the wiſedome thereof is death and enmity againſt God, becauſe it is not ſubiect to the Law of God, neither indeed can bee, Rom. 8.6.7. neither can wee doe any thing pleaſing vnto God ſo long as wee are in the fleſh, as it is verſ. 8. Laſtly, if we liue after the fleſh, we ſhall die, euen the euerlaſting death of body and ſoule; but if wee mortifie the deeds of the body by the ſpirit wee ſhall liue, euen the life of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe vpon earth, and the life of glorie and eternall happineſſe in Gods kingdome. And therefore if it bee neceſſarie to bee in amitie with God, whoſe louing kindneſſe is better than life; or to performe obedience vnto the Law of God, or to doe any thing pleaſing in his ſight, or to eſcape death and damnation, or to enioy life and eternall ſaluation, then is it alſo neceſſarie to mortifie the fleſh and the luſts thereof, how hard and vnpleaſant ſoeuer this worke ſeemeth vnto vs. So that the difficultie muſt not diſcourage vs, but rather double our diligence: and becauſe it is a paine intolerable to part with our ſinnes, ſo long as they remaine like liuely members of the body of our fleſh, therefore as Chirurgions (to make the paine tolerable to the patient) doe firſt vſe meanes to mortifie the member which they purpoſe to cut off; ſo let vs vſe all good meanes to weaken the ſtrength of ſinne, and to mortifie our carnall affections, and then we ſhall ſuffer them to bee quite cut off and taken from vs without any extraordinarie paſſion or ſenſe of paine.

Pſalm 63.4.

And ſo much concerning our mortification. Viuification is the ſecond part of our ſanctification, wherein the ſpirit of God communicating and applying vnto vs the vertue and and efficacy of Christs resurrection doth raise vs vp from the death of sinne to holinesse and newnesse of life. The cause of our viuification is the vertue and efficacie of Christs Resurrection applyed vnto vs by Gods Spirit; the which vertue flowing from his Deitie, was first powerfull in his owne flesh, raising it out of graue, and giuing it victory ouer sinne and death; and being deriued from our Head, and communicated vnto vs who are members of his body, it doth also reuiue vs who were dead in our sinnes, and inableth vs to leade a new life in holinesse and righteousnesse, according to the rule of Gods Word. This appeareth, Rom.6.4. where he saith, that wee are buried with him by baptisme into his death, that like as Christ was raised vp from the dead by the glory of the Father, so wee also should walke in newnesse of life. So Paul desireth not only to bee clothed with the righteousnesse of Christ applyed by faith for his iustification, but also to know and feele the vertue of Christs resurrection, that by this meanes hauing part in it, wee may attaine vnto the resurrection of the dead. And as Paul earnestly desired this, so also he attained vnto it, as himselfe professeth Gal.2.20. Thus (saith he) I liue, yet not I now, but Christ liueth in me, and in that I now liue in the flesh, I liue by faith in the Sonne of God, who hath loued me and giuen himselfe for me. Now this efficacy and vertue of Christs resurrection is applyed vnto vs by Gods Spirit, which vnioneth vs vnto Christ our Head; and therefore vsually in the Scriptures this work is ascribed vnto him. So Rom.8.11. But if the spirit of him that raised vp Iesus from the dead dwell in you, hee that raised vp Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortall bodies, because his spirit dwelleth in you.

And thus haue I shewed the author of our viuification; the manner how it is wrought followeth to bespoken of. First, the Spirit of God dispelleth the cloods of ignorance, and illuminateth the eyes of our vnderstanding with the beames of true sauing knowledge, wherewith being inlightened, wee rightly iudge that folly and madnesse, in which wee (though formerly our chiefe wisdome consisted), and approoue that as onely wise, which before was condemned as extreme foolishnesse. Of this the Apostle speaketh, Ephes.1.17. where hee prayeth that God would bestow vpon them the spirit of wisdome and reuelation through the knowledge of him, that the eyes of their vnderstanding might be inlightened, &c. After the vnderstanding is thus inlightened, then also the will is changed; and whereas before regeneration it was peruerse, peruerse, and rebellious, now being sanctified, it beginneth to loue and affect that good which in former time it loued and imbraced, and to like and delight in that good which formerly it lothed & abhorred: so that the regenerate man saith with the Apostle, that to will is present with him, though he find no meanes to performe that which is good, and that he is delighted in the Law of God concerning the inner man, though the law of his members warring against the law of his minde, leads him captiue to the law of sinne. Finally, the vnderstanding being inlightened, and the will reformed, there followeth the renewing of all the affections, the thoughts, imaginations, powers and faculties of the soule: and lastly, the internall parts being quickened, there insueth the renewing of the body, with the outward actions, life and conuersation. Rom.7.18,22.

And thus haue I set downe the manner and forme of our spirituall renuing. Now as the worke of mortification, so this of viuification, is not perfected and finished in an instant, but in continuance of time and by degrees; neither doe wee so long as wee continue in this life, receiue any great measure thereof, but onely the first fruits, which is but as it were a little handfull in respect of that large haruest of godlines, which we shal attaine vnto in Gods kingdome, as the Apostle speaketh, Rom.8.23. Whereas therefore the Church is said to bee perfectly purged from all spots of sinne, Ephes.5.26,27. it is to be vnderstood of our iustification, whereby the faithfull are deliuered from the guilt and punishment of sinne, and adorned with Christs perfect righteousnesse; and not of our sanctification, which is onely begun in this life, but not perfected till the life to come, as it is notably set downe, 2 Cor. 5.1,2,3,4. Rom.8.23. Ephes.5.26,27. 2 Cor.5.1,2. &c.

§. 1 Sect. 6. That the work of sanctification is not finished in an instant.

CHAP. IIII.

Satans tentations, whereby he laboureth to intice vs to commit sinne, answered.

§. Sect. 1. Of the kinds of Satans tentations, whereby he endeauoureth to hinder our sanctification.

NOw so much for the doctrine of sanctification: the right vnderstanding whereof serueth much for the answering of all contrary cauils and obiections, which are suggested into our minds by our spirituall enemies. Now hauing shewed the truth of this doctrine, let vs in the next place propound Satans tentations, which hee commonly vseth to hinder this worke of sanctification: to the end that the weake Christian may bee the better inabled to answer them in the day of triall. The tentations which Satan suggesteth to hinder our progresse in godlinesse are of two sorts: either allurements to intice vs to goe aside out of the narrow path of holinesse, into the broad way of sinne and wickednesse, or dis-

courragements to dishearten and weary vs, in trauelling this spirituall journey. By the first, hee sweeteth the bitter pill of sin that it may seeme pleasant to our carnall appetites, to the end that we may greedily swallow it to our euerlasting bane; by the other he laboureth to make wholesome godlinesse loathsome and altogether vnpleasant to our sensuall taste. Those he commonly vseth before we haue sinned, to cause vs presumptuously to fall into it: and these after wee haue sinned and wounded our consciences, to the end he may moue vs desperately to surcease our labour in the workes of sanctification, as being not only difficult, but altogether impossible.

§. Sect. 2. Of Sathans tentation, whereby he allureth vs to fal into sinne.

The first sort of his tentations, whereby he laboureth to draw vs into sinne, he inforceth by extenuating the sinne vnto which he allureth vs, by putting vs in minde of the mercies of God, and merits of Christ, and by hiding from vs the curse of the Law, and the punishments threatned against sin, both in this life and the life to come. Why (will he say) makest thou such scruple of committing this sinne which is so pleasant or profitable vnto thee: seeing it is in its owne nature but very small, and almost no offence at all, being compared with the great transgressions which others haue committed, who notwithstanding are said euen in the Scriptures to haue been most godly and righteous, yea, and highly in Gods loue and fauour; why therefore shouldst thou, who art far inferiour vnto them, stumble at this small straw, seeing these great blocks could not hinder euen the most religious from enjoying the pleasures of sinne? Consider also the common frailty of mankind, and the naturall corruptions of the best, wherby they are ready to fall when the least occasions are offered, into sinnes far greater than this which so much pleaseth thee. Remember that thou canst not bee a Saint in this life, nor freed from that corruption which so fast cleaueth vnto thee; and therefore seeing thou must needs sinne; now sinne when thereby thou mayst haue pleasure or profit, for doe what thou canst, yet thou shalt often fall; And why wilt thou not rather be led with delight, then be driuen with necessitie? Consider likewise that eeuen God is most mercifull, and therefore still ready to pardon thy sinnes; and the rather, because he knoweth thy fraile weaknesse in resisting sinne, and inability to performe obedience to his Law; and also that Christ died, not for the just, but the vnjust; not for the righteous, but for the sinner: and therefore be thy sinnes neuer so many, yet applying the merits of Christ by faith, neither their guilt nor punishment shall be imputed vnto thee. Call to minde also the gracious promises of pardon and forgiuenesse, which are made vnto thee in the Gospell; for the obtaining whereof, nothing is required of thee but faith and repentance: now this faith thou hast already, and this repentance thou mayst haue hereafter, when thou hast enjoyed the pleasure or profit of this sinne. Neither doth repentance goe before, but followeth the committing of sinne; so that vnlesse thou first sinne, thou hast no cause of repentance, nor need to repent.

And these and such like are Satans baits, wherewith hee allureth vs to intangle our selues in the snares of sinne: into which we are more readie to fall through the corruption of the flesh, which naturally louing sin, doth, with the euill motions and desires thereof, further Sathans tentations; and the instigation of the world which pricketh vs forward; and draweth vs on into the steepe descending way of wickednesse, into which we are ready to run headlong of our owne accord; partly alluring vs with pleasures, riches and worldly glory, the desired objects of our carnall desires; and partly drawing vs with euill examples, first to a liking, and then to the practizing of those sinnes, which we see committed by others.

Against all which tentations that we may be the better armed, let vs in the next place propound some arguments whereby we may be withheld from falling into Sathans snares of sinne, into which his suggestions, the worlds allurements, and our owne corruptions lead and draw vs: and then being hereby moued to a true detestation of our sinnes, and an earnest desire of hauing a Diuorce sued betwixt vs and them, I will afterwards set downe some meanes, by the carefull vse whereof wee may be inabled to stand in the day of tentation, and preserued from falling into those sins which we already condemne in our judgements, and dislike in our affections.

The reasons whereby we may be perswaded to resist sinne are of two sorts: the first, tying vs to holy obedience in the bands of loue: the other, binding vs from falling into sinne with the cords of feare. Of the former ranke are these and such like holy considerations.

First, wee are to set before vs the infinite loue of God towards vs, base and vile creatures, altogether vnworthy of his least fauour by reason of our sinnes; the which his loue as it plainly appeareth in all other his mercies and manifold benefits bestowed on vs, so especially in sending his onely begotten and deerely beloued Sonne, not onely to suffer some small misery, but euen death it selfe, yea, that cursed ignominious and cruell death of the Crosse for vs, who were not his louing friends or faithfull seruants, but opposed enemies and rebellious traytours, who had renounced his seruice, and yeelded our selues as slaues to Satan readie to doe his will.

will. Seeing therefore our good God hath ſo dearely loued vs, who were altogether vnworthy his loue, and moſt worthy of his anger and heauy iudgements, O why ſhould not this flame of his loue towards vs, kindle ſome ſparkles of loue towards him againe, who is in himſelfe the chiefe goodneſſe, and to vs moſt kind and gracious? If for our ſakes, who were his abiect enemies, he hath not ſpared his owne Sonne but gaue him to die for vs; ſhould not we for his ſake, who is our chiefeſt friend, bee as willing to part with our ſinnes, and to kill and crucifie all our carnall corruptions? Neither can we by any other meanes ſo cleerly ſhew our loue to God, as by hating ſinne, which aboue all things in the world is moſt hatefull and odious vnto him, and the only cauſe which maketh him abhorre euen his excellent creatures, ſo that though he loued them as being his owne workes, yet he deteſted them being defiled with the filthy ſpots of ſinne. Yea ſo odious is ſinne vnto our righteous God, that he could not chuſe but puniſh it in his dearly beloued Sonne, who bare our tranſgreſſions, and ſuſtained our perſons; and when there was no other way to ſubdue the power of ſin, he gaue it a mortall wound, euen through the bodie of our bleſſed Sauiour; and deliuered him to be crucified, that by this meanes he might alſo kill and crucifie our corruptions. Seeing therefore ſinne is moſt odious and deteſtable in the eyes of God, we cannot better ſhew our loue towards him, which his loue towards vs hath ſo well deſerued, then by hating and flying that which hee ſo much abhorreth.

Secondly, let vs call to our remembrance his innumerable benefits, which are the vndoubted ſignes of his loue towards vs. Firſt, he hath elected vs vnto eternall life that we ſhould be holy. And ſeeing hee hath made ſpeciall choice of vs amongſt many who are rejected, therefore let vs exceed others in a holy care of ſeruing him, and auoiding thoſe things which are diſpleaſing in his ſight. He alſo hath created vs to the end wee ſhould worſhip and ſerue him our Lord and Creatour: and therefore ſeeing we haue our being from him, let vs in all our actions ſeeke his glory and auoid ſinne, whereby he is diſhonoured. Yea he hath not made vs the vileſt of his creatures, but reaſonable men according to his owne image and likeneſſe, and therefore let vs not deface this glorious workmanſhip with the filthy ſpots of ſinne. He hath redeemed vs out of the cruell bondage of our ſpirituall enemies, by giuing his Sonne to be the price of our redemption; and therefore ſeeing we are bought with a price ſo ineſtimable, let vs not wilfully againe make our ſelues the bondſlaues of ſinne and Satan, but glorifie our redeemer in our bodies and in our ſoules, ſeruing him in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the dayes of our liues. He hath effectually called vs and ſelected vs out of the corrupt maſſe of mankind, and therefore let vs walke worthy our vocation; for God hath not called vs vnto vncleannеſſe but vnto holineſſe. Hee hath freely iuſtified vs, imputing vnto vs Chriſts righteouſneſſe, and pardoning all our ſinnes, both in reſpect of the guilt and puniſhment; and therefore being made free from ſinne, let vs no longer liue therein, but now become the ſeruants of righteouſneſſe; and ſeeing he hath forgiuen much, let vs alſo loue much, labouring to manifeſt our loue by the fruits of holy obedience. He hath reconciled vs vnto himſelfe in his Sonne, and therefore let vs not by our ſinnes make him our enemy, nor againe build vp this wall of ſeparation which Chriſt our Sauiour hath broken downe. He hath adopted vs in Chriſt to be his ſonnes and heires of euerlaſting life, and therefore ſeeing wee are the ſonnes of God, let vs yeeld obedience to our heauenly Father, and not liue in our ſins like the ſlaues of Sathan, leſt prouoking his juſt diſpleaſure againſt vs by our rebellious wickedneſſe, wee ſhould be diſinherited of our heauenly patrimony. Hee hath granted vnto vs the peace of conſcience, and joyes in the Holy Ghoſt, and therefore let vs not by our ſinnes diſturbe our peace and wound our conſciences, turning our ſweet joy and comfort into griefe and bitter heauineſſe. Finally, he hath added vnto theſe ſpirituall gifts, innumerable temporary benefits, health, wealth, peace, libertie, food, apparell; and therefore let vs not abuſe his gifts by prophaning them with our ſinnes, but rather vſe them as incouragements whereby wee may bee mooued with all cheerefulneſſe to ſerue ſo bountifull a maſter. In a word, as the gifts of God are infinite which concerne this life and the life to come; ſo are the reaſons drawne from them infinite, which may ſerue to reſtraine vs from ſinne, and containe vs in the courſe of holy obedience. The which if we continually retaine in memory (euen thoſe great and manifold benefits which are common to all true Chriſtians, and thoſe which euery one receiueth in his particular place and calling) wee will not (vnleſſe our vngratefulneſſe be intolerable) eaſily hearken to Sathans tentations, nor for the vaine pleaſures, vncertaine riches, and momentany honours of this wicked world be hired to commit ſinne, which wee know to be diſpleaſing and odious in the ſight of God, who in his endleſſe loue and fauour hath beſtowed vpon vs ſuch innumerable benefits.

Thirdly, when we are tempted vnto ſinne, let vs call to mind the death and ſufferings of our Sauiour Chriſt, and ſay vnto our owne ſoules, Hath Chriſt my Redeemer paid for my redemption euen his deareſt bloud, and ſhall shall I sell my soule to sinne againe for this vaine pleasure or base commoditie? Hath he not spared to powre out the full streames of his most precious bloud, that in this pure lauer I might bepurged and cleansed from the filthy spots of sinne; and shall the world cause mee with her Syrens songs to leape againe into this filthy puddle? Should he suffer himselfe to be crucified, that by his death he might kill sinne, and shall I now put life into it againe, reuiuing that which hee hath mortified? Did hee in his infinite loue giue himselfe for mee, and shall I trample this precious gift vnder foot, preferring before it the trifling vanities of this wicked world? Should honour allure mee to commit sinne, seeing the glorious Sonne of God hath abased himselfe and vndergone ignominious shame to free me from it? Should pleasures intice me to break Gods Commandements, seeing my Sauiour Christ left the bosome of his Father, at whose right hand there is fulnesse of pleasures and joyes for euermore, and indured the griefe and miseries of a wretched life and cursed death, that thereby he might satisfie Gods justice for my transgressions? Should I be perswaded to commit sinne, with the base hire of vncertaine riches, seeing Christ hath redeemed mee, not with siluer or gold, or any other corruptible thing, but with the inestimable price of his most precious bloud? Should my sensuall taste and curious palate, moue mee to sinne in drunkennesse and gluttonie, seeing Christ to redeeme mee hath hungred and thirsted, and in stead of drinke had offered vnto him gall and vineger? Shall I be mooued to sinne by anger, and to seeke vnjust reuenge, seeing Christ being injured opened not his mouth, but like an innocent lambe suffered himselfe to be lead to the slaughter? Farre be from me such a desire; yea, rather because my Sauiour Christ hath suffered all this for mee, to redeeme me out of my spirituall bondage, I will resolue rather to bee depriued of all worldly benefits, and endure patiently the greatest miseries and afflictions, than by wilfull falling into sinne make my selfe againe the slaue of Satan. And thus haue I shewed how the remembrance of Christs Death and Passion is a notable corrasiue to kill our corruptions. And as men are accustomed to shew vnto Elephants the juyce of the Grape or Mulberry, to make them more fierce, and encourage them to a more couragious fight: so haue I by offering to our view the precious bloud of this immaculate Lambe, endeuoured to redouble our valour in fighting this battell of tentations against our spirituall enemies.

Q. Sect. 7. The fourth reason, taken from the vnion

Fourthly, let vs remember the vnion that is betweene Christ and vs, whereby hee is become our husband, we his spouse, hee our Head, and we his members. The consideration whereof may serue as a forcible argument to restraine vs from falling willingly into any sinne. For if wee be the Spouse of Christ, farre bee it from vs to behaue our selues like Sathans Strumpets, prostituting our soules to sinne that wee may receiue the gaine of some worldly vanities, and to incurre the grieuous displeasure of our most louing husband, for the pleasing of our carnall lusts and sensuall appetites. If wee bee the members of Christs Body, far be it from vs to make his members the instruments of sinne and seruants of vnrighteousnesse. For what were this, but as much as in vs doth lie, to draw our holy head into the communion of our sinnes and wickednesse, and to make our Sauiour, who in himselfe hath wholly vanquished and gloriously triumphed ouer sinne and Satan, in his members to receiue a foile? Yea, rather seeing wee are the Spouse of Christ, let vs labour to adorne our selues with the glorious golden garment of holinesse and righteousnesse; and though wee haue some spots of our naturall infirmities in our outward parts, yet let vs in a glorious manner decke our selues within, with integritie and vprightnesse of heart; and so the King our heauenly Husband shall take pleasure in our beautie, and place vs at his right hand in his Kingdome of eternall glory. Seeing also wee are the members of Christs Body, therefore let vs endeuour to conforme our selues to the holinesse of our Head, and by our righteous liues and conuersations make it manifest, that wee are quickened and led by the same Spirit.

Lastly, let vs call to mind that our bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost, which once were polluted and vncleane, but now sanctified and purged by this our holy guest, that they may be fit habitations for himselfe to dwell in. And then let vs consider, that it is a most horrible indignity against the Majestie of God, to prophane with our filthy sinnes the holy temples of his most holy Spirit, and to make them more fit to bee styes for filthy swine and vncleane spirits, than mansion houses for God to dwell in; that by our sinnes we vexe and grieue the good Spirit of God, and make his lodging lothsome vnto him, and so as much as in vs lieth, we driue him away, and as it were thrust him out of doores, if not by violence, yet at least by our hard and vnciuill entertainment: yea that by our sins we doe not only defile, but euen destroy the temple of God, and thereby also cast our selues headlong into eternall destruction. For if any man destroy the temple of God, him shall God destroy, as it is 1. Cor. 3. 16. If therefore we would not prophane Gods Temple, abuse his glorious presence, vex our holy guest, destroy his mansion and our selues also, let vs most carefully auoid sin, & nourish all the good motions of Gods Spirit, wholly subsubiuitting our selues with cheerefull alacritie to be guided and gouerned by his directions; and so wee shall perfume these holy temples with the odours and incense of new obedience, which smelling sweetly in Gods nostrills, will moue him to dwell in vs with pleasure and delight, all the dayes of this our pilgrimage, and afterwards to transport vs into those eternall mansions of his Kingdome of glory, where wee shall continue in all ioy and happinesse for euermore.

CHAP. V.

Of the second sort of preseruatiues to keepe vs from sinne.

AND so much concerning the first sort of arguments grounded vpon loue. The second sort whereby wee may bee withdrawne from committing sinne, may bee taken from that feare and reuerence of God, which ought to be in euery one of vs: vnto which wee may bee moued by diuers effectuall reasons. As first by the consideration of Gods all-seeing wisdome, and all-filling presence, whereby he seeth euen our most secret thoughts, and is a present witnesse of all our hidden actions. For this being remembred, who dare in such a glorious presence commit that wickednesse, which hee knoweth hatefull vnto him, before whom he committeth it? He is counted an vngracious child, who will wittingly breake his fathers commandements euen before his face; and he is esteemed a desperate malefactor who dares presumptuously offend against the Law in presence of his Iudge: how then can our vngracious impudence and desperate presumption be excused, who dare offend and sinne in the sight and presence of a father so gracious, and of a Iudge so iust?

Secondly, let vs call to minde Gods iustice, which is so exact, that rather then he would let sin goe vnpunished, he punished it in his dearely beloued Son. If therefore thou sin, thou canst not corrupt him with bribes, nor pacifie him with faire words, nor ouercome him by intreatie, nor stop the course of Iustice, with the intercession of friends. For, hath hee not spared his Sonne, and will hee spare his seruants? hath hee punished sinne in his owne childe, and will he winke at it in a common subiect? could neither the intreaties, nor teares, nor grones, nor strong cryes, nor bloody sweat of his best beloued Sonne, appease his wrath and satisfie his iustice; but that standing in our place, he must needs beare our punishment, and being suretie for sinners, he must die for sinne? and shal they who are the principals escape, who in stead of pleading his payment, doe contemptuously refuse it, and as it were tread it vnder foot? It is true indeed that Christ suffered for vs that we might escape, and paid our debt that it might not be required at our hand; but seeing all sinners haue not their part of Christ and his merits, but only those that are in Christ; and those only are in Christ, who walke not after the flesh, but after the spirit; seeing also those only are partakers of all the gracious promises made in him, who approue their faith by the liuely fruit thereof, vnfained repentance; and those only doe truly repent, who sorrow for their sins past, hate their present corruptions, and desire and endeuour to serue God in newnesse of life; how can wee haue any assurance that Gods iustice is satisfied for vs, and that we haue escaped condemnation, if we quench the good motions of Gods Spirit, & obey the flesh in the lusts thereof, and if still being in loue with our sins, we resolue to go forward in our course of wickednesse.

Rom. 8.13.

9. Sect. 3. The third reason, taken from Gods fierce anger against sinne, shewed in his fearefull iudgements executed vpon Sinners.

Thirdly, let vs call to our remembrance Gods fierce wrath conceiued against sinne, and his fearefull iudgements which hee hath executed vpon sinners, and that not onely particular men, but also whole States and Common-wealths. Let vs call to minde the generall Deluge, in which all mankind, saiuing eight persons, were drowned; the destruction of Sodome and Gomorrah by fire and brimstone; the rooting out of the whole Nation of the Canaanites; the rejection of the Iewes; the ouerthrow and vtter defacing of those famous Churches of the Corinthians, Galathians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians, and the rest mentioned in the Booke of the Reuelation. And to the examples of former times, adde those which euery man obserueth in his owne experience; and then consider withall, that the cause which moued the Lord to execute in his iust displeasure these heauy iudgements vpon mankind, was nothing else but sinne, and it will bee a forcible reason to withdraw vs from it. For the Lord is immutable and vnchangeable in his course of Iustice, and he hateth sinne now as deadly as in former ages; neither will he spare vs more then others, if we liue in our sinnes without repentance. Nay, certainly as our sins being aggrauated by many circumstances are more odious vnto him, so will the Lord proportionably inflict more heauy iudgements vpon vs then he hath vpon others, whose sins haue not beene so great and presumptuous. For if the Lord giue vs now extraordinary knowledge, or at least the meanes thereof, and we sinne against this knowledge and against our owne consciences; if hee hath in most abundant measure multiplyed his mercies vpon vs, and wee hereby be made more vnkind and vngratefull; if hee hath giuen vs warning by innumerable examples of his heauie iudgements executed vpon others in former times, & in our owne dayes, yea euen in our own sight, laieth heauie punishments vpon such as haue committed no other sins then wee our selues are guiltie of, and yet wee continue in our sinnes without repentance, how is it possible but that we should prouoke Gods fierce wrath against vs, and draw downe violently vpon our selues with these cartropes of iniquitie, Gods fearefull plagues and heauie iudgements? It is true indeede that God is long suffering and slow to anger, but if hereby wee take occasion to continue in our sinnes, and doe delay our repentance, what doe we else but treasure vp against our selues wrath against the day of wrath, and the declaration of the iust iudgements of God? It is most certaine that God is not easily prouoked to wrath and anger: but let not this incourage vs to continue in our sinnes; For if it be once inflamed, it is so fierce and terrible, that with the heate thereof it drieth vp the seas; and so powerfull that hee maketh therewith the earth to tremble and the mountaines to melt like waxe in his presence, and the voyce of his furie doth breake and rent in sunder the Cedars, yea the mightie strong Cedars of Libanus, as the Scripture speaketh. As therefore fire doth burne more hotly in such solid matter as is long in kindling, than in flaxe or straw which is soone inflamed, and soone extinguished: so the anger of God is not easily inflamed, but if it be once kindled, it burneth so furiously that nothing will quench it, but the blood of Christ applied by faith, and the streaming teares of vnfained repentance. Seeing then Gods iudgements are so fearefull, and his anger so terrible, let vs carefully take heed of prouoking his wrath against vs by our sinnes, for it is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God.

Rom. 2. 5.

Heb. 10. 31.

Q. Sect. 4. The fourth reason, taken from the day of iudgement.

Fourthly, let vs meditate vpon the day of iudgement, when as wee must giue an account not onely of our words and works, but also of our secret thoughts, before a most iust Iudge, who with the all-seeing eye of his diuine knowledge searcheth and beholdeth the very heart and reines, in the presence also of men and Angels. And this will restraine vs from falling into sinne, though it may bee so secretly acted, that wee neede not to feare in this life either shame or punishment. For let it be supposed that we can hide our sinnes from the sight of all men, yet what will this benefit vs, if God, against whom wee sinne, and before whom, as our supreame Iudge, wee must giue an account, doe looke vpon vs? What will it profit vs, though time weare our offences out of mans remembrance, if God keepe a faithfull register of them, and ingraue our reckoning with a penne of iron? What will it helpe vs if by our cunning conueiances, we can hide our sinnes and auoid shame, or with an impudent forehead can face them out without blushing, if our nakednesse bee discouered, and our shame proclaimed in the presence of God and all his Saints and Angels? What will it auaile vs to bee exempted from punishment in this life, through our great power and vncontroleable authoritie, or to escape the penaltie of humane lawes by the intercession of friends, or by corrupting the Iudge, or by procuring the princes pardon; if againe we must bee arraigned before such an vpright Iudge as respecteth no persons, receiueth no rewards; and being found guilty, bee condemned vnto the eternall torments of hell fire? When therefore wee heare the voice of Satans tentations alluring vs to commit sin, let vs also haue the voice of the Archangell sounding in our eares, Arise yee dead and come vnto iudgement. When the world tempteth vs vnto sin on the one side by inticing promises of honours, pleasures and riches, and on the other side, by terrifying threatnings of losse, danger, or punishment, let vs call to minde the day of iudgement, when either wee must heare the sentence of saluation, Come yee blessed of my Father and inherit the kingdome prepared for you, &c. or the sentence of condemnation, Depart yee cursed into hell fire, which is prepared for the diuell and his angels: and then shall not the momentanie vanities of the world so forcibly draw vs into the snares of sin, as the remembrance of the heauenly ioyes prepared for vs in Gods kingdome will retaine vs in holy obedience; then will not the worlds threats of temporarie miseries so strongly vrge vs to wound our consciences with the sting sin, as the feare to heare the definitiue sentence of eternall condemnation will restraine vs from it.

Q. Sect. 5. The fifth reason, taken from the miseries of sinne.

Lastly, let vs call to minde the manifold euils, which sin causeth both to body and soule, in this life and the life to come; and so though the vglinesse of it selfe will not make vs to flee from it, yet the miserable effects which it produceth may moue vs to abhorre it. Consider therefore that there is no euill vnder the Sunne, in this life or afterwards, which is not a fruit of this cursed roote: it subiecteth the bodie to sicknesse and diseases, hunger and thirst, cold and wearinesse; the mind to ignorance & blindnesse, the will to peruersenesse, the affections to all preposterous disorder; it ruinateth the estate, bringeth a man to powertie and extreame miserie; it maketh the whole man obnoxious to the curse of the Law, the anger of God, and all those innumerable euils, which euer accompanie them. In this world it bringeth the body to death and corruption, and in the world to come both body and soule to condemnation, and endlesse lesse destruction; it depriueth vs of our heauenly inheritance, and the euerlasting ioyes of Gods kingdome, and plungeth vs into the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone. In a word, there is no euill to be imagined which doth not proceede from this euill of sinne, and therefore though it seeme neuer so sweete to our carnall appetites, yet being mixed with this gall and wormewood of innumerable euils, let vs loath and abhor it. When the vaine and vncertaine benefits which it promiseth moue vs to imbrace it, let the miserable euils which accompany it, and the most assured and surpassing ioyes which it depriueth vs of, make vs to auoide it as a deadly stinging serpent.

CHAP. VI.

Of some speciall meanes whereby we may bee preserued from falling into sinne.

HAue shewed the reasons whereby euery one may bee armed against Satans suggestions tempting him vnto sinne; and bee moued vnto a Christian resolution, of possessing body and soule in holinesse and puritie. Now wee are to speake of some speciall meanes, whereby the Christian thus resolued may be preserued from falling into such grieuous sins, as wound the conscience, and hinder him in the course of sanctification. First, he that would auoide sin, must carefully also auoid the occasions thereof, which are strong inducements to draw him vnto sinne; for as it is great folly for a man who dreadeth burning to bee alwayes medling with fire and gunpowder; so is it no lesse madnesse to thinke that wee can preserue our selues from sinne, and yet intertaine all occasions thereof, continually suffering the sparkes of Satans tentations to fall (as it were) into the tinder of our corrupt affections. It is not possible that he who is inclined to gluttonie and drunkennesse should containe himselfe from these sinnes, if he giue himselfe to companie keeping, and take his chiefe delight in pleasing his taste with the daintiest meates and drinkes: or that hee who is cholerick, should refraine from anger, and yet thrust himselfe into needlesse controuersies, and hot contentions; or for him that is lasciuious to abstaine from vncleannesse, and yet frequent vnchast companie, reade wanton bookes, view obscene spectacles, vse filthie communication, and pamper himselfe in gluttonie and drunkennesse. In a word, we cannot auoid any sin, vnlesse we also flee and shunne the occasions and meanes thereof; and therefore let vs bee as carefull and watchfull in the one as the other, or else wee shall most certainely lose our labours.

Secondly, if wee would not fall into greater sinnes, wee must also make conscience of those which are lesse; and thinke with our selues that no sin is small, seeing the least deserueth the anger of God and euerlasting death: other wise if we willingly intertaine euen small corruptions, we shall at length make no conscience of hainous transgressions; and these little theeues being let in, will in time set wide open the doore of our hearts, that the greatest and grossest may easily enter, and so robbe and spoile vs of all grace and goodnesse.

Thirdly, let vs continuallie stande vpon our guard, carefully watching ouer our owne hearts, that we be not surprised at vnawares; for thousands are the baites which are laid to intrap vs, and tenne thousand snares doth Satan lay to intangle vs; and therefore it behoueth vs to looke narrowly to our waies, and to bee alwayes as ready to giue Satan the repulse, as he to make the encounter. And considering that if we doe not assault sin, it will most surely fall vpon vs, and at one time or other will giue vs the foile if wee only lie at ward, and neuer offer blow against this our enemie; therefore it behoueth euery Christian souldier, not onely to giue sin a repulse, but also to wound it in the head, and beate it downe, that it may not againe assault him, or at least not with wonted power and violence. And forasmuch as he hath many enemies which cannot at once bee ouercome, therefore hee is to labour to get euery day the mastery of some sinne, and to bring it in subiection, that so in continuance of time he may vanquish all, and obtaine a full and finall victorie ouer all his corruptions.

Fourthly, if wee would not fall into grieuous sinnes wee must not stand in our owne power, nor trust in our owne strength, but wholly rest and relie vpon Gods promised assistance. For if once we robbe God of his glory, and arrogate the praise of our victory ouer sin and Satan vnto our selues, the Lord will withdraw his helping hand, and leaue vs vnto our selues, till by our grieuous falles we haue learned to acknowledge our owne weakenes; & to rest wholly in the power of his might. For as all other sinnes are odious vnto God, so especially the sin of pride, because it maketh vile man corriual with God in his praise and glory, of which he is most iealous; and therefore the Lord suffereth, euen his owne children, to fall into grieuous sinnes, that hereby they may bee humbled; and so vseth other sins as a counterpoison to cure pride.

§. Sect. 5.

Lastly, seeing we stand not by our owne

strength but by the power of Gods might, let vs as often as wee see our owne weakneſſe and apteneſſe to fall, haue our recourſe vnto God, by feruent and effectuall prayer; crauing his aide and aſſiſtance, that thereby wee may be enabled to ſtand in the day of tentation. And when by vertue thereof wee haue giuen the foile, and repelled Satans ſuggeſtions; let vs remember to returne praiſe and thankſgiuing to the Lord, by whoſe helpe wee haue beaten backe our ſpirituall enemies; and then wee may bee aſſured that the Lord will vphold vs by the power of his ſpirit from falling into ſinne; or if wee doe fall, hee will ſpeedily raiſe vs vp by vnfained repentance.

CHAP. VII.

That in the moſt ſanctified, remaine ſome reliques of ſinne, and the cauſes thereof.

AND ſo much for the anſwering of Satans firſt ſort of tentations, wherewith hee laboureth to hinder our ſanctification by alluring vs to commit ſinne. Now we are to ſpeake of the other ſort, whereby he ſeeketh to diſcourage vs in this worke, as being not only hard and difficult, but euen impoſſible. And theſe alſo are of two kindes; the firſt taken from the great maſſe of our naturall corruptions and ſmall meaſure of our ſanctification; the other from ſome actuall ſinnes which we haue committed. Concerning the firſt, he thus frameth his tentations: Thou laboureſt much (will he ſay) & tireſt thy ſelfe in attaining vnto ſanctificatiõ, but al in vaine; for doeſt thou not ſee on the one ſide the vnreſiſtable violence of thy naturall corruptions, which continually choake in thee all the good motions of Gods ſpirit, & forcibly draw thee into all ſin and wickednesſe; and on the other ſide, thy ſmall meaſure of grace & ſanctification, which is exceedingly ſtained with thy manifold imperfectiõs? How therefore can ſuch weakneſſe withſtand ſuch power? And how is it poſſible that thy feeble ſpirit ſhould ouercome thy ſtrong fleſh, eſpecially ſeeing it is aſſiſted with the powerfull aides of the puiſſant world, and the mighty power of innumerable diuels? Neither art thou vainely to imagine that God will enable thee to ouercome all theſe difficulties: for hee hath giuen thee ouer to thine owne weakneſſe, otherwiſe if it were his will to make thee one of his holy ones, hee could with the powerfull operation of his ſpirit, long agoe haue perfectly purged thee from all thy corruptions, and giuen vnto thee a great meaſure of ſanctification. Seeing then it is impoſſible in reſpect of thy weakneſſe and thine enemies power to accompliſh this worke which thou haſt taken in hand, and ſeeing thou haſt no aſſurance that God will ſtrengthen thee with his ſpirit, which thou haſt a long time reſiſted and vexed, by quenching the good motions thereof, thou haſt now no ſhew of hope to effect that which thou deſireſt: and therefore it were much better for thee to ceaſe ſtriuing againſt the ſtreame of thy corruptions, and to follow the naturall current of thy deſires: for when thou takeſt all the paines thou canſt, thou art in one day carried further backward toward thine olde conuerſation, than thou canſt in many moneths get forward in the courſe of ſanctification.

And thus doth Satan diſcourage the weak Chriſtian with his falſe ſuggeſtions, to the end he may hinder him from trauelling this way of holineſſe (which leadeth to Gods kingdome. For the anſwering whereof we are to know, that the ſanctification of the moſt holy is imperfect, both in reſpect of the reliques of ſin, and corruptions which continually cleaue to them, and in reſpect of the manifold wants and defects of their beſt actions. Neither are wee ſo waſhed in the lauer of regeneration, but that there remaine in vs ſome ſtaines of that ſcarlet-ingrained dye of our corruptions: wee haue not ſo cleerely eſcaped out of our old captiuitie of ſin, but that wee retaine ſtill ſome gaules and bruſes, which make vs to goe haltingly in the waies of righteouſnes: we haue not ſo vanquiſhed this ſpirituall enemie, but that ſtill it will aſſault vs, yea, and often foile vs, though it cannot ſubdue vs. We haue indeed ouercome theſe curſed Canaanites, ſo that they cannot rule and raigne in vs as in former times, but wee haue not vtterly expelled them from dwelling amongſt vs; ſo that doe wee what we can, yet ſtill they will bee as thornes in our ſides to vexe and grieue vs. Heretofore the luſts of our fleſh like tyrannicall Lords did againſt all law and iuſtice ouerrule vs, but now by vertue of Gods ſpirit aſſiſting vs, we haue weakened their force and brought them vnder; yet not ſo, but that ſtill they will rebell againſt the ſpirit, and continually exerciſe vs in the ſpirituall warfare. So that the regenerate man is not wholly ſpirit, as the carnall man is wholly fleſh, but is diuided into two factions or parts, and alwayes is at ciuill warres within himſelfe. For ſo farre forth as he is regenerate he is holy, pure, and vndefiled, but ſo farre forth as he is carnall, he he is ſinfull, corrupt, & full of all pollution. As he is regenerate he wholly loueth & embraceth true holineſſe, & righteouſnes, and abhorreth and fleeth ſin & wickednes; but as hee is vnregenerate hee loueth ſin and the vaine vaine pleasures thereof, and loatheth righteousnesse as irksome and vnpleasant. In the spirituall part he contemneth the world, and hauing his conuersation aboue he mindeth heauenly things; but in the carnall part hee loueth the world, and is pressed downe with the cares and pleasures thereof, so that his mind cannot as it would mount aloft in diuine meditations; in the spirit hee serueth the law of God, in the flesh the law of sinne.

Wee must not therefore imagine, that to be sanctified is to be wholly purged from all corruption, to be endued with perfect righteousnesse, and to haue the spirit in full measure; but to haue the corruptions of sinne lessened, and their power abated, so that they cannot wholly ouersway vs as in former times, to haue some holy desires and good endeuours of seruing God in holinesse and righteousnes, which also weeexpresse in our actions, although in great weaknesse and imperfection; to haue the first fruits of the spirit in this life, expecting the whole harvest in the life to come. Neither let vs yeeld to Satan, suggesting vnto vs, that we are not at al sanctified, because we haue some reliques of our old corruptions and manifold imperfections in our best actions; or that therefore our holinesse which we haue, is so small that it is to no purpose, and that which wee want so great and hardly come by, that it is not possible we should euer attaine vnto it; seeing these suggestions are sufficiently confuted, both by the Scriptures and examples of all Gods children. For the Scriptures teach vs that there is not a iust man vpon the earth who doth good and sinneth not Eccles. 7. 20. that in many things we sin all; that if we say we haue no sinne, we deceiue our selues, and there is no truth in vs: and therefore because wee continually offend, our Sauiour requireth that as wee aske our daily bread, so also wee should pray daily for the forgiuenesse of our sins. The Apostle also telleth vs, that there is a continuall fight in euery Christian, the flesh lusting against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. The one tempting vs vnto sin, the other stirring vs vp to holy obedience. Moreouer, the examples of Gods Saints are pregnant for this purpose, neither was there euer any so perfectly sanctified, but there remained in them some reliques of their naturall corruptions, which also shewed themselues in actuall sinnes and grieuous transgressions; as appeareth plainly in the examples of the Patriarches, Dauid, Peter, and all others. But most cleerly doth the Apostle Paul shew this in his owne person, propounding himselfe as a true paterne of a man regenerate; for though he had attained vnto a great measure of sanctification; yet he complaineth of the great force and violence of his inbred corruptions, Rom. 7: for so great strength thereof remained in him, that it forced him to abuse the law of God, taking occasion thereby to worke in him all manner of concupiscence, and so in stead of killing sin did reuiue it in him, vers. 8. 9: that it made him to omit the good hee would, and to doe the euill that he hated, vers. 15. 19. that it warred against the law of his minde, and led him captiue to the law of sin, vers. 23. that he saw no possible meanes in himselfe to subdue vtterly these corruptions, and therefore seeketh for helpe elsewhere crying out, Wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? vers. 24.

Q. Sect. 4. That our wants and corruptions should not discourage vs, but redouble our care and diligence.

Seeing therfore this is the state of al Gods children, let not Satan perswade vs that we are not yet sanctified, or that it is lost labour to goe forward in this worke, because of the great power of our corruptions and small measure of sanctification, which is stained also with manifold imperfections; but rather let the strength of our corruptions redouble our care and diligence that wee may subdue them. And considering that there are diuers degrees of holines, let vs assoone as we haue ascended one step, neuer rest striuing till wee haue ascended a higher, vntill at length wee come to the top of perfection, and the highest step of true holinesse; according to the exhortation of the Apostle, Apoc. 22. 11. Hee that is righteous let him be righteous still, he that is holy, let him bee holy still, that is, let him continue and daily increase in righteousnesse and holinesse.

Apoc. 22. 11.

Q. Sect. 5. That our relikes of sinne shall not be imputed vnto vs.

And to the end that we may not be discouraged in these our holy indeuours, with Satans tentations drawne from the reliques of our sinnes, the strength of our corruptions, and the imperfections & small measure of our sanctification; let vs further consider, first, that these reliques of sin shall not bee imputed vnto vs, nor come in iudgement before God to our condemnation, because by faith wee are vnited vnto Christ, and so made partakers of the vertue and merits of his death and passion, whereby hee hath satisfied Gods iustice for our sins, so that they cannot now condemne vs, nor draw vpon vs any punishment; and likewise wee are made partakers of his perfect righteousnesse and obedience to the law, which as a rich robe doth couer and hide our patched ragges of imperfection. So then though wee see the reliques of sinne and our manifold imperfections, let vs not bee discouraged hereby from labouring in the worke of sanctification, but rather striue & endeuour to mortifie our sins, & aspire to more & more perfection. And if besides our purpose we be led captiue of sin, let vs remember that we haue an aduocate with the father Iesus Christ the iust.

1. Ioh. 2. 1. 2.

iust and that her is the reconciliation for our sins; so that though they make vs condemne our selues in our owne consciences, yet they shall neuer condemne vs before God. And this the Apostle Paul sheweth vnto vs; for hauing in the seauenth Chapter of his Epistle to the Romans declared, that the faithfull haue remaining in them the flesh and reliques of their old corruptions, which powerfully hinder them from doing the good they would, and mouethem to commit the euill which they would not, lest any hereby should bee discouraged in the sight and sense of his corruptions, hee presently addeth in the beginning of the eighth Chapter, that notwithstanding the flesh and the corruptions thereof, which before hee had spoken of remained in vs, yet there was no condemnation to those who were in Christ Iesus and hee yeildeth this reason, because the law of the spirit of life which is in Christ Iesus, had freed them from the law of sinne and of death, that is, because the power and vertue of the spirit of God (which is the the author of life, by vniting vs as members vnto the body of Christ in whom we liue, and by sprinkling our consciences with his precious blood) had deliuered them from the force and power of sin and death, so that now it could not condemne them, nor oblige and bind them to guilt and punishment as in former times. Seing therefore the sting of sinne is taken away that it cannot condemne vs, let vs not so feare it, as that it should moue vs desperatly to cast away our weapons, not daring to encounter it; for though this our enemie may assault vs, yet it cannot ouercome vs; though it may wound vs, yet it cannot kill vs; though it may giue vs a foyle, yet in the end wee are sure of victorie, if wee manfully resist and labour to subdue it.

Rom. 8. 1. 2.

Q. Sect. 6. That the Lord in the Gospell requireth not perfect obedience to the law.

Secondly, let vs consider that the Lord doth not require of vs vnder the Gospell such exact and perfect righteousnesse as was required vnder the law; which is altogether impossible to our corrupt nature, and was neuer to be found in any man (our Sauiour Christ excepted) but onely that wee striue and labour to attaine vnto it; hee doth not require of vs that we should at once free our selues from the flesh and the corruptions thereof, but that wee endeuour to mortifie it, according to the measure of grace and strength which wee haue receiued from him; hee doth not require of vs that wee bee without sinne, but that sinne doe not raigne in our mortall bodies, that we should like sinners obey it willingly in the lusts thereof; and that also wee hating and abhorring it, doe continually make warre against it, and subdue it by little and little, seeing wee cannot at once wholly vanquish it. He doth not now require of vs that wee should performe perfect obedience to the law, which Christ hath performed for vs, but that wee doe our best endeuour, and though we cannot attaine to our desire, yet at least that wee bee deligheed in the law of God concerning the inner man, and consent vnto it that it is good, holy and iust. In a word, this is the Christian mans righteousnes which God requireth, that hee hate sin, and loue godlines, that he desire and endeuour to mortifie the flesh and corruptions thereof, and labour to lead a new life in holy obedience. And if contrary to his desire and purpose hee doe the euill which he hateth, or leaue vndone the good which hee loueth; that hee sorrow and grieue for his sinnes and imperfections, and making confession hereof before the throne of grace, doe implore mercy and forgiuenes in Christ Iesus. And if we offer vnto God this righteousnes, it will be acceptable vnto him, notwithstanding our manifold imperfections; for hee measureth our deed by our will, and esteemeth more of our affections than of our actions. He respecteth not what we can doe, but what we would do, and that which we would performe and cannot, hee esteemeth it as though it were performed. Hee reputeth him righteous, who earnestly desireth and laboureth to be righteous, and him perfect, who acknowledging and bewailing his imperfections striueth to attaine to more perfection. Wherein he fitly may be compared vnto a tender louing father, who esteemeth of the least endeuours of his beloued sonne, more than of the best actions of a seruant, because he regardeth not so much the excellencie of the action, as the person and cheerefull will of the agent.

Rom. 6. 12.

Now the reasons why the Lord being perfectly iust, will notwithstanding accept of our imperfect righteousnesse, is first because (wee being made members of Christs body) our persons are acceptable vnto him, and therefore our workes also (not in their owne worthines, or for their owne merit, but in and for Christ) are accepted, the corruptions and staines of them being washed away in his blood, and the imperfections of them being couered with Christs perfect righteousnesse. And thus being adorned in the garments of our elder brother Christ Iesus, we obtaine the blessing of our heauenly father. Secondly, our righteousnesse and holinesse doth proceede from the spirit of God dwelling in vs; and from hence our workes being imperfect in themselues doe receiue their dignitie, excellencie, and estimation in Gods sight, as being the fruites of his owne spirit, howsoeuer mingled with our corruptions.

Thirdly, let vs remember that our sinnes and corruptions which wee hate and labour to mortifie, will neuer moue the Lord to reiect ject and cast vs out of his loue and fauour. For he hath made with vs not the Couenant of workes but the Couenant of grace, not on the condition of perfect obedience, but a liuely faith and vnfained repentance, which if we performe, our sins cannot hinder vs of his grace and fauour, nor of any spirituall and heauenly benefit promised vnto vs: seeing if we beleeue and repent, it is a branch of this couenant, that hee will be mercifull vnto our sins, and not impute them to vs vnto condemnation, according to that, Ier. 31. 34. For I will forgiue their iniquitie, and will remember their sinnes no more. And if we offend, he will chastise vs with the rod of men, but his mercie shall not depart from vs, and the Couenant of peace made with vs shall neuer faile, 2. Sam. 7. 14. Esay 54. 7. to the 11. For we are the Lords children, and hee our gracious Father: now wee know that a louing father will not reject his childe, because he is sicke, lame, or in miserable estate, but rather he is more tender ouer him, till he be recouered of his infirmities: but what are our sinnes but the sicknesse, wounds and misery of the soule, with which we are vexed and turmoyled whilest wee continue in this life? And will our heauenly Father, whose loue infinitely surpasseth the loue of the most tender mother, cast vs out of his fauour, because our soule are sicke in sin, and molested with many miseries which doe accompany it? It is impossible, especially considering that wee desire nothing more then to bee cured of these diseases, and to bee restored to perfect health. The Lord is our heauenly husbandman, and we his husbandry; now wee know that the good husbandman doth not forsake his Land, because it bringeth forth thornes and thistles, but rather is so much the more diligent and painfull in weeding and tilling it, that it may bee fitted for good seed and bring vnto him plentifull increase; and so the Lord will not cast vs off, because we naturally bring forth the weedes and thistles of sin and corruption, but in his infinite loue he wil with the operation of his holy Spirit, plow vp the fallow grounds of our hearts, and weed out our corruptions; that so we may like good ground, well husbanded, bring forth the ripe fruits of holines and righteousnesse.

Fourthly, let vs consider that the Lord our God, who could easily if it had pleased him, haue throughly purged vs from all sin and corruption, and indued vs with perfect righteousnesse and holinesse, hath notwithstanding left remayning in vs some reliques of sin, and many imperfections in our sanctification, both for the manifestation of his owne glory, and for the furthering of our owne eternall saluation. For first, hereby it commeth to passe, that the Lord hath the whole prayse of our saluation, seeing hee saueth vs of his meere mercy, and not for our workes and worthinesse. Whereas if our righteousnesse and sanctification were perfect, we would be ready to share with God; ascribing part in the worke of our saluation vnto our selues, and not wholly attribute it to Gods mercie and Christs only and all-sufficient merits: and therefore the Lord hath left in vs the reliques of sin and manifold imperfections, that hereby it may appeare that wee are not saued for our owne worthinesse and deserts, but of his free grace and vndeserued loue.

Secondly, hee hath left in vs these reliques of sin and manifold imperfections, to the end that there might be continuall matter and a fit object, whereupon he might exercise, and by exercising manifest, to the prayse of his grace, his patience, long-suffering, loue, goodnesse, and infinite mercy, in the pardoning and forgiuing of them; which would not so plainly appeare if at once hee had indued vs with perfect righteousnesse.

Q. Sect. 10. That there might bee a fit obiect of his mercy and patience.

Thirdly, that hereby he might make way for the manifestation of his power in our weakenesse and imperfections. If wee were perfectly righteous and indued with all grace, it were no wonder if we should withstand Satans tentations and get the vpper hand in the spirituall combat; but seeing we are of our selues sinfull, exceeding weake and ful of all imperfections, hereby is the infinite power of God manifested, in that we are notwithstanding enabled, to withstand Satan and all the power of Hell which oppose themselues against vs, seeing nothing else could vphold such feeble weakenesse against such puissant might. Of this the Apostle speaketh, 2. Cor. 12. 8, 9. for hauing oftentimes besought the Lord to bee freed from the corruptions of his flesh, hee receiueth this answere, that Gods grace was sufficient for him, and that his power was made perfect through weakenesse.

Q. Sect. 11. That he might shew his power in our weakenesse,

2. Cor. 12. 8, 9.

Fourthly, hereby the Lord continually putteth vs in minde of his mercie and manifold benefits, to the end that we daily casting of them, may also daily returne vnto him thankes and prayse. If hee should at once free vs from sinne, and indue vs with a full measure of grace and perfect righteousnesse, wee would soone be forgetfull of his abundant mercies, and this forgetfulnesse would worke in vs vnthankfulnesse, and this vnthankfulnesse would make vs neglect his worship and seruice. And therefore he doth not at once inrich vs, but lets vs continue in our pouertie, that so we may continually depend vpon him: and like a wise houlholder hee doth not suddenly aduance vs to our highest preferments, for then wee would leaue his seruice and betake vs to our ease and pleasure; but he bestoweth his benefits by little and little, and so keeping vs still in

Q. Sect. 12. That he might stirre vs vp to continuall thankfulnesse, expectation of receiuing more, he retaineth vs still in his seruice, & euery day increasing his bountie, he putteth also into our mouthes new songs of thanksgiuing, and giueth vs daily new occasion of praysing his magnificence.

Sect. 13. That he may hereby worke in vs true humilitie.

Secondly, as the Lord hereby aduanceth his owne glory, so also he worketh our good, and furthereth our eternall saluation. For first by leauing in vs these reliques of sinne and manifold imperfections, he worketh in vs true humilitie, which of all other graces is most acceptable vnto him, and mortifieth our pride, which of all other vices is most odious and abominable in his sight. For when we see our manifold infirmities and corruptions of sin, all cause of pride and selfe-conceit is taken away, and wee in all humilitie are moued to confesse, that it is Gods mercy that we are not consumed: how much more that notwithstanding our vilenesse and vnworthinesse, he hath made vs his sonnes and heires of euerlasting glory? And thus of the flesh of this Viper Sin, doth the Lord make a soueraigne antidote against the deadly poyson of pride. And as good Chirurgions doe not suddenly heale vp the wound, but keepe it open till they haue drawne out the core and healed it to the bottome, for otherwise it would putrifie and become more dangerous; so the Lord wil not at once heale the wounds of our sins, but leaueth them as it were open and vncured, till hee haue drawne out the core of pride, which being left in vs (though we were healed of all our other sins) would more indanger vs then all the rest. Wherein the Lord confirmeth and furthereth vs in the way of saluation; for nothing more disableth vs then pride, nothing more strengtheneth and vpholdeth vs then humilitie, because the strength whereby wee stand and repell our spirituall enemies is not our owne ablitie, but the power of Gods might, and the Lord withdraweth his assisting hand from the proud, to the end that hee may learne to bee more humble by his grieuous falls; yea he resisteth him, and therefore how is it possible that hee should stand? but contrariwise he giueth grace to the humble, and filleth him who acknowledgeth his owne emptinesse with good things, but the proud, who is full in his owne conceit, hee sendeth emptie away. To which purpose Augustine speaketh excellently. Et ideo audeo dicere, &c. And therefore (saith hee) I dare bee bold to say that it is profitable for proud persons to fall into some open and manifest sin, that thereby they may displease themselues in their fall, who haue displeased themselues in their standing. For more profitably did Peter displease himselfe when hee wept, then pleased himselfe whe he presumed. And this is that which the Psalmist speaketh. Fill their faces (O Lord), with shame, that they may seeke thy Name.

Lam. 3. 22.

1. Pet. 5. 9. Luke 1. 53. Aug. de Ciuit. Dei lib. 14. cap. 13. col. 780.

Secondly, he leaueth in vs corruptions and imperfections to the end that wee should not rest in our owne righteousnesse for our iustification and saluation (which though it were as great as Adams in the state of innocency and integritie, yet it were no sure ground to rest vpon) but in the alone righteousnesse of Christ Iesus, which is all-sufficient and a foundation so vnremouable, that all the power of hell cannot ouerturne it, nor any that are built vpon it. Vpon which sure pillar wee would hardly relie, so long as we haue in our hand the reede of our owne righteousnesse, we being naturally inclined rather to seeke for saluation in our selues then elsewhere.

Thirdly, he leaueth in vs these spirituall enemies, that wee may exercise our selues in fighting against them, and so bee kept from idlenesse the mother and nurse of all euill; and as he would not at once cast out the Canaanites before the Israelites, but by little and little, lest the Land should grow vnto a wilderneste, and the wilde beasts should multiply against them: so he would not suddenly cast out our spirituall enemies, but suffereth vs to preuaile against them by little and little, lest giuing our selues vnto idlenesse, when there is no opposition made against vs, there grow in vs as in a wildernes the noysome weeds and thorns of sin and the wilde beasts of all outragious wickednesse, which would deuoure and vtterly destroy vs. Whereas contrariwise, when wee are assaulted outwardly with the forces of Sathan and the World, and inwardly with the flesh and our naturall corruptions, we haue enemies against whom wee may exercise our faith, affiance, hope, patience, courage, and all other graces which we haue receiued, and by exercise increase them: we fight the Lords battels like his valiant Souldiers, and being assisted by his holy Spirit we obtaine victory, and with our conquest a more excellent crowne of eternall glory: as appeareth, Reuel. 2. 26, 27. and 3. 21.

Lastly, he suffereth vs to be molested and vexed with the reliques of our sins, that hereby he may make vs to loath this world and vale of miserie, wherein we can doe nothing but breake the commandements of our deare louing Father; and may be moued to desire that heauenly life in Gods Kingdome, when hauing laid aside all corruption, wee shall be indued with all perfection, and be fully enabled to performe such obedience vnto God as he requireth. For seeing sinne is not fully vanquished till it be subdued by our death, nor we euer at rest and free from the assaults thereof, till wee rest in the graue; therefore the children of God are content to forsake the world, because they can no other wise forsake their sins: and desire rather to indure death, then they would haue sinne to liue with them, as appeareth in the example of the Apostle Paul, Philippians 1. 22, 23.

And thus haue I shewed the wisdome and power of God, who turneth euen the sins of his children to their good, which are in their owne nature euill; and therefore though we are continually to bewaile them, and to desire by all meanes to be freed from them, yet wee are not desperately to sinke vnder them, not daring to encounter them, seeing now they cannot condemne vs, nay not so much as hurt vs, but rather are so ordered by Gods all-wise prouidence, that they serue for the manifestation of his glory, and furthering of our saluation, so that wee doe not with willing delight nor slauish feare yeeld vnto them, but to the vttermost of our power make resistance, and desire and indeuour to ouercome them.

Now in the fift and last place let vs consider that though our flesh be neuer so strong, and the inuincible corruptions thereof seeme irresistable, and though on the other side our spirituall man seeme neuer so weake and feeble, yet wee are not hereby to be discouraged, seeing the regenerate part shall most certainly obtain the victory in the end, though in the conflict it receiueth many foiles. And though this little Dauid seeme in the eyes of a carnall Saul, to be farre too weake, and altogether vnable to encounter that great Goliah, the flesh with the powerfull lusts thereof, yet in the end it will most certainly preuaile and get the conquest; because the spirit is the Lords champion which goeth out in the Name of the Lord to fight against his enemies; the flesh the Deuils Souldier who is Gods enemy: That is strengthened and supported with the power of God which being infinite is vnresistable; this, by the strength of Satan and the world, whose power is infinite, and so restrained and ouerruled by Gods might, that they cannot stirre without his leaue and permission. Vnlesse therefore we would blasphemously imagine, that the flesh and its assistants are of greater power than God himselfe, or that God will suffer this disgrace, that his champion should be ouerthrowne by his professed enemies; we may most certainly assure our selues that wee shall get the day and obtaine a famous victory. And therefore let not Satan discourage vs, by setting before our eyes our owne weaknesse, and the mightie oppositions which are made against vs; but arming our selues with the Christian armour, and trusting wholly in the power of Gods might, let vs valiantly incounter our spirituall enemies, and neuer giue ouer fighting till by death we haue giuen vnto them a final ouerthrow, and so shall we be crowned with an vnualuable crowne of immortall glory.

CHAP. VIII.

Satans tentations drawne from our slow progresse in sanctification, answered.

AND so much for answering Satans tentations, drawne from the reliques of sin which remaine in vs, and the small measure of our sanctification. The second tentation whereby he laboureth to discourage the weake Christian, from going forward in his course of true godlinesse, he taketh from his slow progresse and slacke proceedings in sanctification, vpon which occasion he thus assaulteth him. Thou labourest much (will he say) and toylest thy selfe with intolerable paines that thou mayest become a sanctified man, but all in vaine; for though thou heare'st the word often, and readest much, and prayest continually, and beatest thy braines with daily care, to the end that thou mayest attaine vnto some perfection in Christianitie; yet doest thou not perceiue how little thou profitest by al thy labours, seeing thy knowledge is still small, thy faith weake, thy charitie cold, thy heart dull and hard, thy good workes few and imperfect, and all thy zealous resolutions easily hindred, and quite ouerthrowne with euery small tentation? Why then doest thou striue against the streame, and vndertake a taske which is to thee, not onely hard, but euen impossible? For doe what thou canst, yet all will be to little purpose, seeing this worke is full of great difficulties, thy selfe disabled with manifold corruptions, and thy enemies which oppose against thee exceeding strong and mightie, as thy selfe findest by lamentable experience, and thy much labouring and little profiting, doe clearely proue. Cease therefore thy bootlesse trauell, and rather imbrace thy pleasing delights, then turmoile thy selfe with vaine labour.

Sect. 1. Satans tentation grounded vpon our little profiting in Christianitie.

For the answering of which tentation wee are to know, that if wee dislike our owne dulnesse and backwardnesse in profiting and growing forward in sanctification; if wee bee truly sorrowfull and bewaile our great wants and imperfections, & labour earnestly in the vse of the meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto knowledge, faith, and all other sanctifying graces, & also be inabled to bring forth the fruits of holy obedience; then are wee accepted of God, and shall in the end most certainly obtaine our desire, though yet we can see but small profit of all our labours; neither shall all the power of our spirituall enemies so farre preuaile against vs, as vtterly to hinder vs in this worke, but that we shall vndoubtedly goe forward, although not so speedily as wee desire. For this holy desire of profiting in godlines, and this indeuour

Sect. 2. That the dislike of our dulnes and backwardnesse is accepted of God.

uour and carefull vse of those meanes which are ordained by God for this purpose, are not naturall, but the worke of Gods Spirit begun in vs; & we are with the Apostle to be perswaded of this same thing: that he that hath begun this good worke in vs will performe it vntill the day of Iesus Christ. Phil.1.6. We are to assure our selues with the Prophet Dauid, that the Lord will fulfill the desire of those that feare him, Psal.145.19. Wee are vndoubtedly to beleeue that the Lord will not suffer vs to be tempted above our power, but will giue a good issue with the tentation. 1.Cor.10,13. We are not to imagine, that he will breake the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flaxe, seeing he hath promised the contrary, Matth.12.20. And though this little graine of mustard seed for a time lie hidden in the earth, and when it sprouteth vp, springeth so slowly that wee cannot sensibly discerne the growing thereof; yet in Gods good time being watered with the dew of his holy Spirit, it will become one of the greatest trees in the Lords Garden. For seeing hee hath giuen vs this grace, not to bee wanting in the vse of all good meanes, wee may most certainly assure our selues, that hee for his part will not bee wanting, in giuing his blessing and granting the assistance of his holy Spirit, which hee hath promised to those that desire it.

Phil.1.6. Psal.145.19. 1.Cor.10.13. Matth.12.20. Luke 11.13.

9. Sect.3. That Gods spirit dwelling in vs, will in the end perfect this work.

Secondly, let vs consider that these small beginnings of grace and first fruits of the spirit, are most vndoubted signes that he dwelleth in vs: now whersoeuer he dwelleth, he sanctifieth his owne lodging, and is not idle till hee haue effected this worke which hee hath vndertaken and begun. Though therefore this worke, in regard of thy slow proceedings seeme hard, yea, euen impossible, yet consider, that that which is impossible to man, is possible to God: though thou seest many difficulties and mighty oppositions by thy powerfull enemies, yet let not this discourage thee, seeing the Lord who is with thee is almightie, and therefore able to tepell the violence of all opposers, and to make the most heauy and pinching yoke, light and easie. Though in thy selfe thou art most weak and feeble, yet thou art strong in the power of Gods might, and enabled to doe all things through the helpe of Christ which strengtheneth thee.

Matth.11.30, Eph.5.10. Philip.4.13.

9. Sect.4. That the Lord hath as certainly decreed and promised our sanctification as our saluation.

Thirdly, let vs consider, that as the Lord hath decreed our saluation, and promised vnto vs eternall life: so hee hath also as certainly decreed and promised the meanes tending thereunto, which are the effects of his election and the fore-runners of our saluation; but one speciall effect of his election is our sanctification, and the way to saluation is the path of righteousnesse and holinesse, and therefore this is no lesse certainly assured vnto vs, that wee shall be sanctified and enabled to walke in this way of righteousnesse and holinesse, then that wee are elected and shall be saued. Though then wee are weake and vnstable, yet the foundation of God remaineth euer sure; though in regard of our owne feebleneſse, and manifold imperfections, the worke of sanctification seeme altogether impossible, yet this should not moue vs to doubting nor discourage vs in our course, seeing it hath not any ground vpon our owne strength, but vpon Gods immutable decree, and neuer failing promises. When then our small progresse in true godlinesse, caused through the violence of our corruptions and oppositions of our spirituall enemies discourageth vs, making this worke of sanctification seeme impossible, let vs call to mind that the Lord hath as certainly decreed that wee should bee his Saints heere vpon earth, as his Saints in Heauen; that hee hath most faithfully promised, that he will direct vs with his holy Spirit, take away from vs our stony hearts and giue vs fleshy hearts, illuminate our blinde vnderstandings with true sauing knowledge, indue vs with a liuely faith, and with all other sanctifying graces, enable vs to performe in some measure holy obedience to his heauenly will, mortifying our corruptions, and enabling vs to serue him in newnesse of life; all which gracious promises we are as vndoubtedly to beleeue, as those which concerne either the remission of our sins, or euerlasting happinesse. And therefore though our owne dulnesse, backwardnesse, and little profiting in sanctification, should worke in vs true sorrow, yet this should not discourage vs, doubting of the issue of all our labours, but knowing that God is alike true in al his promises, let vs, setting aside all difficulties, beleeue against beliefe, and vndoubtedly perswade our selues that the Lord will finish that good worke which he hath begun in vs, though as yet it hath but small proceedings, if we hunger after more perfection, and carefully vse the meanes whereby wee may attaine to true holinesse.

CHAP. IX.

Satans tentations whereby he aggrauateth our sinnes in generall, answered.

HAuing so much concerning those tentations of Satan, which he groundeth vpon our naturall corruptions and our small measure of sanctification. Now we are to speake of such as hee suggesteth after we haue committed some actuall sinnes: and these are either in respect of our sins in generall, or else some speciall sin into which wee haue haue fallen. Concerning the first, when the weake Christian (who hath a tender conscience, and therefore cannot be perswaded to lie downe in his sinne) hath through the violence of his owne corruptions, and violence of temptations, committed any sinne against his knowledge and conscience, then doth the tempter (who before his fall exceedingly extenuated and minced his sin, now after that he is falne into it) out of measure aggrauate the grieuousnesse and haynousnes of his offence, partly in respect of the nature and qualitie of the sin it selfe, and partly in respect of the circumstances, as being committed after his calling, against his knowledge, in such a time or place, and by such a person, as God is thereby most dishonoured, and his brethren offended by his bad example. And then hauing as it were stretched out his hand vpon the centers of his tentations, and with the blasts of his false suggestions made of euery small drop a great bubble, then doth he all set before him the curse of the Law, Gods fearefull iudgements, the plagues and punishments of this life, and euerlasting death and condemnation in the life to come, continually accusing and terrifying him as being guilty of all those fearefull calls by reason of his sinne, to the end that hereby being vtterly discouraged, he may altogether cast off all care of continuing in his former course of godlinesse, as if now it were altogether in vaine and to no purpose.

The which tentation if we would withstand in the day of triall, it behoueth vs not to rest in the remembrance of our former faith and repentance, but as we haue renued our sin, so also must wee renew our sorrow for it, bewayling our corruptions, which haue so preuailed against vs as to moue vs to transgresse Gods Commandements, hating and detesting our sinne into which wee haue fallen, and purposing for the time to come new leaue and forsake it, and to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life. And after our repentance wee must approue to bee vnfained by those fruites thereof which the Apostle mentioneth, 2. Cor. 7. 9. 10, 11. that is, wee must study and endeuour to amend, confesse our sinne vnto God in all humilitie, and most earnestly craue remission both of the fault and punishment, haue a godly indignation against our selues because we haue sinned, and a sonne-like feare, not so much in respect of the punishment, as of offending and displeasing God our most gracious louing Father; and an earnest desire that wee may be so renued, that wee be not againe so ouertaken, a more feruent zeale in loouing God and keeping his Commandements then before our fall, and lastly, wee must take holy reuenge of our sinnes, thereby to mortifie our flesh, that it may not hereafter bee so powerfull in vs, as to ouercome and lead vs captiue vnto sinne. And thus hauing renued our repentance, we must also renue our faith, by applying vnto our selues all the gracious promises of the Gospell, concerning life and saluation in Christ Iesus, made vnto all repentant sinners; and by calling to our remembrance that Christ the just hath borne the punishment due vnto vs who were vnjust; that by his death and merits he hath fully satisfied Gods justice, appeased his wrath, and washed away our sinnes with his bloud: that he hath fulfilled the Law for vs, and taken vpon him our curse, that wee in him might bee blessed: that by suffering for vs, he hath freed vs from all punishments of this life and the life to come; that he euer liueth to make intercession for vs: so that though we sinne, yet there is no feare of condemnation, seeing we haue an aduocate with the Father, Iesus Christ the iust, who is the reconciliation for our sinnes. 1. Iohn 2. 1, 2.

1. Iohn 2. 1, 2.

But here the tempter will obiect vnto the weake Christian, that these promises of the Gospell can yeeld vnto him no sound comfort, seeing they are restrained to those onely who are members of Christ Iesus, in which number are none but those who are regenerate, renued, and gouerned by Gods Spirit, according to that Rom. 8. 1. There is no condemnation to those which are in Christ Iesus, which walke not after the flesh but after the spirit. But thou (will he say) are not in Christ, for being ingrafted in this Vine, thou wouldest bring forth the Grapes of godlinesse, whereas there springeth nothing from thee but the briars & brambles of iniquity, neither walkest thou after the spirit, for then in thy life thou wouldest shew the fruites thereof, but after the flesh, which wholly ouerruleth thee and casteth thee headlong into all sinne and wickednesse.

Q. Sect. 3. Satans tentation perswading vs that we are still in the flesh.

Rom. 8. 1.

For the answering of which tentation we are to know, that it is not the committing of a sin or of many sins, which proueth that wee walke not after the spirit but after the flesh, (for so should all the children of God be carnall and not spirituall, yea euen the Apostle Paul himselfe, who complained that hee did the euill which he hated, and found no meanes to doe that which was good, but when he would doe good, euill was present with him: and that there was a law in his members warring against the law of his mind, which led him captiue vnto the law of sin) but to walke after the flesh is willingly to obey it in the lusts thereof; to commit sin with pleasure and delight; to embrace that which is euill with full consent of will cheerfully and with all readines; to run headlong into wickednesse stubbornly, resolutely, boldly and securely; to haue sin not only dwelling, but also raigning in our mortall bodies; to liue therein without repentance, ne-

Rom. 8.

uer grieuing for it, nor endeuouring to forsake it, yet rather greatly louing and making such high account of it, that we had rather part with our liues then be diuorced from our sinnes. Whosoeuer therefore through his weakenesse and infirmities is led captiue vnto sinne, and being enthralled by this tyrant earnestly desireth libertie, and doth not willingly run but is violently drawne by Satans tentations and his owne corruptions, and hauing sinned is not therewith delighted, but exceedingly grieued that by his sinne he hath displeased God; and feeling his owne weaknesse and infirmities doth bewaile them, and flieth vnto God by feruent prayer, desiring the assistance of his holy Spirit, whereby he may be enabled to mortifie his flesh and the corruptions thereof which he deadly hateth, and to serue God in holinesse and newnesse of life; such a one may assure himselfe that he walketh not after the flesh but after the Spirit, and that hee is in Christ Iesus, and hath escaped condemnation, though through his infirmitie and strength of his inbred corruptions he falleth often into sinne.

Though therefore the sanctified man sinneth, yet this doth not proue that he is still in the flesh and vnregenerate, seeing there is great difference betweene his sinnes into which he now falleth, and those which hee committed before he was sanctified, or those which they commit which still liue in the flesh. For first, the vnregenerate man doth continually sinne, heaping vp one wickednesse vpon another, the man regenerate but sometimes, when hee is ouercome by his corruptions; the wicked man committeth sinne with greedinesse, the godly man with some kinde of irksomnesse and after a sort vnwillingly; the one drawes sinne vnto him as it were with cartropes, the other is violently drawne to sin with the strength of his corruptions; the one hunteth after sin, and the occasions thereof, the other is hunted by sinne and Satans tentations, till being out of breath and fainting for weerinesse he is ouertaken and led prisoner. The carnall man sinneth with full consent of will, and with pleasure and delight, the spirituall man doth not yeeld without some reluctancy of the regenerate part, as it were grudgingly and with the mislking of the spirit, hee that is vnregenerate suffereth sinne to raigne in him, and yeeldeth vnto it such willing and hearty obedience as the loyall subiect doth to his lawfull King, but the regenerate man obeyeth it as though it were an vsurping tyrant, repiningly and by constraint, rather drawne with force, then moued by any loue or liking. The wicked man committeth sinne vpon deliberation, aduisedly and of set purpose, but the regenerate man for the most part suddenly, before his purpose, and contrarie to his resolution. The vngodly mans heart and conscience seldome or neuer controlle him for his sin, or if it doe, yet it suddenly vanisheth like a flash of lightning, but there is a fight in the heart of the godly man, the carnall part drawing one way, and the spirituall part another. When the carnall worldling offendeth hee is in his common way, for he maketh an occupation of committing sin; but when the regenerate man sinneth hee is out of his course, and is neuer at rest till hee commeth into his way of righteousnesse againe; when the wicked man hath committed one sinne, that is an argument to moue him to commit another, because iudgement is deferred, and hee hath escaped punishment; but the true Christian (like one who runneth a race for some great wager) if he stumble and fall, when hee riseth againe he doth more carefully looke to his feete, and striueth to runne the more swiftly in the way of righteousnesse, that so he may redeeme with more then vsuall speed the lost time wherein hee was hindred by his fall. Finally, the vnregenerate man being fallen into the puddle of sin, doth wallow therein with pleasure and delight, and neuer striues to rise againe by amendment of life; but the man regenerate though hee fall, yet he riseth vp againe by true repentance and neuer resteth till hee haue throughly washed his polluted soule with the blood of Christ applied vnto him by a liuely faith. The one remembreth his sins which he hath committed with gladnesse and reioycing, yea bragging and boasting of his outragious wickednesse, the other neuer thinketh vpon them but with griefe and sorrow, neither is there any thing in the world whereof hee is more ashamed then of his sinnes. Seeing therefore there is such great and manifold differences betweene the sinnes of the sanctified and those who are vnsanctified, let not Satan perswade vs that wee are still in the flesh and vnregenerate, because will wee nill wee, wee often fall into sin, if in our manner of sinning wee can finde these differences, which we neuer discerned in former times.

The differeces betweene the sinnes of the regenerate and vnregenerate.

Esa. 5. 18.

CHAP. X.

Satans tentations taken from particular sinnes into which we haue fallen, answered.

NOw so much cōcerning those tentations which Satan suggesteth in respect of our sins in general. Now wee are to speake of such as concerne particular sins, and these are of two sorts; for either Satan seeketh to ouerthrow throw our faith, and to discourage vs from going forward in our course of godlinesse, by setting before vs and exceedingly aggrauating those sins which indeed wee haue committed, or by perswading vs falsely that we haue committed such sinnes, as being vnpardonable are not incident to the child of God. The former sort of tentations are taken either from some hainous sin once committed, or from the often falling into the same sin. Concerning the first, he aggrauateth the sins of the faithfull two especiall wayes, either because they haue beene committed after repentãce, or voluntarily against knowledge and conscience. In the former respect he is ready to suggest, that the children of God do not commit any sin after they haue truely repented of it; and if any doe, either he neuer truly repented, or if he did, yet after his fall there is no place to a second repentanee, nor hope of Gods mercie. For answering whereof we are to know, that howsoeuer the state of those who thus sinne is somewhat dangerous, and they more hardly recouered then others (euen as those diseases are perillous and hardly cured, into which wee fall by a relapse after the recouerie of health) yet this is incident to the children of God who haue truly repented, and notwithstanding this grieuous kinde of falling they are not debarred of Gods mercie in Christ Iesus. And this appeareth partly by reasons, and partly by examples. For first, the gracious promises of the Gospell concerning the remission of sins, are indefinite & without limitation of time, or sins, whether committed before or after repentance. So Matth. 11.28. Come vnto me all yee that labour and are heauie laden, and I will ease you and 1. Iohn 2.1.2. If any man sinne, wee haue an aduocate with the Father, &c. In which and in many other places, the Lord assureth vs that he will receiue to mercy all repentant sinners of what nature and qualitie soeuer their sins are. Secondly, in the Law were sacrifices appointed for the sins of the people, not onely those who were newly receiued into the Lords couenant for their sins past, but also for those sins which were daily committed, after that they had long beene therein. Thirdly, the Lord enioyneth vs that we forgiue our brother seuentie times seuen times, if so often hee offend vs and repent of his fault; and therefore himselfe much more, whose mercy is infinite, and more exceedeth ours than the whole sea a little droppe, will pardon vs, if as wee often sin, so also wee often turne vnto him by vnfained repentance. This also manifestly appeareth by examples: for did not the Prophet Dauid after his true conuersion fall grieuously by committing murther and adultery, the Apostle Peter by denying his Lord and Sauiour, Noah by drunkennesse, Lot by incest? and yet afterwards they truly repented againe and were receiued to mercy. So that this point is cleere and manifest, that the deare childe of God, after his true conuersion and vnfained repentance may fall into grieuous sins, and yet truly repenting of them, may haue them remitted, and bee receiued againe into Gods wonted loue and fauour.

Q. Sect. 2. An obiection answered. Heb.6.4.5,6.

But heere the tempter will obiect that the Apostle affirmeth Heb.6.4.5.6. That it is impossible that those who haue beene once inlightned, &c. if they fall away, should be renewed by repentance: seeing by so sinning, they crucifie againe to themselues the Sonne of God, and make a mocke of him. And therefore whosoeuer sinneth after his true conuersion, can neither repent nor receiue mercie. To which wee must answere, that the Apostle in this place doth not speak of euery falling into sin, for so he should be contrary to the other Scriptures before alleaged, but of a generall falling away by apostasie, and of a malitious persecuting of the knowne truth, which is the sin against the holy Ghost, and is ioyned with continuall impenitencie, and therefore cannot be pardoned. And this appeareth manifestly by the words of the text; for hee doth not simply say, if hee fall into sin, but if hee fall away, namely, by a generall and malicious apostasie: and againe, hee sheweth of what manner of falling hee meaneth in the words following, whereas he saith, that such as thus fall away, crucifie vnto themselues the son of God, and make a mocke of him. Now they are said to crucifie Christ againe, who with an vnplacable hatred doe scorne and deride Christ crucified, renouncing all part and hope in his death and sufferings, as did some of the malicious Iewes, and as some apostates doe in these dayes. And therefore this place maketh nothing against the repentance and receiuing to mercie of such as fall through infirmitie into some particular sinnes, though neuer so hainous.

Q. Sect. 3. That all sins of knowledge are not presumptuous.

And so much for answering Satans tentations drawne from our sinnes committed after repentance. The second sort are taken from sinnes committed voluntarily against our knowledge and conscience, which if we haue fallen into, he presently suggesteth that wee haue sinned presumptuously against God, and therefore cannot be reckoned in the number of Gods Children, nor conceiue any hope of pardon and forgiuenesse. For the answering of which tentation, wee are to know these two things, first, that all sins committed against knowledge and conscience, are not presumptuous: secondly, that though wee should fall into presumptuous sinnes, yet wee may bee the children of God, who are neither debarred of true repentance, nor of Gods mercie. For the first, we are to know that not the hainousnesse of the sinne committed maketh it to be presumptuous, but the manner of the fact, and the minde of the offender; for howsoeuer Peter fell grieuously, yet wee cannot say that he fell presumptuously because he sinned through infirmitie and feare of danger, whereas to sin presumptuously, is to sin of a stubborne wilfulnesse, either through the neglect of Gods iustice and iudgements, or through the abuse of his mercy and benefits. In the first respect they offend, who hauing diuers times themselues sinned, and yet escaped punishment, or hauing seene others in the like case, doe take occasion thereby to sinne againe, hoping to escape as in former times: and of such the Wise man speaketh, Eccles. 8.11. Because sentence against an euill work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the children of men is fully set in them to doe euill. In the other respect, such offend as take occasion vpon Gods mercy and long suffering to fall into sinne, presuming before they commit it, that God vpon their repentance will in his infinit mercy forgiue them: and thus they abuse Gods mercie and goodnesse which should leade them to repentance, as an argument to make them more desperately to run into all wickednesse. So that to sin presumptuously, is not to sin vpon knowledge, and against a mans conscience onely, vnlesse there bee ioyned therewith a presumptuous hope to escape punishment, or that notwithstanding the sinne committed, he shall receiue pardon in respect of Gods infinite mercie. Now many of Gods children may fall against their knowledge and conscience, and yet not presume either to escape Gods iudgements, or to be partakers of his mercy, as namely those who are carried headlong into a sinne without any time of deliberation through the violence of their corruptions, or ouercome by feare of some present danger, or some other vnruly passion.

What it is to sin presumptuously.

Eccles. 8.11.

Rom. 2. 4.

But heere the tempter will obiect, that though these sinnes against knowledge and conscience bee not presumptuous, yet they are vnpardonable, seeing the committers of them haue no part in Christs sacrifice, and consequently can hope for no mercie at Gods hands. And this he will endeuour to proue by that saying of the Apostle, Heb. 10. 26. For if wee sinne willingly after that we haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sinnes, but a fearfull looking for of iudgement, &c. For the answering whereof, we are to know, that the Apostle in this doctrine is not contrary to our Sauiour Christ: but he hath taught vs, that not onely sins against knowledge are pardonable vnto those who are truly repentant, but euen horrible blasphemies against the Maiestie of God, yea, all sinnes whatsoeuer, sauing the sin against the holy Ghost, Matth. 12.31.32. Secondly, we know by experience, that both Dauid & Peter fell grieuously against their knowledge and conscience, wittingly, and in a sort willingly, and yet they both repented and were receiued to mercie. And therefore the Apostle speaketh not of all kinde of voluntarie falling, but first of sinne committed with full consent of will, pleasure and delight: the which kinde of sinnes are neuer committed by Gods children after their true conuersion: for as they are in part carnall and vnregenerate, so are they in part spirituall and regenerate, which is to bee vnderstood, not onely of the vnderstanding part, but also of the wil and affections. So farre forth therefore as their will is regenerate, they doe not will nor yeeld vnto sin; and though they consent vnto sinne, yet this consent is not absolute and intire, but with some dislike, grudging, and resistance of the spirituall part; the which dislike and resistance, though sometimes it cannot easily be discerned in the very act of sinne, whereas the weake motions of the spirit are violently ouerborne, through the raging strength of their naturall corruptions, and so ouershadowed by the cloudy mists which their vnruly passions cast before their vnderstanding, that they cannot at all perceiue any dislike or resistance against the tentation: yet after the sinne is committed, and they are by: the good motions of the spirit againe reuiued out of their deadly swound, then do they hate and detest that sinne which before seemed pleasant vnto them, and earnestly desire with the Apostle to be freed from it. Lastly, the Apostle in that place doth not speake of euery particular sin committed with ful consent of will, for so also the elect offend before their conuersion, but of a generall & malicious apostasie from the knowne truth, and a scornfull reiecting of the sacrifice of Christ once offered for sinne. So that the sense is thus much, that if wee wilfully and maliciously sinne, by renouncing the sacrifice of Christ offered for sinne, we cannot hope to be saued by any other sacrifice, but are to expect iudgment and condemnation, seeing such tread vnder foote the son of God, and count the blood of the testament an vnholy thing, and euen despite the spirit of grace, as hee explaneth himselfe in the verses following.

9. Sect. 4. That sinnes of knowledge are pardonable.

Heb. 10.26.

And so much concerning the first question. The second is whether the Christian man may fall into presumptuous sinns; and if hee doe, whether they bee pardonable or no. For the first, though it must needs bee confessed that it is a fearefull case, to neglect Gods

Gods iustice and iudgements because of his long suffering, or to take occasion vpon the abundance of Gods mercies and readinesse to forgiue, to prouoke him continually by our sinnes; yet it cannot be denied, but that a true Christian, through the strength of his inbred corruptions, may fall into these presumptuous sinnes; neither is there any priuiledge in the holy Scriptures to exempt them from any sinne whatsoeuer, but that either before or after their conuersion they may fall into it, sauing only that vnpardonable sinne which is committed against the holy Ghost. Moreouer, Dauid prayeth the Lord to keepe him from presumptuous sins, and that he would not suffer them to raigne ouer him, Psalme 19. 13. where first hee sheweth that of himselfe hee was apt to fall into such sinnes, if the Lord did not preserue him from them; and secondly, hee implieth, that the Lord might for good causes known vnto himselfe, suffer him to commit these sinnes of presumption, and therefore hee further prayeth that if hee should fall into such sinnes, it would please the Lord to raise him by true repentance, and not suffer them to rule and raigne in him. Whereby it appeareth that a true Christian may fall into these sinnes: now, that hauing fallen hee may rise againe by true repentance, and receiue pardon and forgiuenesse, it is likewise manifest. For if once the Lord receiue vs into the couenant of grace, and acknowledge vs for his children, nothing in the world, no not the most grieuous sinnes which wee can fall into, can separate vs from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord, as the Apostle speaketh Rom. 8. 38. 39. Secondly, our Sauiour telleth vs, that euery sinne and blasphemie shall be forgiuen vnto man, vpon true repentance sauing onely the blasphemie against the Spirit, which is alwayes ioyned with finall impenitencie, Matth. 12. 31. 32. Thirdly, the promises of the Gospell are generall and indefinite, excluding no sorts of sinnes whatsoeuer, so they performe the condition of faith and repentance. And therefore also presumptuous sinners, repenting and beleeuing, are assured of mercie and forgiuenesse. Lastly, if Dauid might fall into these sinnes; then Dauid also might repent and receiue pardon, seeing hee was truly iustified, sanctified, and a chosen vessell of the Lord, elected to euerlasting life.

And so much concerning the tentations which are taken from those sinnes which are once committed. Now we are to speake of them which he suggesteth vnto the weak conscience, after the committing of one and the same sinne diuers times. Vpon which occasion hee is ready to perswade the weake Christian, that hee neuer truly repented, otherwise hee would neuer againe fall into the same sinne; and that howsoeuer the child of God may fall into diuers sinnes, through want of care and experience, yet it is not incident to any of this number to fall againe and againe into the same wickednesse, after they haue had warning and sufficient knowledge of the euils thereof. For the answering whereof wee are to know, that in truth it is a grieuous and fearefull case to be thus ouertaken, and to be so besotted with the pleasures of sinne, that neither instruction, nor our owne experience can make vs to see the euills of it, and worke in vs a care to auoide and shunne it. The burnt childe (as the prouerbe is) dreadeth the fire; he that hath beene deceiued and thereby much indamaged, is afterwards more warie; he that hath cast himselfe into any grieuous disease through some vnwholesome meates, is euer after more careful of his diet: hee that hath once beene assaulted by his enemie at vnawares, and hath receiued grieuous wounds, will after hee is cured goe better armed and furnished, that hee may not againe be ouerraken of the like danger. And therefore seeing experience of all other euils doth teach vs to auoid them, what a lamentable thing is this, that no warning will make vs take heed of sinne, which is the greatest euill and cause of all the rest? that hauing drunke this deadly poyson and beene grieuously sicke thereof in our consciences, wee should being recouered be inticed with the pleasant taste thereof to swallow it downe againe? and that hauing receiued grieuous wounds, wee should after take no better heede and goe no better armed and prepared to make resistance, but for want of care and watchfulnesse expose our selues againe to the like danger of our spirituall enemies? Adde also heereunto that the cure of these relapses is difficult and full of daunger, and will require much paines and labour, many salt teares and bitter groanes. To which purpose one saith that by the wounds & fractures of the body and bones wee may gueesse at the infirmity and diseases of the soule: For if a mans hand or foot bee broken it is not restored to its former abilities without much labour. But if the part bee often broken in the same place, your Charitie may easily conceiue with how bitter griefe such wounds are cured, and yet after long and many troubles hardly can the members bee recouered to their wonted state? And the like reason wee must beleeue there is in curing the wounds and fractures of our soules. But yet we are to know that this sometimes, through our great frailty and corruption, may bee the estate of a true Christian and faithfull seruant of God, to fall againe and againe into the same sinne, neither doth any thing priuiledge

Aug. de tempore serm. 59. 2. 10. Col. 705.

That the child of God may fal often into the same sin, and yet be receiued to mercy uiledge them from committing that sinne againe which they haue once committed. For first, the same inbred corruption still dwelleth in them, and is readie againe to giue them the foile and to leade them captiue into the same sinne, if the Lord vphold them not, so that in respect of their owne strength they may fall againe as in former times. Secondly, the same causes still remaine which may moue the Lord to leaue them to themselues, and suffer them to fall, namely that hereby they may be more humbled, and more seriously bewaile their corruptions, that they may more earnestly implore his mercie, and he more manifest it in pardoning their Sins to the prayse of his glory. Thirdly, howsoeuer this is not vsuall with the children of God, to fall diuers times into a Sin which is great and grieuous, yet euery one findeth in his owne experience that hee often committeth such sins as are not so hainous, through infirmitie and weakneſſe; as to heare the word negligently and carelesly, to be distracted with wandring thoughts in prayer, to fall into vnjust anger, to lie and vse idle communication and such like, of which notwithstanding repenting hee is receiued vnto mercie. So that it is not the often falling into the same Sin, that excludeth vs out of the number of Gods children, or debarreth vs of pardon, so that we often repent and lay hold vpon Christ with a liuely faith. Neither doe the Scriptures limit and restraine Gods mercy, and the vertue of Christs merits, to the pardoning and taking away of diuers Sins, once committed, but extend them also to the same Sin committed diuers times, yea to all Sins whatsoeuer of which we truly repent.

Sect. 7. Of the examples of the faithfull who haue relapsed into the same sins, & of the differences betweene their relapses and those of the wicked.

Against the examples of the Scriptures doe manifestly shew, that the faithfull themselues and deare children of God, may oftener then once fall into the same Sinnes, although it be not ordinary with them, especially in great Sins committed in fact; where they haue any time of deliberation, or of arming themselues against them. Thus Abraham twice denied his wife and affirmed her to be his Sister. Ioseph diuers times swore by the life of Pharaoh. Iob often falls into the Sin of impatiencie. Dauid into the Sin of lying and dissembling; and Ionas into turbulent passions, anger and discontent. But here the tempter will suggest that if the faithfull and the wicked fall alike into the same Sins, yea, are both alike subject to relapse often into them, then there is no difference betweene them, and therefore no great reason why any should too much trouble themselues when they fall againe, and againe into their beloued Sins, seeing it is incident to the best as well as to the worst. To which I answere that though the faithfull may fall oftener then once into the same Sins, yet there is great difference betweene their falls and the relapses of the wicked. For first they differ in the causes, seeing the godly fall through negligence and want of care in keeping the spirituall watch: the wicked, who only abstaine from their beloued Sins, out of carnall feare of losse or punishment, or worldly hope of gaine and aduantage, doe desire to commit their Sinnes againe out of their loue vnto them, watching for all opportunities when they may return vnto their euill courses, without any danger of their feares, or prejudice to their hopes.
